plaintiff executed the "subscribers agreement," and the circumstances which took place, after the execution of that deed by the plaintiff, were not admissible in evidence, in the present action.—[They cited Garwood v. Ede, (1 Ex. Rep. 264); Cobb v. Becks, (6 Q. B. Rep. 930); Hervey v. Archbold, (3 B. & C. 626); (2 Stark on Evid. 64); Howard v. Shaw, (9 Ir. L. Rep. 335); Lessee Blackwood v. Gregg, (Hayes' Rep. 277); Clements v. Todd, (1 Ex. Rep. 268); Mockler v. Sharpe, (4 Railw. Ca. 52, S. C. 11 Jur. 573).]

Coates and O'Callaghan, contra:—The deeds are out of this case, as they were executed by the plaintiff, by means of a fraudulent representation. We have in this case more evidence of fraud, than existed in Mockler v. Sharpe, for we have persons appointed to be directors, who never executed the deeds, or took any part in the proceedings; and the son of one director, put in the place of his father; further, there were 6,000 shares allotted, and deposits paid only on 3,200. In Garwood v. Ede, there was no fraud found by the jury. The action for money had and received is an equitable one, and the plaintiff is entitled to get back his money, the object for which he subscribed not being carried out. [Moore, J. when once a party executes a deed, authorizing certain expenditures, it is under that deed he must look for redress]. There was no expenditure within the power of the deed. The prospectus of the company depended upon the full amount of capital being realized, and £62,500 was all that was subscribed for. The estimates had to be altered, and the directors by varying the nature of the undertaking in this respect, released from their contract, the parties who had executed the deeds on the 4th November. The promoters never had a hope of realizing the capital, and the plaintiff was induced by misrepresentations, to take a part in the undertaking. [Moore, J. I do not think, fraud at one time is proof of fraud at another]. [They cited Maguire v. Goddard, (2 Jebb & Sym. 455); — v. Crasbie, (3 B. & C. 814).]

PER CURIAM.—The great difficulty the court feels, is, in applying these facts to defeat a deed in a court of law; and as we are not able to see upon what legal grounds the jury could have acted, we think in this case, there must be a

MIDDLETON V. MAXWELL.—Jan. 27.

Priority between Sequestrations—Costs and Expenses—Liability of Sequestrator for Arrears—Apportionment of Rent-charge—5 Geo. 4, c. 91; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106.

A judgment creditor issued a sequestration against an incumbent, and thereupon went into the possession of his benefices. The bishop of the diocese subsequently issued a sequestration for non-residence against the same incumbent. Held, (Crampton, J., dissentiente) that the sequestration for non-residence had the effect of suspending the creditor's sequestration, and that the bishop was entitled to apply the proceeds of the benefices, in the first instance, in defraying the necessary expenses of serving the cure, and in paying the costs which he had incurred in relation to his sequestration.

A sequestrator is liable to account for an arrear of rent-charge which became due while he was in possession.

Where the possession of the sequestrator ended on the 5th March, 1844, no apportionment of the rent-charge which accrued between the 1st of November, 1843, and that date, could be made, so as to charge the sequestrator.

A sequestrator is not liable for the gale which became due previous to his appointment.

The plaintiff in this case had, in Easter Term, 1841, obtained a judgment for £500 against the defendant, who was then vicar of the prebendary of Balla, and rector of the parishes of Minolia and Roslee, in the diocese of Tuam. A writ of levari issued on that judgment, and on the 3rd of June, 1841, the benefices of the defendant were sequestered, and T. Lancaster appointed sequestrator. When this sequestration issued, the defendant did not reside in any of his parishes; and, on the 20th of July, 1841, the Lord Bishop of Tuam issued a monition to reside, which was served on the defendant, and, being disregarded by him, a sequestration for non-residence issued on the 5th of March, 1842, and the said T. Lancaster was appointed sequestrator. On the 5th of March, 1844, the benefices of the defendant became void, from non-residence, and on that day another clergyman was inducted into them. On the 15th of June, 1848, the plaintiff obtained, from this court, an order of reference to the Master, to take an account of the revenues of the benefices of the defendant, from the 3rd of June, 1841, the time when the first sequestration issued, to the 7th of March, 1844, when the benefices were avoided—to report how said revenues were applied, and what sum was due to the plaintiff, after giving all just credits and allowances. The proceedings upon this reference were by charge and discharge; and, on the 3rd of January, 1849, the Master made his report, in which he certified (among other things) that counsel for the plaintiff objected to allow the bishop several sums which he claimed credit for in his discharge, and submitted that the bishop should be charged with the receipt of certain moneys, the particulars of which the Master set out in his report, and referred back to the court, as involving questions of law. The case now came before the court upon motion on behalf of the plaintiff to confirm the report.

Sir T. Stables, Q.C. (with him Dr. Wiley) for the plaintiff.—The officer has referred six questions to the court. 1st. Whether the bishop, or his sequestrator, is liable to account for an arrear of £63 which became due while the sequestrator was in actual possession. 2ndly. Whether the sequestrator is liable for the gale which became due on the 1st of May, 1841, amounting to £143. [Bluckburne, C.J.—You cannot claim that.] 3dly. Whether there should be an apportionment of the rent-charge which became due between the 1st of November, 1843, and the 5th of March, 1844. [Crampton, J.—The sequestrator could not bring any action until after the 1st of May when the gale became due.] [Moore, J.—It is only in the name of the sequestrator you can bring an action.] The fourth question has reference to certain sums that the sequestrator paid, which, we submit, he was not authorized to pay; first, £2 16s. paid in October, 1841, to the chapter of the cathedral for preaching—[Blackburne, C.J.—It is a necessary outgoing for the special duties of the parish, and the bishop has a power to appropriate a sum out of the proceeds for such purposes. The parochial duties are performed by the curate, but there are charges for which the prebendary of the cathedral is liable]; and, secondly, £90 9s., the costs of the sequestration which issued in 1842, after the creditor's sequestration, for the purpose of enforcing the residence of the incumbent. [Perrin, J.—It is a subsequent demand for a paramount title.] A subsequent right of action ought not to interfere with the prior title of the judgment creditor. [Blackburne, C.J.—The question is, whether the bishop can interfere with the prior sequestration, so as to enforce the performance of the duties of the parish upon which the property is held.] [Moore, J.—Whether this is not an exercise of a paramount title by the bishop.] The fifth question is, whether the bishop was empowered, after one sequestration issued, to increase the salary of the curate to £75. [Moore, J.—Must not the sequestrator take the rents and profits, subject to the right of the bishop to provide for the due administration of the duties of the parish?] The last question is, whether we are entitled to interest, as against the sequestrator. [Blackburne, C.J.—We will not argue this question until we see if there is a fund in the hands of the sequestrator.]

Dr. Radcliffe and R. B. McCausland for the Lord Bishop of Tuam.—The title of the sequestrator ceased in March, 1844, and the arrear of £63 is part of the rent-charge which became due on the 1st November, 1843. [Blackburne, C.J.—He must be charged with that arrear, for the succeeding incumbent has no right to receive any part of the rent-charge which became due before his appointment.] The 5 Geo. 4, c. 91, s. 25, gives the power to the bishop to sequester the living, and to pay the charges incidental thereto. [Crampton, J.—The only difficulty is with respect to the costs of the second sequestration.] They referred to Waite v. Bishop (5 Tyrw. 90; S. C., 1 Cr. M. & R. 507); and Egan v. Heenan (3 Ir. E. R. 50).

Dr. Wiley, in reply.—The court decided, upon the former motion, that the sequestration of the bishop was puisne to the sequestration of the creditor. I admit that the English statute (the 1st and 2nd Vict. c. 106, s. 110) which gives power to the bishop to sequester for non-residence, gives a priority to his sequestration, except in the case of a sequestration upon a judgment duly redocketed; but any argument is, that it required express legislation to postpone the creditor's sequestration.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—The only matter remaining to be disposed of is, as to the costs of the sequestration which issued in 1842. That sequestration issued in consequence of the non-residence of the incumbent, and ended in the avoidance of his benefices. It is perfectly plain, that the right of the sequestration creditor to attach the income arising from these benefices, was, in its nature, puisne to the sequestration of the bishop. The bishop issued his sequestration to compel the incumbent to perform one of the paramount duties connected with his benefices, namely, to reside in his parish; and it suspended the right of his creditor while that duty remained unperformed, the creditor being in no better condition than the incumbent. The bishop was acting in the discharge of a public duty, and having nominated the same sequestrator who had been appointed the year before, the proceeds of the benefices, after the taxes were defrayed and the necessary expenses of serving the cure deducted, were to be applied in the payment of such reasonable expenses as might be incurred in relation to the sequestration. These are the expenses which the plaintiff now objects to allow the bishop; but, in my judgment, the bishop's right to those credits is paramount to any title which the creditor has to the income of these benefices. It is plain, that the bishop might have effectually put the creditor's sequestrator out of possession, and thereby have treated his sequestration as a perfect nullity. I may further observe, that these costs were incurred in a proceeding for the benefit of the creditor, the object being to enforce the residence of the incumbent, upon which the estate was to depend.

CRAMPTON, J.—I am not able to take the same view of the question before the court. That question has reference to the priority between two sequestrations. In May, 1841, the plaintiff obtained a sequestration against the benefices of which the defendant was then the incumbent. That sequestration issued in the ordinary form, and, under its authority, the rents of the benefices became legally vested in the sequestrator; it was duly published, possession taken under it, sums received, but the creditor was not paid the entire amount of his judgment, for £200 yet remained due to him. In March, 1842—nearly a year after—the bishop issues a sequestration for non-residence. I see no conflict between these two sequestrations. The bishop exercises his power, as ordinary of the diocese, by penalties, and one of them is to compel a forfeiture of the living; that power has been exercised, the incumbent is put out of the living, but the title of the creditor cannot be divested by the bishop. From the period of the sequestration under the levari, the rents remained undivested, and were the property of the creditor. The second sequestration cannot have effect until the first sequestration is completely answered; the law prior tempore prior jure applies, and renders the second sequestration inoperative until the first is discharged. If this question were raised in England, it would be decided in favour of the bishop, the difference being created by legislative enactment. The object of the bishop's sequestration was the enforcement of a penalty against the incumbent for non-residence; it was to punish him for personal misconduct, and was not to deprive the creditor, in the meantime, of his right. The two sequestra-tions cannot be in operation at the same time; the sequestration of the bishop is in the way of penalty, and, ultimately, of avoidance of the living. The course of proceeding, up to this moment, shews this, for the bishop's sequestration has never been in operation for sequestering the rents and profits, whereas the creditor's sequestration has always been in full force. The sequestration of the bishop, though published, has never been laid on; if it were, the surplus would have been paid to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and would not have gone to the creditor. The direction to the Master was founded on the principle, that the creditor's sequestration was not superseded, or interfered with, by the sequestration of the bishop. The law of Ireland on this subject has never been the same as the law of England. The sums may be small, but, in my judgment, a principle is involved in the matter. The bishop is an innocent party, so is the creditor; and where two parties are innocent, the one who has a prior right, a right in law, ought to succeed.

PERRIN, J.—I concur in the view taken by my Lord Chief Justice, and think the creditor has a right to receive all the profits of these benefices, so long as the incumbent has, but no longer; he is the creditor of the incumbent, and when the title of the incumbent ceases, his must also cease. An Act of Parliament enables the bishop to enforce the residence of the incumbent, and it never was intended that the incumbent should have the ability to set that law at defiance, because his benefice happened to be under sequestration to a creditor. When the incumbent refuses to comply with the requirements of the monition, the bishop is commanded to sequester the profits of the benefice from thenceforward. The Act of Parliament makes provision for the performance of the spiritual duties of the parish, provides for the costs attending the monition and sequestration, and gives the surplus to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, clearly treating the case of an incumbent who defies his bishop, as of a person who is in contempt, and sequesters the profits of his living, from the beginning, unless he purges himself. The creditor has no reason to complain, for he was only entitled to the income as long as it belonged to his debtor. This is the law in Ireland—it is different in England; for there a provision is made in favour of a judgment creditor which he does not possess in this country. The Irish act, however, does not leave the case unprovided for, but directs how the profits are to be applied. It is like the case where a person under an elegit gets into possession of a tenant's interest, and the head landlord brings an ejectment, the elegit will drop when the title of the tenant is evicted. We are not interfering with the rule which regulates the priorities of creditors. It is said by my brother Crampton, that the sequestration of the bishop has never been laid on; but the answer to that is, that the same person was appointed sequestrator in both cases, and, from the time the bishop's sequestration was published, it was the duty of the sequestrator to apply the proceeds under the Act of Parliament.

MOORE, J.—I concur in the opinions which have been expressed by the Lord Chief Justice and my brother Perrin. It appears to me that the creditor cannot place himself in a better situation than the incumbent, and that he took the emoluments, subject to all the remedies which the bishop had, to compel the incumbent to perform his duties, one of those duties being to reside in his parish. The costs were incurred by the bishop while enforcing those remedies, and as they would have fallen on the incumbent if he had been in the receipt of his income, I think they ought to be borne by the debtor who derives under him.

The Court confirmed the Master's report, directing the sequestrator to pay over to the plaintiff the balance remaining in his hands, and gave costs to either side.*

COUNTY DOWN SPRING ASSIZES—CROWN COURT.

BEFORE FIGOTT, C.B.

REGINA v. SIMPSON.†

A prisoner having been brought before a magistrate and being about to make a confession, he was cautioned by the magistrate in the following words:—"Take care what you say; for whatever you say will be written down and used for or against you." Held, that such a caution was insufficient, and that the examination of the prisoner was not admissible in evidence.

The prisoner was indicted for arson, under the 1st Vic. c. 89, s. 3. On the trial, the Clerk of the Petty Sessions in Belfast was called to prove that the prisoner had made a confession before the Mayor of Belfast.

On being cross-examined by Mr. Gernon (for the prisoner,) as to the caution given to the prisoner by the Mayor, before taking down his confession, he swore that he used the following words:—"Take care what you say; for whatever you say will be written down and used for or against you."

Mr. Gernon submitted, that those words constituted an insufficient caution. The word "for" having been used, held out an inducement to the prisoner to confess his guilt, which the absence of that word would not have done, Queen v. Drew (8 C. & P. 140). In that case, the same words had been used, by way of caution, and the examination of the prisoner was rejected.

Mr. Staples, for the Crown, admitted that the present case came within the rule of the Queen v. Drew, and added, that without the examination of the prisoner, there was not sufficient evidence to convict him.

FIGOTT, C.B.—The case of the Queen v. Drew entirely governs the present, and I think the principle upon which that case was decided is a sound one, and should be upheld.

Mr. Gernon called on the court to direct an acquittal for the prisoner.

Verdict of acquittal accordingly.

* The question, whether the plaintiff was entitled to interest, as against the sequestrator, was not argued.

ROLLS COURT.

DONEGAL v. GREGG.—Feb. 24.

Practice—Notice.

Hughes, Q. C., on behalf of the plaintiffs, moved that the several documents in the notice mentioned, now in the Master's office, might be read at the hearing of this cause, and that the defendant, T. Gregg, may deposit the several books and documents, in said notice mentioned, with the Registrar, to be read in evidence at said hearing.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—This notice is quite irregular. I will refuse this motion, with costs, without prejudice to the service of a proper notice, specifying the documents in a schedule thereto.

HAMILTON v. SYNGE.—SIMPSON v. SYNGE.—

March 3.

Practice—Motion to Stay Proceedings.

Where two suits are instituted to raise charges upon an estate, and a decree pronounced in one, if important questions are raised by the defendant in the second suit, the court will not stay proceedings in it, and deprive the plaintiff of the benefit of obtaining the Lord Chancellor's opinion at the hearing.

By indenture of the 17th of April, 1818, Francis Syngé assigned to trustees certain lands and premises therein mentioned, upon trust, out of the rents and profits to pay the interest of the debts and incumbrances then affecting the estates, and such other debts due by the said Francis Syngé as were specified in a schedule thereto annexed, then upon trust for Francis Syngé, for life, with remainder to John Syngé, in fee; and it was thereby provided, that the said estates should be liable to the payment of all the scheduled debts of Francis Syngé, in exoneration of certain other estates therein mentioned.

By indenture of the 7th July, 1824, the life estate of Francis Syngé in said lands and premises was conveyed to John Syngé, his eldest son, subject to the scheduled debts.

In the year 1831 Francis Syngé died, having, by his will, bequeathed all his property to his eldest son, John, and appointed him executor hereof.

In the year 1845 John Syngé died, having, by his will, devised certain parts of his estates to trustees, upon trust, for payment of his mortgage, judgment, and bond debts, and the residue of his estates, subject to the payment of the surplus of his debts (if any) and some legacies, he devised to his eldest son, Francis Syngé, whom he appointed his executor.

The bill in the first cause was filed by C. Hamilton, on foot of a judgment of Hilary Term, 1843, obtained against John Syngé, for the sum of £4,000, and prayed that an account might be taken of the personal estate of John Syngé, of his debts, &c., of his real and freehold estate, and that, if necessary, an account might be taken of the real, freehold, and personal estate of Francis Syngé, the father of John, and of his debts and legacies, and that same might be paid in a due course of administration.

On the 29th of January, 1849, a decree was pronounced in the cause of Hamilton v. Syngé, whereby an account was directed of the personal estate of John Syngé, of his debts, legacies, &c., and of his real and freehold estate, and also an account of the personal estate of Francis Syngé (the elder) and of his debts, &c., and of his real and freehold estate, and of all charges, &c., affecting same.

The bill in the second cause was filed by the Rev. John Simpson, on foot of two bonds—one for £500, bearing date, the year 1799, the other for £1,700, and dated in the year 1817—which were executed by Francis Syngé; and, after stating, amongst other matters, that both said bonds were included in the schedules annexed to the deeds of 1818 and 1824, and that John Syngé paid interest thereon up to the time of his death, prayed an account of the real and personal estates of Francis Syngé and John Syngé deceased, and of all charges, &c., affecting said lands and premises so charged by the indenture of 1818, with payment of said bond debts, and that the trusts of the will of John Syngé might be carried into execution, and that it might be declared that said bonds formed part of those directed by said will to be paid, and that Francis Syngé (the younger) might be directed to pay the sum due, or, in default, that said lands might be sold.

The defendant, Francis Syngé, by his answer, submitted, that by the indenture of 1818, the lands and premises therein mentioned were not charged with said bond debts, and that plaintiff was not entitled to have the amount raised out of the rents and profits, or by a sale thereof.

Mariley, Q. C., on behalf of Francis Syngé, the principal defendant, moved, that all further proceedings in the second cause should be stayed, and that the plaintiff in the second cause be directed to prove his demand under the decree in the first cause, and relied on the cases of Phillips v. Phillips (6 I. E. R. 509), Wright v. Hamilton (9 I. E. R. 119), Brown v. Cavendish (1 Jones & L. 606, S. C., 7 I. E. R. 369), Jackson v. Welsh (Ll. & G. Temp. P. 346.)

Hughes, Q. C. and Mr. McCreedy, contra, contended that the question raised by the answer of F. Syngé was most important—that the plaintiff in the second cause was entitled to have the decision of the Lord Chancellor as to whether his demand was a charge upon the estates included in the deed of 1818, and cited the remarks of Sir Edward Sugden in Brown v. Cavendish (7 I. E. R. 388-9), upon the cases of Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale (2 R. & M. 451), and Walwyn v. Coutts (3 Sim. 14; 3 Mer. 707).

Mr. Norman, in reply, as to the effect of a schedule setting out incumbrances, cited Law v. Bagwell (4 Dr. & W. 398), Dryden v. Foster (6 Beav. 146).

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I do not think I would be justified in staying proceedings in the second suit, and substituting the Master for the Lord Chancellor. The plaintiff in the first cause is a judgment creditor of John Synge; the object of that suit is to administer his will, and also the will of Francis Synge, the elder. In order to sell the estate, some of which had been the property of Francis, the elder, it became necessary to ascertain the incumbrances affecting it generally, including those created by F. Synge, the elder, and which became charges upon that part of the estate of which he was not tenant for life; and the decree directs an account of the personal estate of F. Synge, of his debts and legacies, and also of his real and freehold estate, and of all charges and incumbrances affecting same. The second suit which I am called upon to stay is by a bond creditor of F. Synge, and it is said that the plaintiff has nothing to do but file a charge under the decree which directs an account of the debts of F. Synge, the elder. If this was a simple case, and if the estates descended from F. Synge, in fee simple, it would be a case of ordinary occurrence, and the suit ought to be stayed; but there are very important questions and equities raised by it. In the year 1818, a settlement was executed upon the marriage of John Synge, and provision was made for payment of certain debts, which were scheduled, including the bonds of Simpson, the plaintiff, in the second cause. The defence set up is, that the deed of 1818 came within the principle laid down in the case of Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, and, being voluntary, no trust was created which could be enforced against the representatives of John Synge; that was the case made by the answer. By the deed of 1824, executed between the father and son, and which recited the deed of 1818, and contained a schedule confined, I believe, to the same debts, as were mentioned in the former deed. The father assigned to his son, who thereby became possessed of the life estate, and owner of his father's interest. It has been said that this was a voluntary deed. I think it was for valuable consideration; covenants were entered into, by which the property was not to be liable to any debts except those mentioned in the schedule, subject to the payment of which it was conveyed; and it was for that consideration, amongst others, the deed was executed. The father was bound as to every debt, except those mentioned in the schedule, which the son became liable to pay; and, so far, it was for valuable consideration. If, after the execution of that deed, Mr. Simpson attempted to sue F. Synge, the elder, in consequence of John declining to pay interest upon the bonds, if any became due, F. Synge would have a plain equity against his son to indemnify him. In Kyme v. Dignam (4 L. E. R. 562) it is laid down, that where a party is bound by covenant, and sells subject to the incumbrance, the purchaser is bound to indemnify the vendor; and, in order to prevent circuity of action, the court will not permit a party to say, I am only liable to six years' interest, while the person whom he is bound to indemnify is liable to more than six years. In the present case there is an equity, if John was bound to indemnify his father, and a question may arise upon which I do not now offer any opinion. This dealing between F. Synge and John has been acted on for twenty or thirty years, and Simpson was induced to forbear on the faith of the arrangement between father and son. The will of John Synge is in terms calculated to raise a serious question, but which I am not bound to decide, and which may have the effect of operating the estate not only with his own debts, but also those debts which he took upon himself to pay. Also the prayer of the bill in the second suit does not bear any resemblance to that in the first cause. I am now called on to stay proceedings, all these equities appearing in the case, upon the statement that a charge can be filed in the office by the plaintiff in the second cause, under the decree in the first. I do not remember any case where a party has been deprived of his right to take the Lord Chancellor's opinion on an important question, and I very much doubt whether there would be any costs thereon, even though the Master could determine these questions. This is not so much a debt of John as a liability, and it is a very serious question, whether the Master could carry out the equities between them. I have no doubt that, in point of law, I am not called on to stay the proceedings in this suit; for, by so doing, I would be deciding the rights of the parties on a summary application; and, where there is a bona fide opposition on the part of Mr. Simpson, it would be going a greater length than any case I am aware of, to stay this suit. In the case of Rigby v. Strangways (2 Phillips, 175), Lord Cottenham refused to stay a second suit, but directed both causes to be sent before the same Master. The only expense which will be incurred by refusing this motion, is the hearing of the cause before the Lord Chancellor; and, having regard to the very important observations in the case before Lord Chancellor Sugden, which have been read by counsel at the bar, I cannot, in justice, deprive the plaintiff in the second cause of the benefit of the Chancellor's decision. If these questions were submitted to the Master in the first instance, can there be any doubt that there would be exceptions to his report, and the case would thus ultimately come before the Chancellor for his decision. I will, therefore, refuse this application.

"No rule on said motion; and let the plaintiff in the second cause have his costs of appearing on this motion as costs in said second cause, without prejudice to the defendant, F. Synge, at the hearing of said second cause, seeing that the reference in said second cause should be to the same Master to whom the reference in the first cause has been made, and that one report should be made in both causes, and that the second suit should be stayed in the event of the rights of the plaintiff in the second cause being declared upon said first hearing, or the Master directed to report on his claim in proceeding under the decree in the first cause."

QUEEN'S BENCH.

GOGARTY v. THE QUEEN (IN ERROR).—Jan. 23, 24.

Indictment—Pleading—Unlawful Drilling—
60 Geo. 3, and 1 Geo. 4, c. 1.

In an indictment under the provisions of the 60 Geo. 3, and 1 Geo. 4, c. 1, the first count stated, that the prisoner "unlawfully was present and did attend a certain meeting dangerous to the peace, &c., for the purpose of training and drilling, and without lawful authority." The second count charged the prisoner with "assisting to train and drill;" and the third count charged him with unlawfully training and drilling certain persons "then and there unlawfully assembled, and without lawful authority."

Held, that the indictment was bad—first, for not stating that "the meeting was assembled for the purpose of training themselves and drilling, or being trained or drilled, or for the purpose of practising military exercises without lawful authority; and, secondly, because it was not averred that the meeting in the indictment mentioned was a meeting for the purposes therein mentioned, without lawful authority."

The prisoner in this case had been tried at a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, held at Green Street, on the 20th of May, 1848, before Blackburne, C. J., and Doherty, C. J., under the provisions of the 60 Geo. 3, and 1 Geo. 4, c. 1, s. 1, for unlawfully training and drilling to the use of arms. The prisoner was found guilty, and now brought his writ of error in the Queen's Bench.

The jurors for our said lady the Queen upon their oath do say and present, that Patrick Gogarty, on, &c. unlawfully was present, and did then and there attend a certain meeting and assembly dangerous to the peace and security of her Majesty's liege subjects, and of her government, and then and there prohibited by law, for the purpose of training and drilling to the practise of military exercises movements and evolutions, divers persons, to wit, [naming them] and then and there did train and drill to the practice of military exercises, movements, and evolutions, the said, &c., without any lawful authority from her Majesty, or the lieutenant or two justices of the peace of the said county of the city of Dublin, or of any county or riding, or of any stewardry, by commission or otherwise, for so doing, against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity, and contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further say and present, that the said Patrick Gogarty, on, &c., unlawfully was present at, and did then and there attend a certain meeting and assembly dangerous to the peace and security of her Majesty's liege subjects, and of her government, and then and there prohibited by law, for the purpose of training and drilling to the practice of military exercises, movements, and evolutions, the said persons [naming them], and then and there did assist in training and drilling, to the practise of military exercises, movements, and evolutions, the said [naming them], without any lawful authority from her Majesty, or the lieutenant or two justices of the peace of the said county of the city of Dublin, or of any county or riding, or of any stewardry, by commission or otherwise, for so doing, against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity, and contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further say and present, that the said Patrick Gogarty, on, &c., unlawfully did train and drill to the practice of military exercises, movements, and evolutions, the said, &c. [naming them], being then and there unlawfully assembled, without any lawful authority from her Majesty, or the lieutenant or two justices of the peace of the county of the city of Dublin, or of any county or riding, or of any stewardry, by commission or otherwise, for so doing, against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity, and contrary to the form of the statutes in such case made and provided.

The following causes of error were, among others, assigned:—

There is error in this, to wit, that the said indictment as to each and every count thereof, in the record aforesaid specified, is insufficient in law, for that there is no averment in said indictment, nor in any of the counts thereof, on the record aforesaid, nor in any suggestion thereon, that the meeting and assembly in said record mentioned was a meeting or assembly of persons for the purpose of training or drilling themselves, or of being trained or drilled to the use of arms, or for the purpose of practising military exercises, movements, or evolutions without any lawful authority from her Majesty or the Lieutenant, or two justices of the peace of any county or riding, or of any stewardry by commission or otherwise, for so doing; therefore, in that there is manifest error. That there is no averment in any of the counts of the said indictment, nor in the record aforesaid, nor in any suggestion therein, that the meeting and assembling in said indictment, or in the record aforesaid mentioned, was a meeting and assembling of persons for the purposes therein mentioned, without any lawful authority from her Majesty, or the lieutenant or two justices of the peace of any county or riding, or of any stewardry, by commission or otherwise, for so doing; and, therefore, in that there is manifest error.

Fitzgibbon, Q.C. and Stritch, for the plaintiff in error.—The indictment is bad for two reasons, 1st, because it contains no averment that the meeting was for the purpose of training or drilling themselves, or of being trained or drilled to the use of arms; and, 2ndly, because it does not aver that the meeting was without any lawful authority. The general rule with regard to all indictments is, that every fact and circumstance must be stated with certainty and precision; and this rule is more stringent where the proceeding is on a penal statute. The pleader has not described the meeting in the words of the act; merely averring that the meeting was unlawful is not sufficient. The purpose for which the meeting was held, should have been stated, and the existence of authority should have been negatived. [They cited Lee v. Clarke (2 East. 393; 2 Hale, 170; Foster App. 428; 2 Hawk. P.C. 249, s. 77; 3 Bac. Ab. 113, tit. Indictment); Rex v. Cox, (2 Bulstr. 258); Reg. v. Moore, (2 Ld. Raym. 791; — v. — (3 Dyer. 363); Rex v. Ryan, (2 Moo. Cr. Ca. 15); Rex v. Compton, (7 Car. & P. 139).]

Baldwin, Q. C., and Smyly, for the Crown.—It is distinctly stated in the indictment that the prisoner trained these persons at an unlawful meeting, that meeting having no authority to be trained. [Moore, J.—It was the purpose of the prisoner that is stated, not the purpose of the meeting.] [Perrin, J.—If the purpose is given to the prisoner you leave the meeting without a purpose.] There is an offence clearly stated in the 3rd count, for we have alleged that the meeting was unlawful. Bearing in mind that this was a charge of training others, we have stated what is the result of a meeting so held, and have described the assembly as dangerous to the peace and security of her Majesty's subjects. It is averred that the prisoner attended the meeting, and he thereby became incorporated with it. The word assembled could not apply to the prisoner, and must be referred to the meeting.

Cur. ad. vult.

Jan. 24.—BLACKBURN, C. J., now delivered the judgment of the court.—The indictment in this case is founded on the 60 George III. Two errors have been assigned by the plaintiff. The first is, that none of the counts contain an averment that the meeting or assembly was such as that act prohibited; and the second is, that it is not averred that the meeting was without lawful authority. The first and second counts were in the same terms, except that the offence in the first was that of training and drilling to the practice of military exercises, while the second was for aiding and assisting in such training and drilling; and the third count was for having drilled certain persons unlawfully assembled. The statute commenced with an enactment that all meetings or assemblies for the purpose of training and drilling themselves, or of being trained or drilled to the use of arms, and for the purposes of practising military exercises, movements, and evolutions, without lawful authority, should be prohibited. Had the act closed there, an indictment for violating its provisions must have distinctly averred that the meeting was for one of the purposes stated in the act—namely, of training and drilling themselves, or of being trained and drilled to the use of arms, or for the purpose of practising military exercises, movements, and evolutions. It must also have negatived the existence of any authority conferred on the meeting; so that the course was perfectly plain, according to the established rules of pleading. The statute proceeded, in the next place, not to enact any new offence, but merely to prescribe the punishment of those who violate it, the offence being, the attending and acting at a meeting so prohibited. So that the first allegation to be made was, that the purpose of the meeting brought it within the prohibition, and made it illegal. It was of the very essence of the crime, that the meeting should be illegal within the meaning of the act, for not until then can any of the enumerated acts come within its penal consequences. The act says, that every person who shall be present at a meeting so prohibited, shall, &c. This makes it a violation of the act to attend such a meeting even for the purpose of training and drilling, manifestly meaning such an illegal meeting as was already described. If, then, it was necessary to aver that the meeting was for a purpose specified in the prohibitory part of the statute, it is plain that all the counts are bad, for none of them aver that the assembly was for the purpose of training or drilling themselves, or of being trained or drilled to the use of arms, or for the purpose of practising military exercises, movements, or evolutions. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the cases of error assigned by the plaintiff should be allowed.

Errors allowed.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON IN REPLEVIN, v. GEORGE NEWENHAM.—April 17.

Pleading—Demurrer.

A plea to an avowry in replevin, framed under the 10th section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 111, ought distinctly to apprise the defendant of the precise default complained of by the plaintiff; and therefore, where the language of the plea was so ambiguous as to leave it doubtful, whether the plaintiff complained of a non-delivery of the particulars of distress to a person in possession, there having been such a person, or of the defendant's having omitted to put the same on a conspicuous part of the premises, being vacant at the time, the plea held bad for uncertainty.

Semble—The plea might have been in the alternative, provided that neither allegation was worded, as to leave the materiality of the other, for the purposes of the pleading in question doubtful.

Semble—Per Perrin, J., that the plea was likewise bad, having been pleaded to two avowries, differing in respect of the statement of rent days, and nevertheless referring to a single particular.

There was an action of Replevin. The declaration contained one count, wherein the plaintiff complained of the taking &c. by the defendant, on the 18th day of August, 1847, of four cows of his property, on the lands of Summer-hill, in the county of Cork. To this the defendant filed two avowries justifying the taking as for a distress for rent. In the first avowry, the rent was alleged to have been payable on the 6th of February, and the 6th of August, and in the second avowry, the gale days were laid on the 20th of February and 20th of August respectively. Third plea to both avowries—"that the said distress in each of the said avowries mentioned, was the same distress, and that the said distress was made after the passing of an act of Parliament, &c. (9 & 10 Vic. c. 111,*) to wit,

*Section 10.—And be it enacted, that in all cases of distress for rent, cognizable in any court, whether superior or inferior, the person making any such distress, shall at the

on the day in said avowries mentioned, and that the said G. N. did not, nor did the person making said distress, at the time of making the said distress, deliver to the person in possession of the premises, for the rent of which the said distress was made, or affix on a conspicuous part of the said premises, a particular, in writing, of the rent demanded, specifying the amount thereof, the time or times when the same accrued, and the name and place of abode of the persons of whose authority said distress was made," modo et forma, verification.

Special demurrer to said third plea assigning, inter alia, for causes, that the plea was uncertain for want of shewing who was in possession, or in fact that any one was in possession, and should have shewn and stated, that no particular in writing corresponding in the amount of the rent demanded in each avowry, and the times when said rent accrued due was delivered or posted, or required by said act of parliament, and that the said plea offered immaterial issues.

Joinder in demurrer; of the points noted by the defendant for argument, two were as follows:—

That the plea should have stated, that no particular corresponding with the rent claimed, in each avowry was delivered or posted, as the case might be, and should not have been in the alternative.

That the plea offers immaterial issues; posting the particulars not being valid, if any one be found in possession of the premises.

Longfield, Q. C., for the demurrer.—The plea is bad for uncertainty. It is founded on the 10th sec. of the 9 & 10 Vic., c. 111, the plea negatives merely the delivery of the particulars of rent, to the person in possession without naming him. The name of the party distraining should likewise have been stated, Ross v. Roach, (1 Maule & Selwyn, 304). The plea negatives in the alternative the delivery and the posting on a conspicuous part of the premises—posting is proper only where no one is in possession, and that there was a person in possession is not averred with sufficient certainty. The form of the plea is calculated to embarrass the plaintiff, it is impossible to say on which branch of the plea to take issue upon, and is consequently bad.

Deary, Q. C., and O'Loughlen, contra.—The question here merely arises with respect to the certainty of the plea, as no objection has been raised time of making such distress, deliver to the person in possession of the premises, for the rent of which such distress shall be made, or in case there shall not be any person found in possession, shall affix to some conspicuous part of the premises, a particular in writing of the rent demanded, specifying the amount thereof, the time or times when the same accrued, and the name and place of abode of the person by whom and (if the person who acts in the making of the distress be not the party claiming to be entitled to the rent for which such distress is made,) the name of the person by whose authority such distress is made, or otherwise, such distress shall be unlawful and void. Provided always, &c., &c. Provided also, that if any such distress shall be in other respects sustainable and well founded, the same shall not be unlawful or void, by reason, that the amount of rent demanded by such notice, shall not be the exact amount due, if the misstatement of such rent in such notice shall have been made by mistake, and without fraud or malice or want of reasonable care.

by the demurrer on the ground of duplicity. Here the words of the statute have been literally followed. In fact the position of the defendant has been improved by the form of the plea, as a traverse might have been taken simultaneously on both branches. [Blackburne, C. J.—The act contemplates two different states of things, and prescribes accordingly.] [Perrin, J.—Here is a difficulty. If there had been no person in possession, posting the particulars would suffice—but on the contrary, if there had been a party in possession, such a traverse would be immaterial]. The defendant might have replied, that he delivered the particulars to the person in possession. It is a general rule that a plea may be framed in the very words of the statute. [Perrin, J.—You do not say in this plea, that the particulars were not delivered to a person in possession, or affixed to the premises; but you speak of the person in possession. This seems to admit that there was a person in possession, in which case this branch of the plea would tender a material issue]. [Crompton, J.—Could any human being tell with certainty, as your plea is framed, on what defence you intended relying?] The names of persons need not be set forth in a plea like the present, seeing that it is not to be intended that such lay within the knowledge of the plaintiff who might have been a mere stranger, whose goods had been casually deposited on the premises of the tenant at the time of the distress. Salé v. Read, (8 East. 80,) non constat, but that a party may have been in possession, and that the landlord may not have discovered him therein, and have accordingly posted the particular. This would satisfy the statute. [Perrin, J.—Another objection arises in my mind to this plea—the dates of the accruing of the gales of rent differ in their respective avowries, whereas the plea is common to both, as to the delivery of one particular. Here is an inconsistency. Each avowry ought to have been separately pleaded to.] One object of the second proviso to the 10 sec. is to exonerate the party pleading from stringency of proof. [Perrin, J.—Is not proviso confined to the amount of rent, without interfering with the question of dates, the plea is pointed at two inconsistent avowries.] The plea has been adopted for the sake of brevity. If the plaintiff had pleaded separate pleas, the very same words would have been employed in either. The defendant might, if he pleaded, have replied severally.

Longfield, Q. C., in reply was stopped by the court

BLACKBURN, C. J., (after saying that he felt some difficulty as to the last objection)—A landlord would be materially embarrassed by a plea in this form. The act provides for two distinct alternatives. The plea, by alleging a delivery to the person in possession, assumes that there was a party in possession, and should, therefore, have merely negatived the fact of the defendants having complied with the requisitions of the statute, with reference to this state of things. Instead thereof, the one branch of the plea assumes a person to have in possession, and the other the reverse. This uncertainty must embarrass the defendant.

CRAMPTON, J.—No objection has been taken here on the ground of duplicity, but merely from uncertainty. The plea is clearly uncertain. The statute was not passed to embarrass the landlord, or to enable a litigious tenant to baffle his landlord. The legislature has provided differently for the two cases, of a person being in possession of premises distrained, or the contrary. In one case, service is necessary; in the other, posting is sufficient. If there be a default by the landlord in complying with the terms provided by the act, according to the state of facts, the distress, though valid at common law, is rendered void by statute. Here the pleader, having an opportunity of relying on either ground of defence, set up both, but in such a manner as to render it impossible for any man reading the plea to say whether the default relied upon is the non-service, or the omission of posting. If the defendant had taken issue on the whole, then it would have been said that the traverse was irregular. The defendant certainly might have aided this objection by his replication, but no pleading is so bad as to be incapable of being so aided.

PERRIN, J.—I consider that this pleading is not only bad in form, on the ground before adverted to, but also that it tenders an issue incapable of being sustained by evidence, involving, as it does, the necessity of proving two distinct particulars, although contemplating one merely.

Demurrer allowed.

Moore, J., was absent.

Another objection was started to this plea, on the ground of the qua est eadem being improperly averred, it having been pleaded to several avowries, which are in the nature of counts of a declaration containing distinct causes of action. Edmund v. Walter (3 Chitty, Rep. 291), and Walsh v. Shaw (Al. & Nap. 9), were cited hereon. This objection was, however, disposed of in the course of argument, the court being of opinion that the taking itself, which was single, was the subject of the averment.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—EASTER TERM.

CORAM PIGOT, C. B.

GOVERNOR OF BANK OF IRELAND v. ORPEN.

Roll—Practice—Amendment—Judgment—Insertion of Costs.

T. Galwey, applied for liberty to amend the judgment roll, by inserting in the blank left for that purpose the amount of taxed costs, which amounted only to £11. The judgment had been entered in March, 1848. In Forrell v. Russell, (3 Ir. L. Rep. 40); the court allowed the judgment to be amended in this respect, the amount sought to be inserted being small; and the Court of Common Pleas, in the case of the Irish Society v. The Bishop of Derry, (5 Ir. Law Rep. 236), permitted a similar amendment.

PIGOT, C. B.—Since those cases were decided, the court has settled its practice. You must have an affidavit of the judgment not having been registered in pursuance of the provisions, 7 & 8 Vic. c. 90.

CIRCUIT CASES—CIVIL BILL COURT.

CARRICKFERGUS SPRING ASSIZES.

BEFORE THE LORD CHIEF BARON.

THE CORPORATION OF BELFAST v. TIEDALL.

Where a corporation purchased houses, pursuant to powers given them by certain Town Improvement Acts of Parliament, which did not directly authorise a letting by will from year to year, and which houses, at the time of the purchase, were in the possession of yearly tenants, whose interests had not been purchased, nor had they been remunerated for damages done by the works of the corporation. Held, that the corporation might sue them in use and occupation for rent accruing after the purchase.

It appeared that the Appellants had purchased the premises occupied by the respondent, under the powers contained in the Lands' Clauses Act, 1845, and three local acts obtained by them in 1845-46, 47—that the Respondent, before the purchase, was a tenant from year to year, under a Mr. Dunbar, and had not received any compensation from the corporation for injury sustained by him under said acts, nor had his interest been purchased—that he remained in possession from the time of purchase until service of civil bill, which was for rent for use and occupation, due to the appellants. The Assistant Barrister dismissed the case.

W. Macartney, for respondent, contended that the appellants had purchased for the purposes mentioned in their acts, and could not let from year to year, or sue for rent for use and occupation; and that no act could be done by them which was not expressly authorised by those acts. The Mortmain Acts prohibited the holding or letting of lands by corporations (Com. Dig. Tit. Capacity, b. 2; 2 Inst. 75; Viner. Ab. Tit. Mortmain, A. 2). These acts were extended to Ireland by 10 Hen. 7, c. 22, Incorporated Society v. Richards (1 Dru. and Warren, 258). The appellants, therefore, must look to their local Acts of Parliament to see what they were authorised by them to do (Dwarris on Stat. 564, 583, 604); Haworth v. Ormerod (6 Q. B. 307); Stourbridge Canal Company v. Wheeler (2 B. & A. 792); Webb v. Manchester and Leeds Railway Company (1 Q. C. 576); Blakemore v. Glarmorganshire Canal Company (1 M. & E. 162); R. v. Inhabitants of Edgeland (4 A. & E. 723); Lee v. Milner (2 Y. & Col. 618); Kemp v. London and Brighton Railway Company (1 R. C. 508). These cases shew that a private Act of Parliament must be construed strictly, and that these companies must do all that their acts direct, and "nothing else." Acts like those in the present case are private, Dawson v. Power (5 Haa. 494); Fellowes v. Clay, referred to in Dwarris on Stat. 506. The acts of the appellants do not authorise lettings from year to year, but, on the contrary, they seem, by implication, to prohibit any letting at all except in the way their acts direct. It is true they are authorised to grant leases of superfluous lands, but these must be by deed, and there are many requisites to render them valid; and the appellants are bound to sell their reversion within ten years from the making of the lease. Where the legislature contemplated a power to let from year to year, they expressed it, as in the case of shops, &c., in the markets, which the appellants were expressly authorised to let from year to year. The principle expressio unius est exclusio alterius, therefore, applies against the appellant's claim. The object of the legislature was apparent by preventing the appellant from letting in any way except that authorised, to compel them quickly to sell, and thus pay off the money raised for making the improvements in the town. If they wanted the house occupied by the respondent, they could easily get it by the 121st section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, but were not authorised to get it indirectly in the present way.

Moode and W. C. Dobbs, for the appellants, contended, that as purchasers of the reversion, they had a right to all its incidents.

The CHIEF BARON said, he thought that the respondent could not object to pay rent for use and occupation, certainly the legislature could not have intended that tenements should be idle and valueless during the progress of improvements—that if the appellants did not perform their duties, a mandamus, or bill in Chancery, would lie against them; but he did not consider that the respondent could refuse to pay rent because they might not possibly perform their duty.

Dismiss reversed.

DROGHEDA SPRING ASSIZES.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE CRAMPTON.

REGINA v. DARCY.—Feb. 28.

Manslaughter—Intoxication.

J. D., was indicted for the manslaughter of J. M., under the following circumstances. The prisoner, who was a carpenter by trade, was brought down from Dublin to execute certain work, in consequence of a strike, or combination for higher wages among the carpenters who had been originally employed by the contractor to do it. On the night of the 16th of December 1848, the prisoner, who had been a few days at work, was returning from Drogheda, at 10 o'clock, in company with J. C., another carpenter, who had been brought down with him. Both the prisoner and J. C., had been drinking to an extent to affect them, though not to the degree of drunkenness. At the outskirts of the town, the prisoner and J. C., were violently assaulted by four men, (supposed to be the parties discharged from employment), the prisoner was knocked down, and assaulted in a manner to endanger his life. J. C., who was a witness for the prosecution, swore that to the best of his belief, if the prisoner had remained longer under the attack, his life would have been forfeited. R. P., a surgeon, also swore, that the prisoner had received severe contusions. J. M., the deceased, who lived near the spot where the occurrence took place; having heard the noise, went out for the purpose of ascertaining the cause, the assailing parties then fled, and the deceased proceeded to the spot where he found the prisoner lying on the ground, almost insensible. He was in the act of raising him up, when the prisoner supposing him to be one of his assailants returning to the attack, drew from his pocket a chisel, and with it, inflicted a wound on the left thigh of J. M., which caused his death. It appeared in evidence, that J. C., seeing J. M., coming to the assistance of the prisoner, said to him, "Here is a friend come to your aid," but it was proved that this observation had not been addressed to the prisoner, till after the fatal wound had been inflicted by him. This was held to be manslaughter.

Sir Thomas Staples, Q. C., and Hanna, who conducted the prosecution, having elicited the foregoing facts in evidence.

William Gernon on behalf of the prisoner, submitted that the case made by the crown, was clearly one of homicide by mistake. Had the prisoner been right in supposing that J. M. the deceased was one of the assailing parties returning to the attack, the evidence for the prosecution had disclosed a case of sufficient provocation to justify the prisoner in repelling a renewal of it, by inflicting the wound which had caused death. From the abuse he had received, the effects of the liquor, and the darkness of the night, it was impossible for him to have recognised a friend from a foe. He cited Levitt's Case, (Cr. Car. 538), and read in evidence the dying declaration of J. M., in which he had expressed his conviction that the prisoner had inflicted the wound upon him, under the impression that he was one of the assailing parties.

CRAMPTON, J. charged the jury, telling them that, inasmuch as the prisoner, by the act of drinking immoderately, had helped to deprive himself of the power of recognising J. M., as his friend, which but for that act, he would most probably have been capable of doing; he should be held responsible for the consequence that had ensued, and he was therefore of opinion, that a case of manslaughter had been established against the prisoner.

Verdict of guilty accordingly.

COUNTY ANTRIM SPRING ASSIZES—CROWN COURT.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE CRAMPTON.

REGINA v. THOMPSON.—March 22.

In an indictment against A. B., for the murder of C. D., by having administered to her a potion containing poison; E. F., who had tasted a portion of the same draught as the deceased, was called as a witness, to describe her symptoms, G. H., a medical witness, who had attended the witness E. F., and the deceased, was asked as to the symptoms of E. F. Held that such evidence was admissible. Held also, that the medical witness having heard the witness E. F., give her evidence as to her symptoms, might be asked whether in his opinion as a medical man, such symptoms were those of a person under the influence of poison.

The prisoner was indicted for the wilful murder of his wife Jane Thompson, by having administered to her in a draught of gruel, a quantity of arsenic. A witness of the name of Sarah Thompson was called and deposed, (among other things), that she had tasted the gruel, before giving it to deceased, that she had become ill from it, and she described the symptoms she had laboured under. A medical man was then called and asked as to the symptoms which the last witness had presented.

Joy, Q. C., (with whom was Ross Moore), for the prisoner, objected to this question—the prisoner was not on trial for poisoning Sarah Thompson, but for the murder of Jane Thompson. [Crampton, J.—I think the evidence quite admissible.]

The medical man was then asked whether he had heard the witness Sarah Thompson give her evidence, and describe her symptoms; and whether in his opinion as a medical man, the symptoms she had described were those of a person under the influence of poison.

Joy, Q. C., objected to that evidence being received: first, upon the grounds of objection to the former question: and secondly, because a medical man, should give his evidence from what he had himself observed, and not from what he had heard detailed by another witness.

CRAMPTON, J.—I think the evidence quite admissible as a part of the res gestæ.

ROSCOMMON SPRING ASSIZES.

CORAM, MOORE, J.

KANE v. LLOYD.

Action against Magistrates—Insufficient Notice—43 Geo. 3, c. 143.

A notice of action under the provisions of 43 Geo. 3, c. 143, must follow accurately its provisions.—When a notice omitted to specify the place where the transaction complained of occurred, the plaintiff was non-suited.

This was an action of trespass against a magistrate of the County Roscommon, for assault and false imprisonment. The declaration contained two counts. Plea, Not Guilty—the case was tried at last Spring Assizes at Roscommon, before Mr. Justice Moore. The facts of the case were, In the month of February, 1848, a Mr. Waldron, a magistrate of the County Roscommon lost his life, and a policeman was severely wounded, in an affray caused by an attempt of the coroner of that County to levy an execution in the house of the deceased, when a number of Mr. Waldron's workmen, &c., resisted the attempt.

Informations having been sworn against several persons for being engaged in the occurrence, and amongst others, against three persons of the name of Patrick Kane—the defendant caused the plaintiff with two others of his name, to be arrested and held them in custody for a period of seven days, during which time, they were once brought up for examination. At the end of that period two of the said Kanes, having been identified as being engaged in the affray, were committed for trial.—There being no evidence, sufficient to identify the plaintiff, he was discharged.

Some time after a fourth Patrick Kane, was arrested, who was identified as the third person of the name of Kane who had really been present at the riot, and against whom the informations had been sworn. Upon these facts the plaintiff brought this prosecution. The statute of 43 Geo. 3, cap. 143, regulating actions brought against magistrates for acts done in the discharge of their duty, provides that no writ shall be sued out against any justice of the peace, &c., for things done in the execution of his office, until after one month's notice thereof in writing shall have been delivered to him, or left at his usual place of abode; which notice shall contain the cause of action clearly and explicitly stated, and on the back of which shall be endorsed the name of the attorney, and his place of abode.

The following notice was served in this case:—
“To William Lloyd, Esq., one of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the County of Roscommon.

“Sir,—I do hereby, as the attorney of and for Patrick Kane, of Clooncoose, in the County of Roscommon, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, give you notice, that the said Patrick Kane will, at or soon after the expiration of one calendar month from the time of your being served with this notice, cause a writ of capias ad respondendum to be sued out of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland against you, at the suit of him the said Patrick Kane, and proceed thereupon according to law, for that you, the said William Lloyd, on the 28th day of January in the year 1848, arrested, or caused to be arrested, the said Patrick Kane, and him the said Patrick Kane unjustly, unlawfully, and illegally did imprison and detain, or cause to be imprisoned and detained for a long space of time, to wit for a period of seven days, contrary to the laws and customs of this realm, and other wrongs to the said Patrick Kane did to his great damage of £100, and against the peace of our lady the now Queen.

“Dated the 6th day of March, 1848. Michael Waldron, Attorney for the within named Patrick Kane, 59, Great Brunswick Street, Dublin.”

Messrs. Blakeney and Keogh having closed their case for the plaintiff, Messrs. R. P. Lloyd, C. Andrews, and Roper, for the defendant, called on the learned judge to non-suit the plaintiff, on the ground that the notice did not specify the place where the said transaction occurred, and cited Martins v. Upcher and Gay, (32 B. R. 662); Jacklin v. Fytche, (14 Mees. & M. 381.)

After considerable argument on both sides, Mr. Justice Moore, feeling he was pressed by the authority adduced by the defendant, but entertaining some doubts on the subject, retired to consult Baron Lefroy, then presiding in the Criminal Court, and in a short time returned and stated that Baron Lefroy conceived the court bound by the authority, and accordingly non-suited the plaintiff.*

* The plaintiffs have not since taken any steps to set aside the non-suit.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

DOONER v. DOONER.—April 19.

Accounts—Maintenance.

The defendant, a brother of the plaintiffs, having, for thirteen years, maintained them, and received the rents of their freehold, which were very small, under the special circumstances of the case, the plaintiffs were refused an account of the rents during the time they were so maintained.

Patrick Dooner, the father of the plaintiffs, Charlotte and Jane Dooner, and of the defendant, John Dooner, having devised some freehold estates upon trust for the benefit of the plaintiffs, and bequeathed to them the residue of his personal property, and appointed the defendant and the plaintiff, Charlotte Dooner, executors, died in July, 1830, when the defendant alone proved his will, and possessed himself of the testator's personality. The trustees having refused to act, the legal estate in the freehold descended on the defendant. The rents were either actually received by him, or, on being received by the plaintiffs, were, for the most part, handed over to the defendant. The plaintiffs resided with their brother, the defendant, from their father's death, in 1830, down to 1843. The defendant occasionally paid small sums of money to the plaintiffs during that period, but never accounted with them, either for the personality of their father, or for the rents of the freeholds. The defendant having married. In 1843, the plaintiffs ceased to reside with him, when, in addition to letting them into receipt of the rents of the freeholds, he, as they alleged, undertook to pay them a sum of £30 per annum, on account of their claims. The plaintiffs having pressed for an account, the defendant furnished one in June, 1847, debiting them with the annual sums of £50 each, for board and lodging, and £20 for dress, during the time they had so resided with him, in addition to sums mentioned to have been occasionally paid to them, and which they alleged to have been the fund from which they provided their dress.

The bill stated to the above effect, and prayed accounts of the personality of Patrick Dooner, and of the rents and profits of the freehold estates. The defendant, by his answer, claimed credit for the sums of £50 and £20 per annum, and alleged that the annuity of £30 had been merely a bounty on his part. It appeared that the rents of the freeholds were small, not exceeding £80 per annum, and some times much less, were the sole property of the plaintiffs, who had been respectably maintained by the defendant while they resided with him.

Mr. F. Walsh, for the plaintiffs (Mr. H. P. Jellett with him).—The only question here is, whether the defendant is entitled to charge for maintenance. On this point, we have the authority of Arundel v. Lowe (1 Vern. 19), Davies v. Davies (9 Car. & P. 87), showing, that under similar circumstances, an agreement to pay cannot be implied.

Berwick, Q. C. for defendant (with him Mr. Hickey & Mr. Dundas). [Lord Chancellor.—I cannot understand that those ladies, out of £100 a-year, agreed to pay £140.] We never intended to charge them with the surplus. [Lord Chancellor.—It seems strange to make a charge which was not intended to be enforced, but I think I should not do justice to either party by sending them out of court. With regard to the rents up to 1843, I should feel great difficulty in giving an account, when the parties had been all living together as they were in this case. If the plaintiffs insist on sending this case to the office for an account of the personal property, it must go. This is very like the case of parties living together till the filing of the bill, when I should not direct an account prior to the filing of the bill. Here they lived together till four years before the commencement of this suit. I do not think I can direct the account before those four years.]

Mr. Hickey with Berwick.

Mr. Jellett in reply.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—The defendant has complicated this cause against himself by the accounts which he furnished, and has raised almost the only difficulty in the way of his case. There is no evidence of an agreement one way or the other. These ladies, having small and fluctuating incomes, resided with their brother, the defendant, for a period of thirteen years; during all that time, there never appears to have been an account settled, or asked for, between them. They must have known that their brother received some of these rents; to a certain extent, they constituted him their agent. They all lived together during that time—they were supported and clothed by him—they had not any means, save that small property; the defendant had no means except his professional gains. Thus they lived together, the rents going in support of the establishment, and being treated as part of a common fund for that purpose; and it is clear, that they went but a small way in the maintenance of these ladies. There is no evidence of an express agreement, but is there not much evidence that they did not consider each other as standing in the position of accounting parties, and that their brother received the money in that way? If that state of facts had continued down to the filing of the bill, I should not direct an account, save from the filing of the bill. I have said that the defendant has thrown the only doubt on the case by his accounts. It is clear that no specific sum for maintenance was agreed on, but he makes this claim as if there had been. However, on the whole, I will not decree that a man cannot create a claim for maintenance against his brothers or sisters; in other words, I will not decree that they can make money by quarrelling with their relation. Each case must be governed by its own circumstances. Here we have parties living together for thirteen years without taking an account; and I do not think, by refusing to give an account of those rents, I shall set a bad precedent, where, if the state of facts had continued to the present time, I should only have given it from the filing of the bill.

MEREDYTH v. CREED.—April 20.

Appointment of Trustees—Costs of overpaid Creditor.

There is no objection to two trustees being appointed in the place of a sole trustee.

An overpaid creditor, puisne to the plaintiff, has no right to his costs, though he was not paid off at the time of putting in his answer.

This case came on, on further directions.

Deasy, Q.C., for the plaintiff, amongst other matters, asked that it might be referred to the Master to appoint a new trustee of a fund in the cause, in the room of the former trustee, who had been discharged as an insolvent debtor. [Lord Chancellor.—Was there ever more than one trustee of this fund?] There were two. [Lord Chancellor.—I do not see any objection to putting two trustees in the place of one; take an order to appoint two trustees.]

Mr. R. Warren, for one of the defendants.—An overpaid mortgagee in possession applied for his costs; at the time of putting in his answer, a small sum was still due to him, so that he was then a necessary party, but had since been overpaid.

Deasy, Q.C., contra.—This party is an incumbrancer puisne to the plaintiff, and is not entitled to costs as against him, and he cannot have them out of the fund.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—How can I give this demand against the plaintiff? He had a right to get this party out of his way; as a trustee, he may be entitled to his costs against his cestui que trusts, but I do not see how I can give them here.

ROLLS COURT.

O'KEEFE v. LANIGAN.—March 2.

Production of Documents.

In a suit instituted to set aside an assignment of a mortgage, the court refused to order production of an alleged mesne assignment to the assignor stated to have been made by endorsement on the mortgage, and not mentioned in the bill.

The bill in this cause was filed by the plaintiff, as personal representative of his brother, Charles O'Keefe, and stated, that on the 1st of March, 1834, a certain mortgage was executed to Charles O'Keefe, senior, to secure payment of the sum of £5,000 advanced by him—that C. O'Keefe, senior, having died intestate, administration was granted to his widow, Alicia O'Keefe; and, on the 9th of September, 1841, said mortgage was assigned to Charles O'Keefe, junior, as part of his distributive share in his father's assets. The bill then stated, that C. O'Keefe was a person of weak intellect—that he went to reside with the defendant, who obtained possession of the deeds by which said mortgage debt was secured, and obtained from C. O'Keefe his signature to some deed purporting to assign said mortgage to the defendant. In December, 1843, C. O'Keefe died, and the plaintiff obtained administration to him, and the bill prayed that the defendant might be declared agent of C. O'Keefe, and liable to account to the plaintiff, and that the assignment of the said mortgage to the defendant might be declared fraudulent and void.

The defendant, by his answer, admitted possession of the deed of 1st of March, 1834, and 9th of September, 1841, and stated, that by indenture of the 23rd of June, 1843, C. O'Keefe assigned the mortgage to the defendant, who secured to O'Keefe an annuity of £200. The defendant denied fraud.

By order bearing date the 20th of July, 1843, the defendant had been directed to produce the assignment of the 23rd of June, 1843. The plaintiff now moved for production of the mortgage of the 1st of March, 1834, and a certain endorsement thereon, signed "Alicia O'Keefe," by which the plaintiff stated, he believed the said mortgage was assigned to C. O'Keefe, junior.

Christian, Q.C., for the motion.—This deed constitutes a material part of the plaintiff's case; he is personal representative of C. O'Keefe, and this endorsement is a material part of the plaintiff's case. The statement in the bill is, that the assignment was made while he resided with his own family. This is denied by the answer, and it becomes necessary to ascertain the fact from the assignment itself.

Hughes, Q.C., and Mr. Wm. Smith, contra.—It is admitted that there is no statement in the bill concerning the endorsement; the first allusion to it is in the affidavit made to support the motion. Possession of the endorsement by the defendant should be shewn. Wigram on Discovery, 210, and cases there cited. This suit seeks to set aside the assignment made to the defendant. The mortgage is to be considered as the estate, and, until the plaintiff shall establish his right to set aside the assignment to the defendant, he has no right to inspect the title deeds. The mortgage is fully admitted. The circumstance, that a mesne assignment may have been made by endorsement, cannot give a better right to production than if it had been done by a separate deed; and if by a separate deed not stated in the bill, it is plain the plaintiff could not insist on its production.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case an order has been made for the production of the deed of assignment, and the plaintiff now applies for the mortgage—admitted by the defendant to be in his possession—for the purpose of inspecting an alleged endorsement. As there is no allegation concerning the endorsement in the bill, I do not think the plaintiff would have any right to call for the mortgage, which relates exclusively to the title of the defendant. I must treat this endorsement in the same manner as if it was on a different paper from the mortgage; and, to justify an order for its production, there must be a distinct admission by the defendant of its being in his possession: for an application such as the present, is in the nature of an exception for insufficiency, and the defendant is entitled to call upon the plaintiff to read the admission in his answer; but there is no statement in the bill, nor any admission in the answer, concerning it. The plaintiff may be justly entitled to the information he seeks, but he must put it in issue in the bill. I will make no rule on this motion, without prejudice to the plaintiff amending his bill, by putting in issue the endorsement, and applying for its production if the defendant admits possession by his answer. My present impression is, that the plaintiff is not entitled to the production of the mortgage, which is unimpeached; the document which is impeached is the assignment.

NUGENT v. PEIRS.—March 2.

Married Woman.—Conveyance.—Execution of Deed by the Master.

The 28 Geo. 3, c. 35, which provides that in certain cases the court may direct the execution of conveyances by the Master, does not apply to the case of a married woman, resident out of the jurisdiction.

In this case a decree for a sale had been pronounced, at which time the defendant, Sir J. B. Peirs, was seized in fee of certain lands in the Queen's County, by deed of the 20th of January, 1841, and made after said decree, and pending proceedings in the cause, said lands were settled upon Sir J. B. Peirs, for life, remainder to his daughters Louisa and Florence, in fee. After the execution of this deed Florence married Count Kerrignen, and by marriage settlement all her property was conveyed to J. E. Piers and H. M. Tuite, trustees upon certain trusts for the issue of the marriage. The Count and Countess Kerrignen and their family, resided at Sardinia; and J. E. Peirs resided at St. Omer's. The lands included in the deed of 1841 having been sold under the decree.

Mr. F. Fitzgerald now moved, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the Master in the cause might be at liberty to execute the deed of conveyance to the purchaser, for and in the name of the defendants, the Count and Countess Kerrignen, and their children, and of Louisa and John Edward Peirs. This case comes within the provisions of the 28 Geo. 3, c. 35, s. 8; and even if it does not, the 1 W. 4, c. 60, would authorize such an order as we seek. A married woman is as much bound by a decree as a femme sole. Mallack v. Galton, (3 P. W. 352, and the case referred to in the notes.) The ground on which an infant is not bound, is that a day is given to shew cause. In Burke v. Crosbie, (1 B. & B. 489, page 501), the Lord Chancellor says, "I am satisfied that a person giving full value for an estate sold under a decree, cannot be disturbed," &c., "a married woman is as much bound by the decree of the court as a femme sole," &c. A married woman is capable of binding herself by a conveyance, by matter of record. In the case of Jordan v. Jones, (2 Phil. 170), before the Lord Chancellor, it was decided that the court had no jurisdiction to make an order upon a married woman to convey. That case was decided on the English act, and the statute 28 Geo. 3, does not apply to England; and if that statute had not passed, the court could not, of its own jurisdiction, have compelled a married woman to execute a conveyance. If a married woman is bound by a decree, and refuse to execute the conveyance, the statute gives the very jurisdiction which the Lord Chancellor considered the court had not before; also under the 1 W. 4, c. 60, we are entitled to carry this motion. Counsel referred to McGahan v. Rankin, (T. T. 1848.)

Mr. B. Lloyd, contra, for the purchaser.—The notice in this case is framed with a view to bring the case under the 28 Geo. 3. The words of that act shew that it applies only to cases where the party is sui juris, and (if in this country,) could be compelled to execute the deed of conveyance, but by reason of his absence from the country, the Court is unable to enforce the execution by him. In such cases, the act provides that the trustee may sign, seal, and deliver the deed. The fallacy of the argument used on the other side consists in presuming that the mere execution of a deed by a married woman will pass the estate—that the execution of a deed by a married woman is a mere nullity; the only way by which she could convey was by a fine at common law, or by an acknowledgment under the recent act; and it is essential to the validity of these acts, that they should be voluntary. It was for this reason that Lord Cottenham held, in Jones v. Jordan, that a Court of Equity could not compel a married woman to execute a deed, under the statute, 1 W. 4, c. 60, s. 8, between which and the former act there is this difference—namely, that by the latter act the Master does not execute the deed in the name of the married woman; he executes it in his own name; and it would be necessary, if the application were under that act, that there should be a petition. The last act is the Irish Chancery Act, of the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 78; but previous to proceeding under this act, there should be a tender of the instrument and a refusal to execute the conveyance; and it is not pretended that that preliminary step has been taken. Therefore, this case does not come within it. King v. Leach, (2 Hare, 57,) Jackson v. Medfield, (5 Hare, 538,) and on appeal, 2 Phil. 254; Fowler v. Ward, (8 Beav. 488,) Billing v. Webb, (12 Jurist, 427.) If the case is meant to be brought within the 1 W. 4, there should be a petition; if within the 4 & 5 W. 4, there should be a previous tender.

April 1.—His Honor, in giving judgment, said that he was not aware of any such case in which a married woman had been compelled to execute a deed; and in England, the Lord Chancellor lately held, that the court had no authority to make such an order. His Honor then referred to the 28 Geo. 3, and said he considered it only applied to those parties who, if within the jurisdiction, could be compelled to execute the conveyance, but signing, sealing, and delivery of a deed, (which was what the Master was empowered to do) by a married woman was a nullity; as previous to the late statute, it was only by matter of record a married woman could convey, such as by fine; and since the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, by complying with the provisions of that act. His Honour then referred to the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 78, which provided that if any person directed to execute a conveyance, refuse to do so, the court might, after service of the order and tender of the conveyance or instrument, direct the Master to execute same, and said it was not contended that this act applied to the present case, as the provisions of it had not been complied with. His Honour then referred to the 1 Wm. 4, c. 60, and Billing v. Webb (12 Jur. 427), and said he did not think it necessary to give any opinion, as to whether that statute applied; for if the case was meant to be brought within it, there should have been a petition; and, as he did not think that the 28 Geo. 3 applied to the present case, he would make no rule on the motion as to the Count and Countess de Kerrignen and their children.

IN RE DARCY AND THE INCUMBERED ESTATES ACT—April 18.

Petition—Incumbered Estates Act—Fee to Counsel.

This was a petition under the Incumbered Estates Act.

Mr. Darley applied, that the solicitor who prepared the petition might, on account of its great length, be allowed more than £1 4s. 6d., the ordinary fee.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS refused to give any direction; but stated that Master O'Dwyer was of opinion a fee for counsel should be allowed on petitions under this act, as they were in the nature of pleadings, and his Honour concurred in that opinion.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

LESSEE OF HENRY BROWNRIGG v. REV. ARTHUR A. CRUIKSHANK, CLK., AND ROBERT SYMES—April 21.

Ejectment—Adverse Possession—Devise.

T. B. tenant for life of freehold estate under the limitations of a will, levied a fine with proclamations to the use of himself in fee, and devised the lands to H. J. B. for life, with remainder to H. B. in fee. H. J. B. having survived the testator, T. B. for upwards of twenty years, died, having devised the same property to trustees in fee for the benefit of his widow and children. Ejectment having been brought by H. B. for the recovery of the lands,—Held, that whatever might be the legal effect of the fine, H. J. B. having assumed to take under T. B.'s will, and his life estate being referrible solely thereto, his possession could not be considered an adverse one, within 8 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.

This was an action of ejectment on the title, tried at the last Wexford Spring Assizes, before Mr. Justice Perrin. The declaration in ejectment contained one demise in the name of H. Brownrigg, and was brought for the recovery of the lands of Coolnahorna, in the county of Wexford. The facts of the case were as follows:—H. Brownrigg, the elder, father of the lessor of the plaintiff, by his will, dated May, 31, 1796, devised the estate in question, after the death of his wife, to his eldest son, Thomas Brownrigg, for life, with remainder to his first and other sons, in tail male, and, for want of such issue male, or if such should die under twenty-one, unmarried, and without issue, then to his second son, John Brownrigg, and his issue male, according to seniority, and, for want of such issue male, or in case such should die under twenty-one, and without issue, then to Henry, the present lessor of the plaintiff in fee. The testator died in September, 1797, having survived his son John, who died in the early part of that year. Thomas Brownrigg came into possession of the estate, under the limitations in his father's will, on the decease of his mother in 1810, and in Trinity Term, 1814, levied a fine thereof, with proclamations, to the use of himself in fee. T. Brownrigg never had issue, and remained in possession of the lands till his death in 1826. No entry had been made during his lifetime, or within the time allowed by law after his decease, by any party to avoid the fine. By his will, dated the 23rd of August, 1823, Thomas Brownrigg devised the Coolnahorna estate to his nephew, Henry John Brownrigg, for life, with remainder to the use of the lessor of the plaintiff in fee. After the death of Thomas, Henry John entered into and continued in possession of the estate up to the time of his own death, in January, 1847, having enjoyed the property for upwards of twenty years. By his will, dated the 13th of April, 1844, he devised the estate in question to the present defendants, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of his widow and children. The lessor of the plaintiff having filed his bill in Chancery on the 4th of June, 1847, against the present defendants, together with the widow and children of H. J. B., praying that the will of H. B. the elder, of the 31st of May, 1796, might be established, and its limitations ascertained and carried into effect, the Lord Chancellor, in the progress of the suit, directed the present ejectment to be brought, for the purpose of ascertaining the title of H. B., the present lessor of the plaintiff, to the premises. A verdict was had at the trial for the lessor of the plaintiff, and leave was reserved for the defendants to apply to have the verdict changed into one for them, in case the court should be of opinion that H. J. B. had acquired a title to the estate, by such an adverse possession thereof, as satisfied the Statute of Limitations (3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27).

A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff, and enter one for the defendant, pursuant to leave reserved, cause was this day shown by George, Q.C., for the lessor of the plaintiff.—We contend that John, who died before his father, would, in case he had survived, have taken an estate tail in remainder in the premises, and was not tenant for life, with remainder to his issue as purchasers. The University of Oxford v. Clifton (1 Eden, 478). The estate tail in John having thus failed by his dying in the lifetime of the testator, the devise to him must be looked on as expunged from the will, and consequently H. B., the lessor of the plaintiff, was the party entitled thereunder to the estate in fee or remainder, on the death of Thomas. Hodgson et al. v. Ashurst (Doug. 336-40); Doe den Turner et al. v. Edk (4 T. R. 601). With respect to the fine, if levied by a tenant for life, a fine divests the estate in remainder, and merely leaves a right of entry. The remainder man, or reversioner, may enter presently, but is not bound to do so. The law gives him five years after the death of the tenant for life, because he has no reason to look until the natural determination of the estate, Earl Pomfret v. Lord Windsor (3 Ves. sen. 482; Sheppard's Touchstone, by Atherley, 23-36, passim). There is no dispute here about the validity of the fine, or of the several wills which have been admitted by consent. We submit that the lessor of the plaintiff acquired a new title by the said fine, and that, at all events, the party under whom the present defendants derive, professed to claim under the same, and his possession was, therefore, not an adverse one.

R. W. Grene, Q.C., and Wall, Q.C., contra.—The effect of the Statute of Limitations (8 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, is to operate as a conveyance of real property, Scott v. Nison (3 Dr. & War. 388). Possession for twenty years gives an absolute title; that title was acquired by H. J. B. If a possession has an inception by wrong, the statute begins to run in favour of the possessor. It is of no consequence as to what may be the pretensions of the lessor of the plaintiff, provided we establish an adverse title in H. J. B. We admit, that at the death of the original testator, Henry, the elder, the estate stood limited to Thomas for life, with remainder to the lessor of the plaintiff in fee, the intermediate estate tail in remainder to John having lapsed by his decease in the testator's lifetime. It must be remembered, that H. J. B. was the heir-at-law both of Henry, the elder, and of Thomas. We disclaim having taken under the will; that would have been to elect to take a bad title in place of a good one. In the events which have happened, the lessor of the plaintiff has no title except under the will of Thomas, but the latter had, in fact, no right to make a will at all, because his estate might have been avoided by entry, by Henry, the party entitled in remainder under the will of 1796, within five years after his decease. This the lessor of the plaintiff omitted doing, and has thus established the fine. [Perrin, J.—You had, at all events, a colourable title under Thomas, and no title under any other.] The possession of H. J. B. was, however, clearly adverse to the lessor of the plaintiff, on the death of Thomas, in 1826, it having commenced by wrong. The court ought, moreover, refer the claim of the lessor of the plaintiff to his elder title under his father, the former testator, rather than to his puirne one under his brother. The question, in fact, turns on the effect to be given to the will of the co-nuzor of the fine. [Blackburne, C.J.—According to your argument, H. J. B. must have entered adversely to his own title as tenant for life.] Take it quicumque videt, the possession is adverse; if he entered as heir, he entered adversely to the will; if he did not enter as heir, he entered without right.

Lynch, Q.C., in reply, was stopped by the Court.

BLACKBURNE, C.J.—This case is too plain to admit of any doubt. Thomas, being seized for life, with remainder to Henry, the lessor of the plaintiff, levied a fine with proclamations, in 1814, and afterwards devised the estate to Henry John for life, with remainder to the lessor of the plaintiff. There were two limitations in the favour of the latter—one under the will of Henry and the other under that of Thomas. There was no entry to avoid the fine within five years from the time of its being levied, or the death of Thomas. Therefore, by the non-claim and want of entry, the estate of Thomas became an absolute estate of fee simple; and, being so seized, in 1825 he made his will, in which he limited the estate to H. J. for life, with remainder to lessee of plaintiff. Henry John could only have entered as devisee for life; he had no title by descent; his only title was that of tenant for life. He could not possibly have acquired the estate as heir-at-law, neither could he have entered as heir-at-law, when nothing descended; and he cannot here refer his possession, either to a title which did not exist, or to one which, if it did exist, at all events was tortious. When he entered in 1826, he entered as tenant for life, and that not only for his own benefit, but for the benefit of the remainder-man; and, accordingly, when he died in 1846, the remainder-man, being the lessor of the plaintiff, was entitled to the possession of the estate.

Cause shown allowed.

Note.—The 4 Hen. 7, c. 24, intitled, "How often a fine levied in the Common Pleas shall be read and proclaimed, and who then shall be bound thereby," enacts, That after the engrossing of every fine to be levied after the feast of Easter, A. D. 1490, in the King's Court, afore his justices of the Common Place of any lands, &c., the same fine to be openly and solemnly read and proclaimed in the same court, the same Term, and in three Terms then next following the same engrossing in the same court, at four several days in every Term, and in the same time that it be so read and proclaimed, all pleas to cease; and the said proclamations so had and made, the said fine to be a final end, and conclude as well privies as strangers to the same, except women covert, (others than had been parties to the said fine,) and every person then being within age of twenty-one years, &c., and saving to every person or persons, or to their heirs, other than the parties in the said fine such right, &c., as they have to or in the same lands, &c., the time of such fine engrossed, so that they preserve their title, claim, or interest, by way of action or lawful entry within five years next after the said proclamation had and made, and also saving to all such other persons such action, right, &c., in or to the said lands, &c., as first shall grow, remain, descend, or come to them after the said fine engrossed and proclamation made, by force of any gift in the tail, or by any other cause or matter had and made before the said fine levied; so that they take their action, or pursue their said right and title according to the law, within five years next after such action, right, title, claim, or interest, to them accrued, descended, remained, fallen, or come.

COMMON PLEAS.—EASTER TERM.

LESSEE PARSONS v. PURCELL.—19th April.

Ejectment—Evidence—Notice to quit signed by Receiver—Bill and Answer.

Where a bill and answer have been put in evidence by the plaintiff solely for the purpose of shewing the pendency of a cause, and to establish the authority of the receiver in that cause, to sign a notice to quit—the contents of such bill and answer cannot be given in evidence for the defendant.

Semble, that even were it otherwise, admissions con-ained therein could not be made evidence of a written instrument not produced. The case of Trimlestown v. Kemmis (9 Clarke & Fin.) commented on.

Michael Barry moved "that the verdict had for the plaintiff at the last Assizes for the County of Limerick, before the Right Hon. Baron Richards, be set aside, and that a verdict or a non-suit be entered up for the defendant, upon the grounds that the said verdict was bad on the misdirection of the learned judge who tried the case, and his rejection of legal and admissible evidence given on said trial by plaintiff and defendant."

This was an action of ejectment on the title, tried before Baron Richards at the last Limerick Assizes, for the recovery of certain lands in the possession of the defendant. On behalf of the lessors of the plaintiff, there was produced in evidence at the trial an attested copy of an original bill, filed in the Court of Chancery on the 18th May, 1843, in which Henry Watson was plaintiff, and Richard Parsons (father of the lessor of the plaintiff) was defendant; also an attested copy of Parsons' answer, filed 24th May 1843; an attested copy of an order made in the cause of Watson v. Parsons, referring it to the Master to appoint a receiver; and an attested copy of the Master's report thereunder, approving of Robert Hunt, Esq. as a fit and proper person to be appointed receiver in said cause. A notice to quit on the 1st of May, 1848, was then given in evidence, signed by the said Robert Hunt, as such receiver; and after some further evidence the plaintiff closed his case.

Counsel on behalf of the defendant then proposed to read in evidence a statement contained in the bill, and admitted by the answer, by which it appeared that the legal estate in these lands was vested in the plaintiff Watson; and submitted that as no demise had been laid in Watson's name, the plaintiff ought to be non-suited. His Lordship, however, declined to receive the statement of the bill and answer as evidence, upon the ground that the bill and answer had been given in evidence merely to prove the pendency of the cause, and that their contents were not further in evidence.

Counsel for the defendant further produced a statement of facts laid before the Master in said cause of Watson v. Parsons, on the 26th January, 1849, and in which the defendant was described as tenant of the lands at that time, and debited with the rent which accrued due on the 1st November, 1848. This statement counsel relied upon as a recognition of the tenancy, subsequent to the expiration of the notice to quit, and a waiver of such notice; and called upon the judge to direct a verdict for the defendant. This the learned judge declined to do, and directed the jury to find for the plaintiff, unless they should be of opinion that there had been a waiver of the notice to quit.

Barry now, in support of his application, contended that the statements in the bill, and admissions in the answer of Richard Parsons, (the father of the lessor of the plaintiff, and the person through whom he derived his title,) were evidence against the plaintiff, and dispensed with the necessity for the production of the instrument by which the legal estate became vested in Watson. Slatterie v. Pooley, (6 M. & W. 664,) Newhall v. Holt, (6 M. & W. 662,) Earle v. Picken, (5 C. & P. 342.) [Bull, J.—How could the statements in the bill or answer dispense with the production of the written instrument? The case of Slatterie v. Pooley, and the other cases before Baron Parke, have been subsequently departed from in England; and in Ireland the whole question has been fully reviewed in the case of Lawless v. Quale, (8 Ir. L.R. 382,) and the dicta of Baron Parke overruled.] In Lawless v. Quale, Crompton, J., lays down the proposition, that "a man's admissions are always evidence against himself" [Bull, J.—Perhaps some of the isolated passages of Mr. Justice Crompton's judgment in that case may appear to be in your favour; but, taken in connection with the circumstances of the case, his judgment is strongly against you. The cases on this subject are collected in Taylor on Evidence.*] The grounds upon which Baron Richards ruled that the evidence was inadmissible, were, that the contents of the bill and answer were not in evidence. In Lord Trimlestown v. Kemmis, (9 Clarke and Finnelly, 777,) Tindal, C. J., says—"The fifth exception on the part of the plaintiff relates to the bill in Chancery, filed by the lessor of the plaintiff against the said Thomas Kemmis, on the 14th of October, 1816, which bill the defendant produced for the purpose of showing the subject-matter of the suit, and that the lessor of the plaintiff claimed as heir-at-law of his father, the Lord Nicholas, and offered to read those allegations therein; but the plaintiff objected to the production of this evidence; and we think it is a sufficient answer against the allowance of the exception, that the bill in Chancery, the production and reading of which is now excepted against, had in an earlier stage of the cause been put in evidence by the plaintiff himself; for the bill having formed part of the evidence, the whole was in evidence, and the defendant might have insisted, at the time of its production by the plaintiff, that the whole should be read, and in consideration and contemplation of law, the whole was read." [Torrens, J.—But the contents of the bill were not in evidence in this case at all. The bill was put in evidence for the simple purpose of proving the pendency of the suit, and the jurisdiction of the Court to appoint Mr. Hunt as receiver. Not a word, either of the bill or answer, need have been read for the plaintiff here; nor was there a word read in point of fact.] [Bull, J.—You will find that the case of Trimlestown v. Kemmis has not the least application to the present. I remember that case perfectly, and the facts there were, that the bill was given in evidence for the express and specific purpose of reading parts of the defendant's answer; and this Court held, (as was afterwards affirmed by the House of Lords,) that the whole answer was in evidence, inasmuch as part had been read by the plaintiff. Here there was not a word of the bill in evidence; it was put in merely to show the jurisdiction of the Court to appoint the receiver. The ruling of the learned judge was, in my opinion, perfectly correct.] We

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

BENNETT v. SANDHEIM.—April 20.

Demurrer—Ambiguity in Pleading.

Declaration commencing in the ordinary form of action of debt, and concluding thus, "yet the defendant hath disregarded his promises, and hath not paid any of the said moneys, or any part thereof." Held bad on special demurrer, it being unclear whether it was a declaration in debt or assumpsit.

queritur in the commencement of a declaration debt is not material, and therefore the sum claimed in it not covering the sum claimed in the writ, is not a good ground of special demurrer.

declaration contained the money counts, and as follows:—"H. B. a debtor, &c., comes before the Barons, &c., and complains against J. S. defendant, &c., of a plea that he render unto the plaintiff the sum of £49, which he owes to and justly detains from him." Then followed the money counts, and concluded thus—"Therefore defendant afterwards, to wit (venue), in contravention of the premises respectively, then and he promised the plaintiff to pay him the said moneys respectively on request, yet he hath disregarded his said promise, and hath not paid any of the said moneys, or any part thereof, to the plaintiff, &c." Special demurrer on the ground that by its commencement the declaration purports to be in debt, yet in the conclusion adopted form of assumpsit; also on the ground that the sum demanded in the counts exceeded the sum demanded in the queritur, and other grounds, on which, however, the judgment of the court did not rely for the demurrer.—It would be impossible for the pleader to decide whether his plea should be in debt or non assumpsit. If this be treated as a plea in debt, then there is no breach assigned; but if it deviates from the forms prescribed by the rules, (Gen. R. E. T. 1832,) which is one of the grounds of demurrer assigned. Knos v. Irwin, (6 M. & W. 250); Rolling v. Mugeridge, (16 M. & W. 181).

Stagibbon, Q. C., with him Fenton, contra.—Words having reference to the promise may be struck out as surplusage, and the breach remains intact. It is laid down in Gilbert on Debt, p. 10, that the per quod is not essential in all cases. As to its deviating from the forms, the question is always the same, is there a substantial deviation. A declaration states the cause of action correctly from the commencement, then in the conclusion the promise may be struck out as surplusage, and this being a debitum in presenti the per quod is unnecessary. Lord v. Houston, (11 East. 62,) decides that the queritur is superfluous, and therefore the objection that the sum demanded in the counts exceeds that specified in the queritur falls to the ground. Counsel also relied on Compton v. Taylor, (4 M. & W. 198); Cloves v. Williams, (3 Bing. N. C. 868; 2 Chitty, 384.)

LEFROY, B.—The object of the new rules was to prevent expense. They supply forms for both debt and assumpsit; you follow neither.

PIGOT, C. B.—That part of the commencement, "that he render to the plaintiff the sum of £49, which he owes to, and unjustly detains from," is unnecessary, and the sum may therefore be struck out, on the authority of Lord v. Houston.

PENNEFATHER, B.—It is ambiguous whether this is a count in debt or assumpsit, and this ambiguity is calculated to embarrass the pleader on the opposite side, and the court ought not to be called upon to spell out a pleading in this way, when there are forms prescribed by the rules.

PIGOT, C. B.—We are all of opinion that this declaration is vicious upon one of the grounds assigned as a special cause of demurrer, and noted for argument, namely, that it is doubtful whether the declaration is framed in debt or assumpsit. If this were a mere departure from the ordinary form of pleading—not such a one as would be calculated to mislead the pleader—the court would endeavour to make an intendment to uphold the pleading; but coupling the commencement of this declaration with the part preceding the laying of the damages, it is evident that it is likely to mislead the pleader, and leave him in doubt as to the frame of his defence. Lord v. Houston is an authority that the "render" in the commencement is superfluous, and may be omitted. If so, the rest constitutes a good declaration in assumpsit; but the argument of the plaintiff is, that the promise may be struck out from the conclusion, and thus it may be treated as a count in debt. Now this is the very thing which constitutes the ambiguity, and makes the pleading vicious. In the case of Cloves v. Williams no doubt could exist as to what was the nature of the count. In Compton v. Taylor the demurrer was taken for misjoinder, and the point raised here was not argued—the demurrer taken having been too large. If a great difficulty did not exist here, I would not be disposed to allow the demurrer; but as it is, we are of opinion that the declaration is vicious.

Allow the demurrer, but liberty to plaintiff to amend.

BALDWIN v. IRVINE.—April 21–23.

Trespass for Mesne Rates—Agreement for stay of Execution in Ejectment—Judgment in Ejectment conclusive Evidence of Possession.

Where the defendant in ejectment, pending the proceedings, entered into an agreement, subsequent to the service of ejectment, with the agent of the lessor of the plaintiff, to give a consent for judgment, with a stay of execution, and that he should have the crops, in an action of trespass for mesne rates—Held that this agreement did not preclude the plaintiff from recovering nominal damages for the trespass, antecedent to the date of the agreement.

This was an action of trespass for mesne rates, and had been tried before Mr. Justice Ball, at the Spring Assizes for Limerick, 1848. The declaration contained one count. Pleas; the general issue, and leave and license of the plaintiff. The plaintiff, to prove possession, gave in evidence, amongst other things, the ejectment process, by which the date of the demise appeared to be the 12th of May, 1845, the judgment in ejectment, with stay of execution till the 1st of December, 1845, and the execution of the habere on the 5th of December in the same year.

On the part of the defendant, a person named Langford, who was in possession of the evicted premises, proved a parol agreement on the 20th of August, 1845, between him and a person named Sheehy, the agent of the plaintiff, to the effect, that the witness was to have the crops, and the plaintiff to give a stay of execution till the 1st of December following. The learned Judge told the jury to find the value of the mesne profits from the 19th of May to the time of the execution of the habere, on the 5th of December, 1845; and also the value from the 19th of May to the date of the agreement in August, and reserved leave for the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict for either of said amounts. To this direction the plaintiff objected.

Verdict for the defendant.

O'Brien, Sergeant, J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., and Synan, now moved to make absolute the conditional order obtained on a former occasion, pursuant to the leave reserved. They contended, that this agreement was inadmissible under the plea of the general issue, Bird v. Randall (3 Burr. 1345; 1 Sid. 293; Chit. Pl. 5 ed. 539, 545)—that the judgment in ejectment was conclusive to prove the possession of the plaintiff, and that the defendant could not be admitted to disprove the title of the plaintiff, Askin v. Porkin (2 Burr. 665); Armstrong v. Norton (2 Ir. L. Rep. 96); and that even if the agreement was admissible in this case, that it would not preclude the plaintiff from recovery in trespass, as the right of possession was in him from the date of the demise, Nugent v. Phillips (8 I. L. Rep. 17); and that, supposing this agreement amounted to leave and license, it could only be so from the date of the agreement, and, not having been specially pleaded, left the trespass between the date of the demise in the lease to the date of the agreement unanswered, (Bac. A. tit. Rel. letter A. Pl. 1); Barnes v. Hunt (11 East. 451). [They also cited Doe v. Harvey, (8 Bing. 242); Jones v. Gibbs, (2 Hud. & Bro. 587); Doe v. Hill and Lee (4 Taunt. 458); Dodwell v. McDonnell (2 Car. & P.); Doe d. Morgan v. Blick, (3 Camp. 447).]

Henn, Q.C., (Leahy with him) contra, contended that the defendant could not be treated as a trespasser—that by the terms of the agreement, the defendant had yielded his right on the faith of not being treated as such. In Nugent v. Phillips, there was no mention of the crops, which clearly distinguishes it from this case. No objection to the form of the pleading was made at the trial.

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., was heard in reply.

*PENNEFATHER, B., delivered the judgment of the court.—The court feels some difficulty, both on the law and the merits of this case. Considering the whole case, and attending to the state of the pleadings, we are of opinion that the plaintiff should have judgment for £10. I feel great difficulty in saying that this agreement could be given in evidence under the general issue; and there is also some difficulty in adopting the view taken, that the agreement was intended to include more than the crops.

April 28.—PENNEFATHER, B.—On further consideration of this case, we find ourselves coerced by the authorities cited on the part of the plaintiff, and are of opinion that the verdict should be changed to a verdict for the plaintiff with nominal damages.

Practice—Costs of Commission—3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 69.

Walker, Q.C., moved in this case for a commission under the provisions of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 69, to examine Lady Bradford, a witness in the cause, and that, in the mean while, all proceedings be stayed.

The affidavit of the defendant's attorney stated, that the action was brought against the defendant as the drawer of a certain bill of exchange—that he believed he was a minor at the time of the making of the bill in question—that he believed Anne Elizabeth Lady Bradford resided in London, and was a material witness to prove the infancy of the said defendant, and that he believed that she was unable to come to Dublin to attend the trial.

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., with Simple, contra, admitted the plaintiff's right to the commission, but contended the costs should be borne by the defendant, the proceeding being entirely for his benefit. [Lefroy, B.—If the lady was brought here as a witness, and you failed in your action, you should pay her expenses. Before the statute was passed, the party who required the testimony of a witness abroad, filed his bill in Equity for a commission to examine him, and the cause was stayed till the suit in Equity was ended.] That was the ground on which the court proceeded in the case of Brydges v. Fisher (1 Bing. N. C. 513). The statement in this affidavit is only on belief as to the material facts. There is no statement as to what length of time they require; the notice seeks indefinitely to stay our proceedings.

LEFROY, B.—The plaintiff is entitled to come here to see that the commission is not used for the purposes of delay; besides, the affidavit on which the defendant relies is only on belief. I will give the plaintiff the costs of the motion; the costs of the commission to be costs in the cause. The officer reports, there is no instance of the costs of a commission to examine witnesses being otherwise than costs in the cause. Rule accordingly.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

ORE V. MILLIKEN.—April 26.

Administrator—Costs.

An administrator, by his answer, put forward accounts which were completely falsified; he was charged with the costs of the suit.

This case came before the Court on report and merits. The bill had been filed by the next of kin of Mary Orr, for an account of her personal estate, against her administrator, John Milliken. It appeared that the property of the intestate comprised her interest in a public-house, which the defendant had continued to manage after her decease, but had kept no accounts of the trade of it. The bill was not filed till after several applications for an account. In the account furnished in answer to the bill, the defendant had claimed credit for the maintenance of the plaintiffs, against the general personal estate of the intestate, and stated that the profits of the public-house, above the cost of stock, amounted to only £150, during the period of his management. He claimed, for shopman's wages and head-rent, a sum which more than absorbed that £150, and a sum of £642 12s. for maintenance, clothing, and education of the plaintiffs; but the Master reported that there was due from the defendant the sum of £677 6s. 8d., after all credits. He did not find the value of profits of the public-house, no accounts having been kept; but he found specially that the plaintiffs and the shopman were maintained out of the profits of it, and that the stock, license, and incidental expenses of the public-house were defrayed out of those profits, and that it was for the benefit of the plaintiffs that those matters of expenditure should be set off as against the profits of the establishment, the defendant having consented to that set-off; and further found that the defendant drew out of the Savings' Bank, at different times, the sum of £540 8s. 8d., the money of the intestate, and retained it in his own hands, a portion till he lodged it in Court, and the residue till the date of the report.

Mr. Molynaux, Mr. R. Moore, and Mr. Macartney, for the plaintiffs.—We seek to deprive the defendant of his costs, and to charge him with ours, in this suit, which he has occasioned by his misconduct and falsified accounts. Vaughan v. Thurston, (Collis, Appeal Ca. 177;) Ashburnham v. Thompson, (13 Ves. 402;) Flanagan v. Nolan, (1 Moll. 84;) Caffrey v. Darby, (6 Ves. 488;) Anon. (4 Mod. 273;) Jebbs v. Carpenter, (1 Mod. 290;) Mr. McDonnell and Mr. T. K. Lowry, contra.—Travers v. Townsend, (1 Roll. 495;) Flanagan v. Nolan, (1 Roll. 84;) Heighington v. Grant, (1 Phil. 600.)

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—The real question here is, with respect to the costs of this suit, by whom they should be borne. The defendant is an administrator—a volunteer; he has not been appointed as an executor. With respect to his administration, nothing like default has been shown. The money of the intestate and her fixed property are all forthcoming. The question is not about that, but by whom, or why, the expense of this suit has been occasioned. It was brought against the administrator, to compel him to account. Before the bill was filed, he had been applied to for an account; that which he gave corresponded with that in his answer, admitting the moneys which he had received, but making charges which swallow up the whole fund. One allegation is, that he bore the whole expense of maintaining of the plaintiffs, and that in effect they are not entitled to receive any money, but that they would have been by this time in his debt, not he in theirs. The answer alleges that he carried on the business of the public-house, and advanced money for that purpose and for their support. Now, that answer and that account have been falsified in every particular. One witness swears that all those expenses were borne out of the profits of the establishment. What is the meaning of "PROFITS?" It clearly means the net proceeds, after paying the outgoings. In the common import of words, profits must mean that the establishment paid its own expenses, and produced a fund out of which he maintained the children. I never have seen the account of an administrator more falsified; his only equity is, that he kept no books; but it was his duty to keep them; he ought to be able to produce regular accounts. It is manifest, that before the bill was filed he made a similar claim. I should hold out a terrible example to executors, if I decided that the miserable fund of these infants should be swallowed up by the costs of falsifying this account. This court is slow to charge executors, but it is not to allow them to put forth what accounts they please. I do not think I ever saw a case call more for its interference. The defendant must pay the entire costs of this suit.

ROLLS COURT.

BELMORE V. BELMORE.—SAME V. AUCHINLECK.

Jan. 17.

Judgment Creditor proceeding at Law—Order to restrain—Decree to account.

A judgment creditor, with notice of a decree to account in a suit to administer the assets of his debtor, will be restrained from proceeding at law on foot of a judgment, and it appearing that the judgment creditor proceeded at law after notice of the decree, he was directed to pay the costs of the motion.

On the 15th of February, 1848, a decree was pronounced in the first cause, whereby it was referred to the Master to take an account of the personal estate of Somerset, late Earl of Belmore, and of Armar, late Earl of Belmore, (executor of Somerset) into whose hands same came, and how applied and disposed of, and also an account of their respective debts, legacies, and funeral and testamentary expenses of their real estate, and the debts, &c. affecting same, and to appoint a receiver. In April following a receiver was appointed, and several creditors filed charges under said decree. G. H. Stack having, in 1839, obtained a judgment against Somerset, Earl of Belmore, in the penal sum of £4000 in 1846, assigned same to the defendant Auchinleck, who, on the 13th of March, 1848, attended in the Master's office, upon a summons under the decree in the first cause. On the 16th of May following, Mr. Auchinleck revived said judgment against H. T. Lowry Corry, as executor of Armar, Earl of Belmore. The defendant Auchinleck not having proved his demands under the decree in the first cause, on the 30th of October, 1848, a supplemental bill was filed, by which he was made a notice party under the fifteenth general order, and was served with notice, and not having entered an appearance, a memorandum was entered, pursuant to the sixteenth general order. Notwithstanding these proceedings, Mr. Auchinleck issued a writ of fi fa de bonis testatoris directed to the sheriff of Dublin, and on the 18th of December, caused notice of speeding an enquiry before said sheriff to be served on H. T. Lowry Corry, to ascertain whether goods and chattels which were of said Somerset, Earl of Belmore, sufficient for the purposes of said writ of fi fa came to the hands of said H. T. L. Corry. From the affidavit of Mr. Lowry Corry's solicitor, it appeared that there were judgment and other debts outstanding against Somerset, Earl of Belmore, to the amount of more than £100,000, and that several of said judgments were prior to that vested in the defendant Auchinleck. Mr. Auchinleck by his affidavit stated that he was a creditor by judgment of Somerset and Armar, late Earls of Belmore, to the amount of between £40,000 and £50,000.

Mr. Lloyd, on behalf of the defendant, H. T. L. Corry, moved that the defendant, D. Auchinleck might be restrained from further proceedings at law, on the writ of fi fa sued out by him against the goods of Somerset, late Earl of Belmore, and that he might be directed to come in and prove under the decree in this cause, the several judgment debts due to him; and relied upon the cases of Vernon v. Thelsson, (1 Phil. 466); Kirby v. Burton, (8 Beav. 45); Dyer v. Kearsly, (2 Mer. 482); Clarke v. Lord Ormonde, (Jac. 108); Rouse v. Jones, (1 Phil. 462.)

Mr. Shiel, Q.C. and Mr. Deasy, Q.C. for defendant Auchinleck, contended that the court should not deprive the defendant of his legal advantage, Price v. Evans, (4 Sim. 514); Kent v. Pickering, (5 Sim. 569); Leigh v. Parks, (1 Keene, 714); and contended in the cases cited there was no judgment, except in the cases in Beavan.

Mr. C. Henderson in reply.—The judgment is de bonis testatoris, and the enquiry is as to the assets of the testator. Dyer v. Kearsly, (2 Mer. 482.) In Clarke v. Lord Ormonde, Lord Eldon said if the judgment was de bonis testatoris it would be a clear case for an injunction.

Jan. 18.—Mr. B. Lloyd.—The statute law in this country, 5 G. 2, c. 4, puts the case of judgments against executors on a different footing from what they are in England; for such judgments in this country are in fact only initiatory, until an inquiry is held under that statute before the sheriff, and no execution can be taken out against the executor until the sheriff returns a deceitavit, which he cannot do if there are any assets, whereas in England the plaintiff himself merely suggests a deceitavit; so that this Court, by stopping that inquiry of which notice has been given, but has not yet commenced, can prevent the judgment from being rendered final against the executor. Egan v. Baldwin, (1 Hog. 195, Yeo. & B. Ex. Pr. 394.)

April 17.—In this case, his Honour, after referring to the cases of Clarke v. Lord Ormonde, Rouse v. Jones, (1 Ph. 462, and also 1 Ph. 466;) and the statute, 5 Geo. 2, c. 5, s. 8, said he considered he was justified, on the authority of Clarke v. Lord Ormonde, in granting the injunction, and made the following order:—"Be it so as to the restraining part of said notice, and the said D. Auchinleck having had notice on the 18th of March, 1848, of the decree to rescind in this cause, bearing date the 15th of February, 1846, and having taken proceedings against the defendant, the Right Hon. H. P. L. Corry, and marked judgment by default, and issued the fi fa against the goods of Somerset, Earl of Belmore, deceased, after notice of said decree let said Daniel Auchinleck, pay to said defendant the costs of this motion, when taxed, &c."

MURPHY v. BALFE.—Feb. 27.

Practice.—Production of documents.

The bill in this cause was filed to raise the amount of a judgment, obtained, as of Michaelmas Term, 1832, against Michael Baffe the elder, and Michael Baffe the younger, and for an administration of their real and personal estates respectively.

Mr. Hughes, Q.C. with him Mr. Deasy, Q.C. moved for the production of various title deeds and family settlements, admitted by the answer of the defendant James Baffe to be in the possession of his solicitor.—No objection was made in the answer to their production.

Mr. Lawless resisted the motion as to some of the deeds, on the ground that the defendant was only expectant tenant for life, and that John Breen a minor, the party in whom was the first vested estate of inheritance, was not before the Court; and cited Glover v. Hall, (2 Phi. 484.)

MASTER of the ROLLS.—This point occurred in Dundas v. Blake, (9 Ir. Eq. 640, R.; S. C. 10 Ir. Eq. 260, C.) where I decided, in a suit affecting the inheritance, that in the absence of the minor tenant in tail, I could not, on the admission of the tenant for life, order the production of a family settlement. The case subsequently went before the Chancellor, and he ordered its production. Sitting here, I am bound by that decision, although I adhere to the view I expressed in my judgment in that case, which, I think, is in accordance with English decisions and plain principles of justice.

LINDSAY v. LINDSAY.—March 12.

Bill stated, that in 1838, J. W. made a will, that in 1845 he made another will, by which the former was revoked—that in 1846 the second will was destroyed, by the direction of said J. W., and in 1848, J. W. died intestate, and plaintiff, as heir-at-law, entered into possession of all his real estates, and prayed that the evidence of the witnesses to the will of 1845, and of the person who destroyed same, might be perpetuated. Plea, that there were tenants in possession of some of the real estate who had not paid rent to, or acknowledged plaintiff, and the matters in dispute could be immediately tried by action at law against same. Held, that the plea should be allowed.

The bill in this case stated, that John Lindsay being, in the year 1838 and until his death, seized in fee of the house and demesne of Laughry, the manor of Lindsay, and other estates in the county Tyrone, on the 3rd day of April, 1838, made his will, and thereby, after some specific legacies, devised to his wife and her heirs all the lands of which he should die possessed, subject to the payment of his just debts, and he appointed his said wife executrix thereof—that on the 5th of December, 1845, said John Lindsay made another will, whereby he devised to his uncle, F. Lindsay, all his estates, remainder to his son, subject to certain legacies, and, amongst others, £700 per annum to his wife, as already provided for her jointure, and appointed a person named John White executor thereof. The bill then stated, that said last-mentioned will was all in the hand-writing of the said John Lindsay, and was read by him before its execution, and his signature thereto was acknowledged by him in the presence of two witnesses, John Church, of, &c., and William Macan, who attested same, by the desire of the said John Lindsay—that some time after said will was executed, it was delivered by said J. Lindsay to said John White, the executor named therein, to be kept by him, who several times read same, and which remained in his sole possession—that said J. Lindsay, on the 1st of April, 1846, came into the room of the said John White, and, after some conversation about some of the bequests in said will, in which said John Lindsay expressed an intention of altering same, or making a new will, said John White, in the presence of the said J. Lindsay, and by his direction, destroyed said will in the fire—that this was done with the intention of revoking same—that after the destruction of said will, said J. White expressed a wish to see J. Little, a solicitor, for the purpose of preparing another will, but said Little did not attend—that J. Lindsay died on the 7th of August, 1848, seized in fee of said manor, lands, &c., without having made any other will, and without having re-executed said will of the 3rd of April, 1838, whereby he died intestate—that said J. Lindsay had no issue, and his father died in the lifetime of said J. Lindsay, and plaintiff, as eldest brother of his father, was heir-at-law of said J. Lindsay, and entitled to all the estates of which he died seized—that shortly after the death of said J. Lindsay, plaintiff entered into possession of said house and demesne, and of the other real estates of which J. Lindsay died seized, and was then in possession thereof—that Harriet H. Lindsay, the widow of said J. Lindsay, claimed said estate, under the said will of the 3rd of April, 1838. The bill—after alleging several pretences by said H. H. Lindsay, and that she refused to try whether said will of 3rd of April, 1838, had been revoked until after the death of the witnesses to the will of December, 1845, or of the said John White, who could alone prove the contents of said will, and its destruction—prayed, that plaintiff might be at liberty to examine the witnesses, with respect to the execution and attestation of said will of December, 1845, and the sanity of the said J. Lindsay at the time of making same, and with respect to the contents of the said will, and its subsequent destruction—that their testimony might be perpetuated and preserved.

To this bill, the defendant (H. H. Lindsay) pleaded.—That on the death of the said J. Lindsay, on or about the 17th of August, 1848, she went into possession of the said mansion-house and demesne, under the will of said J. Lindsay, bearing date the 3rd of April, 1838—that she obtained possession of the title deeds relating to said estates, and remained in possession of said house and demesne, and title deeds, &c., until the 27th of October, 1848—that on said day, plaintiff came, with several persons, and took forcible possession of said house and title deeds, and since remained in possession thereof—that the remainder of the real estate of which said J. Lindsay died seized, were in the possession of several tenants, some of whom held their lands by lease, and others as tenants from year to year—that all said tenants paid rent—that said tenants have not paid to plaintiff the rents which accrued due since the death of said J. Lindsay, nor have they acknowledged plaintiff, by attornment or otherwise, as entitled to receive same, and therefore plaintiff is not in possession of all the real estate of which the said J. Lindsay died seized. The plea then specified the names of some of the said tenants, and the rents payable by them who refused to acknowledge plaintiff, and proceeded to state, that plaintiff could, by action at law against said tenants, forthwith try the truth of the several matters in bill stated, with respect to which plaintiff alleged that the subscribing witnesses to the will in bill mentioned, and John White, were the only witnesses, and could thereby immediately assert the right of plaintiff to the real estates of which J. Lindsay died seized, and that the court ought not to perpetuate the testimony of the said witnesses, and the plea concluded with the usual averment.

Mr. Longfield, Q.C., and Mr. Dobbs, for the plea.—In order to maintain this bill, the plaintiff must shew that he cannot try the validity of the will by any proceeding at law; but it is admitted that there are several tenants who have not paid rent to, or acknowledged the plaintiff; therefore, by action for rent against them, this question may be immediately tried, and testimony should only be perpetuated in those cases where the plaintiff cannot, by any means, assert his rights, Dew v. Clarke (1 Sim. & St. 108). The testimony cannot be used till after the death of the witness, and if he swear falsely, he must go unpunished, Angell v. Angell (1 Sim. & St. 89).

Counsel also relied on Bechinall v. Arnold (1 Vern. 354), Parry v. Rogers (ib. 441), Brandlyn v. Ord, (1 Atk. 571), Butcher v. Butcher (1 Man. and Ry. 221), Kirkman v. Andrews (4 Beav. 558).

March 13.—Mr. F. Fitzgerald, Q.C. and Mr. A. Henderson for the bill.—The preservation of the plaintiff's right depends on the testimony of a single witness; and the objections made on the other side would apply, with equal force, to every bill to perpetuate testimony. By not demurring the defendant admits there is a proper case made by the will, and the facts stated in the plea are not sufficient to disentitle the plaintiff to relief; for, as to the lands in the possession of the plaintiff, no action can be brought; besides, the plea does not state that the tenants refuse to pay rent, on the ground that the plaintiff's title is invalid, or that they acknowledge the title of the defendant; and even by such an action, the question in dispute could not be decided. Counsel referred to Beckinall v. Arnold (1 Ven. 354, and Mitf. E. P., last ed. 324).

Mr. Longfield, Q.C., in reply, contended that the question in dispute could be tried by an action of trespass for mesne rates, and relied on Butcher v. Butcher, (1 Man. & Ry. 221.)

April 17.—The MASTER of THE ROLLS, after alluding to the form of the plea, upon which His Honour gave no opinion, as the question was not argued, and also to the alteration of the law as to the revocation of wills effected by the late statute, upon which there was not any point raised, said—The point in this case is, whether part of the lands, being in the hands of the tenants, who have not attorned or paid rent, the question can be decided at law; or whether plaintiff can sustain a bill to perpetuate testimony. His Honour then alluded to the case of Angell v. Angell (1 Sim. and St. p. 89), where the Vice-Chancellor says, "The jurisdiction which Courts of Equity exercise to perpetuate testimony is open to great objection; first, it leads to a trial on written depositions, which is much less favourable to the cause of truth than the visu voce examination of witnesses, but, what is still more important, inasmuch as those written depositions can never be used till after the death of the witnesses—and are not, indeed, published till after the death of the witnesses—it follows, whatever perjury may have been committed in those depositions, it must necessarily go unpunished, and this testimony has, therefore, this infirmity, that it is not given under the sanction of the penalties which the general policy of the law imposes upon the crime of perjury. It is for these reasons that Courts of Equity do not entertain bills to perpetuate testimony generally, for the purpose of being used upon a future occasion, unless where it is absolutely necessary to prevent a failure of justice. If it be possible that the matter in question can be made the subject of immediate judicial investigation, no such suit is entertained." His Honour said, that if judgment were obtained in an action against the tenant, it would still be questionable whether it would be binding on the defendant, and alluded to the case of Dew v. Clarke (1 Sim. & Stu. 108), in which it was argued, on the part of the plaintiff, that there were outstanding terms which prevented actions of ejectment from being brought; and on the judgment in that case, Sir J. Leach says, (page 114), "It appears to me that this bill makes out no case to perpetuate testimony. Although it were true that the validity of the will could not, by reason of the lease, be immediately tried by the devisees in trust, yet it may be immediately tried by an action for rent against the tenant. Testimony can be perpetuated only where by no means the plaintiff can presently assert his title to the property. I must, therefore, reject altogether the prayer to perpetuate testimony, and consider the bill as if it were not inserted, and not, therefore, multifarious on that account." His Honour also referred to Phillips on Evidence, 8 ed. 514, and Hard. 472, and expressed some doubts, as to whether the judgment against the tenant would be evidence against the defendant. He then said, there was another ground in support of the plea stated by Mr. Longfield, which was of some importance. After the death of J. Lindsay, the defendant entered into possession of the house and demesne, and remained until the 27th of October; and during that interval the plaintiff could have brought an ejectment against the defendant, and tried the question in this manner; but, instead of doing so, the plaintiff took forcible possession of the premises. His Honour said he considered that a party should not be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong; and, as after the 1st of May ejectments could be brought against the tenants, and the question tried at the next Assizes, he was of opinion the plea should be allowed.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.

DORCUS AND ANOTHER v. DORRETT.—April 23.
Construction of Will.—Words sufficient to pass legal estate in Mortgaged Property.

A testatrix, who died possessed of a mortgage in freehold lands, after reciting that she was possessed of several sums of money lent and advanced to several persons, and charged upon freehold and other lands, gave and devised the same unto S. D., and G. H. O., upon the several trusts therein mentioned, and after giving several pecuniary and specific legacies, proceeded thus "I leave all the rest, residue, and remainder of my property, of what nature or kind soever, I may be possessed of, to the said G. H. O., in trust for the children of Wm. O." Held, that the legal estate in these mortgaged premises passed to S. D. and G. H. O.

By bill filed to foreclose, &c. a mortgage of certain lands held for lives renewable for ever. The bill stated a mortgage bearing date the 14th of February, 1888, whereby one Arthbutnot Emerson conveyed, by way of mortgage, certain freehold lands in the county of Donegal, to Anne Cunningham. Anne Cunningham made her will, bearing date the 4th of February, 1847, in the following terms—"Whereas I am possessed of several sums of money lent and advanced to several persons, and charged upon freehold and other lands. I give and devise the same unto Solomon Dorcus, and G. H. O'Neill," upon the several trusts therein mentioned; and after giving several specific and pecuniary legacies, proceeded thus—"I leave all the rest, residue, and remainder of my property, of what nature and kind soever, I may be possessed of, to the said G. H. O'Neill, in trust for the children of W. N. O'Neill," and S. Dorcus and G. H. O'Neill were appointed executors, and proved the will accordingly. The only question in the cause was whether the legal estate in the mortgaged premises was vested under the will in Dorcus and O'Neill, or whether the heir-at-law of the mortgagee was a necessary party to the suit.

Tombs, Q.C., & Mr. T. K. Lowry, for the plaintiff, contended that the legal estate in the mortgaged premises, passed under the will to Dorcus and O'Neill.

The rule governing this case is correctly stated in 1st Jarman on Wills, p. 638. By a devise in general terms a trust estate will pass, unless a contrary intention can be collected from the terms of the will, Draybrooke v. Inskip, (8 Vesey, 417,) so where a testator devised and bequeathed all his messuages, chattels real, ready money, securities for money, &c. &c., to A. and B., their heirs, executors and assigns, it was held that the legal estate in premises mortgaged to the testator, in fee passed to A. and B., Mather v. Thomas, (6 Sim, 115.) To the same effect is Renvoise v. Cooper, (6 Mad. 371.) Since the late Wills act no words of limitation are necessary to pass the fee, and therefore no distinction between this case and those cited can be based on the use or omission of the term "heirs."

Brooke, Q. C. and Mr. Johns, contra.—The cases cited, only go to this extent where money and securities for money are bequeathed, the estate in the mortgaged premises pass. Now here it is merely a gift of the money. [Pennafather, B.—There is a manifest intention to vest the money in the trustees for the payment of the legacies, and why should the court presume that the testatrix made an imperfect disposition, as this would be, if we are to hold that the legal estate did not pass?] [Lefroy, B.—If I recollect aright, there is a case of Martin v. Moulton, (2 Bur. Rep. 969), where a devise mortgage was held to pass the estate in the land mortgaged.] Counsel relied on Roe dem. Helling v. Yeard, (2 Bos. & P. N. C. 214); Timewell v. Perkins, (1 Atk. 102); Tilly v. Simpson, (2 T. R. 659); Ex parte Morgan, (8 Vesey, 348); Roe v. Road, (8 T. R. Rep. 118); Galliers v. Moss, (9 B. & C. 267.)

PROOT, C. B.—The court should endeavour to construe the will with reference to what was present to the mind of the testatrix at the time she made it. It was passing in her mind that she had some freehold estates, as may be inferred from this that she couples the statement of the money itself with that of the land on which it was charged. Looking at the whole will, and having reference to the authorities, I think it may be reasonably intended, that she devised as well her estates in the mortgaged premises, as the mortgage itself.

Decree for plaintiff.

STANNARD v. LODGE.—April 25, 26.

Will—Construction—Devise in Will clear, not cut down by ambiguous codicil.

The bill was filed amongst other purposes to carry into effect the trusts of the will of the late Robert Lannigan. Having devised an increased jointure to his wife, out of certain portions of his unsettled property, he likewise left her for life two houses in Harcourt Street; after her death to his nieces, subject to certain directions and restrictions, not material to the principal question; and after other specific devises devised to Lodge, the trustee, as follows:—"And as to my said lands, not otherwise disposed of by this my will, but subject to the aforesaid increased jointure in trust, that the rents and profits thereof shall be divided by my said trustee into nine equal parts or shares, and one share to be given to my sister Mrs. Mary Lane, upon her sole and separate receipt, free from the control of her husband; one other share to her eldest son the Rev. Ambrose Lane, and one other share to her second son Hampden Lane; but it is my will that said shares shall only continue to said Mary Lane, and her sons, if then alive, to the 1st day of May or November, which shall first happen after the death of Robert Lane, Esq., the husband of said Mary; but that the share to said Hampden is in nowise to be payable to him, unless said Robert Lane, his father, shall by deed grant to him, said Hampden, an annuity or rent-charge during the life of him said Robert, payable out of that part of Gaulstown demised to Lalor, said annuity to be for the full sum of £100 a-year, as at present paid to him by his said father, and if not so secured and paid, this bequest as to his share to be null and void; two other shares to my nieces Mrs. Watts, and her sister Abigail Hobart, the widow of my late friend Brigade Major Hobart, during their respective natural lives; and from and after their deaths respectively, the share of each so dying, upon trust to the use of their respective son or sons, for his and their lives; four other shares, that is to say, one each to the four daughters, (Martha, Rebecca, Elizabeth, and Charlotte) of my said brother John Lannigan Stannard, and their assigns, during their several and respective lives only, and subject to said respective life uses to said respective persons, and to said increased jointure." The testator devised the lands so divided into nine parts to the plaintiff for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainders over with power to the plaintiff, when in possession of the lands, of jointuring and leasing. The testator gave his personal property to his said four nieces, and Mary Watts, and Abigail Hobart, in such shares as his wife should appoint. The will was without date. The material parts of the codicil were as follows:—"I further revoke the division into nine parts of the profits of my lands commencing in page 3, so far as Mary Lane, Mary Watts, and Abigail Hobart, and their respective sons are to take any parts or shares, either in possession or reversion under said devise after my death, or the deaths of any other person, and order said division to stand as to the four remaining shares to the daughters of my brother John as therein mentioned and to their brother Henry also for said profit rents during the life of my said wife, with survivorship to the longest liver of said five persons, during my said wife's life; and I further revoke the intermediate devise as to Ladyman's part of Gaulstown, after a failure of issue in R. R. Stannard, and direct that after such failure, said part of Gaulstown should go to Valentine Lannigan, as in said will mentioned. I direct the residue of my personal property to be divided amongst my six nieces, the four daughters of my brother John, and to Mrs. Watts, and to Mrs. Hobart, as in my will mentioned, with the restrictions herein contained, first, that no part of the three sums which, on the 29th September, 1832, I gave as a donation to said M. Watts and Mrs. Hobart, is now or since any part of my said property." After the death of the testator, the trustee settled an account with the plaintiff and the four nieces, and divided the surplus after the widow's jointure, in fifths, to each a fifth—on every future occasion the plaintiff refused to accept of this distribution—and claimed to be entitled during the life of the widow to 5-9ths, and to one-fifth of 4-9ths, and after her death to the entire. The nieces, during life of widow, claimed 8-9ths, and after her death 4-9ths.

Green, Q.C., F. Fitzgerald, Q.C., Mr. Burroughs, and Mr. Odell, for the plaintiff.—We submit, that by the codicil the revoked five-ninths go to the plaintiff, whose estate is thus accelerated, and that the previous gift to the nieces is modified, the estate for their own lives given by the will being cut down to an estate pour autre vie, that of the widow. It was the intention of the testator, that the plaintiff, who was the object of his bounty, should have his estate brought into possession immediately on the death of the widow, and not postponed until after the deaths of the co-devisees; otherwise, he might never be able to exercise the powers of jointuring and leasing given by the will to him, only when in possession of the estate. Admitting the general principle, that a clear gift in a will is not to be cut down by doubtful words in a codicil, that principle is controlled by another, that the intention of the testator should be effectuated; and where the gift in the will is inconsistent with the codicil, and an entirely new disposition by the latter, it shall prevail. Lord Hardwick v. Douglas, (7 Cl. & Fin. 794;) Sandford v. Sandford, (1 De Gex & Small. 67.) [Pennfather, B.—Yes, where the two instruments are perfectly inconsistent and irreconcilable, as where an estate in fee is given by the will, and for life by the codicil.] There is an inconsistency in a devise to A. for life by will, and to A. pour autre vie by codicil. The testator had two objects by the codicil; first, that the division of his property should be altered, and, secondly, that it should stand only for the life of the widow—that upon her death the residuary devisees should enter into possession of the property, with all its rights and incidents.

Longfield, Q.C., Wall, Q.C., Mr. Hickey, and Mr. Newton, for the nieces. It is conceded on the other side that the will admits of no doubt, and that the codicil is obscure. The case, then, rests on the settled rule of construction,—where the will contains a clear gift, it is not to be revoked by doubtful expressions in a codicil. (1 Jar. 165.) The testator knew how to use legal terms; when he wished to revoke, he expressed the intention distinctly; but when he comes to speak of the share to the four nieces, he orders that to “stand as in his will mentioned.” When he associates the plaintiff with the nieces, he is only dealing with the revoked five-ninths; they were equally his objects as the plaintiff. During the widow's life, there was the same motive of increased bounty for both; the provision for both was suspended during her life; at her death, the nieces got the houses, the plaintiff the entire five-ninths. In the codicil, a new sentence should begin at the word, “also;” “for” should be read “as to,” “as regards,” and it then clearly appears that the gift in the codicil is of other property, and if so, the case comes within another settled rule of construction, that the gift in the codicil was cumulative, not substitutional.

Brewster, Q.C., Gayer, Q.C., and Mr. Flood, for the trustees.

George, Q.C., and Mr. J. T. Bagot, for the heir-at-law.

PENNEFATHER, B.—This case stood over for the purpose of considering the construction to be put upon the codicil. No one who has heard the case argued, and read the documents, but must feel that it is a case of difficulty and uncertainty. We have given it the best attention in our power, without, however, being able to overcome the difficulty; and the members of the Court have not been able to arrive at the same conclusion as to the construction of this codicil, my brother Richards and I differing in opinion from my brother Lefroy. The will was evidently prepared with attention; and the testator, after different specific devise, directed the rest of his property to be divided into nine parts or shares, referring to the persons by name; four to go to his nieces, the daughters of his brother John, for their lives respectively, as tenants in common; the remaining five to five different individuals. Nothing material arises as to these five shares, for it is beyond doubt they were revoked, and that after the death of the different tenants for life, all the testator's property was given to his nephew, Henry, for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, giving him a power, when in possession, of leasing and jointuring. I mention this power as it was pressed in argument, and it has some influence on the mind of my brother Lefroy. There is no preamble to the codicil—no recital to explain the views or intention of the testator. We must, therefore, collect from the words themselves its true construction. In construing it, we are bound not to reject or introduce words without an absolute necessity, and yet we are bound to put a construction upon the instrument, if not altogether impossible. We are all agreed that the first portion of this codicil is free from doubt. [His lordship here read the portion of the codicil alluded to, revoking the five shares.] This is a clear revocation of the five shares; the question then arises, is anything else revoked? I think there is nothing else revoked. It is remarkable, that the word “only,” which was perfectly legible, has been partially erased. The codicil formerly read thus:—“I order the said division to stand only.” If this word, only, had remained, it might have struck the testator that the shares in remainder to his nephew, Henry, might be revoked also. If they were only to stand as to the shares to his nieces, the inference might be, that the five shares might be revoked to Henry also. The testator might have struck out the word only, as showing he intended the word stand to apply, not only to his nieces, but to Henry also. The meaning I put on the codicil is, that the four shares remain unaffected, and that the revoked five-ninths should stand for Henry and his sisters during the life of his wife, with benefit of survivorship as to those five-ninths amongst them during that period; after the death of the widow, the five shares to fall in to Henry. I cannot say this opinion is free from doubt, but it is the best I have been able to form. I would further say, that if it had been the testator's intention to revoke the shares given to his nieces by the will, nothing would have been more easy than to have expressed his meaning. He appears to have been perfectly apprized of the meaning of words of revocation.

RICHARDS, B.—I have arrived at a similar conclusion with that of my brother Pennefather, though not, perhaps, by the same train of reasoning. It is clear, there is first a revocation of five shares, but the testator limits the general character of revocation, by directing that four of the devises should "stand." The codicil, as it was originally, directed that they should "stand only." If that were so, the word "only" would be inconsistent with what follows, as to the remaining five-ninths. If it were the intention of the testator to give the daughters of his brother John a share in the remaining five-ninths, the word "only" would undoubtedly be inconsistent with the intention to give more than four-ninths, it is also inconsistent with the intention that Henry should take "as therein mentioned," that expression evidently applying only to the four-ninths. It is important to consider, that where the devise to his nieces is clear by the will, it should not be cut down by a codicil, without a clear evidence of such an intention. It would require clear and manifest evidence of intention, to justify us in withdrawing the testator's bounty. The balance of evidence in the instrument is quite the other way. The difficult part to construe is, that with reference to the five-ninths. "Also for said profits" I understand to be used to avoid repetition, and to refer to the revoked profit rents the nephew would take, if the five-ninths were revoked; but the nieces were associated with him during the life of the widow, with benefit of survivorship during that period.

LEMOY, B.—The principle on which the Court is bound to act, is, not to declare an instrument void for uncertainty, if we can come to a conclusion as to the meaning of the testator without insertion, transposition, or omission of words. All the members of the Court are agreed in the principle; in the application of it they differ. Adopting stringently this rule, the conclusion I have finally arrived at is, that the codicil takes away five-ninths from the parties they were originally given to, without disturbing the remainder, but accelerating it; and as to the four-ninths, the codicil makes a modification of the bequest in the will, reducing the nieces' life interests, as tenants in common, to joint estates for the life of the widow, with benefit of survivorship during the life of the widow. The effect of that is, that at the death of the widow, Henry will be at once in the possession of the whole, and so capacitate himself to exercise those powers under the will he otherwise could not. It is true we have no clue in the codicil, as to what the testator meant; we must, therefore, construe it by the precise terms he has made use of, looking at the provisions of the will with a reasonable intentment that the codicil was made on further consideration. It is important to observe, that on the death of the widow his nieces took an increase of property; by the will, his nephew Henry could perform none of the powers given him, till after the cessation of all the previous lives. Was that a convenient disposition? We must recollect, that Henry was to have the means of providing for his wife and children, and the testator made the codicil to remedy this inconvenience, of postponing the exercise of these powers until the several fragments of the estate came by ninths into possession. It is admitted, this codicil, in the first instance, is a revocation of five-ninths. The effect of the construction by my brothers is, to set up the devise of these shares during the life of the widow, and as to the four-ninths, during the lives of his nieces. That would be a strange state to leave his property in. I was drawn to these considerations by the observations of Mr. Burroughs, and when it was presented to my mind that the testator had a good reason for the variation in the disposition of his property, I changed from my first impressions. I cannot insert words, nor can I withdraw the connected word, "and-also," between the middle and latter portion of the clause. I think it much more reconcilable with the testator's intention, to sweep away the four-ninths, and to abridge the rights of the nieces, in order to reduce Henry's rights into possession. I have arrived at this conclusion with great doubt, in consequence of the obscurity of the instrument, and the doubts of my brothers Pennefather and Richards.*

QUEEN'S BENCH.—HILARY TERM.

WRIXON v. WALKER.—Jan. 19.

Demurrer—Covenant—Variance.

In covenant for rent by lessor against lessee, the declaration stated, that the lessor demised to the lessee certain premises, to hold from the 1st of May 1846, for seven years, "yielding, during the said term, the yearly rent of £80, to be paid on every 1st of November and 1st of May in each and every year." It then stated, that the lessee covenanted that he would "from time to time, during the term, pay the said rent on the said days and times aforesaid." The lessee set out the lease on oyer, and from the reddendum it appeared that the first half-year's rent was not to be payable until the 1st of November, 1847, "the lessee having already paid the year's rent to accrue due on the 1st of May, 1847." Held, (Perrin, J., dissentiente.) on demurrer to the declaration, that the lease was set out in the declaration according to its legal construction and operation, and that there was no variance.

This case came before the court on a demurrer to a declaration on an action of covenant. The declaration, which was filed on the 3rd of June, 1848, stated, that by an indenture dated the 11th of April, 1846, the plaintiff demised to the defendant certain premises, to hold the same from the 1st of May, 1846, for the term of seven years, "yielding and paying therefore and thereout, yearly and every year during the said term, unto the said plaintiff, &c., the yearly rent or sum of £80, to be paid by regular half-yearly payments, on every 1st of November and 1st of May in each and every year." The declaration then stated, that the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff that he would "from time to time, and at all times thereafter during the term thereby granted, well and truly pay to the plaintiff the said reserved yearly rent or sum of £80, in regular half-yearly payments as aforesaid, on the said days and times aforesaid." The declaration then averred, that the defendant went into possession, and that on the 1st of May, 1848, a sum of £40, being half a year's rent, was due and remained unpaid, contrary to his covenant. The defendant set out the deed on oyer, and the reddendum was in the following words—"Yielding and paying therefore and thereout, yearly and every year during the said term, unto the plaintiff, &c., the yearly rent or sum of £80, to be paid by regular half-yearly payments, on every 1st day of November and 1st day of May, in each and every year during the term hereby granted, the first half-yearly payment thereof to be made on the 1st day of Nov. 1847, the said lessee having already paid the year's rent to accrue due on the 1st day of May, 1847."

The defendant then demurred specially, and (among other causes,) assigned, that the indenture was not set forth according to its legal effect and operation. To this there was a joinder in demurrer.

Butt, Q.C., and Mackey, for the demurrer.—There is a material variance between the covenant, as stated in the declaration, and the reddendum in the lease. The first half year's rent was not to be payable for eighteen months after the date of the lease, whereas, from the declaration, it would appear that it was payable in six months after. If the lease was not set out in oyer, the plaintiff could recover, in this declaration, a rent which the lease, when set out, shews he was not entitled to. The lease is not, therefore, set out according to its legal import and effect. They cited Baden v. Flight, (8 Bing. N. C. 685;) S. C. (4 Scott, 412;) Paine v. Emery, (2 Cr. M. & Ros. 306;) S. C. (5 Tyrw. 1097.)

J. Clarke and Barry contra.—Even if this were a variance, it should be assigned specially. [Blackburne, C. J.—It is a ground for general demurrer.] On the face of the lease, there is a reservation of the rent, as stated in the declaration. [Moore, J.—If the declaration had gone on to say, that the first year's rent was payable on the 1st of May, 1847, that would have been a variance.] The half-year's rent which we have declared for, became due on the 1st of May, 1848. It is unnecessary to aver what is not material.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—I see no variance in this case, and think the declaration sets out the lease according to its legal construction and operation. The lease was for a term of seven years, and the rent was to be payable for the entire of the term; but in consequence of an agreement to appropriate in advance a sum of money in payment of the first year's rent, the tenant would only have to pay six year's rent during the term. That was a distinct collateral agreement, and in no way controlled or qualified the terms of the lease. It was to the same effect, as if the landlord had said to the tenant, "You have deposited a sum of money in my hands, and I will apply it in discharge of your obligation."

CRAMPTON, J.—I am of the same opinion, and see no inconsistency which can amount to a variance. The declaration sets out the lease in the very terms of the instrument. It is true that there was to be no payment of rent, until the advance, which was made by the tenant and deposited in the hands of the landlord, was first applied; but the tenant had expressly covenanted that he would pay on the days and years aforesaid, during the entire of the term. There was to be no qualification of the covenant, but in the mode of payment; the landlord being, as it were, the paymaster for the first year's rent, and the tenant having a receipt in advance. I see no inconsistency between the two things, and am of opinion, if the pleader had stated that the covenant was not to pay during the term, but after the end of the first year, a demurrer would be taken for a variance.

PERRIN, J.—I am of opinion that there is a variance between the covenant, as set out in the declaration, and the agreement upon which the money was lodged. I will confine myself to the words of the lease and the words of the covenant. The declaration charges that the defendant covenanted to pay a half year's rent on the 1st of November, 1846, and on the 1st of May, 1847. Now, if a man covenants to pay a sum of money, he enters into an obligation to pay it; but in the present case no money was to be paid until the 1st of November, 1847, the lessee having already paid the year's rent to accrue due on the 1st of May, 1847, as appears by the lease. Upon that instrument, therefore, it is plain that the lessee did not enter into an obligation to pay over again a sum of money he had already paid. It is said, however, that he covenanted, but did not mean to pay. That is to be the legal operation and effect of his covenant, but in my judgment the legal operation of a covenant is, that when a party enters into it, he becomes bound by it, and obliged to pay the money in pursuance of that covenant. The defendant, in the present case, says—Because I had already paid this money, I did not contract to pay it over again. Suppose the plaintiff had declared for the two half years' rent, which had been already paid, according to the argument for the plaintiff, that would be a proper declaration; and upon a plea of non est factum, it would be held that there was no variance, although, upon the lease being produced, no money would appear to be due; and the result would be, that a verdict for nominal damages would pass for the plaintiff, on the ground that the defendant must have contracted to pay these gales of rent.

MOORE, J.—When I read the pleading in this case, I thought there was a variance; that was my first impression; but upon examining it more minutely, I have come to the conclusion, that there is no variance. The lease contains what was the contract between the parties, and the declaration sets it out literally. The rent was to be payable in each and every year during the term, by regular half-yearly payments, and the defendant covenanted accordingly; that was the contract. A collateral arrangement was entered into, at the same time, by which a sum of money was advanced, to be applied in discharge of those gales that were to accrue due on the 1st of November, 1846, and the 1st of May, 1847. That was no variance of the contract, and I am therefore of opinion that the contract is legally set out in the declaration.

Demurrer overruled.

ROLLS COURT.

MORRISSEY v. FITZPATRICK.—April, 18.

Practice—Receiver—Replevin.

Where tenants have admitted that rent is due, and paid sums on account, the Court will make an order restraining them from proceedings in replevin. Semble, if the tenant plead non tenuit, the Court will not interfere.

Mr. W. Smith, on behalf of the receiver, moved that John Duggan and Patrick Duggan, tenants of part of the lands over which the receiver had been appointed, might be restrained from proceeding in replevins brought by them and returnable to the Quarter Sessions, for a distress made by the receiver for non-payment of rent. From the affidavit of the receiver, it appeared that both of the tenants admitted that the sums returned by the former receiver were due by them, and the sum of £13 was paid by one of them on account of the arrear, and £12 by the other. On the 15th of February, 1849, the receiver distrained for the balance, and on the 24th replevins were issued returnable to the Court of Quarter Sessions, and which were to be tried on the 21st of April. There was but one part of the leases, and they had been given to the tenants by the father of the inheritor, for the purpose of registering votes. The affidavits further stated, that the receiver believed these replevins were issued for the purpose of embarrassing him in the discharge of his duty, and without any just reason, and purposely to disqualify him to be examined as a witness; and under such circumstances, it would be difficult as well as expensive to succeed in the suit, and the receiver was likely to be defeated with costs upon technicalities. Also, that the success of the plaintiff would be injurious, and have a bad effect upon the other tenants, who appeared to combine against payment of rents to the receiver; and unless they were restrained from proceeding in this way, and by legal technicalities defeating the right of the receiver, he would be unable effectually to discharge his duty as receiver.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In strictness, the notice given, which is but four days, is not sufficient. The late Master of the Rolls considered that the Court had power to make an order to stay such proceedings, and in the Court of Exchequer similar orders have been made. If the plea had been non tenuit, I do not think the Court ought to interfere, but where the tenants have paid rent, I will make the order.

Practice—Receiver—Poundage—Costs.

Mr. Harris moved that the receiver might be allowed his poundage, his account not having been passed within the time limited by 148th General Order.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case, I will, under the circumstances, allow the receiver his poundage, but will not give the costs; it was not necessary to have presented a petition.

“Let the said Master be at liberty, if he shall think fit in passing the petitioner's present account, to allow him his poundage, and no rule as to the costs of accounting; and let the receiver abide his own costs of this petition.”

Rolls Petition Book, Lib. 28, p. 270.

KIRKWOOD v. LLOYD.—April 20.

Practice—Suppression of Depositions.

The court will not make an order to suppress depositions, on the ground that some of the interrogatories which elicited the depositions were leading, unless it be shown what part of the depositions is an answer to the leading interrogatory, and then only so much as is an answer to the leading interrogatory, will be suppressed. That a deposition is not evidence, is an objection for the hearing not to be taken by motion to suppress interrogatories.

In this case, a purchaser having made an objection to the title, on the ground that there had been no evidence of the payment of rent by any of the tenants of certain lands; and the plaintiff in the cause having got liberty to examine witnesses for the purpose of proving payment of rent by the tenants, a certain book was produced to a witness, and he was asked, first, were the entries in that book in his own, or in any other person's handwriting whom he knew, and if in any other person's, in whose? He was then asked, were the entries in that book correct?

Mr. Sergeant O'Brien moved, that the depositions in answer to the interrogatories before given should be suppressed. The question has been put in a leading form; whether the book was in the handwriting of the witness, was not sufficiently investigated before the question as to its correctness was put. The interrogatory is manifestly framed for the purpose of suggesting the desired answer to the witness, and to apprise him of the answer he ought to make.

Mr. Green, Q.C., contra.—The test of a leading interrogatory is given 1 Phil. on Evidence, 301; Lincoln v. Wright (4 Bea. 165), form of the interrogatory is given at page 168 of the same report.

Mr. A. Graydon cited Aylward v. Kearney (2 Ball & B. 463).

Mr. McMahon in reply.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—This is an application which is seldom made, and I do not recollect such an one since I sat in this court. According to the English cases, this motion is not regularly brought forward. The course in England is to refer it to the Master to report which or what part of the interrogatories is leading, and the depositions in answer to the leading interrogatories, or the part of the deposition which is in answer to the leading interrogatory is ordered to be suppressed. Here the application is to suppress the whole of several depositions; and counsel does not argue that more than one interrogatory is leading. I shall not entertain such an application, that because a few lines in an interrogatory are leading, the whole of several depositions is to be suppressed. The objection in this case is evidently mistaken, it really being that some of the depositions are not evidence; and this is an objection which should be made at the hearing.

KROGH v. KROGH.—April 20.

Practice—Bidding-solicitor.

Even though a solicitor, who has acted in a cause, discharge himself, the Court will not allow him to bid.

This was an application for an order to give liberty to the plaintiff's solicitor to bid for property to be sold under a decree in this cause. The solicitor had discharged himself for the purpose of bidding.

Mr. Deasy—Though the rule is laid down strictly that a solicitor should not bid without the permission of the Court, and that on grounds of public policy; yet it seems there is no objection that the Court should make an order in a proper case for it. The cases only go to shew that it is not permitted without the order of the Court.

April 23—MASTER OF THE ROLLS—The fact of a solicitor discharging himself from the office, cannot justify the Court in permitting him to bid, unless upon the consent of all parties to the cause; for if, in general, he were permitted to purchase, he would then acquire an interest in depreciating the value of the property to be sold under the court; also, during the progress of the cause, a solicitor has an opportunity of becoming acquainted with any flaw in the title. My present impression is, that without a consent, I ought not to make this order. Lord Eldon considered that the fact of a solicitor discharging himself does not make any difference.

KELSON AND WIFE v. LEWIS.—May 11.

Practice—Notice to Respite Publication.

Mr. Hobart applied to the court under the following circumstances. On the 4th instant, a notice of motion had been served in this cause to respite publication from the 7th to the 21st instant. The defendant offered to consent to appear without service of subpoena, so that the cause would be heard next Term, before the motion could be heard. The solicitor for the opposite party lodged with the Examiner the certificate of the rule having been served, and the Examiner stated he would pass publication. [Master of the Rolls.—Where a notice of motion to respite publication has been served, it is a very improper proceeding for any solicitor to pass publication.]

The Examiner having informed his Honor that publication had been passed, MASTER OF THE ROLLS—Publication should not have been passed, and I expect that such a proceeding will not, in future, be taken by any solicitor of this court. I will hear the motion to respite publication notwithstanding.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.

REILLY v. SHIEL.—April 28, May 5.

Practice—Certificate of lis pendens under the 11 and 12 Vic. c. 120. s. 12.

Mr. Leech moved that the proper officers might be directed to issue a certificate of lis pendens, under the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 120, s. 12. There was a difficulty as to who was the proper officer, within the meaning of the act.

PER CURIAM—For the purposes of the present application, we shall direct the Filacer to issue the certificate; and for future cases of a similar kind, we shall provide by a general order.

Note.—7 & 8 Vic. c. 90, s. 10, enacts, "that from and after the first day of November, one thousand, eight hundred, and forty-four, no lis pendens shall bind or affect a purchaser or mortgagee, without express notice thereof, unless and until a memorandum or minute containing the name and the usual or last-known place of abode, and the title, trade, or profession of the person whose estate shall be intended to be affected thereby, and the Court of Equity, and the title of the cause or information, and the day when the bill or information was filed, shall be left with such officer so to be appointed as aforesaid, who shall forthwith enter the same particulars in a book as aforesaid, in alphabetical order, by the name of the person whose estate is intended to be affected by such lis pendens, and which book is to be intitled "the Index to Lis Pendens;" and such officer shall be entitled for every such entry to the sum of two shillings and sixpence; and the provisions herein before contained in regard to the re-registering of judgments every twenty years, and the operation thereof, and the fee payable to the officer thereon, shall extend to every case of lis pendens which shall be re-registered under the provisions of this act."

The 11 & 12 Vic. 120, s. 11 & 12, enact, "That from and after the passing of this Act, every Court, Judge, Commissioner, or other person by whom any decree, rule, or order has been or shall be pronounced or made, which, under the said Act of the third and fourth years of the reign of her Majesty, has the force and effect of a judgment, upon its being made to appear to them or him that such decree, rule, or order has been fully performed, complied with, or satisfied, shall direct the proper officer to give a certificate thereof, and record the same in his office; and in case said decree, rule, or order, shall have been or shall be registered under the provisions of the said Act of the third and fourth years of the reign of her Majesty, or under the provisions of the said recited Act of the seventh and eighth years of the reign of her Majesty, the Registrar of judgments shall, upon the lodgment with him of such certificate, cause a memorandum thereof to be annexed or subscribed to the entry of the Registry of such decree, rule, or order, specifying therein the date of such certificate, and shall sign such memorandum, and shall, if required, cause a minute of the entry of such memorandum to be endorsed upon a duplicate of such certificate; and in every search made in said judgment office after the entry of such memorandum, whereas such decree, rule, or order shall appear, the entry of such memorandum of satisfaction shall also be stated. And be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, no judgment, crown bond, or recognizance, rule, decree, order, or lis pendens, shall be registered by the said registrar of judgments, pursuant to the provisions of the said Act of the seventh and eighth years of the present reign, unless and until there shall be subscribed to the memorandum or minute by said Act required to be left with said Registrar, a certificate of the existence of the judgment, crown bond or recognizance, rule, decree, order, or lis pendens, described in said memorandum or minute, such certificate to be signed by the proper officer of the court in which such judgment, crown bond or recognizance, rule, decree, order, ment—Adverse Possession—Acknowledgment Title—Statute of Limitations—3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

RE HOBSON AND OTHERS V. BURNS.—April 28.

ment in the schedule of an insolvent debtor, the year 1828, that she had been "defeated" in 1824 in a former ejectment brought on the issue of three lessors of the plaintiff, one of whom was a lessor in the present case, held, that this was no acknowledgment of title within the 14th section of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, in any one of the said lessors.

also, that such statement did not amount to more than a mere narrative of a past transaction, it was not an acknowledgment of title within the 14th section.

Whether a statement by an insolvent in a schedule is, under any circumstances, a sufficient acknowledgment within the 14th section. Brett v. Birmingham (Flan. & Kel. 556).

ment on the title for the lands of Cloonarcane, in the county of Galway. The declaration contained four demises that chiefly relied upon being in the name of Charles Davis, in whom the estate in a certain term of years in the lands in question was alleged to be vested. It appeared by a deed dated the 12th of February, 1824, that this property was demised to one William Mannion, for the term of 500 years, for the purpose of securing the re-payment of £1,300 to a mortgagee, and subject thereto, upon trust, for the benefit of the inheritance. Some time after the execution of this deed, Kelly, the beneficial owner of the property, granted a lease of the same to a person named Mannion, at a yearly rent. The mortgage on the mortgage debt having fallen into arrears, proceedings were taken in Chancery for recovery of the same, and a series of receivers appointed, to whom Mannion, and afterwards his widow, paid rent up to the 1st of November, 1824.

Mrs. Mannion having subsequently become a widow, an ejectment was brought against her in the year 1822, by leave of the court, which contained three demises, one of them being in the name of William Davis, the personal representative of Birch. In that action, judgment was had in favor of the plaintiff, as of Trinity Term, 1823. An order was subsequently issued, but never executed. In Easter Term, 1825, an action for mesne profits was commenced against Mrs. Mannion, and judgment was therein recovered against her for £16s. 4d., for which sum, and the taxed costs of the ejectment, £76 16s. 3d., she was ordered to pay in October, 1827.

Mrs. Mannion, thereupon, on the 14th of March, 1828, filed her petition and schedule in the Insolvent Court, duly signed by herself and verified on oath, and was subsequently discharged from custody by order of the court. The schedule contained the following passages:—"1823, Morgan Rattler, lessee of Edward Hobson, also of George Holmes Sumner, and also of William Davis, £76 16s. 3d. costs of an ejectment in an ejectment cause, in which said Morgan Rattler was plaintiff and myself defendant." "1824, or thereabouts, the said Morgan Rattler, debt and costs, £108 16s. 4d. claimed for mesne rates of the lands of Cloonarcane, in the county of Galway, together with the costs of judgment and execution." "My husband was, in his life-time, possessed of the lands of Cloonarcane, in the county of Galway, containing about forty acres, besides bog, under a lease executed by Edmund Kelly, &c., for lives and years. After my husband's death, my husband and myself continued in possession. In 1824, an ejectment on the title was brought in the name of lessee Sumner and others, to which I took defence, not knowing any title the plaintiff had. However, on the trial a mortgage was proved which had been executed by Kelly prior to his making the lease to my husband, and I was defeated." On the face of the balance-sheet in the front of the schedule was this statement:—"Since my husband died, my children and myself resided on the lands of Cloonarcane, in the county of Galway, the produce of which was barely sufficient to support us." Mrs. Mannion, after her discharge, continued in possession of the premises in question until her death, in 1840, and she was succeeded therein by the defendant Burns, who had married her daughter. No rent had been paid from 1820 down to the bringing of the present action in Easter Term, 1847. Charles Davis, the principal lessor of the plaintiff, was the administrator de bonis non of W. Davis, one of the lessors of the plaintiff in the ejectment of 1822, who was the representative of Birch, the termor for five hundred years. At the trial of the cause at the last Spring Assizes for the county of Galway, before Moore, J., a draft of a special verdict which had been previously agreed to, and signed by the respective counsel on both sides, was read in evidence on the part of the plaintiff. This set forth the facts enumerated above. The jury, however, under his lordship's direction, found for the defendant, the learned Judge being of opinion that the Statute of Limitations had sufficiently barred the claim of the lessors of the plaintiff. On the 18th of April, a conditional order was obtained to set aside the verdict for defendant, and enter one instead thereof for the lessors of the plaintiff, the parties consenting that the case should be argued as a special verdict on the facts stated in the draft. The point chiefly relied on for the lessors of the plaintiff was, that the passages quoted above, in Mrs. Mannion's schedule, constituted a sufficient acknowledgment of title in them, within the 14th section of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, to avoid the bar of the statute.

pendens shall have been entered or obtained; and he said registrar of judgments, upon the lodgment of any such memorandum or minute, shall, if required, endorse upon a duplicate thereof a certificate of the date and entry thereof, for which certificate no fee shall be paid to him beyond the fee authorized by the said Act in such entry."

Cause was this day shewn for the defendant by Walker, Q. C.—The admissions in the schedule amount to no acknowledgment of title; Beytagh on Limitation, 80, where the opinion of Lefroy, B., who tried a former action of ejectment between the same parties in 1844, is cited.

We contend, first, that an acknowledgment in an insolvent's schedule is not within the scope of the act; and, secondly, that even though such were the case, there is here no such admission as the act requires. There has been much discussion, both in this court and the Exchequer, as to whether an admission in a schedule is one within the meaning of the 40th section. There is, however, one decision of a Court of Equity on the affirmative, Barrett v. Bermingham (Flan. & Kel. 556, per Sir M. O'Loughlen, M. R.); see also cases of McCarthy v. O'Brien (2 Ir. L. Rep. 67), and Dugdals v. Vize (5 Ir. L. Rep. 568), in this court, where no express decision was given on the principal point. There is a marked difference between the operation of the 40th and 14th sections; the latter requires the admission to be made to the party himself, not to his agent. Can a statement in an insolvent's schedule be considered as made to a party in the character of a claimant of land? There was no intention in the mind of the insolvent to give any new right to the land, Grenfell v. Girdlestone (2 Y. & Coll., Exchequer, 676); Holland v. Clarke (1 Y. & Coll. 151). It cannot be said that any such intent appears in the present case. Has the acknowledgment been made to the party entitled? [Blackburne, C. J.—The detaining creditor, in the present instance, was the party entitled.] But here there is, in fact, no acknowledgment. She states in her schedule that she does not know what title the plaintiff had. If the acknowledgment is good for anything, it is so with respect to the title of Kelly, the mortgagor; but the ejectment is by the representatives of the testator, who claims paramount to Kelly.

Fitzgibbon, Q.C., Mr. West, and Mr. Boytagh for the lessors of the plaintiff.—It is said in this case, that the admissions in the schedule are merely made to the court, but they were for the benefit of all parties intended to be affected by the proceedings. (See 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 59, s. 10, the Insolvent Act of the day.) The acknowledgment amounts to this, that the representatives of William Birch had rightfully recovered judgment. Is not this a present recognition of title? [Blackburne, C. J.—This may be a present recognition of right, but not a recognition of present right.] [Perrin, J.—This seems to me to amount to nothing more than a narrative of facts. There are four lessors of the plaintiff in the present case.] If we shew title under one, I am entitled to refer the acknowledgment to him. The recognition of the lease admits, by implication, the title of the mortgagor. [Crampton, J.—Your argument goes this length, that an acknowledgment by implication of law is sufficient, whereas the statute appears to contemplate an express acknowledgment.] No precise form of acknowledgment is necessary, St. John v. Boughton (9 Sim. 219). There is no distinction between sections 40 and 14, so far as the essence of the acknowledgment is concerned. Incorporated Society v. Richards (1 Dr. & War. 290), there the nature of the acknowledgment required by the 14th section of the statute is discussed. The reason why the widow Mannion disclaims previous knowledge of the lessor's title is to exclude the conclusion of the court that she had taken a vexatious defence, Doe dem. Lord Spencer v. Beckett (4 Q. B. 601).

Mr. Concanon, in reply.—Scott v. Nisbet and War. 388) shews that a present right estate accrues from the time when the Statute Limitations begins to run. Can it be contended that an admission to-day that a party paid another in 1820, amounts to an acknowledgment of present title. This is a mere relation of antecedent facts. Hill v. Stowell (2 L. & S. per Burke, C. J., as to what should be in the mind of the person making the acknowledgment, the Act of Parliament contemplates a present right, a past right. Here there is not even a claim that rent was due by the insolvent from the time her possession became notorious by constructive law, which was from the day of the demerit of the ejectment.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—This was an application to set aside a verdict had for the defendant in action, and to enter one for the plaintiff, to leave reserved. The whole question is as to the legal effect of certain statements contained in a schedule filed by an insolvent debtor, pursuant to the statute, as amounting to an admission within the 14th section of the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. With respect to the question, whether an acknowledgment can, under any circumstances contained in an insolvent's schedule, at present, give no opinion. [After reading the 14th section, his Lordship observed, that the plaintiff's schedule relied on was that commencing with the words, "My husband was, in his lifetime, possessed of the lands of Cloonarcane, &c."] Objections have been taken to the position that these statements comply with the requirements of the statute. The first was, that there was no acknowledgment of the title of any one in particular. There are here four lessors of the plaintiff, the name of the party who now seeks to avail himself of the acknowledgment was not specified in the schedule. In fact, the only party at issue before the court who was so named, was the defendant, Hobson. It is quite ambiguous of what was an acknowledgment. In my opinion it is quite impossible to hold it to be an acknowledgment of the title of any person. The other objection is more substantial in its nature; namely, that there is no recognition of any existing title. That objection appears to me a perfectly valid one. The recognition which the statute contemplates is not as when once made by a party in possession, but as when actually and virtually vest in the person to whom it is made a present title. The construction of the 40th section confirms this view of the 14th section, both having precisely the same object; not the recognition of a present right of possession, but a present recognition of a right of entry, no matter how remote, could confer a title to recover. In other words, how could an acknowledgment made in 1828 of a title in 1824, operate as an admission of a present right? According to the argument of the plaintiff, such a recognition might refer to a period fifty years back, and nevertheless create a title contemporaneous with the making of the acknowledgment. What is set forth here amounts to an more than that in 1824 the party held the premises under a certain lease which had been evicted by title paramount; and this, as has been observed, is merely a narrative of facts, and by no means such a recognition of title as is required by the statute.

CRAMPTON and PERRIN,* J.J., concurred.

COMMON PLEAS.—EASTER TERM.

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE CASTLE-
REAGH UNION v. DILLON.—April, 28.

*Bond conditioned for the performance of duties—
Assignment of Breaches—Plea of non est factum —Verdict—Vice-guardians of the Poor.*

A verdict obtained upon a bond conditioned for the discharge of the duties of Poor Law clerk will not be set aside upon the ground that no breaches were assigned before the trial.

The paid officers appointed under the 25th and 26th sections of the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 56, may properly sue under the style of "The Guardians of the Poor of the—Union."

This was an action in debt, tried before the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, in the sittings after last Hilary Term. The action was brought upon a bond conditioned for the due discharge of the duties of a Poor-law Clerk. The plaintiffs declared as on an ordinary money-bond. There were no common counts. The defendant, without craving oyer, pleaded non est factum; and issue having been taken thereon, the case went to trial, without any breaches having been assigned by the plaintiffs. Upon the plaintiffs' producing and proving the execution of the bond at the trial, Counsel for the defendant objected to the proceedings as irregular, inasmuch as the bond produced appeared to be conditioned for the due discharge of an office, and no breaches had been assigned; and called upon the judge to non-suit the plaintiffs, or to direct a verdict for the defendant, upon the following grounds:—1st, that no order of the Commissioners to bring the action was shewn; 2nd, that, upon the evidence, the plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain the action; (this objection was founded on evidence adduced at the trial, to the effect that the Guardians had long since ceased to act, and that the present Board consisted of Vice-guardians appointed under the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 56, s. 27;) 3rd, that no breaches were assigned. The learned judge, however, declined to stop the case, but reserved the points, with leave to the defendant to apply to the Court above in case of a verdict against him.

Verdict for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Meagher, having on a former day obtained a conditional order, "that the verdict had for the plaintiffs be set aside, or that a new trial be had, or a non-suit entered."

Mr. Armstrong, Q.C., (with whom was Mr. Charles Kelly), now shewed cause. The 1st objection is, that there was no order of the Commissioners authorizing the action. [Mr. Meagher for the defendant.—We give up that objection.] Two others remain, and the first to which I shall address myself is that which relates to the suggestion of breaches. It is assumed on the other side, that it was necessary to assign breaches before the trial, although the declaration was as on a common money-bond, and the plea thereto the general issue. The defendant's course should have been, to crave oyer, and set out the condition of the bond in his plea, and thus have compelled us to assign breaches in our replication. But not having done so, and having simply pleaded non est factum, the only question in issue is, whether the defendant executed the bond, as stated in the declaration. In Snell v. Snell, (4 B. & Cres. 749,) Bayley, J., says, "If a plaintiff states the legal effect of a deed, the defendant has a right to see it on oyer, and if it varies from that attributed to it in the declaration, in order to take advantage of that variance, he should plead non est factum, without setting out the deed." That was the course taken by the defendant here, and if he was conscious, as he must have been, that he had entered into a bond to the plaintiffs, the only defence raised by the plea is that of a variance. I can find no case which decides, that, upon such an issue being joined, it becomes necessary to assign breaches before the trial. In D'Aranda v. Houston, (6 Car. & Payne, 511,) Alderson, B., certainly expresses some doubts upon the subject. He there says—"The grave question will be, whether this trial will not be thrown away, as they have not assigned breaches under the statute 8 & 9 W. 3, c. 11." And again—"I have great doubts whether some application may not be made to the Court next term." But I have looked with care to see whether such application was ever in fact made; and I have not been able to find any report of it. The only authority which I can find is that of Mr. Sergeant Williams, who has a very elaborate note upon the subject (1 Saund. 58, a, 5th Ed.) to the case of Gainsford v. Griffith, he says, "With respect to the pleading upon this statute (8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11, English, similar to 9 Wm. 3, c. 10, Ir.) the general practice is to declare as upon a common bond, &c. But the best method seems to be to state the condition of the bond and the indenture, and to assign the breaches in the declaration. For if the defendant should plead non est factum, the plaintiff may find some difficulty in proceeding under the statute; for it does not seem clear whether in that case he is to suggest breaches, or to sue out a scire facias;" and he then refers to 2 Saunders, 187 a., 187 b. He does not say anything more than that "there may be a difficulty;" but in the note to which he refers, in 2 Saund., to the case of Roberts v. Mariett, that doubt is removed, and he treats the case of Ethersey v. Jackson, (8 Term. R. 255,) as conclusive in our favour. He there says—"It does not appear that this decision turned at all on the circumstance of the condition of the bond having been set out on oyer, for the reasoning of the Court seems to extend to all cases where the defendant pleads non est factum to the declaration. If the plaintiff should inadvertently recover a verdict on the issue of non est factum, without entering a suggestion on the the roll, it may be asked whether he can do so afterwards, before judgment? There seems to be no good reason why he should not, because the object and intent of the statute is as much answered as if the suggestion had been entered before the verdict; and the principle of the above cited case of Ethersey v. Jackson, seems to warrant the entering of a suggestion at any time before judgment." That note has been before the profession for a number of years, and has frequently been cited, without having ever been found fault with. But further, even if we were irregular, we have obtained a verdict which is perfectly good; and the irregularity is no ground for setting it aside. With respect to the second objection, namely, that vice-guardians had been appointed, and that, consequently, the action being brought in the name of the "Guardians of the Poor of the Castlereagh Union," must fail. There are two answers to that objection:—First, the only issue here is non est factum; and evidence of their being paid guardians was not to the issue, and, therefore, inadmissible. But, supposing the evidence to have been admissible, we still contend that the action is maintainable under the provisions of the Poor-law Act, 1 and 2 Vic. c. 56. The 25th and 26th sections provide for the appointment of vice-guardians to act as guardians in certain cases; and then the 27th section enacts, that the Board of Guardians for every union, "including all persons herein-before empowered to act as guardians" shall be authorized to sue and be sued in the name of "The Guardians of the Poor of the—Union." This, we conceive to be a conclusive authority, enabling those paid officers to sue, as here. [Jackson, J.—It would have been a great omission if the act had not contained a provision of that nature.]

Mr. Francis Meagher, with whom was Mr. Joseph Burke, contra.—There is a very material difference between the English and Irish acts. The objection is one of importance; for it is certainly made in aid of the objects of the act, and to guard the defendant against oppressive damages. The convenience of the case is clearly with the defendant. [Jackson J.—No doubt it would have been more convenient to assign breaches; but the question is, was it necessary to do so. Ball, J.—However, the inconvenience is one resulting to the plaintiff himself; it creates a difficulty in his way, as pointed out by Sergeant Williams in his note.] In D'Aranda v. Houston, already referred to, Baron Alderson expresses very serious doubts; and that was upon the construction of the English Act, while the Irish is much stronger. There are two classes of cases contemplated by both acts: 1st. where the defendant pleads an issuable plea, and secondly, where there is judgment by default, or on confession; but the Irish act (9 Wm. 3, c. 10, s. 8), after providing for the case of an issuable plea, goes on in these words, "and if it shall happen that such defendant or defendants shall not plead to the issue, but judgment shall be given against him or them, for such plaintiff or plaintiffs upon demurrer or by nihil dicit, &c.; then, and in such case, it shall be lawful to, and for such plaintiff or plaintiffs to suggest upon the roll, &c." The English act merely says, "And if judgment shall be given for the plaintiff on a demurrer, or by confession, or nihil dicit &c.," it does not contain the words, if the defendant shall not plead to the issue. Now unless your Lordships will strike a pen across these words, it is impossible to suggest breaches in Ireland, after the parties have pleaded to the issue. [Ball, J.—Are not these words necessarily understood in the English Act? There can be no plea of nihil dicit where the party has pleaded to the issue; there can be no judgment on confession where the defendant pleads an issuable plea. The words of the two acts amount to the same thing. Jackson, J.—Both the acts profess to be conversant with two classes of cases, namely, where the parties have pleaded, and where they have not. You must shew that there is some substantial difference between the two acts.] [Ball, J.—There is nothing negative in the section in either act. The English act gives authority to suggest breaches in certain cases; and yet we have high authority in England that there are other cases in which the same thing may be done. If that be the law in England, it is just the same in Ireland.] There is no case in England on this subject; and no authority except that of Sergeant Williams; and, when it is considered how frequently the dicta of even the most eminent judges are erroneous, the Court will have no difficulty in now giving this act such a liberal construction as will protect the defendant, and not such an interpretation as will saddle him with the costs of two trials, where the damages assessed against him may not be forty shillings. [Jackson, J.—Suppose we went the full length with you, that Mr. Sergeant Williams' note is an authority, you have still this difficulty to contend with, that you are trying to set aside a verdict already had. I do not think you will find any case in which a verdict had been disturbed. We do not decide that this proceeding was regular; we only refuse to set aside the finding of a jury.] The first moment we saw the bond at the trial, and had knowledge that this was the bond sued upon, we objected, and called for a non-suit; and, the Judge having refused, we now come here still relying upon the same objection. [Ball, J.—The case of Ethersey v. Jackson appears to be a distinct authority for entering a suggestion on the roll at any time before judgment; and, therefore, an authority for what the plaintiff here proposes to do, namely, to hold his verdict, to proceed to enter a suggestion of breaches, and to have judgment afterwards. That course removes any difficulty which may appear in this matter; for we do not add another case to those mentioned in the statute, which all refer to suggestions after judgment, whereas the present case is before judgment.] The first part of the section is that which applies to cases before judgment; and in Ethersey v. Jackson, the plaintiff was in a condition to comply with the clause contained in that first part, that "thereupon it shall and may be lawful for the jury, not only to assess such damages, &c., but also to give damages for such of the said breaches," &c. There the plaintiff entered a suggestion before the trial, and, consequently, there was but one jury and one verdict. [Ball, J.—My impression is, that this case falls under the first part of the section; but it is not necessary to decide that point. Jackson, J.—The clause, "thereupon it shall be lawful," &c., is to give power to the jury to assess damages on the postea, which otherwise they could not. That is to say, provided the suggestions were made before the trial, for otherwise it could not be done; and, therefore, when the suggestion has not been made before the trial, as in the present case, the proper course will be, to proceed by the usual common-law method of a writ of inquiry.]

Upon the second question, counsel for the defendant contended, that the words of the 27th section of the Poor Law Act, "All persons herein-before empowered to act as guardians," did not apply to vice-guardians, whose duties are to be defined by the commissioners.

PER CURIAM.—We think the words of the section clearly include vice-guardians. Allow the cause shewn, but without costs, inasmuch as the case is one of some doubt, and the plaintiff might have set the breaches out in his declaration, which would have been a very desirable course.*

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—EASTER TERM.

CRONIN v. MURPHY.—April 18, 20.

Pleading—Scire Facias by Administrator.

An administrator cum test. annexo may maintain a scire facias upon a judgment obtained by an administrator durante minore etate; and the scire facias is sufficient in form, though it does not aver that the defendant was summoned to shew cause why the plaintiff, as such administrator, should not have execution, &c.

Scire facias by an administrator, upon a judgment acknowledged to an administratrix durante minore etate. The scire facias ran thus:—"Victoria, &c., to the Sheriff, &c.—Whereas Catherine Moriarty, administratrix with the will annexed of Daniel D. Cronin, late of, &c., our debtor, &c., upon the confession and acknowledgment of Thadée William Murphy, of, &c., and by consideration of the same court, recovered against the said defendant, T. W. M., as well a certain debt of £1,000, as also £2. 2s., which in said court was adjudged to the said plaintiff for his damages occasioned by detaining that debt whereof the said defendant was convicted, as by the records of said court fully appears; and whereas, at the time of the obtaining the said judgment, in form aforesaid, the said Catherine Moriarty was administratrix of the said Daniel D. Cronin, pending the minority of Henry M. Cronin, who has since obtained his full age of twenty-one years, whereupon administration with the will of the said Daniel D. Cronin annexed, was, in due form of law, granted forth of, &c., unto the said H. M. Cronin, &c., in the common form, and concludes with profert of the letters of administration.

Special demurrer to scire facias, on the ground that it did not appear that Catherine Moriarty obtained the judgment, as administratrix of the said

Daniel D. Cronin, and because the said Thadée Wm. Murphy was summoned to shew cause wherefore the said H. M. Cronin ought not to have execution against him, &c., instead of being summoned to shew cause wherefore the said H. M. Cronin, as such administrator, ought not to have execution, &c.

General demurrer, on ground that scire facias on such a judgment was not maintainable.

Mr. Joseph Reeves (with him Mr. Leahy, for demurrer.—First, it does not appear that the judgment was obtained by Catherine Moriarty, in her representative capacity. A scire facias requires the same particularity of averment as a declaration, and is open to the same objections on demurrer. Several cases decide, that in declarations by an executor, the omission of the term "as" is fatal. Next objection turns on the construction of the statute 7 Wm. 3, c. 6, Ir. Unless the present case is provided for by the statute, the scire facias cannot be maintained at common law. An administrator de bonis non could not have a scire facias upon a judgment obtained by the original executors or administrators, for he comes in paramount to the title, and is no party thereto, Snape v. Norgate, (Cro. Car. 167, S. C. 1 Roll, abridgment, 890, pl. 3; Sir Wm. Jones, Rep. 214; 1, Williams on Executors, 767, (last edition), if an executor brings a sci fa, on a judgment, and subsequently dies intestate, the administrator de bonis non must bring a Scire facias, on the original judgment, (2, Lord Raymond, 1049), Brandling v. Barrington, (6 B. & C. 476.) The English analogous statute has, likewise, a casus omissus, for it applies only to judgments after verdict. Counsel also cited Dwarria on Statutes p. 614.

Sir Colman O'Loughlen and Mr. Berkeley, contra.—As to the objections to the form of Scire facias, it was held sufficient, in Hanington v. Cairnes, (5, Ir. L. Rep. 333); Vance and another, v. Brassington, (1, Ir. Jur. p. 8.) [Pigot, C. B.—As to that point, we must treat it as "res judicata." Next, as to the objection in point of substance, this Scire facias may be maintained independently of the statute 7 Wm. 3, c. 6. The position of an administrator de bonis non is not analogous to that of administrator cum testamento annexo on judgment obtained, by an administrator pendente minore etate, as here. The former comes in by title paramount, derived from the ordinary, while the latter is the mere bailee, and acts in the name of the infant administrator. [Lefroy, B.—It is like the case of an infant suing by guardian, when he attains his age he can carry on the suit in his own name.] Counsel also cited Williams on Exors, 401; Panton v. Truelock, (2, Keble, 6, 11, 30;) — v. Croft, (1, Lord Raymond, 265; Headley v. Kelly, (2, H. and B. 591; Moyley Entries, 125.)

The Court directed the case to stand, that a search for precedents might be made in the office.

April 20.—Sir Colman O'Loughlen stated, that after a diligent search, only two precedents, Administratrix of Dowling v. Smith, 1812; Henry v. Phillips, Mich. 1826, had been found of a Scire facias by an administrator, upon a judgment obtained by administrator, durante minore etate, and the form of them coincided with the one under consideration of the Court.

* Doherty, C.J., and Torrens, J., were absent.

PENNEFATHER, B.—The question in this case is decided by reference to the course of precedents, and those are in favour of the scire facias, in its present form. If it were a declaration, the averment would not be sufficient, but, both in this country and England, the scire facias is only for the purpose of having execution on a judgment already received; and the intendment must be here, that the judgment on which the scire facias is brought was recovered by the conuizee in her representative capacity. As to the present case not coming within the statute of 7 W. 3, c. 6, it has been held that an administration durante minore etate is not a general administration; but such an administrator is a person to whom administration may be granted, as bailee in usum and commodum of an infant executor; and there is authority for holding, that an executor coming of age may sue on a judgment obtained by the administrator durante min. etate. Now, there is no substantial difference between an administrator and executor in this respect; they come within the same reason and the same rule. There is such a privity between the parties, as will enable the subsequent executor or administrator to have execution on a judgment recovered during the limited administration. It is not going too far to hold, that this distinction was present to the mind of the legislature at the time of the passing of 7 W. 3, and may account for their not having provided for such a case as the present.

Judgment for Plaintiff.

M'KENNA v. ADMINISTRATORS OF HARNETT.—
May 1.

Substituted Security—Action for Money paid.

Where a party gives a promissory note in substitution for another, which is accepted by the holder of the first in discharge of it, an action for money paid for the use of the defendant is maintainable.

This was an action on the money counts, and on an account stated between the plaintiff and defendant, as executors of a person named Cornelius Harnett, deceased, and had been tried at the Summer Assizes at Tralee, in 1848, before Mr. Justice Moore. The plaintiff sought to recover on the count for money paid for the use of the intestate Cornelius Harnett, under the following circumstances. The plaintiff and intestate—the former as surety—made their joint and several promissory note, at three months, dated the 11th September, 1846, and delivered it to the Messrs. Wyse, who carried on the trade of distillers, at Cork, for goods supplied by them to the intestate. This note not being paid, the plaintiff, jointly with his son, passed a note to the Messrs. Wyse, on which occasion the first note was given up to the plaintiff. The second note was not paid till after the filing of the plaintiff's declaration about a month before the trial. On this evidence, defendant's counsel objected, that the proof of payment of money before the trial, but after the filing of the plaintiff's bill, and of the service of the plaintiff's bill of particulars, in which the action was expressly stated to have been brought for money paid for the use of the intestate, did not support this action. The learned Judge refused to non-suit, but reserved leave for the defendant to move for a non-suit, or a verdict to be entered in their favour. There was a verdict for the plaintiff.

Mr. Bennett, Q.C. (with him Mr. Leahy), now moved to set aside the conditional order obtained by O'Hea last Michaelmas Term, pursuant to the leave received. They contended that the bill in this case had clearly been treated as money; and relied upon Barclay v. Gooch (2 Esp. 571), recognised and acted on by Pollock, C.B., in Rogers v. Maw (15 Mee. & W. 444; Judgment, 449). The following cases were also cited:—Fairlie v. Druton (8 B. & C. 395); Cusson v. Chadley (3 B. & C. 591).

Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C. (with him Mr. O'Hea) contra.—Relied on Taylor v. Higgins (3 East. 169), and Maxwell v. Jamieson (2 B. & Ald. 61), as being inconsistent with, and overruling Barclay v. Gooch. And even supposing that the second note had been taken as a substituted security, there was no evidence that at the time when this action was brought that it would have been ever paid, or even payment demanded.

PENNEFATHER, B.*—The question left by the learned Judge was, whether the second note was taken in substitution of the first. If so, on the authority of Lord Kenyon in Barclay v. Gooch, and the observations of Pollock, C.B., in Rogers v. Maw, it must be now considered as settled law, that if the second note was so taken in substitution, it was a satisfaction of the original debt. My brother Lefroy and I are of opinion, that that question was found by the jury, and that there was evidence to warrant that finding. The Messrs. Wyse had both the plaintiff and the testator for their security on the first note; that not being paid, the plaintiff asks for time, and gives the second note, getting up the first. The Messrs. Wyse, instead of giving up that note, might have kept it for the purpose, if necessary, of enforcing payment against the intestate.

RICHARDS, B.—I think, in point of justice, the decision of my brethren the correct one. The only doubt on my mind is, whether the question of the second note being taken in satisfaction of the first, was left to the jury.

Cause allowed without costs.

WALKER v. COLLINS.—May, 5.

Practice—Affidavit to change venue.

The prescribed form of the common affidavit, for changing the venue at the instance of the defendant, must be strictly preserved.

Mr. Chatterton moved on behalf of the defendant to change the venue from Dublin to Cork, on an affidavit "that the plaintiff's cause of action, (if any,) in this cause, arose in the County of Cork, and not in the County of Dublin or elsewhere."

Mr. Colles, contra.—The affidavit is insufficient, according to the established rule of the Court. It should have proceeded, "or elsewhere out of the County of Cork."

PER CURIAM.—We must refuse this application. The rule of the Court is unequivocal.†

ROLLS COURT.

KELLY v. JACKSON.—Jan. 18. and April 17.

leading—Discovery—Professional privilege.

re a bill charges that a defendant is connected with the preparation and execution of certain fraudulent leases, and seeks a discovery of the matters alleged to be fraudulent, the defendant cannot, by reason of professional confidence, protect himself in the discovery.

A bill in this cause was filed the 29th of August, and stated that by lease of the 30th of Nov., the premises called Montpelier House, in the city of Dublin, were demised to J. Fyans at the rent of £150 for three lives with a covenant of perpetual renewal, that all the estate of Fyans was vested in J. D. Duckett, who, by indenture of 4th of March, 1841, in consideration of £1500, sold said premises to William Trocke, one of the defendants, for the term of three lives, and a covenant for perpetual renewal, subject to the annual rent of £125, to which the original rent had been added. The bill then stated that in the year 1842, said Trocke was employed in making certain building improvements on said premises, and not having paid therefor by the defendant, commenced an action, and on the 12th of February, 1848, obtained a verdict, and on the 26th of April 1848, entered judgment in the Court of Queen's Bench for the sum of 6s. 10d. That plaintiff then issued a writ of habeas corpus, and was about to extend the interest of said Trocke in the said premises when he discovered that he obtained said verdict, on the 21st of February 1848, said William Trocke caused two leases to be executed which appear to bear date respectively the 1st of February 1848, being the same day for which notice of trial was served, and which leases were to be made between said William Trocke, Robert Jackson, one of the defendants, and stepson of the said William Trocke. That by one of said leases the said premises of Montpelier House were demised for two lives at the rent of £120, and the other lease in consideration of £280, and the yearly rent of £14; the remaining part of said premises, called Montpelier Cottage, were also demised to said R. Jackson for two lives. That at the time when said two leases purport to bear date, said Trocke was indebted to various persons, and went to Brussels in order to avoid his creditors, and he remained up to and after the 12th of February. That it appeared by the memorials of said Trocke that they were respectively witnessed by the defendant, John Graham, as to the execution thereof by the defendant, W. Trocke, and they were registered on the affidavit of the said J. Graham, who was attorney of the said W. Trocke in the said action, who was resident in Dublin on the said 1st of February 1848, the day when said leases are made to bear date, and said J. Graham so continued resident in the country until the 12th of February, when plaintiff obtained said verdict, and therefore it was reasonable that said J. Graham could have been a witness to the execution of said leases by the said Trocke on said 1st of February, but same were not executed after plaintiff's verdict, in order to avoid his demand. That said leases were prepared by the said J. Graham, and at his suggestion, to defeat plaintiff's rights, and prevent him from recovering the said premises for payment of his judgment, and said J. Graham was privy to and cognizant of the fraud, and that previous to the execution of said leases, he caused a case to be prepared, and submitted to counsel to be advised if said leases would protect the premises from plaintiff's demand. That said leases were at a gross undervalue, and the consideration was never paid, and were really made in trust for said defendant, W. Trocke, and the bill prayed that the said leases might be declared fraudulent and void as against plaintiff, and that same might be set aside, and that the costs incurred by plaintiff by reason thereof might be paid by the defendants, and particularly by J. Graham, and that an injunction might be granted to prevent Robert Jackson or Wm. Trocke from interfering with said premises. The defendant, Graham, pleaded to so much of the bill as regarded a discovery concerning said leases and opinion. That for a long time previous and down to the time of the preparation and execution of said leases defendant was, and continued to be, and then was the attorney and solicitor of the defendant, W. Trocke, and he had not any knowledge of, nor was he concerned in said matters, save and except only in his capacity as such attorney and solicitor. That he had not and never had in his possession, power or custody any case, or opinion, or document relating to said matters, save such cases, and opinions, and writing, &c., as came to, and were in his possession solely as attorney and solicitor to the said Wm. Trocke, and prayed judgment whether he ought to make any further answer. By his answer, the defendant Graham stated that said leases were executed by said Wm. Trocke, at Artane, in the County of Dublin, early in February, 1848, and admitted that same were prepared by him, but stated they were made in pursuance of contracts previously entered into; the answer then denied all fraud, and submitted that the defendant was not bound to answer the 7th interrogatory as being likely to subject him to penalties, and as the plaintiff had not waived same said bill was demurrable, and defendant craved the same benefit as if the objection was taken by demurrer.

Mr. Hughes, Q.C., and Mr. Closs, in support of plea, relied on (1 Dan. C. P. 527;) Vent v. Pacey, (4 Russ. 193;) Greenough v. Gaskell, (1 M. & K. 98;) Lord Walsingham v. Goodricks, (3 Hare, 122;) Desborough v. Rawlins, (3 M. & L. 515;) Sawyer v. Bichmore, (3 M. & K. 578;) Harring v. Cloberry, (1 Ph. 91;) Jones v. Pugh, (ibid. 96;) Woods v. Woods, (4 Hare, 88;) Blenkinsop v. Blenkinsop, (10 Beav. 277, S.C. 2 Ph. 607.)

Mr. Christian, Q.C., and Mr. Burroughs, contra, contended that the plea was bad in form, not having been verified by affidavit. (Dan. C. P. 652-6.) Counsel also cited Desborough v. Rawlins, (3 My. & Cr. 515;) Foley v. Hill, (3 My. & Cr. 475;) Knight v. Gale, (Finch, 259;) Greenough v. Gaskell, (1 M. & K. 105;) Harris v. Harris, (3 Hare, 450;) Wall v. Stubbs, (2 V. & B. 354.)

April, 17.—In this case, after stating the facts as above, his Honour adverted to the form of the plea, which covered the greater part of the 7th interrogatory, and prayed judgment whether the defendant should answer, and stated he had no knowledge of the matters save in his character as attorney, and submitted he was not bound to answer, and by his answer he made the same objection, on different grounds. Upon this point, he referred to the 46th General Order of 1843, which corresponds to the 38th English and Mit. E. P. 5th Ed. 381; (8 Beav. 40, 2 Atkyn. 284;) where it is laid down, that although a party may demur to one matter and plead to another, he cannot plead and demur to the same matter; and in Stephens on Pleading, 327, it appeared that a similar rule prevails at law. His Honour then referred to the 66th General Order, which provides "that no demurrer or plea shall be held bad and overruled on argument, only because the answer of the defendant may extend to some part of the same matter as may be covered by such demurrer or plea," and was of opinion that the object of that order was to get rid of technical objections, and in Dan. C. P. 761, it is laid down, that in all cases not coming strictly within the terms of the Order, the principles stated by Lord Redesdale, that all the different defences must refer to separate and distinct parts of the bill, still apply; and consequently he considered the case before him within the rule stated by Lord Redesdale. He was of opinion also that the plea was bad in substance, and referred to the cases of Bowles v. Stewart, (1 Sch. & Lef. 227;) Birch v. Beadles, (10 Sim. 332;) Ruddy v. Williams, (3 Jon. & Lat. 1, Mit. 350; Beames on Pleading, 23; Mitf. 282, 285; Beames on Plead. 38; Mitf. Pl. 3 Ed. 199, Note; also the case of Deborough v. Rawlins, (3 My. & Cr. 515,) in which Lord Cottenham, page 521, speaking of the privilege of a solicitor, says, "Both Bramwell v. Lucas and Greenough v. Gaskell, shew that the privilege only applies to cases in which the client makes a communication to his solicitor, with a view to obtaining his legal advice; this is undoubtedly the same ground upon which I held, in Sawyer v. Bichmore, that a solicitor, when examined as a witness, was bound to produce letters communicated to him from collateral quarters, and to answer questions, seeking information as to matters of fact, as distinguished from confidential communications." "In Sawyer v. Bichmore, the question arose as to a solicitor being bound to disclose the circumstances of certain transactions in which he had been concerned as solicitor. I was of opinion, that the facts were not sufficiently brought before me to shew that they were privileged, and finding it laid down by the Court of King's Bench, that communications are not privileged if coming from any other quarter, but that they would be if they came from the client, I found that a case might exist in which many papers in a solicitor's hands would not be privileged." And (in page 524,) he says "The Court of King's Bench said, that the privilege was restricted to communications, whether oral or written, from the client to his attorney, and could not extend to adverse proceedings communicated to him, as attorney in the cause, from the opposite party, in the disclosure of which there could be no breach of confidence." His Honour also referred to Peake, N. P., 508, and to Greenough v. Gaskell, (1 M. & K. 103,) where Lord Cottenham says, "Thus the witness, or the defendant treated as such and called so to discover, must have learned the matter in question only as solicitor or counsel, and in no other way; if, therefore, he were a party, and especially to a fraud,—(and the case may be put, of his becoming informer after being engaged in a conspiracy)—that is, if he were acting for himself, though he might also be employed for another, he would not be protected," &c. In Stanhope v. Nott (2 Sw. 221, note) a demurrer, on the ground that all the defendant's knowledge was acquired as counsel, was overruled, and the defendant was ordered to answer, for the trust of a counsel did not extend to the suppression of deeds or wills; and Spencer v. Lettrel, (ibid.,) His Honour, after referring to Mitf. Pl. 224, and Beames on Pleading, 83, said he was of opinion that the plea must be overruled.

POWELL v. POWELL—April 21.

Injunction—Civil Bill Decree.

Where a decree to account has been pronounced in an administration suit, the court will restrain creditors from proceeding on foot of civil bill decrees obtained against the administratrix so far as relates to the assets of the intestate, but the decree being in the nature of a judgment de bonis propriis of the superior courts, the creditors will not be prevented from proceeding against the administrator personally.

Before the decree to account, several parties having proceeded against Catherine Powell, the administratrix of Thomas Powell, deceased, in actions at law, both in the superior and Civil Bill Courts, the administratrix applied to this court for an injunction to restrain those parties from further proceedings at law, and to order them to come in and prove their demands, together with such costs at law as were properly incurred in the said proceedings at law, up to the time at which the several parties had notice that the decree in this cause had been pronounced. The Assistant-Barrister had pronounced several decrees, and Catherine Powell having appealed therefrom, on the hearing of the appeals, Judge Ball made the following order:—"Reverse the decrees, without prejudice to the plaintiff proceeding to a new trial before the Assistant-Barrister, upon the civil bill already served in this cause, on the terms of the defendant being at liberty to establish credits as against the plaintiff on the trial of such civil bills, in the same way as she might have done upon the trial already had before the Barrister on the 18th of October, 1848, but not any credits which would not have been properly chargeable against the said plaintiff on the taking of the account at the said trial; and in the event of the terms of this order not being complied with, the decrees to stand affirmed, without costs, and the defendant to be at liberty to appeal therefrom, as if this order had not been pronounced." Judge Ball had affirmed the decrees, in pursuance of the above order, before this application was made. The defendant had served the plaintiffs with the copy of the decree in this cause, and with a notice cautioning them not to proceed on the civil bill decrees; this notice was served on the 25th of February, 1849, and the decree had been pronounced on the 26th of January, 1849.

Mr. O'Hara moved for the injunction.

Sir Colman O'Loughlin contra.—The civil bill decrees are now confirmed against the administratrix absolutely, and the parties who have obtained the decrees have a right to enforce their rights against her, for those decrees were pronounced before the decree to account. As to the costs of the motion, Bookless v. Crumack (1 Purton Cooper, 126); Jones v. Jones (5 Sim. 678); Egan v. Baldwin (2 Mol. 552).

Mr. O'Hara, in reply.—They had notice of the decree on the 25th of February, and yet they went on; and those affirmances have been obtained behind the back of the administratrix.

April 23.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I will stay the suits in the superior courts, and will not give the parties who so proceeded the costs of appearing on this motion; for, otherwise, if a great number of actions were depending, all the parties would be entitled to appear, for the purpose of informing the court that they could not offer any opposition to the motion. As to the civil bill proceedings, they stand upon a different footing; for a civil bill decree is in the nature of a judgment de bonis propriis, and an executor against whom such a judgment is obtained, is personally liable. It is not necessary to offer any opinion whether the form of judgment on the civil bills is correct or not. The decrees obtained in the present case appear to be in the usual form, and are equivalent to judgments de bonis propriis of the superior courts. In Terravest v. Featherby (2 Mer. 480), where such a judgment was obtained before decree an injunction was refused; and in the case of Brooke v. Skinner (ibid., note), the Lord Chancellor said, "that if the plaintiff at law recovered a judgment de bonis testatoris, he would not suffer execution to be taken out on such a judgment; but that if he recovered de bonis propriis, this court would not restrain the execution." [His Honour then referred to the judgment in Vernon v. Thelluson, (1 Ph. 469-70), and to Clarke v. Lord Ormonde (Jac. 124), where the same doctrine is expressed.] The case of Kent v. Pickering (5 Sim. 569) was a creditor's suit, and one of the creditors, who was not a party to the suit, had recovered judgment de bonis testatoris et si non de bonis propriis; and the Vice-Chancellor said, "where there is a decree for the administration of the assets of a testator, this court will interfere so far as may be necessary to give effect to its own decree; but it will not interpose to protect the executors from any liability to which they may have subjected themselves personally." Even if judgment de bonis propriis has been obtained, the court, although it leave the executor liable, will not permit the creditors to interfere with the assets in the hands of the executor. The civil bill decrees, being in the nature of judgments de bonis propriis, I can only make an order similar to that in Kent v. Pickering, leaving the creditors to make their decrees available against the executors personally. [His Honour then proceeded to consider whether the decree to account would be a defence to the civil bills, and having referred to the 36 Geo. 3, c. 55, s. 7, and 56 Geo. 3, c. 88, s. 9, by which the defendant is entitled to all matters of defence that he might have had if sued at common law or equity; and to Napier on Civil Bills, p. 107, and p. 86, where the question is considered, whether new evidence is admissible on an appeal from the Civil Bill Courts, made the following order.]

"Let the said Charles Studdert, &c., be restrained from further proceedings at law in the actions commenced against the said J. Powell, as administratrix, &c., and let said parties be at liberty to come in under the decree in this cause and prove their demands, together with such costs at law as they may have respectively properly incurred, &c., up to the time at which the said parties respectively had notice of the said decree, &c., and let John North, &c., be restrained by the injunction of this court from levying in execution, or selling any part of the assets of the late Thomas Powell, under the civil bill decrees obtained by them, or from otherwise interfering in any manner with said assets; and, in taking the accounts in this cause, declare the said Jane Powell entitled to have credit for the costs properly and necessarily incurred by her in said several actions and proceedings."

PORTER v. VESEY.—May 1.

Practice—Subpoena—Clerk in Court—Answer for a minor.

Mr. McCarty moved that the clerk in court might be at liberty to put in an answer for the defendant, George Stewart, a minor, he had been served with subpoena by the name of Mervin Stewart, but an appearance had been entered in his right name.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I have no authority to direct the clerk in court to file an answer unless the defendant has been regularly served with subpoena.

GREEN v. M'CLINTOCK.—May 1.

Practice—Separate answer—Married woman.

The Court will not make an order that a bill be taken pro confesso against a married woman there being no order that she should answer separately.

Mr. Murphy moved to take the bill pro confesso against several defendants, two of whom were married women.

Mr. Richards appeared for one of the defendants who answered previously to the motion.

Mr. Jenkins, for the married ladies, opposed the motion.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I have no authority to make an order that the bill be taken pro confesso against a married woman, no order having been obtained giving her liberty to answer separately.

REVENUE EXCHEQUER.

REGINA v. —, May, 5.

Practice—Expense of Demurrer-books in Revenue Cases.

In Revenue Cases, the Court will not grant the ordinary rule, that the "Defendant join in the expense of Demurrer-books, or judgment for the Plaintiff."

Mr. Jebb, on behalf of the Commissioners of Excise, moved that the defendant should be directed to join in the expense of books, the traverser having demurred to the information.

PER CURIAM.—The rule of the Court at the Common Law side and the Revenue side of the Exchequer is different. At the Law side, a defendant demurring is ruled to join in the expense of books, or judgment to go for plaintiff; but at the Revenue side such has not been the practice, and we are not disposed to vary it.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—EASTER TERM.

SMITH v. M'EVROY.—April, 23.

Promissory Note—Consideration—Delivery.

A fi. fa. having been executed against the property of B., at the instance of A., while the money arising from the sale remained with the sheriff, it was agreed by deed that A. should relinquish the fruits of his execution, and should receive a certain composition on the amount of his claim, along with the other creditors of B. It was also agreed that A. might have the use of the money arising from the levy, on passing his note at four months for the amount to C., as a trustee for the creditors. A., on signing the deed, deposited his note with C.'s solicitor, receiving from him, at the same time, a written undertaking not to part therewith until the creditors had executed or assented to the deed. No creditor except A. signed the deed, which did not appear to have been further acted on.

Held, that, under the circumstances, there was no consideration for the note between the parties.

Held, also, that, independently of this, the action was not maintainable, the note having been deposited by A. in the hands of a third party, to be handed to C. only in a certain event, which had never happened.

Seemingly, that in point of law there was no delivery of the note.

Assumpsit by payee against maker of a promissory note. The declaration contained one count, on a note dated the 27th of May, 1848, payable in four months, for the sum of £97 15s. 2d., and also the usual money counts. Plea, general issue. Notice to prove consideration, was also served on the plaintiff. At the trial of the cause before Crampton, J., at the sittings after last Hilary Term, it appeared that the defendant had some time previously recovered a judgment, after much litigation, against a person named Reid, for a large amount, and had issued against him a fi. fa., under which his goods were sold. A portion of the debt, however, remained undischarged, and, Reid being indebted to several other parties, his friends endeavoured to induce the defendant to come to terms with him, and at length prevailed on the former to agree to accept the terms offered to the body of the creditors. A deed of composition was accordingly prepared and engrossed, dated the 27th of May, 1848, and expressed to be made between Reid of the first part, the plaintiff Smith of the second part, and the creditors of Reid of the third part, which recited amongst other things an agreement, that the several creditors who should come in under said arrangement, should receive and be paid a composition of 6s. 8d. in the pound sterling, on the amount of their respective debts to be secured by the notes of Reid, at six and twelve months' date; and that the said M'Evroy, (the defendant,) should have in full costs of said motion, (in the suit before mentioned) as between attorney and client, and should be reimbursed the sum of £ , expended by him in lodging a docket of bankruptcy against the said T. Reid, as also the sheriff's fees and expenses the execution of the said writ and judgment; that the funds in the hands of the sheriff, to the credit of the cause of M'Evroy v. Reid, should, after payment of the sheriff's fees and expenses, be applicable, in the first instance, to the payment of the costs when so taxed, and also the further expenses above mentioned, &c.; and that after payment thereof, the residue should forthwith be handed over to the said John M'Evroy, he passing a promissory note, at four months' date, for the amount thereof, to the said G. H. Smith, the same to remain in his hands until maturity, and then to hand over a portion of the fund wherewith the said T. Reid should meet his first composition bills of £ 1. The deed after further reciting that the defendant had, pursuant to the agreement made to the plaintiff, his note for the amount in the sheriff's hands, after making the foregoing deductions, then contained a covenant on the part of the plaintiff, Smith, to hold the defendant's note "in trust, as soon as same shall arrive at maturity, to collect and call in the amount secured thereby, and to distribute such amount when by him received rateably, &c., among the several creditors, pursuant &c., of the third part, they hereby covenanting to receive the same as so much paid by the said T. Reid out of the promissory notes passed by him to them respectively for his first instalment." The deed was executed by the defendant alone of all the creditors, and he, being apprehensive that, if the deed were not generally signed, and Reid made bankrupt, he might be irretrievably prejudiced, in handing over the note to the plaintiff's attorney, obtained from that gentleman the following order:

"Re THOMAS REID with his Creditors.

"Your note for £97 15s. 10d. is not to be given until the deed is executed or assented to by all the creditors of Thomas Reid, which bears equal date herewith.
G. D. FOTTELL

(Dated, May 27, 1848.)

To JOHN M'EVROY, Esq.,
Meeting-house Yard.

It did not appear that Reid had made any exertions to obtain the assent of the other creditors to the deed; on the contrary, they had been settled reendently. The defendant never received any money under the deed. The note when produced appeared to have been in circulation, from it of there being a cancelled indorsement by the plaintiff. Upon this state of facts, counsel for the defendant called for a nonsuit, which the learned judge refused, but allowed the plaintiff to take a judgment, subject to be turned into one for the defendant, in case the Court should decide in favour of the plaintiff, expressing, at the same time, that the state of his mind was with the defendant. A final order was accordingly obtained, in the terms of the present term, against which Mr. McDonough, Q.C., (with him, Mr. O'Callaghan), now showed cause. The plaintiff here sues for such of the creditors as may sign the deed.

The action is by payee of a note against the maker; and notice has been served to prove consideration. The fallacy of the argument on the defendant's side consists in the assumption, that the deed is void if not executed by all the creditors. Blackburne, C. J.—If there be any consideration for the note, he cannot set up that defence. [Defendant signed the deed. Cole v. Crosswell, (d. & El. 681.) The words of the deed are, "of the creditors who should elect to come in and assent to the arrangement." The document produced as part of the defendant is at variance with the terms of the deed, and was, therefore, not properly admissible in evidence, to vary the effect of the instrument under seal. Lewis v. Jones, (4 B. & M.) [Blackburne, C. J.—The document does in my opinion, contradict the deed, or vary its effect of it.] There is a covenant in the deed, that the note upon trust, to distribute the proceeds thereof rateably between the creditors. This is repugnant to the document, which is non est to the deed. In the case of Lewis v. Jones, no notice was taken at the trial to the admissibility of the evidence. Parol evidence cannot be given to show a note not to be payable at the time mentioned. [Crompton, J.—If we are called on to rebut a presumption about the dates of these instruments, we must presume them to relate to the same action.] It is a settled rule, that the mere production of the signatures of creditors is insufficient to validate a deed of composition; a tender to, and assent by, them, must be proved. The note ought to have been given up by the depository, as well as the creditors assenting to the arrangement, as to their executing the deed, and their having deposited in ready cash sums of money in satisfaction of their claims, amounted substantially to assent.

J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C. and Mr. R. Armstrong, in reply.—The deed here is merely collateral to the main cause of action, and can be used for the purpose of shewing the consideration of the note. First, let, there was no delivery of the note; secondly, there was no consideration for the same; thirdly, there was a distinct collateral agreement, that the note should be delivered only on the happening of an event which never took place. There could have been no delivery until the deed had been executed or assented to by all the creditors. Delivery is as essential to the validity of a note, as it is to that of a deed. It is, therefore, no contradiction of the terms of the deed, to shew that the note was delivered as an escrow. Bowker v. Budkin, (11 M. & W. 128.) Neither the plaintiffs nor the creditors at large were bound by the deed, as they never executed it. Walwyn v. Coutts, (8 Mer. 707.)

Mr. O'Callaghan in reply.—The deed must be considered to intercept the note. This latter bears Smith's endorsement, and whether there were a breach of trust in the case or not, the fact of the delivery is clear. The deed was not dependent for its validity upon the signature of all the creditors. This, in fact, was the difficulty started at the time of executing the deed—namely, that the party signing might be bound, and the others free. This led to the collateral agreement, which was intended as a qualification to the terms of the deed. It is said that there was no evidence of assent in this case, but a liberal construction ought to be given to the term. The circumstances of the case must be taken into account, in the construction of this term. [Crompton, J.—In no instance has this deed been acted on. How would the case have stood, if Reid had surrendered his whole property to the other creditors.] Your lordship suggests a case which would have completely encroached on Mr. Evoy's rights; but this is not the present state of facts. Here the main object was to avoid bankruptcy. The witnesses who have been examined in this case depose to the assent of the creditors, when they speak of the various settlements made with them. That is the species of assent contemplated by the document.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—This was an action by the payee of a promissory note against the maker, and the consideration was examinable between the parties to the suit. The plaintiff, having been served with a notice to prove same, has proposed to do so by giving in evidence a certain deed of composition. Now, had this been a valid instrument, and acted upon by all parties, there is no doubt that the present action would have been maintainable. The plaintiff would then have been the bona fide holder of the note, according to the terms of the deed. Reid was indebted to many persons, but not to the plaintiff, who was a bare trustee for the creditors, and had, therefore, personally no right other than that which the deed conferred—namely, to use the security for the benefit of those creditors who should come in and execute the deed. Not one of them, however, came in, or took any benefit from it; no one assented to, or took under it. The evidence is, that some accepted more, and others less, in satisfaction of their claims, but all independently of the deed. On this head, the case is clearly with the defendant, as no consideration is disclosed by the deed, and the note is between him and the plaintiff. Contemporaneously, however, with the making of the note, and as a part of the same transaction, the defendant insisted on having a document signed by the plaintiff's solicitor, with whom the note was to be deposited, that he would not part therewith until the deed was executed or assented to by all Reid's creditors. This was plainly all one transaction, and the document was not in contravention or contradiction of the deed, but in exact conformity with it. There was an abortive attempt to carry the composition deed into effect, for it was never executed. The plaintiff's solicitor was the trustee of the defendant; and, in violation of his trust, he handed the note over to the plaintiff, and thus enabled the latter to indorse it, and the solicitor then put it into circulation. This fact is established by the cancelled indorsement. I put no improper construction upon this act of the solicitor, but there was a legal obligation imposed upon him to retain the note until the proper event had occurred. I am clearly of opinion, therefore, that a verdict should be entered at once for the defendant, as the plaintiff has not been taken by surprise, and as a new trial could produce no other result.

CRAMPTON, J., concurred.*

Rule to enter a verdict for defendant made absolute.

HALL v. THORPE.—April 27.

Practice—New trial Motion—Surprise—Notice—Affidavit.

An application for a rule nisi, to set aside a verdict, and for a new trial, on the grounds of surprise and the discovery of new evidence, must be founded on affidavit, and notice of motion is necessary.

Mr. R. Armstrong, for the plaintiff, had, on a former day in this term, April, 20, obtained a rule nisi, to set aside the verdict which passed for the defendant, and for a new trial, on the grounds of surprise and newly-discovered evidence.

Mr. Fitzgerald, Q.C., for the defendant, now moved to set aside the rule, as having been obtained irregularly. The 125th rule of this Court requires, that where a party seeking to set aside a verdict relies upon surprise or fatality, or upon the discovery of new evidence, the application must be grounded upon affidavit, and the opposite party must have notice of the motion.

Mr. Armstrong, contra, admitted that the rule nisi was irregularly obtained, but contended that the defendant had waived the irregularity, by having filed affidavits as cause against the rule.

The Court set aside the rule, but without costs, being of opinion that the defendant had unnecessarily increased the expenses, by having filed affidavits that were immaterial to the motion.

Rule set aside.

IN CHAMBER.

SWALLOW v. BRAZIER.—May, 12.

Practice.

A motion which might have been made during the sitting of the Court, will not be granted in Chamber.

Mr. Codd, for the defendant, moved, on the usual affidavit, that the plaintiff, being resident out of the jurisdiction, do give security for costs.

Mr. Osborne, contra.—The appearance for the defendant having been entered on the 24th of

* Perrin and Moore, JJ., were absent.

April, this motion was moveable during the last term, and to hear it now would be in effect turning the vacation into another term. Smith v. Shaw, (3 Law Rep. O. S. 270;) White v. Mahony, (31 Dun. & Osb. 192.)

BLACKBURN, C. J.—The motion ought to have been made during the sitting of the Court, and must now be refused.

No rule.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

DELANEY v. NEWLAND.—April 30, 31, and May 1.

Bill of Exchange—Fraud—Indorsee without Notice—Onus of Proving Consideration—Howard v. Shaw (1r. L. Rep. 335) commented on.

In an action by an indorsee against the acceptor of a bill, the defendant gave evidence that the bill was fraudulently filled for a larger sum than had been agreed upon between the drawer and a person who was no party to the bill, but to whom the drawer had sent the stamp, signed in blank. Held, that such evidence was sufficient to throw upon the plaintiff the burthen of proving consideration.

Howard v. Shaw (9 1r. L. Rep. 335) commented upon, and disapproved of upon the question of fraud throwing the onus on the indorsee of proving consideration.

This was an action on a bill of exchange by an indorsee against the acceptor. Plea, the general issue. At the trial before the Lord Chief Baron at the sittings after Hilary Term, the plaintiff proved the hand-writings of the acceptor, drawer, and indorsee, and, reading the bill, closed. The defendant then went into evidence to show that the dealing from which the bill arose was between the drawer and a person named Joel, whose name was not upon the bill—that the original agreement was, that the bill should be drawn for £60—that the drawer sent a blank stamp to Joel, with the defendant's name written across it, and his own at the foot and on the back, and that he told the defendant, who accepted solely for his accommodation, that the bill was to be drawn for £60, and that the bill was filled by Joel for £200, in fraud of that agreement. Whereupon the defendant's counsel called upon the plaintiff, under these circumstances, to prove that he had given value for the bill, which, not being done, the learned Chief Baron told the jury, that, as the plaintiff had not proved any consideration given by him to Joel, and if they believed the fraud imputed to the latter, to find for the defendant; and reserved leave for the plaintiff to move the court to have a verdict entered for him for either the full amount of the bill, or for £60. Verdict for defendant.

Mr. McDonough, Q.C., and Mr. D. Lynch, Q.C., now moved pursuant to the leave reserved.

Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., with Mr. Sempie, contra.

[The judgment of the Lord Chief Baron is ably reviewed all the cases on the principal point as to render it unnecessary to give the arguments of counsel.]

The following cases were relied and commented upon:—Bingham v. Stanley (1 G. & Dar. 287), in v. Bailey (9 Dowl. 18); Sheriff v. Wilkes (11 M. & W. 48); Smith v. Martin (9 M. & W. 304); v. Barber (1 M. & W. 425, S. C. 5 Dowl. 77, 2 Gale, 5); Wyatt v. Bulmer (2 Esp. 538); v. Chapman (16 M. & W. 355); Percival v. Wyton (2 C. M. & R. 180, S. C. 3 Dowl. 748); Phibes v. O'Connell (9 Dowl. P. C. 213, S. C. 2 M. & W. 371); Newby v. Smith (2 Esp. 537); Bassett v. Dodgin (10 Bing. 40); Thicknesse v. Milom (1 Cr. & Jer. 425); Bailey v. Bidwell (1 M. & W. 73); Howard v. Shaw (9 Ir. L. Rep. 1); Brown v. Philpot (2 Moo. & Rob. 285); in v. Scott (2 Camp. 100); Rees v. Marquis of Headfort (2 Camp. 574); Rowland v. Ingham (4 Jur. 460).

By 4—PICKER, C. B. now delivered judgment, stating the facts as above.] The question I left the jury was, whether the bill was filled in fraud or agreement. There was no evidence of consideration by the plaintiff, nor was there any proof having had notice of the fraud. At the close of the defendant's case the plaintiff was called upon to prove that he was an indorsee for value. I directed the jury to find for the defendant if they believed the evidence of the fraud. The jury found for the defendant. The first question is, whether there was any evidence of fraud as to impose upon the plaintiff the necessity of proving that he was an indorsee for value. The case of Howard v. Shaw, (L. R. 335,) renders it necessary that we should look to the authorities on this question. Where a note is obtained by fraud, the indorsee cannot recover unless he can shew a title untainted with the illegality or fraud, and that he is an indorsee for value. It appears certainly to have been at one time held that the circumstance of the transaction being tainted with fraud did not necessarily throw upon a remote indorsee the onus of proving value. Wyatt v. Bulmer, (2 Esp. 537); Newby v. Smith, (2 Esp. 1b. note.) The contrary is so clear that, if it were not for the case of Howard v. Shaw, I should have had no doubt but that the proof of fraud imposed upon the plaintiff the burden of proving that he gave value. Duncan v. Williams, (1 Camb. 100,) Rees v. Marquis of Headfort, (2 Camb. 574.) In Heath v. Sansom, (2 B. & C. 9,) it was held "that where the note or acceptance had been obtained by felony, by fraud, or by any other means, it has been usual to require proof of value and consideration on the part of the indorsee," and not to dispute the propriety of that usage, as any of those facts raises some suspicion of the title of the holder, and this rule was recognized in Bassett v. Dodgin, (10 Bing. 40.) In Mills v. Barber, (1 M. & W. 425, S. C. 5 Dowl. P. C. 77,) Lord Abinger refers to the opinion expressed by him in Clark v. Clarke, (2 Cr. M. & R. 342; S. C. 1 M. & W. 237; S. C. 5 Tyr. 593,) and recognized the distinction between bills for accommodation merely, and bills for fraud; he says, p. 431, "If a man is introduced into Court without any suspicion of fraud but as the holder of an accommodation bill, it may be presumed he is a holder for value. The presumption of its being an accommodation bill is no evidence of want of consideration in the holder," "un-derstand, therefore, that the bill be connected with some fraud, and that a suspicion of fraud be raised from its being shown that something has been done with it of an illegal nature, or that it has been clandestinely taken away, or has been lost or stolen, in which cases the holder must shew that he gave value for it, the onus probandi is cast upon the defendant;" an argument founded upon the principle that contra eapolatorem omnia præsuntur. Isaac v. Ferrer, (1 Tyr. & Gr. 281; S. C. 4 Dowl. 750,) was an action by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note. The plea, after stating certain facts of the transaction, went on to say, "that the transaction was a gross fraud and imposition upon the defendant, and that the note was indorsed to the plaintiff without consideration, and that he held the same without value or consideration, and that there never was, nor is there any consideration or value on the said note between any parties thereto." Replication, de injuriâ sua propria. Demurrer. That case was decided solely upon the pleadings. At the close of the argument, Lord Abinger, C. B. said, "one inconvenience has occurred to me which has not been urged on the part of the defendant. Formerly, on fraud being sworn, the plaintiff was obliged to shew consideration; but, if this replication is allowed, the whole burthen of proof will be thrown upon the defendant, he will have to prove both fraud and want of consideration, he will have to prove a negative; therefore, it seems to me that he still ought, after proving fraud, to be permitted to cast the onus of shewing consideration upon the plaintiff." And Parke, B.—"Formerly, fraud was deemed prima facie evidence of no consideration, and probably the same course would be followed, should this form of replication be allowed." The Court upheld the replication, as in accordance with established rules of pleading, and at the close of the conclusion of his judgment, Lord Abinger, C. B., says, "If this replication were not allowed, some inconvenience would follow; for in every action on a bill or note, it would be competent for a defendant, by alleging fraud, or such other circumstance as would throw the proof of value on the indorsee, to compel him to prove it; on the other hand, if this replication be allowed, the indorsee is left in the same situation he was before—with the additional advantage, that he is made acquainted with the defence to be set up, which was one great object of the late pleading regulations; and he will be called upon to prove value given or not, accordingly as the defendant shall prove or fail in the proof of the allegation of fraud, as he would before under the general issue." I have stated thus fully the opinion of the Court of Exchequer in England, as there appears to be some misapprehension as to the effect of the decision in Smith v. Martin, (9 M. & W. 304,) upon this question. The learned Chief Baron then referred to Whitaker v. Edmonds, (1 Ad. & El. 638, S. C. 1 Moo. & Rob. 366;) Arbousin v. Anderson, (1 Q. B. 498;) Shearn v. Burnard, (2 P. & Dav. 565,) and proceeded.—Before I refer to other cases on this subject, it is necessary to observe that in Howard v. Shaw, it was not necessary to decide this question; the question there turned upon the absence of consideration. In Bramah v. Roberts, (1 Scott, 350, S. C. 1 Bing. N. C. 469,) it was held, that when the defendant set up by his plea a case of fraud, a replication stating that the plaintiff was an indorsee for value, without notice of the fraud, was a good answer to the plea; and Smith v. Martin is to the same effect. There, the Lord Chief Baron Abinger refused, at the trial, to call upon the plaintiff to begin by proving fraud, as the affirmative of that allegation lay upon the defendant, who raised the question by his plea. Both those cases turned upon their respective pleadings, and Edmunds v. Groves, (8 M. & W. 642, S. C. 5 Dowl. P. C. 775,) is to same effect as Smith v. Martin. In Bingham v. Stanley, (1 Gale & Dav. 237, S. C. 2 Q. B. 117,) the Court of Queen's Bench expressly differed with the opinion of the Court of Exchequer in Edmunds v. Groves, applying the old principles to the new law of pleading, holding that an admission on the record of fraud would throw the onus of proving consideration upon the plaintiff, the Court of Exchequer holding such admission to be sufficient for that purpose. This question was not raised in Bramah v. Roberts. The rule established by a long line of decisions, that if the note were proved to have been obtained by fraud or effected by illegality, would cast upon the plaintiff the burthen of shewing he was a bonâ fide indorsee for value was again determined in the case of Bailey v. Bidwell (18 M. & W. 73), which case was not brought under the consideration of the Court of Queen's Bench in Howard v. Shaw. In the former case the illegality was proved, and the court was called upon to say, that the plaintiff should have proved that he had given full consideration, the question directly and pointedly arose. Parke, B., in his judgment says, "It certainly has been, since the later cases, the universal understanding, that if the note were proved to have been obtained or affected by illegality, that afforded a presumption that the person who had been guilty of the illegality would dispose of it, and would place it in the hands of another person to sue upon it, and that such proof casts upon the plaintiff the burthen of shewing that he was a bonâ fide indorsee for value." On these authorities, we must hold that the evidence in this case was sufficient to cast this onus upon the plaintiff; and therefore he should have proved consideration; and are, therefore, of opinion, that on this point the verdict should stand. It was further contended, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover a verdict for £60, the defendant having given Joel an authority to that amount, on the principle that a firm may be liable for the acts of one member of it, so far as the bill is within the scope of his authority. Thicknesse and another v. Bromilow (2 Cr. & Jer. 425), Wilson v. Bailey (9 Dowl. P. C. 18), and others, plainly shew that primâ facie all the members of the firm are bound by an instrument drawn by one of a firm, within the scope of his authority. The learned Chief Baron also referred to Jones v. Corbett, (3 Gal. & Dav. 308), and Mugroo v. Drake (1 Dav. & Mer. 347). There is a principle to be derived from these authorities applicable to the case before us; here the fraud has been proved, and the acceptor has plainly a right to say, non in hæc fœdera veni; and that he is not bound by this instrument to any extent; that there is no liability whatever. I do not clearly understand the case of Rosland v. Beane (4 Jur. 460), at least from body of the report, but, coupled with the rest of the report, it appears to be an authority in favour of the view the court has taken of the question. We are, therefore, of opinion, that the plaintiff cannot have a verdict for any part of this bill, nor do we think the verdict contrary to the weight of evidence; all the facts were proved, and they have drawn their conclusions from them, and have the authority of my brother Lefroy for pressing his concurrence in the judgment pronounced.

LESSOR JORDAN v. CASUAL EJECTOR.—Practice—Renewal of Habere—9 & 10 Vic. c. 111.

The Court of Exchequer will allow the tenant to renew when he has signed the acknowledgment required by the 8th section of the 10 & 11 Vic. c. 111, to remain in possession till he has sown the crops sown by him since the former habere.

This was an application for liberty to renew habere, pursuant to the provisions of the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 111, s. 8. The tenants were the immediate tenants of the landlord, by whom the ejectment was brought; they had no under-tenants. They signed the acknowledgment required by the 8th section of the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 111, and refused to give up possession, having put crops on the land.

Mr. J. Pennfather.—It could never have been contemplated by the legislature that the land was to be kept out of possession, nor that the tenants should have the power of tillage and sowing. In this case, we are willing to pay for the seed and labour expended. The Court of Queen's Bench has put the party bringing the ejectment under the terms not to execute the second writ till the tenant could reap the fruits of the crops put in the land since the former habere†.

The Court, having taken time to consider, made the following rule, stating they would make a general one for all applications of this nature.

"It is ordered by the court, that the said lessor be at liberty to issue a renewal of the said writ of habere facias possession directed to the Sheriff of the County of Tipperary, without further motion. The costs of this order, of such renewal, and of the possession thereunder, to be borne by the said lessor of plaintiff, and such renewal to be executed until the expiration of the said term, or until the expiration of the said weeks after service, either personally or by the said tenants, or at the respective doors of the houses of said Richard Stokes and Edward Stokes, upon some inmate thereof, of the order, and of a notice annexed, bearing the effect hereof, and the course to be pursued by the said tenants, if they so desire, to discharge the limit, or vary this order.

* This case was heard before Pigot, C.B., Preside, and Lefroy, B.B. Richards, B. absent.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

MILTON v. HAMILTON.—April 28, May 12.

Bill of Revivor—Plea—Order to Revive.

Defendant to a bill of revivor appeared to it regularly; an order to revive was obtained, and afterwards, within a month from his appearance, defendant filed a plea. Held, confirming decision of the Master of the Rolls, that the order to revive did not preclude the filing the case the bill stood over to be amended, by the personal representative of F. Hamilton pursuant to an order made at the hearing. Administration to him was taken out by one of the defendants. The bill was amended by saying that it might be taken as a bill of revivor in her, in her capacity of administratrix, but requiring an answer. A subpoena to revive was served. The defendant within eight days appeared; the plaintiff obtained the usual rule to revive on appearance of the defendant; subsequently, but within a month from service, the defendant filed a plea to the bill. The plaintiff moved to have the plea struck off the file as irregular, being a plea to the bill which had been already obtained. The Master of the Rolls refused the motion.

Christian, Q.C., moved, by way of appeal from the order; he referred to the form of subpoena to revive (Smi. Ord. Appx. 35), and argued that it was, that not only must the appearance be entered, but cause must be shewn within eight days, a plaintiff may revive—that cause against which can only be shewn by plea or demurrer, a cause against maintaining the suit may also be shewn by answer, Harris v. Pollard (3 P. Wms. Lewis v. Bridgeman (2 Sim. 465); Codrington v. Houlditch (5 Sim. 286); Langley v. Langley (10 Sim. 345; 2 Dan. Ch. P. 1422; Red. Obs. 290); Attorney-General v. Carden (How. Ac. 4); Brownlow v. Chandos (Vern. & Scriv. Daly v. Kirwin (not reported); 1 Harr. Ch. P. 1422. In Bowyer v. Beamish (R. 63), the bill was to revive and answer; here merely to revive, and we have obtained all we can by the side-bar rule.

Brewster, Q.C., and Mr. Deasy, Q.C., for the defendant.—The effect of the practice contended would be to make it impossible to prevent the bill. The 64th Rule of 1843 prescribes the time within which to file a plea or demurrer, v. Blake (2 Hog. 99) was not decided on special facts of the case, but on the general principle, and it governs this case, (Red. Obs. 289). Cathcart v. Hewson (Glascock reports Boyle v. Blake. [They referred to the Rule of 1831, Eng., and contended that it has been the practice to inquire whether the revive was obtained or not before filing a

F. Fitzgerald, Q.C., in reply.

D CHANCELLOR.—My present impression is, that the order of the Master of the Rolls is right, it exhibits an anomalous condition of the law; but I must try to put a rational and reasonable construction on that practice. The subpoena is regularly in this form:—"Victoria, &c. We command you, that within eight days after the service of this writ upon you, exclusive of the day of such service, and laying all matters and excuses aside, you do cause an appearance to be entered for you in our High Court of Chancery in Ireland, to a bill of revivor filed against you in our said court by A. B., and shew cause, if any you can, wherefore a cause lately depending in our said Court of Chancery, between C. D., plaintiff, and others defendants, and the proceedings thereon had should not be revived by the said C. D. against you, the said," &c. Now, it is argued, that meaning is, that the appearance must be entered, and the cause shewn, within eight days. I must doubt if that be the true construction. The order to revive is in the following terms:—

"Whereas Mr. G. F., solicitor for the plaintiff, this day informed the Court that the cause formerly depending in this Court, abated by the death of defendant, and thereupon the plaintiff exhibited his bill of revivor in this cause, and that appearance been entered thereto for the defendant, It is ordered by the Court, that the said cause be revived, and that the same and all proceedings therein had do stand in the same plight and condition as the same were in at the time of the death of the said," &c.

Applying to the construction of this document, the passage in Lord Redesdale's Treatise and the 64th Order, it will be seen whether they cannot be reconciled, and whether, after the order to revive, the defendant is not entitled to shew that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain his bill. At the hearing of the cause, the defendant can shew that the plaintiff has no right to revive. In England the order to revive is entered, stating that the time for answering has expired, not as here, on the appearance of the defendant. I take the form from Seton's Decrees, 384, shewing that in England the order is made on a party failing in performance of what the subpoena requires him to do. In this country, it is made merely on appearance, although, according to the rules of the court, the defendant has a month to plead or demur in general. It has been argued, that that cannot mean to plead to a bill of revivor, because the rule says, "The party shall, on the expiration of such fourteen days, proceed on such plea as if the same were an answer deemed sufficient." I do not read that as if the plea then became an answer, to all intents, where a plea ought to have been put in. I cannot look upon that as overruling the first part of the sentence. I find the subpoena calling on the defendant to appear and shew cause against the revivor, and I look on the bill as being liable to be defeated by plea or demurrer.

[His Lordship deferred his final judgment, on this motion until the 12th of May.]

May 12.—LORD CHANCELLOR.—The Master of the Rolls' order in this case must be affirmed. It does appear that this plea was filed consistently with the practice of the court. The practice here is different from that in England; that is to say, the rules in England are different, and define more accurately the practice on this point. This was a plea to a bill filed in time, as a plea within the 64th General Order, which provides, that "each defendant shall be allowed one month from appearance first entered, to file any demurrer or plea to the whole bill." There is no rule in these orders respecting the rule to revive. According to the English practice, a party has eight days' time to appear, and then eight days further for pleading or demurring; and it is not until the expiration of both periods that the order to revive can be entered. The rule, as stated by Lord Redesdale (Mit. Plead. 1827, p. 77), is, that "upon a bill of revivor, the defendants must answer in eight days after appearance, and submit that the cause be revived, or shew cause to the contrary; and, in default, unless the defendant has obtained an order for further time to answer, the suit may be revived without answer, by an order made upon motion, as a matter of course." But he states in the next page what seems either inconsistent with that proposition, or to put a construction on the order to revive, which is the same put on it in one or two cases in this country—"And notwithstanding an order for revivor has been thus obtained, yet if the defendant conceives that the plaintiff is not entitled to revive the suit against him, he may take those steps which are necessary to prevent the further proceeding of the bill, and which will be noticed in treating of the different modes of defence to bills of revivor." Now, the modes of defence to a bill of revivor seem to be by plea or demurrer. In p. 201 he says, "If a bill of revivor does not shew a sufficient ground for reviving the suit, or any part of it, either by or against the person by or against whom it is brought, the defendant may, by demurrer, shew cause against the revival;" and in p. 289, "If a bill of revivor is brought without sufficient cause to revive the suit against the defendant, and this is not apparent on the bill, the defendant may plead the matter necessary to shew that the plaintiff is not entitled to revive the suit against him." I cannot read that passage in p. 78 without respect to the subsequent passage; it is quite impossible to exclude these two subsequent parts of the same treatise in considering the first. According to the present English rule, it would seem, that a plea or demurrer would be too late after the order to revive; and there is good sense in that, because by that order to revive, the cause is placed in the same state in which it was before the abatement; and if the plea or demurrer were allowed, there would be on the same record two orders inconsistent with each other. In this country there is no definite rule. Formerly the practice—both in Chancery and in the Exchequer—was that a plea or demurrer could not be put in after an order to revive; that appears from Attorney-General v. Carden (How. Eq. Pr. 5). When we come to look at the form of the documents they do not seem very intelligible, because the subpoena calls on the party to enter an appearance and shew cause: "We command you, that within eight days — you do cause an appearance to be entered for you in our High Court of Chancery in Ireland to a bill of revivor, — and shew cause if any you can, &c." And the order to revive merely states that the party appeared, but contains not a word about his not having shewn cause, though one would expect that to be entered; the only way to construe that sensibly is, that an appearance without plea or demurrer is assumed to be a submission to a revivor. However, whatever may have been the old practice, the modern practice is not the same, at least in no important case has a plea under these circumstances been set aside. In Boyle v. Blake, (2 Hog. 99,) it is treated as according to the current of practice of the court. It does appear on the documents in this cause that the question arose whether the order to revive was entered in time because it was obtained on the same day that the demurrer was filed, and was not served till afterwards, but it does not appear from the report that that was much argued, and the judgment goes on the general principle. Mr. Ball for the defendant said: "This demurrer was filed within eight days after the entry of the defendant's appearance, and pleas and demurrers have frequently been filed to bills of revivor after the order to revive has been entered." That statement of counsel was made to Sir William Mac Mahon, a very competent judge of the practice of the court, who says: "The order of revivor entitles the plaintiff to carry on the proceedings in the original cause, and he will get the benefit of them if he shall appear to be entitled to it at the hearing of the cause, but it is not in any manner conclusive as to his right to revive the suit. Nothing can be more desirable for the plaintiff if he has no right to revive them that the defence should be set up as soon as possible. The entry of an appearance cannot be any bar to a defence either by answer, plea or demurrer." It was alleged that the report was incorrect because this other ground of controversy appeared on the documents, but I cannot so treat it. It is well known that this reporter was a person in the confidence of Sir William Mac Mahon, and that his reports have in consequence much authority on points of this sort. In Catheart v. Henson, (Glas. 169; S. C. Hayes, 447,) the court recognized the judgment of Sir William Mac Mahon in Boyle v. Blake, which was there referred to as a MS., or within the recollection of counsel. So far, therefore, as any printed case of late years it seems that the entry of the order to revive does not prevent the filing of a plea or demurrer, the entry is an appearance merely. Now it is remarkable that the orders of 1834 contain an order for the rule to revive, the 16th providing, "That in all cases of bills of revivor the rule to revive may be entered immediately upon the appearance of the party being entered with the registrar, and without any attachment to warrant same." The 18th, which immediately follows, provides that each defendant should be allowed one month to file any demurrer on plea to the whole bill. It does appear from those two rules, so close to each other, that the attention of their framers must have been drawn to the power to enter the rule to revive immediately on appearance, while, by the subsequent order, they gave the defendant one month's time to plead or demur. In the new rules, the 16th rule is omitted, the 18th is retained as part of the 64th rule. It was contended that that was controlled by the subsequent part of the same rule, but I cannot accede to that argument. I had inquiry made upon the practice, but that did not throw much light on the point. I have the report of the Deputy Keeper of the Rolls, and it seems that cases of this sort are very rare; and the officer states that there is no established practice on the point. That being so, and as it appears that without overruling Boyle v. Blake, and throwing more difficulty on the defendant than he should have, I cannot disturb the Rolls Order, it must be affirmed. Perhaps it would be proper that the practice should be settled, and made more consistent by an order. I do not think it a case to give costs on either side.

Chancery Motion Book 4, p. 248.

ROLLS COURT.

IRWIN v. DE MASSEY—April, 21.

Practice—Injunction—Proceedings by creditor after decree—Costs.

Bill to administer assets, after a decree to account one of the creditors with notice of the decree, served upon the executrix; a civil bill for a debt due by the testator alleging promises by the executrix, an injunction was granted, and the creditor was directed to pay the costs of the motion.

The bill in this case was filed to administer the assets of W. H. De Massey, deceased, and a decree pronounced on the 25th of January, 1849; previous to the decree some of the creditors instituted proceedings at law in the superior courts, and others, and amongst the rest a person named Michael Kennedy proceeded by civil bill against the defendant, Mary De Massey, executrix of the deceased, and obtained decrees. From the affidavit of the defendant's solicitor it appeared that the judgment debts due by the deceased amounted to the sum of £6,000, simple contract debts, £1,500, and the assets amounted to only the sum of £1,000. On the 21st of February an application was made on behalf of the defendant to restrain such of the creditors as were proceeding at law, and an order pronounced staying all further proceedings as to the parties then proceeding in the superior courts against Mary De Massey, the executrix, with liberty to them to come in and prove under the decree to account their demands and costs properly incurred, and no rule was pronounced on said motion as to Michael Kennedy and the other creditors who had obtained civil bill decrees before the said decree to account was pronounced. The civil bill decrees having been subsequently reversed on appeal at the Spring Assizes for the County of Limerick, said Michael Kennedy, on the 13th of March, 1849, had a second civil bill served for the same demand, varying from the former one by laying a promise to pay by the executrix. The affidavit of the defendant's solicitor stated that Michael Kennedy and his solicitor had full notice of the decree to account, and of the said order restraining the other creditors from proceeding.

Mr. Hughes, Q. C., on behalf of the executrix, now moved that an injunction might issue to restrain Michael Kennedy, his solicitors, attorneys and agents from proceeding at law against the defendant, and that his solicitor being at liberty to file a general charge for his several clients under the decree to account in this cause might be restrained from instituting further proceedings against the defendant as such executrix of the said W. H. De Massey.

Mr. R. Ferguson and Sir Colman O'Loughlin, contra, cited Lord v. Wormleighton, (Jac. 148,) Jones v. Brain, (2 You. & C. Ch. 170,) Haywood v. Constable, (2 You. & C. Ex. 143.) Even though the creditor have notice of the decree he is entitled to his costs including those of the motion, and though the Court in some instances refuses the creditor his costs, yet there is not any case in which the costs have been given against him. Pepper v. Foster, (6 Ir. Eq. R. 384,) Egan v. Baldwin, (1 Hog. 195,) Bookless v. Crumack, P. Cooper, 141.

"Let an injunction issue in this case, to restrain the said Michael Kennedy, his solicitors, attorneys, and agents, from further proceeding at law against the petitioner; and it appearing to the Court that the said Michael Kennedy, and his solicitor, Mr. J. Delmege, had notice of the decree to account in this cause before he served the civil bill of the 13th day of March last, let the said M. Kennedy pay to the petitioner the costs of this application, and let it be referred to the Master to tax same, &c., and let the said J. Delmege be at liberty to file a general charge for his several clients under the decree to account in this cause, and be restrained from instituting further proceedings against the petitioner, as such executrix of said W. H. De Massey, deceased."

KELSON AND WIFE v. LEWIS—May 15.

Practice—Publication—Notice of motion to respite.

Publication should not be passed where notice of motion has been served to respite same, and the opposite party will not be delayed thereby.

The facts of this case are stated ante p. 226.

Mr. Hobart, for the plaintiffs, now moved that publication should be respited from the 7th day of May to the 21st—the plaintiff undertaking to set down the cause for hearing in the Lord Chancellor's list, on the first day of Trinity Term.

Mr. Dobbs contra.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—It is the practice in the Exchequer, and in this court, to respite publication when the opposite party will not be delayed. Where a notice is served for that purpose the other party proceeds at his peril; and the court expects that no proceedings will be taken after the service of the notice, if the case is proper for discussion, and no delay is caused thereby. I will respite publication, and will not give the costs of this motion to the defendant, as the examiner cautioned his solicitor not to pass publication.

"It appearing to the court that the defendant's solicitor, after the service of the plaintiffs' notice to respite publication of the depositions of witnesses in this cause on them, insisted on the examiner of this court passing publication of said depositions, although informed by the examiner that he ought not to require such publication to pass, until the pending motion should be decided. It is ordered by the Right Hon. the Master of the Rolls, that the plaintiffs be, and they are hereby at liberty to examine witnesses in this cause, notwithstanding publication having passed—the plaintiffs hereby undertaking to close such examination before the second day of next Trinity Term, and to set down this cause for hearing on the second day of next term; and it is further ordered, that the defendants be, and they are hereby at liberty to cross-examine such witnesses, and it is further ordered that the parties do abide their own costs of this motion.*

Practice—Costs—Transferring money by Town Council to Court of Chancery, to the credit of lunatic.

Mr. W. C. Dobbs moved that the purchase-money lodged in this Court, pursuant to the provisions of 69 sec. of the 8 Vic. c. 18,† be paid into

* In order to avoid misapprehension, it is right to mention that the observations of his Honor, reported ante page 226, were made with reference to the particular circumstances of the case, and are not to be considered as laying down the general rule, that in every case in which a notice to respite publication has been served, proceedings should be stayed until the motion is heard. By reference to the report of the motion as above, it will be seen that it is only in cases where the opposite party will not be delayed, that publication should not pass pending a motion to respite.

† The 69th section enacts, that "If the purchase or compensation which shall be payable in respect of any lands or any interest therein, purchased or taken by the promoters of the undertaking from any corporation, tenant for life, or in tail, married woman served in her own right or entitled to dower, guardian, committee of lunatic or idiot, trustee, executor or administrator, or person having a partial or qualified interest only in such lands, and not entitled to sell or convey the same, except under the provisions of this act or the special act, or the compensation to be paid for any permanent damage to any such lands, amount to or exceed the sum of two hundred pounds, the same shall be paid into the bank, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-general of the Court of Chancery in England, if the same relate to lands in England and Wales, or the Accountant-general of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, if the same relate to lands in Ireland, to be placed to the account there of such accountant-general, ex parte the promoters of the undertaking, (describing them by their proper name,) in the matter of the special act, (citing it,) pursuant to the method prescribed by any act for the time being, in force for regulating moneys paid into the said Courts, and such moneys shall remain so deposited, until the same be applied to some one of the following purposes: that is to say,

"In the purchase or redemption of the land tax, or the discharge of any debt or incumbrance affecting the land in respect of which such money shall have been paid, or affecting other lands settled therewith to the same or to the like use, trusts, or purposes.

"If such money shall be paid in respect of any buildings the Court of Chancery, as the person entitled to it at the time of the purchase by the Railway Company, had since been found a lunatic, incapable of managing his affairs. He was a lunatic at the time of the purchase. Prior to the purchase his father devised the property from him, which devise was, subsequently to the purchase, declared invalid, and the lunatic became entitled as heir at law.

Mr. Meade, contra.—The committee of the lunatic has no right to get the money out of Court during the life of the lunatic. This is an application to transfer the fund to the Court of Chancery, where it will be administered without reference to the provisions of the act which authorizes this court alone to deal with it. The lunatic can acquire no greater title now than he had at the time of the purchase; if not entitled then he cannot become so during the continuance of the lunacy. [On the question of costs he cited Ex parte Tetley and another v. the Great North of England R. Co., (4 Rail. Ca. 55); Ex parte Thornton in re the Midland Counties Railway, (17 Law Jour. 167.)]

Mr. Dobbs, in reply.—The argument on the other side would go to deprive us of the reception of the money in any event; it could never have been intended that the property of a lunatic should be administered in this court. In this case there is a party absolutely entitled to this fund, for whom there are persons in existence capable of performing the necessary trusts, to whom this court will pay it. As to the costs we are entitled to them under the provisions of the 80th* sec. of the 8 Vic. c. 18. The cases cited on the other side do not apply, they were not applications under the provisions of this act.

* The 80th section enacts, That all moneys deposited in the bank under the provisions of this or the special act or an act incorporated therewith, except where such moneys shall have been so deposited by reason of the wilful refusal of any party entitled thereto to receive the same, or to convey or release the land in respect whereof the same shall be payable, or by reason of the wilful neglect of any party to make out a good title to the land required, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland to order the costs of the following matters, including therein all reasonable charges and expenses incident thereto, to be paid by the promoters to the undertaking, (that is to say) the costs of the purchase, or the taking of the lands, or which shall have been incurred in consequence thereof other than such costs as are herein otherwise provided for, and the costs of the investment of such moneys in Government or real securities, and of the re-investment thereof in the purchase of other lands, and also the costs of obtaining the proper orders for any of the purposes aforesaid, and of the orders for payment of the dividends and interest of the securities upon which such moneys shall be invested, and of all proceedings relating thereto, except such as are occasioned by litigation between adverse claimants; provided always, that the costs of one application only for re-investment in land shall be allowed, unless it shall appear to the Court of Chancery in England or to the Court of Exchequer in Ireland that it is for the benefit of the parties interested in the said moneys that the same should be invested in the purchase of lands, in different sums and at different times, in which case it shall be lawful for the Court, if it think fit, to order the costs of any such investments to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking.

of court, and, putting an end to the matter, the order was to pay it into the Court of Chancery to the credit of the lunatic matter, and the company will be liable to no further costs. I can scarcely think that the Legislature intended that this court should interfere with the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor as to the property which the lunatic would be otherwise entitled to.

* Let the sum of £2,501 16s. 5d. be transferred to the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to be placed to the credit of the matter of Robert Turnley, a lunatic, and let the Town Council pay to the petitioner the costs of the petition and proceedings thereon, and of this motion, and the transferring of said stock, &c."

BENNETT v. ANDERSON.—Jan. 29.

Policy of Assurance—Proposal and Declaration—Fraudulent Concealment, or Untrue Allegation—Materiality of Answer not a question for the Jury—Mis-direction.

Assumpsit on three several policies of assurance on life; each of them contained a provision, declaring that it should be void "if anything stated by the assured, either in the declaration or attestation therein before mentioned to have been made by him, should not be true." The proposal for insurance contained the following particular:—"Has the party's life been accepted or refused at any other office, and if accepted, was it at the usual premium, or with what addition?" The answer returned by the assured was, "Asylum and National Office, at the usual premium." The following agreement appeared at the foot of the proposal, and was signed by the assured:—"I hereby agree that the proposal mentioned in the above policy shall form the basis of the contract between the assured and the company; and if there be any fraudulent concealment or untrue allegation contained therein, all money which shall have been paid on account of this insurance shall become forfeited, and the policy void." The defendant proved at the trial that the assured had proposed the same party's life for insurance at two other offices, previous to effecting the insurance with the defendant's Company, and that his proposal was rejected. The Judge, in summing up, stated to the jury, that it was for them to say whether there had been a concealment by the assured of any circumstance which it was material for the Company to know.

Held, that this was a misdirection, for that the assured had contracted with the defendant's Company that the several matters contained in the proposal should be answered truly, and, consequently, that the question, whether an answer given was more or less material, was not open to him.

Assumpsit by the plaintiff, as administrator of Humphrey Palmer, deceased, against the defendant, sued as one of the directors of the United Kingdom Life Assurance Company, on three policies of assurance on the life of the deceased, amounting to £1200, dated respectively the 2nd of September, 1840. Each of the policies contained the following recital:—"Whereas H. Palmer is desirous of making an insurance upon his own life, and has declared that he, the said H. Palmer, did not exceed the age of 84 years on the 22nd of August, 1840, has had the small-pox, has not had the gout, has not suffered a spitting of blood, and is not affected with any disorder which tends to shorten life, and that he has led and continues to lead a temperate life." One of the terms of the policies was, that they should be void "if anything stated by the assured, either in the declaration or attestation thereinbefore mentioned to have been made by him, should not be true." The proposal for insurance contained particulars to be filled up, signed, and witnessed; and one of these particulars was as follows:—"Has the party's life been accepted or refused at any other office, and if accepted, was it at the usual premium, or with what addition?" The answer returned to this question was, "Asylum and National Office, at the usual premium."

The plaintiff was the party who proposed the life for insurance, and the following agreement, appearing at the foot of the proposal, was signed by him:—"I hereby agree that the proposal mentioned in the above policy shall form the basis of the contract between the assured and the company; and if there be any fraudulent concealment or untrue allegation contained therein, all money which shall have been paid on account of this insurance shall become forfeited, and the policy void."

The declaration set forth the three policies and conditions of assurance annexed, and averred, in the usual manner, that all the conditions of the policies had been complied with.

The declaration also contained the money-counts, and the defendant pleaded the general issue.

On the trial of the cause before the Lord Chief Justice, at the sittings after Michaelmas Term, 1848, it appeared from the defendant's evidence, that the plaintiff, previous to effecting the insurance with the defendant's company, had proposed H. Palmer's life for insurance at two other offices, and that his proposal was rejected by them. The defendant's counsel thereupon submitted that this was a fact which should have been communicated to the defendant's company by the plaintiff, when answering the particulars, and that the not doing so amounted to a fraudulent concealment on his part, and rendered the policy void.

The Lord Chief Justice left it to the jury to say whether there had been a concealment of any circumstance which it was material for the company to know. The jury found, that there was no concealment of any material circumstance, and gave their verdict for the plaintiff, for the amount of the sum insured.

On a former day in this term,

Mr. Martley, Q.C., moved for and obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection of the Lord Chief Justice, and that the verdict was against law and against evidence.

Mr. Brewster, Q.C., (with him Mr. Fitzgerald, Q.C.,) now shewed cause. The question is, whether the declaration is so incorporated with the policy as to make it matter of warranty. The present case is distinguishable from Scanlan v. Seale, (6 I. L. Rep. 867,) and from Geoch v. Ingall, (14 M. & W. 95;) for in these cases the declaration, being distinctly referred to, was considered as embodied in the policy, and to have thereby become a part of it, and, consequently, matter of warranty; but in the present case the policy does not refer to any instrument, and to import into a contract a document which is not referred to, is a violation of the statute of frauds, and contrary to the general principles of the law. Regarding the declaration as matter of representation, the question of materiality was for the jury.

Mr. Martley, Q.C., and Mr. George, Q.C. for the defendant.—The question is, whether there is a sufficient reference in the policy to a declaration, so as to enable the defendant to give in evidence what that declaration is. The policy is only signed by one of the parties, and we are entitled to read the words in the policy, "has declared," as saying that Palmer "has made a declaration." The principle established in Scanlan v. Seale, is, that if the document is referred to, it forms part of the policy, and we submit there is enough to identify the declaration with the policy. It was material that the defendant should have known that the insured was rejected by another office six weeks before he applied to be insured in the defendant's office.

Mr. Fitzgibbon, Q.C., in reply.—The policy commences by declaring that H. Palmer did not exceed the age of thirty-four years—has had the small-pox, has not had the gout, &c. Here is a statement of facts, which, if true, would make Palmer's life an insurable one, and all the other questions are put with the view of testing the accuracy of the former answers. What is intended to be made warranty is extracted from the statement or declaration, and it is only reasonable and just the company to stipulate that those matters which go to make an insurable life should be made matter of warranty, but it would be unreasonable for them to require that matters no way affecting this question should also be made warranty. The policy says, if any of the allegations are not true, it is to be void; but the declaration has the words fraudulent concealment, which is a question for the jury. The fallacy at the other side is in supposing that the attestation in the policy means a proper attestation, and not an act. We contend that the policy refers to a verbal statement, and not to the written statement and declaration. In Scanlan v. Seale, there was an express reference to a written declaration; and in Geoch v. Ingall, the Judge narrowed the question too much.

BLACKBURN, C.J.—We are of opinion, that I was wrong in leaving the question of materiality to the jury. The verdict, therefore, which was anything but satisfactory, must be set aside without costs, and without costs of this motion. It is plain, whether the written declaration be incorporated in the policy or not, there was a conditional stipulation on the part of the company, that the various matters contained in the proposal should form the basis of the contract between the assured and the company, and both parties contracted that those several matters should be answered truly.

CRAMPTON, J.—I am of opinion, unless we overrule Scanlan v. Seale, followed by Geoch v. Ingall, we must hold, that the written declaration is incorporated in the policy, and is thereby made matter of warranty, and not of representation.

PERRIE, J.—I do not wish to give a decided opinion as to the meaning of the words in the policy; it involves the true construction of the instruments, how far the one refers to the other, but having regard to the terms of the proposal, and the agreement at the foot of it, I take them, as in every other contract would be implied, as containing this provision, namely, that I have given these answers upon the terms, that they shall form the basis of the contract between the assured and the company; and if there be contained therein any fraudulent concealment, or untrue allegation, I shall have no right of action. I do not think it is open to the party afterwards to say, that the answer given is more or less material. In my opinion, he bound himself to answer truly.

MOORE, J.—I do not desire to express any opinion, as to whether this declaration is incorporated in the policy or not; if it be incorporated, it amounts to warranty. My impression is, that it is not. In both the cases which have been referred to, there was a clear reference in the policy to the declaration.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

April 31, and May 4.

BRADY v. ROTHERHAM.

Practice—Lodgment of Money in Court before Declaration—Motion to Change Venue—Undertaking to give Material Evidence.

Proof of the ordinary rule to lodge money in court, in discharge of the action, before declaration filed, satisfies an undertaking to give material evidence in the original venue.

This was an action of trover, which had been tried before the Lord Chief Baron at the sittings after Hilary Term, 1849. After the service of the writ, and before the filing of the declaration, the defendant lodged money in court, in discharge of the action, under the 34th Gen. R. (Yeo. 54).

The defendant having moved, after the filing of the declaration, to change the venue on the common affidavit, the plaintiff retained the venue, upon the usual undertaking to give material evidence in the county where the venue was laid (the county of the city of Dublin.) At the trial, the only evidence on the part of the plaintiff, arising within the venue, was the defendant's rule to lodge money, and certificate of the officer of the lodgment of same. The defendant's counsel called for a nonsuit, on the ground that plaintiff had not satisfied his undertaking; and the Chief Baron having given liberty to move, and a verdict having been given for the plaintiff,

Mr. McDonough, Q.C., with Mr. Batterley,

, now moved, pursuant to the leave reserved. lodgment of the money can be no acknowledgment of a cause of action not disclosed, and consequently is not material evidence. The 52nd rule, (Yeo. 77,) provides, that upon process served for the payment of any debt, amount of the debt shall be endorsed.* That is compulsory, Ryley v. Boissimas, (1 Dowl. 100.) Curwin v. Mosley, (1 Dowl. 432;) but does not apply to the action of trover.† [Pennafather, I understand the rule to be, that some evidence material to the issue, and arising in the case where the venue is laid, must be given.] I should inflict great hardship upon a defendant, from the form of the process, was led to submit himself called upon to defend an action which he was willing to admit to the extent of his lodgment. If he were subsequently called upon to defend a different character, to which he may have a full defence, and that his admission of the one should be used as an admission of the latter. See v. Towers, (2 Y. Rep. 275;) Santler v. B., (2 Sir W. BL 1050;) Beerth v. Bell, (1 C. 158;) Kingham v. Robins, (5 M. & W. 158;) Stevenson v. Mayor and Burgesses of Ber- (1 Q. B. 158;) O'Brien v. Hamilton, (6 Law 2. 127.)

r. Fitzgibbon, Q.C., with Mr. R. Armstrong, &c.—The lodgment admits the property, and conversion of that property, and a cause of action to the extent of the money lodged. It is stated that evidence of the rule is sufficient to in the undertaking. [Pennafather, B.—The question is, whether the lodgment being before the action makes any difference.] The lodgment does not make an admission of whatever cause of action the plaintiff may subsequently disclose in his defence. If the defendant is mistaken—in the nature of the action brought against him, and that he had intended to meet by the lodgment,—it is an inherent jurisdiction in the Court to set him, by obliging the plaintiff not to give evidence in evidence. In the action stated in the case, the defendant has taken no steps to free himself from the difficulty which exists, he is now bound by his acquiescence. See v. Brown, (3 C. B. 871;) Clerk v. Dunsford, (3 C. 724.)

Cur. ad vult.

See 4. PICOT, C.B.—In this case we have considered all the authorities, and think it right to lay down some general rule on this subject. We in the Court of Exchequer, all ordinary process is in whatever may be the real cause of action. The 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 46, enacts, "That it shall be lawful for the defendant in all personal actions (except such as for assault and battery, false imprisonment, libel, or malicious arrest or prosecution, criminal conversation or debauching of the plaintiff's daughter or servant,) to give evidence of any of the said superior courts where such action was tried, or a judge of any of the said superior courts, to set aside a sum of money by way of compensation or satisfaction, in such manner, and under such regulations as to the payment of costs and the form of pleading, as the said court, or such eight or more of them as aforesaid, shall, by rules or orders by them to be from time to time made, order and direct.

are of opinion, the defendant's rule is material evidence, whether obtained before or after declaration filed.

Motion refused, with Costs.

DOR, LESSEE OF BAKER AND WHITE, v. HARTE.

Ejectment—Demand of Possession.

Upon the expiration of a lease for lives which contained the following covenant:—"That the lessor his heirs, or assigns, upon the death or demise of the before named four lives, or cestui que vies, should and would add and insert to the time or term of that demise, the natural life of such person as should be nominated by the said lessee, his heirs and assigns, in the place and stead of the said four lives, during which the said estate should be continued in consideration that the said lessee, his heirs or assigns, should lay out and expend in building a dwelling-house upon the said premises, the sum of £200, within the period of four years next ensuing," an ejectment was brought, and the Judge directed a verdict for the plaintiff. No evidence of the fulfilment of the condition having been given, and no demand of possession proved, subsequently to the trial, evidence of a substituted contract which was performed was discovered, Held—That a new trial should be granted, for the purpose of submitting the new evidence to the jury.

Held, also, that if the original contract, or the substituted one, were performed by the defendant, the lessor of the plaintiff could not sustain the ejectment without a demand of possession.

Ejectment on the title. At the trial before the Lord Chief Baron, at the Summer Assizes of 1848, it appeared, that by lease bearing date the 7th of March, 1803, the lands, for the recovery of which the ejectment was brought, were demised to one John Harte, for four lives therein mentioned, the last of which expired in February, 1848. The lease contained the following covenant:—"That the lessor, his heirs or assigns, upon the death or demise of the before named four lives or cestui que vies, should and would add and insert to the time or term of that demise, the natural life of such person as should be nominated by the lessee, his heirs or assigns, in the place and stead of the said four lives, during which the said estate should be continued, in consideration that the said lessee, his heirs or assigns, should lay out and expend in building a dwelling-house upon the said premises, the sum of £200, within the period of four years next ensuing."

The plaintiff having proved his case, and it appearing that the dwelling-house had not been built, but that some money had been expended in the planting of trees, counsel for the defendant called for a non-suit, on the ground that in this case a demand of possession was necessary, and none had been proved. The Judge directed a verdict for the plaintiff.

Subsequently to the trial, a lease had been found, dated February 22, 1830, by which one Thomas White, who was entitled to the reversion in the premises in remainder, on the death of Richard White, demised a portion of the premises to John Harte, reciting the original lease and the aforesaid covenant, and that it had been agreed upon between the parties that certain trees should be planted instead of the building originally stipulated for.

Mr. Battersby, Q. C., (Mr. Hamilton Smythe with him) now moved, on behalf of the defendant, that the verdict should be changed into a verdict for the defendant, or a non-suit entered. A tenant under a lease for lives, with a covenant for the addition of a new life, is not a trespasser upon the expiration of the lives, but is entitled to a demand of possession. Such a tenant stands somewhat in the position of a purchaser, who, when he enters into possession before the completion of the purchase, is held to be a tenant at will, and there must be a demand of possession to determine the will. In the case of Lessee Walker v. Byrne (3 L. L. Rec. N. S. 68), it was held, that upon the expiration of a lease for lives, which contained a clause for perpetual renewal, a demand of possession must be made to sustain the ejectment. So in the case of Doe dem. Newby v. Jackson (1 B. & C. 448), where an agreement was made between A. and B. that the former should sell certain premises to B. if it turned out that he had a title to them, and that B. should have the possession from the date of the agreement, a demand of possession was held necessary to sustain an ejectment. [Richards, B.—A covenant to renew is not quite the same as an agreement, because the latter binds both parties, there being mutuality between them; but the case of a covenant is somewhat different.] Right dem. Lewis and others v. Beard (13 East. 210) is to the same effect. Counsel also cited Doe dem. Winterscale v. Newcomen (1 Jones Ex. Rep. 496, 4 L. R., N. S. p. 100.)

PIGOT, C. B.—In the present case the consideration is one which goes to the whole contract, and therefore the condition must be performed before any contract legally arises.)

Mr. M'Donough, Q. C., (Mr. Plunket, Q. C. with him,) for plaintiff.—There was no evidence at the trial of a release, disposition, or waiver of the conditions, and no evidence given of its performance, this is merely a qualified covenant for a renewal. In Lessee Pilkington v. Talbot, (5 L. Rec. N. S. 11,) where an under-tenant holding under a toties quoties covenant to renew, subject to forfeiture or default, had neglected to renew, he was held precluded from setting up the want of a demand of possession as a defence. (This case is given more fully in 1 Furlong, L. & T. 204.) The dictum of Abbot, C. J. (3 B. & A. 327,) is to the same effect.

PIGOT, C. B.—We shall set aside the verdict in this case, as we conceive it right that the instrument of February 1830, which is most material in this case, should be subjected to the investigation of a jury; the costs of the last trial to abide the event. It is unnecessary to enlarge on the points discussed in argument. We are of opinion that the rule laid down—in the cases cited by the defendant's counsel—is a correct one, in proceeding against a lessee for lives, after the expiration of a lease, and where there is a covenant for renewal, as here. Where there is a distinct contract, unannulled by any misconduct on the part of the tenant, and no condition unperformed then on the dropping of the life, the tenure is referable to the contract, and a demand of possession becomes necessary. We are likewise of opinion that if there be a contract, the terms of which are unperformed, the tenant cannot be held to continue in possession under the contract, and, therefore, a demand of possession is unnecessary. In this view we are of opinion that a demand of possession is necessary, if the jury are satisfied that the condition was fulfilled. Now, if the instrument, bearing date in 1830, be genuine, and, as recited, another condition (which has been fulfilled,) was substituted for the original one, the defendant would be entitled to have the verdict entered for him.

LUSCOMBE v. BLAKE—May 3.

Interpleader—Costs of Sheriff.

Where, after the sheriff has obtained the common interpleader rule, the claimant and execution creditor enter into a compromise whereby the former abandons a portion of his claim, the claimant was directed to pay the sheriff all the costs incurred.

Mr. Blackburne having obtained the common interpleader rule on behalf of the High Sheriff of Meath, the claimant and execution creditor subsequently compromised the matter out of court.

On the day appointed by the rule for the parties to interplead, Mr. Blackburne applied for the costs of the sheriff.

Mr. Richards for the execution creditor.

Mr. Tuthill, for the claimant, relied on Bell v. Bruen (Bl. D. & O. 283.)

The following order was made:—

"That the said J. C. E. (the claimant) do pay to the said sheriff the costs of the said order of the 24th of April (the rule to interplead), and of this motion, when taxed, &c., without further motion."

HOUSE OF LORDS.

O'BRIEN v. THE QUEEN, M'MANUS v. THE QUEEN.

Held. That the commission being directed, first to three judges by name, and, subsequently to the same judges and others therein mentioned, was not thereby rendered ambiguous.

That the plaintiff in error was not entitled to a copy of the indictment, or a list of the witnesses, or of the jury ten days before the trial, because the 36 Geo. 3, c. 7, did not extend to Ireland, nor was it extended by 57 Geo. 3, c. 6, nor by 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12.

That those acts which were treason in England by the statute of Edw. 3, were made treason in Ireland, if committed there.

That the allocutus, ante p. 170, was in the proper form.

The errors in this case were the same as those assigned in the court below, and reported ante pp. 169-176.

Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Q. C., Mr. Napier, Q. C., Sir Coleman O'Loughlin, for Mr. Smith O'Brien.

Mr. Segur, Mr. O'Callaghan, and Mr. M'Mahon for Mr. M'Manus.

The Attorney-general for England, the Attorney-general for Ireland, Mr. Welsby, and Mr. Peacock for the Crown.

The case was argued by Sir F. Kelly, Mr. Napier, Mr. Segur, and Mr. O'Callaghan for the plaintiffs in error; at the conclusion of their arguments, which were similar to those used in the court below, and reported ante p. 171. The counsel for the Crown were not called on, the learned judges having intimated their opinion, that their decision was formed, and which was delivered by the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas.

WILDE, C. J.—I am authorized by the learned judges to report their unanimous opinion that the errors assigned have not been maintained by the arguments urged at your Lordships' bar.

As to the first objection, the judges are of opinion that the allegation upon the record that the three judges who executed the commission in relation to the trials of the several plaintiffs in error, were nominated and appointed to execute that commission, is an affirmative allegation of their authority to perform that duty, and that it is in no respect rendered uncertain or ambiguous by the subsequent statement that the commission by which they were so authorized nominated and appointed, was directed to them and others.

The second objection involves two points: first, whether the plaintiffs in error in respect of the sixth count of the indictment were entitled to have a copy of the indictment, a list of the witnesses, and a list of the jury ten days before the trial under the provisions of the statute of Wm. 3, and the statute of Anne. Secondly, whether, if they were so entitled, the objection founded upon the non-compliance with the provisions of these statutes was matter properly urged by plea.

The judges are of opinion that the plaintiffs in error were not entitled to have delivered to them the list and copies referred to in the error assigned in that respect, and therefore it becomes unnecessary to consider whether the objection was properly urged by plea.

The right of the plaintiffs in error to be furnished with the copy of the indictment and the lists referred to, has been endeavoured to be sustained by the counsel for the plaintiffs in error at the bar upon two grounds: first, upon the ground that the statute of the 36 Geo. 3, c. 7 extended to Ireland; secondly, or that, if that statute did not originally extend to Ireland, it was afterwards so extended by the operation of the 57th Geo. 3, c. 6, and by the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12.

The Judges are of opinion that neither of these grounds can be supported.

The statute of the 36 Geo. 3, passed before the Union, and did not bind Ireland; and, therefore, if it has any application to Ireland, it must be by the effect of 57 Geo. 3, or 11 and 12 Vic.

The 1st section of 36 Geo. 3, c. 7, enacted, that certain acts during the life of his Majesty, Geo. 3, and until the end of the next session of Parliament after a demise of the Crown, should be deemed treason; and the 1st section of the 57 Geo. 3, c. 6, made these provisions perpetual, but did not extend the operation of the statute of the 36 Geo. 3 to Ireland.

The 4th section of 57 Geo. 3, cap. 6, has been principally relied upon, which expressly gives the benefit of the 7 and 8 W. 3, and the 7 Anne, cap. 21, to persons accused of any treason made or declared by that act of the 57 Geo. 3; and it is enough to say that the charge in the sixth count is not for any treason made or declared by that statute.

With regard to the statute of the 11 and 12 Vic., the only effect of that statute was to extend to Ireland certain of the provisions of the 36 Geo. 3, made perpetual by the 57 Geo. 3, and the 4th sec. of the 57 Geo. 3, which has been relied upon, is limited to treason, made or declared by that act; and the treason which is the subject of the sixth count was not one of them, and to which, therefore, it does not apply.

As to the objection, that the counts charging the levying of war in Ireland do not charge an offence which in point of law amounts to treason, this objection depends upon the construction of the statute of Henry 7, passing by the name of Poyning's Law.

By that statute, we think that those acts which were treason in England by the statute of Edward 3, were made treason in Ireland, if committed there; and we cannot deem it necessary to say more upon the subject, than that the terms of the statute admit of no doubt.

As to the objection to the allocutus, we think it is in the proper form.

All that the prisoner in that stage of the proceedings can properly be asked, is, what has he to say why judgment should not be pronounced; and as to precedents which go further, we deem the matter beyond the question stated, to be surplusage.

The only remaining error assigned refers to the challenge of the jury. That error has not been urged at your Lordships' bar, and we think it was very properly abandoned, as the question is not open to any doubt, the language of the statute of 9 Geo. 4 being clear and unambiguous.

The Judges have not thought it necessary to trouble your Lordships with a more detailed statement of their reasons for the opinions they entertain, as the general assignments of error have been so fully, and ably, and satisfactorily discussed by the learned Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland, and which arguments are before your Lordships.

The Lord Chancellor, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Brougham and Lord Campbell severally expressed their entire concurrence in the opinion of the Judges, and affirmed accordingly the judgment of the court below.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

BANKRUPTCY.—May, 23.

Ex parte DICKSON, in re VOGAN.

Mortgage—Practice.

Where the mortgaged premises were clearly insufficient for payment of the debt, on the assignees submitting, they were ordered to convey the equity of redemption to the mortgagee, in consideration of a release from the debt.

The Commissioner, by memorandum of the 4th of February, 1849, had adjudged that the petitioner, Benjamin Dickson, had a good security by equitable mortgage on the estates of the bankrupt, for the sum of £5089 15s. The petitioner went into possession of the mortgaged premises.

By memorandum of the 17th of January, 1849, the Commissioner ascertained to be due, on foot of the mortgage, up to the 1st of November, 1848, £6521 7s. 6d. By memorandum of the 26th of January, 1849, the Commissioner directed the assignee to inquire and state upon affidavit the nature and value of the mortgaged premises, and what sum the same would be likely to realize, if sold by auction, and whether sufficient for payment of the said sum of £6521 7s. 6d.

The value was estimated at £3310. The yearly profit fell short of the interest money, and judgment in ejectment for non-payment of rent due before the petitioner went into possession had been obtained against two of the lots composing the mortgaged premises. The premises had been offered for sale by the bankrupt, but no bidders offered, though the interest was then more valuable. The mortgagee had incurred considerable costs in proving his claims.

Mr. Armstrong, Q.C., for the mortgagee, the petitioner, moved that Bernard Mooney, the assignee, might be ordered to join as a party to, and execute a conveyance of, the equity of redemption of the mortgaged premises, in consideration of the value thereof, and of the petitioner releasing the assignee and the estate of the bankrupt. This application is in order to avoid further costs, the mortgagee having already incurred a considerable amount.

Mr. Creighton, for the assignees, submitted to act as the Court should direct, in order to avoid further costs.

LOED CHANCELLOR.—I think it desirable to save further expense. Be it so.

ROLLS COURT.

GARDINER v. BLESSINGTON.

BYRNE, Petitioner, GARDINER, Respondent.
April 17 & 19.

Receiver—Petition—Allowance for maintenance.
The Court refused to appoint a Receiver, on the petition of a judgment creditor, over an allowance directed by the Court to be paid to the inheritor for maintenance.

By order bearing date the 26th day of June, 1844, and made in the cause of Gardiner v. Blessington, it was ordered that the sum of £800 per annum should be allowed to the plaintiff, C. J. Gardiner, for his maintenance, and that same should be paid by the receiver over the lands in the Co. Tyrone, and be in addition to the use of the house at Mountjoy Forest, and the part of the demesne then in the occupation of the plaintiff.

That part of the house and demesne having been subsequently sold, pursuant to the decree in the cause, on the 19th of July, 1847, an order was made, that an allowance of £700 per annum, to commence from the 1st of January then past, be made to the said C. J. Gardiner for his support and maintenance, out of the rents of the Tyrone estates, in lieu of the mansion house and that part of the demesne of Mountjoy Forest hitherto in his possession, and lately sold under the decree in the cause.

In Easter Term, 1848, the petitioner, Lawrence Byrne, obtained a judgment against the said C. J. Gardiner, for the sum of £132 7s. 9d.

On the 16th of June, 1848, a writ of f. f. issued on said judgment, directed to the sheriff of Tyrone, and a return of nulla bona was made thereto. Byrne then presented a petition for a receiver over this sum of £700 per annum, and having obtained the usual notice order, that a receiver would be appointed, unless cause shewn, within ten days.

Mr. Rolleston, Q.C., now shewed cause, and contended that this allowance was not such an annuity or rent-charge as was contemplated by the sheriff's act, or 3 & 4 Vic. cap. 105, and the Court had no authority to appoint a receiver over it.

Mr. Hughes, Q.C., and Mr. H. Smyth, contra, cited Rochard v. Fulton, (7 I. E. R. 131.) Dillon v. Plasket, (2 Bli. N. S. 241.) Evans v. Blennerhasset, (1 I. E. R. 115.) Reilly on Receivers, page 125, 2 P. W. 211.; Harris v. Davison, (15 Sim. 128.)

Mr. Ryan, in reply, contended, that even if this allowance came within the terms of the statute, the petitioner was not entitled to the benefit of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, as the judgment was entered in Easter Term, 1848, within a year. Smith v. Hurst, (1 Coll. 705.) Casidy v. Hopkins, (10 I. E. R. 206.)

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I do not think that this sum which the receiver was directed to pay Mr. Gardiner, is an annuity or rent-charge within the meaning of the acts of Parliament—the Sheriff's act, or the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105. The Court frequently makes an allowance to an inheritor for his support, although there may not be a surplus, and I am not bound to treat that as liable to be extended at law by an elegit; nor does this case come within that part of the 21st section, which provides that the Court may appoint a receiver over property which could be made available by filing a bill. The Court of Exchequer gave a strict construction to the act of 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 55, and considered, that where a legal impediment existed to the issuing of an elegit, such as an outstanding term, a receiver ought not to be appointed, and such an application was refused, where the respondent held only an equity of redemption. This Court gave a more liberal construction, and was in the habit of appointing receivers in cases where only a temporary bar existed, which could be removed by filing a bill in aid of the execution at law; and this part of the 21st section was enacted to get rid of the difference of opinion, and put an end to the questions on which the Courts differed. But I do not think it was intended to give jurisdiction by petition, in every case in which a bill might be filed. In this case the petitioner has mistaken his remedy, for the petition should have been entitled in the cause in which the Receiver has been appointed, and prayed that he might be extended to his demand.

"No rule on said petition, without prejudice to the petitioner amending his petition, if he shall be so advised, and entitling same in the cause in which the receiver has been appointed, and applying for the extension of the receiver to this matter; and let the respondent have £5 for his costs of appearing on this motion, and let same be set off against the petitioner's demand."

R. P. H. B., lib. 28, fo. 320.

LAWLER v. LOWRY.—May, 10.

Practice—Continuing Proceedings under the Sheriff's Act.

Where a notice pursuant to the first order under the 154th General Order has been served, and before the second order has been made, the Court cannot continue the proceedings under the Sheriff's Act.

The petitioner, Lawler, had served a notice on the respondent, Maria Lowry, and on James Scott Molloy, her provisional assignee, the respondent being an insolvent. Maria Lowry had filed affidavits to shew cause against the appointment of a receiver, but died before cause shewn. All her next of kin were in America, and she had no personal representative.

Mr. Lawson, Q.C., moved to continue the proceedings against James Scott Molloy, the provisional assignee, and against the tenants of the lands, under the 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 55.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I have no power, when there was no receiver appointed to continue the proceedings. I must, therefore, refuse this motion. I cannot continue proceedings that never existed. You must serve a scire facias on the tenants.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.—SITTINGS AFTER HILARY TERM.

LEVINGE v. DE MONTMORENCY.

Practice—Staying proceedings—Costs of parties in stayed cause—Loftie v. Forbes (2 I. Eq. Rep. 443,) considered—Tangney v. Holmes, (1 Ir. Jur. 78, 125, 163,) dissented from.

Where a creditor's suit, instituted in the Court of Chancery, has been stayed by reason of a prior decree to account obtained in this Court, in a cause of a similar frame and between the same parties, and the plaintiff in the stayed cause had paid the costs of one of the defendants, the Court will not order the receiver in the first cause to pay the plaintiff in the stayed cause the amount of the costs so paid, to the prejudice of prior incumbrancers.

*In such a case, the plaintiff in the stayed cause is personally liable to the costs of prior incumbrancers, if the fund proves deficient, and pari passu creditors are only entitled to their costs in the same priority as their respective demands, but this Court will restrain the defendants from proceeding against the plaintiff in the stayed cause for their costs therein, until the fund is realised.*

The Courts of Chancery and Exchequer exercise a concurrent jurisdiction, and the rule as to the enforcement of costs under staying orders is the same, whether the suits are instituted in the same or different Courts of Equity.

This was an application made under the following circumstances:—On the 22nd of January, 1848, the usual decree was pronounced in this cause, which was a foreclosure suit, and the usual accounts directed to be taken. Eyre and Morrogh, two of the defendants in the Exchequer cause, had, subsequently to the institution of the suit in the Exchequer, but before the decree to account,—viz., on the 26th of May, 1847, filed a bill of foreclosure in the Court of Chancery against De Montmorency and others. Several of the defendants in the latter cause had appeared and answered. By an order of the 3rd of June, 1848, the Court of Exchequer restrained Messrs. Eyre and Morrogh, the plaintiffs in the Chancery cause, from proceeding, on the usual terms, that they should be at liberty to come in and prove their demand in the Exchequer cause, together with their costs necessarily incurred in the Chancery cause, with the costs of the motion, and the costs of such of the defendants in the said Chancery cause as were properly made parties thereto, in the priority of the defendants' demands respectively. By an order of the Master of the Rolls, bearing date the 1st of December, 1848, it was referred to the Master to tax the costs of the plaintiffs and defendants in the Chancery cause. Messrs. Eyre and Morrogh subsequently paid over the sum of £18 2s. 5d., being the ascertained costs of E. C. Tuthill, a defendant in both causes. The present motion was made on behalf of Messrs. Eyre and Morrogh, the plaintiffs in the stayed cause, that the receiver in the Exchequer cause should be directed to pay over to them the said sum of £18 12s. 5d., and likewise pay the several defendants in the stayed cause their respective ascertained costs in the said case; or that the restraining order might be varied, and that the several defendants in the stayed cause might be restrained from proceeding against the plaintiffs in that cause for their respective costs, and that it might be stated specifically by whom and in what manner and priority, and out of what funds the costs of the defendants in the stayed cause should be paid.

Mr. J. B. Murphy, in support of the application.—The liability of the plaintiffs in a stayed cause was lately discussed before the Master of the Rolls and the Chancellor, in the case of Tangney v. Holmes, (Ir. Jur. pp. 78, 125, 163. In p. 126, the Lord Chancellor observes, that “the proper way to consider this petition is to look at the position of the defendant, whose costs are in question, and what would have been his rights as to those costs, if the stayed cause had come to a hearing. It is plain that the order would have been that these costs should be paid by the plaintiff, who would have them over against the fund, or the plaintiff, being entitled to redeem the defendant and failing to do so, he would have been bound to pay these costs without having them over.” Again—“I do not look upon this order as simply a staying order, but substantially a decree in the stayed cause.” Here there are different classes of defendants; first, creditors, who are necessary parties; secondly, formal parties. Some of the creditors may be prior, others puisne, to the plaintiff. The latter are only entitled to get their costs in the same priority as their demand, so that it would be an injustice to the plaintiff in the stayed cause to make him personally liable. If the order were varied, by introducing the words “that the defendants in the stayed cause shall get their costs in the same priority as their demands,” all difficulty would be removed.

Mr. Vincent Scully, on same side, relied on Jackson v. Curtis, (2 Moll. 463, ibid. 466;) Croker v. Copley, (ibid. 469;) Crofts v. Poe, (8 Ir. Eq. Rep. 151,) where Pennefather, B., lays down the rule—“The costs are given against the plaintiff, as an ultimate security to the party, but are not to be enforced against him, unless it appears that there are no funds in the cause applicable to their payment, or that the plaintiff is guilty of laches in prosecuting the suit.” This is the spirit of the order we ask for, that the defendants in the stayed suit be restrained from proceeding against us until the fund proves deficient. Hall v. Hill, (5 I. Eq. R. 11,) is to the same effect.

Mr. Bennett, Q.C., for a prior mortgage creditor.—There is no prospect of the fund being sufficient; therefore, to order the receiver to pay over these costs, would be to make my client, having the first claim on the fund, provide for puisne incumbrances. In Crofts v. Poe, a final decree was pronounced, and in Loftie v. Forbes there was no suggestion of a deficient fund.

Mr. Saussé, Q.C., for another incumbrancer.

Mr. M. O'Donnell for W. De Montmorency, a formal defendant, being executor of the testator, who devised the lands charged to the principal defendant. There was only a portion of the incumbrances created by the testator, so that we are entitled to costs as against the plaintiffs in the stayed cause. [Richards, B.—He stands in the position of the original mortgagor. If the latter were alive, he could only have his costs out of the surplus fund.]

Mr. J. B. Murphy contended against the claim of Mr. O'Donnell's client, and relied on Pepper v. Foster, (10 Ir. Eq. Rep. 352;) Rutherford v. Cottenham, (8 Ir. Eq. Rep. 391; Daniel's Ch. R. vol. 2, 1297.

PENNEFATHER, B.—This is a case of considerable importance as regards the practice of this court, and the more so because it affects the Court of Chancery as having a concurrent jurisdiction. The present question arises on an order made in this court, dated June, 3, 1848, restraining the plaintiff in the Court of Chancery from proceeding with the suit instituted in that court, and was made on the ground that proceeding there was unnecessary, a decree in this court having been pronounced under which all rights could be adjudicated on. That order was obtained at the instance of the plaintiffs here, and it would appear as if they considered the funds were insufficient. It is an order made for the protection of the funds and property, made at the instance of the creditor interested in their preservation, and only made when the funds are likely to be insufficient, and therefore we cannot act as if this fund was sufficient to answer the demands of all parties. It is an application highly beneficial to all persons interested, and avoids further expense as soon as a decree is obtained in either court to answer all the purposes of the suit. Provision was made for costs which it will be necessary to vary in some respects according to the principles the court will presently advert to. The present motion is, that the costs to which the plaintiff in the Chancery cause is liable should be paid in the first instance by the receiver out of the funds collected by the receiver, or that the defendants in the Chancery cause be restrained from taking proceedings against the plaintiff in the stayed cause, on their demand for costs against him. In justice it would appear that the plaintiff in the Chancery cause, who is restrained from proceeding there by the order of this court, is entitled substantially to relief in one or other of the shapes in which he seeks it. In Loftie v. Forbes, it was stated, from the MSS. of the late Sir Michael O'Loughlin, that where both suits were instituted in the Court of Chancery, the defendants in a stayed suit would be prevented from levying their costs against the plaintiff, because the court having restrained him it would be unjust to allow the defendants to proceed against him. Is the propriety of that observation I fully concur; but, with great respect to the judges of the Court of Chancery, I would extend a similar rule to an order made by the Court of Exchequer. In a matter of this nature the courts have a co-ordinate jurisdiction, and it ought to be the object of both courts to discourage litigation. It would appear from the MSS. and to us that it does not signify in what court the order is made, and the same principles are applicable to both courts. I feel bound to say so much, approving of what fell from Sir M. O'Loughlin, and, as a necessary consequence, of the equitable jurisdiction, and if I was now adjudicating on this matter in the Court of Chancery I would hold myself bound to prevent the defendants from dismissing the bill. I have said this from the necessity of observing on the general question, where the two equity courts are acting in the same subject matter. The present motion is free from all difficulty of this sort, because all parties in the Chancery suit being also parties in this court, there can be no difficulty in making an order restraining them in such manner as we may think right to give effect to the spirit of our order, but I have said this, because cases may arise where the defendants in Chancery may not be all parties in this court. In such a case there may be a difficulty in restraining a party from dismissing a bill when he was not a party to the suit in the other court. In the present instance there are two grounds of application. Now with regard to the payment of costs by the receiver appointed by this court, we ought not to make such an order. It is resisted by a prior creditor, who alleges the funds in the receiver's hands belong to him, and we think this a valid objection. It is said on the part of the plaintiff in the Chancery suit that the effect of the restraining order here was to make him liable in the first instance to the costs of the defendants in that suit—that is not the meaning of our order. It was not our intention that the order should bear this construction; but we will introduce some words which will get rid of any ambiguity. I very much approve of the words of Sir M. O'Loughlen, that the costs shall be, as far as possible, provided for by the staying order; but, it must be remembered, that these are prospective orders, and that any order for interlocutory costs diminishes the fund distributable at the final hearing. As to the costs of prior creditors whom the plaintiff brings before the court as defendants in the Chancery cause, he is undoubtedly liable in the event of a deficient fund, because the suit in Chancery, however excusable in its inception, turns out unnecessary in the end; and, as to their costs thereon, the prior creditors, in addition to the security of the fund, are entitled to have the personal liability of the plaintiff. This is the rule laid down by this court in Crofts v. Poe, and subsequently by Sir Edward Sugden in Hall v. Hill. With regard to subsequent creditors they must get their costs in the same priority as their own demands; the costs of puisne creditors are not to be put out of their proper priority. That disposes of the different classes of creditors. Where there is a trustee; if he be a trustee for a plaintiff he is to get costs in the same priority as the plaintiff, if he be a trustee for any creditor he is to get his costs in the same priority as his cestui que trust. He is not entitled to costs as against the plaintiff personally, unless he is a personal representative set up by the plaintiff, then he is entitled to costs against the plaintiff. As to the executor, Sir W. De Montmorency, he is not entitled to get his costs out of the real estate but out of the personal estate of the original mortgagor. I have mentioned the general principles applicable by either courts of Equity to these very salutary and useful orders, and conceiving each court to have a concurrent jurisdiction have endeavoured to frame such a rule as would answer each court. Now we have all the parties before us in this court, and feel no difficulty in making the order to restrain the defendants in Chancery from dismissing the plaintiffs' bill or taking any proceeding against them for their costs.

RICHARDS, B.—I think I was right in reserving this application, which originally came before me, for the consideration of the other members of this court. I spoke on the subject to the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Lord Chief Baron, and stated it was very desirable to assimilate the practice of both courts. The Lord Chancellor had probably then before him the case in the Irish Jurist. At first I was struck with the difficulty in which an unfortunate plaintiff would be placed by a restraining order, making the plaintiff advance costs, and recover them afterwards as best he might. The costs sometimes are very heavy, and the plaintiff might have to pay more than it would be possible for him to meet, and in default of payment he might be sent to gaol. Let us see the consequences to which such a ruling would expose parties. It would impose on the plaintiff the hardship of waiting for the costs which he had advanced, until the fund was realized. We, however, consider it more just, to delay the payment of the costs until the actual fund is realized; but, in truth, the effect of our order is neither to expedite nor delay; we leave parties in precisely the same position in which they originally stood, instead of compelling an innocent plaintiff to pay costs to a party to whom he owes no debt. To decide on such a principle is not only repugnant to our notions of natural justice, but against the authority of Crofts v. Poe and Hall v. Hill, referred to in argument. It is contended for, on this motion, that not only prior incumbrances, but those that are puisne, and even parties who have no charges on the lands, are to be paid their costs by this unfortunate plaintiff out of his own pocket. This appears to me to be a monstrous proposition, and if this were the law, I for one have no hesitation in stating, that I would never be a party to staying a suit. [His Lordship referred to a note of the case of Lofie v. Forbes, from the MS. of the late Sir Michael O'Loughlen, as confirming the view taken by the Court in the present case.]

QUEEN'S BENCH.—EASTER TERM.

SMITH v. RITCHIE.—April 26.

Assumpsit—Bill of Lading—Consignee—Charter party—Evidence—Arrest—Reasonable and probable cause.

A. being the holder of a bill of lading of a certain cargo of coals, therein expressed to be deliverable to him or his assigns, brought an action against B. the captain of the vessel, for the non-delivery of the same. The goods were stated in the instrument to have been shipped by C.

Held that A. was entitled to sue in his own name, in the present form of action.

It appeared at the trial, on the cross-examination of one of the plaintiff's witnesses, that there was in existence a charter party, relating to the cargo in question, which the plaintiff omitted to produce.

Held that the bill of lading constituted in itself a complete contract, and that it lay with the defendant, if he sought to vary the terms of the same, to produce the charter party.

Held likewise, on a motion for leave to enter a suggestion under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, that notwithstanding the defendant had been arrested for more than the sum ultimately recovered, the plaintiff had reasonable and probable cause for making the arrest for the larger amount.

Assumpsit. The declaration contained one special count, which stated that the defendant was master of a certain vessel called the Harmony, and that in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, had caused to be shipped upon the said vessel a certain cargo of goods and merchandize, to wit 93 tons weight of coals, of the value of £200 to be carried by the defendant, as such master from Newport to Waterford, at and for certain freight and hire to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, to wit for the freight of 5s. 6d. for every ton of the said coals so to be carried as aforesaid, with primage and average accustomed, and in case the said cargo of coals was not discharged within four working days after the arrival of the said ship in Waterford, then the sum of £1 demurrage for every day which should elapse after the expiration of the said four working days before the discharge of the said cargo, the defendant then and there undertook and promised the plaintiff to carry the said cargo of coals and deliver to him the same (all and every the dangers and accidents of the seas, and navigation of whatever nature and kind soever excepted) within a reasonable time after the arrival of the said ship in Waterford. Averments, that no dangers of the seas, &c., prevented the defendant, and that the defendant carried the coals from Newport to Waterford, and a reasonable time after the arrival of the vessel for the delivery of the coal elapsed. Breach, that the defendant did not within such reasonable time after the arrival of the vessel, or at any time afterwards, deliver the said cargo to the plaintiff, and that the defendant within such reasonable time wrongfully sold and disposed of the said cargo, and converted the same to his own use, without the consent, and against the will of the plaintiff, and thereby incapacitated himself from performing his promise and undertaking, whereby the said cargo was wholly lost to the plaintiff.

The declaration also contained counts for money had and received, and on an account stated; the defendant pleaded the general issue, and also served a notice of set off, whereby he claimed a certain sum in respect of the freight of the same cargo.

At the trial of the cause before Jackson J., at the last Spring Assizes of the City of Waterford, it appeared that the plaintiff, who was a merchant residing in Waterford, had received from a Welsh firm the bill of lading of the coals in question, and on the arrival of the vessel, had proceeded some way in discharging them, when a dispute arose between him and the defendant respecting the payment of some demurrage claimed by the latter. After a good deal of fruitless negotiation between the parties, and in spite of the remonstrance of the plaintiff who made a formal tender to the defendant of the full amount of the freight, the latter called an auction and sold the coal, converting the proceeds to his own use. The plaintiff produced and proved the defendant's signature to the bill of lading of the coals, which was as follows:—

“Shipped in good order and condition, by the Abercain and Gwythen Colliery Company, in and upon the good ship or vessel called the Harmony of Roseharty, whereof Alexander Ritchie is master for the present voyage, now riding at anchor in the port of Newport, and bound for Waterford, to say 93 tons coals, being marked and numbered as in the margin, and are to be delivered in like good order and condition at the aforesaid port of Waterford (all and every the dangers and accidents of seas and navigation of whatever nature or kind soever excepted) unto Mr. Thomas Smith, or to his assigns, he or they paying freight for the said goods at the rate of 5s. 6d. per ton, four working days allowed for discharging, or to be paid a demurrage of £1 per day, with primage and average accustomed. In witness whereof the master or purser of the said ship hath affirmed to three bills of lading, all of this tenor and date, the one of which bills being accomplished, the others to stand void.

“Dated in Newport, 4th day of Nov. 1846.

(Signed)

“Weight unknown to ALEXANDER RITCHIE.”

About 40 tons had been delivered to the plaintiff previous to this dispute, and some money had been paid to the defendant on account of the freight. The value of the portion detained and sold by the captain, after deducting therefrom the amount of freight payable for the part actually delivered, somewhat exceeded £25.

A witness named Hayes, who was examined for the plaintiff, admitted in cross-examination that he saw a charter party of the coals on board the Harmony, in the plaintiff's counting-house. He did not state further particulars respecting it. Evidence of the value of the article at the time having been given, the plaintiff closed his case, whereupon counsel for the defendant called for a re-suit, on the ground that the charter party contained the proper evidence of the contract between the parties, and ought to have been produced, and that the bill of lading disclosed a contract not with the plaintiff, but with the Colliery Company. The learned judge refused to re-suit, but reserved liberty to the defendant to move to enter one, in case the court should be of opinion that the defendant was entitled thereto. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff generally on all the counts, assessing the damages at £13 10s. 6d., which was the value of the coals wrongfully sold by defendant, less the amount of freight thereon which would have been payable in case the whole of the cargo had been duly delivered.

Mr. Martley, Q. C. in the early part of the term obtained a conditional order to enter a non-suit pursuant to leave reserved, or for a new trial on the grounds above mentioned. Cause was this day shewn by

Mr. Lynch, Q. C., (with him Mr. Pm.) [after stating the facts of the case as they appeared in evidence at the trial.] The bill of lading was the instrument whereby the captain, the defendant here, undertook to deliver the goods to the plaintiff. Prima facie the property vests in the consignee named therein. Coleman v. Lambert, (5 M. & W. 505.) Here also there was a part delivery to the gnee, which, at all events, established the position in him. The onus of disturbing the verdict in the parties obtaining the order.

Martley, Q. C. and Mr. Harris, contra—charter party ought to have been given in evidence by the plaintiff, it having been the original act between the parties. The charter party in existence, and being in writing ought to have produced. It is no answer to say that it was found in the defendant's hands, as, if so, he ought to have been put to notice to produce it. The consideration ought to have been truly stated. The contract was indivisible. Besides this, the contract has been set out according to its legal effect. That stated in the bill of lading was between the command and the defendant. Moore v. Wilson, (1 T. 59,) Sargent v. Morris, (3 B. & Ald. 277.) Though a bill of lading may transfer the property, it does not transfer the contract. [Blackburne, C. J. The question here is, whether the bill of lading contract with the plaintiff.] Davis v. Jordan, mother, (5 Burr. 2680.) [Perrin J.—My difficulty here is that it is alleged in the declaration the plaintiff caused these goods to be shipped.] as v. Peck, (8 T. R. 330,) Berkeley v. Walling, (d. & EL. 29.) For anything that appears on the face of the bill of lading it might have been made to the benefit of the consignors, the coal company, and the document states in unambiguous terms to be shippers. [Perrin, J.—There is no doubt that the plaintiff may maintain an action against the defendant, but the question here is, whether he has not embarrassed himself by the form of his pleading.] [Crampton, J. referred to Evans v. Marlett, (d. Ray. 271.)] That case has been overruled in subsequent decisions. [Perrin, J.—Is not the bill of lading, being made to the plaintiff, evidence in support of the jury of his claim to the property? It so means follows that the existence of one right of action on an instrument displaces another.] Per. Pest in reply.—The verdict ought to be sustained both on principle and on authority. The bill of lading is a perfect contract, containing both a promise and a consideration; Wain v. Walters, (5 T. 10,) and that promise must be considered as made to the consignee, as from him the consideration was due. A charter party may have existed without having been made between the parties to the suit, one of whom the equity of a third party may have been transferred by indorsement. Assuming that a charter party was between these parties, it lay on the defendant to produce it, in order to vary the contract stated in the first count, because the bill of lading was a contract in writing perfectly complete in itself, and the principle relied on by the other side applies only in cases where parole agreements come into competition with instruments in writing. The cases cited against us are quite distinguishable. In Moore v. Wilson, it was held that a consignor might, under the circumstances, sue, without, however, ruling the contrary with respect to a consignee. In Sargent v. Morris, it was distinctly proved by the defendant that the property was vested in the consignee, and the goods in fact never reached the consignee, who was his factor. The point decided in Berkeley v. Walling was quite collateral to the present, and the dicta of the judges in that case are strongly in our favour. The right of property is presumptively attributable to the consignee. Dutton v. Solomonson, (3 Bos. & Pul. 582,) Brown v. Hodgson, (2 Campb. 36.) Evans v. Marlett is not overruled, but was distinctly recognized in Sargent v. Morris, and in the still later case of Clark v. Anderson, (2 Bingh. 20,) which is indeed much stronger than the present.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—This is an action brought by a party who alleges that in consideration he had shipped goods on board the defendant's vessel on certain terms, the defendant undertook to carry and deliver them at a certain place. The mere question resolves itself into this, whether the party who here sues for the non-delivery is the person who held the property in the goods, the result of all the cases being, that an action like the present must be brought by an individual so entitled. Now, had the plaintiff here the property or the goods when the defendant took them on board his ship? The bill of lading admits them to have been his property, and he was not bound, until the contrary was shewn, to offer strict proof in support thereof, although the defendant was not concluded from disproving the fact. There was, therefore, some evidence that the goods were the plaintiff's, and, according to the authorities, he is entitled to maintain this action. With respect to the question about the charter party, we know nothing respecting the contents of that instrument, nor between what parties it was executed. The contract contained in the bill of lading sustains the declaration, and any thing calculated to qualify and contradict it should have come from the defendant.

CRAMPTON, J.—The plaintiff is entitled to succeed on the present motion. It is said by the defendant that the charter party is part of the contract, but we know not between whom that document was executed. At all events it lay in the defendant's power to produce it fully as much as the plaintiff's, and I do not think that its production by the latter was essential to the maintenance of the action. With respect to the other point the common principle seems to be this, that when goods are transmitted to a vendee by a carrier, who does not even know him, the vendee is deemed to be the party who contracts with the carrier for the delivery. The plaintiff here having an interest in the property can maintain the action. The company at the other side were his agents for shipment, which view would sustain the allegation in the declaration that the plaintiff caused the goods to be shipped. To arrive at this conclusion let us simply look at the form of the bill of lading, whereby the goods are undertaken to be delivered to the plaintiff and his assigns. In the case relied on by Mr. Martley the property in the bill of lading was specially consigned to the plaintiff in the name of the shipper; here we have a bill of lading with the plaintiff named as the consignee, which is always prima facie evidence of ownership. No evidence has been offered in disproof of this, and there are even some facts in evidence tending to shew that the plaintiff was actually the owner of the cargo. I am therefore of opinion that the action is maintainable.

PERRIN, J. concurred.

Cause shown allowed.

May 2—On this day Mr. Harris moved for liberty to enter a suggestion on the record, to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, and after taxing the costs of the defendant, to issue execution against the plaintiff for the balance which should remain, over after deducting thereout the amount of the damages, pursuant to the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46. The application was grounded on the affidavit of defendant's attorney, who deposed to the fact of the defendant having been arrested in the present action, under a judge's fiat, pursuant to the 8 & 4 Vic. c. 105, for the sum of £25, whereas the sum ultimately recovered was only £13 10s. 6d. The defendant had lodged money in court in lieu of bail. Counsel contended that this was prima facie proof of absence of reasonable or probable cause for such arrest, and the court had jurisdiction to entertain the application, inasmuch as such lodgement was in lieu of bail, and tantamount thereto. Jost v. Peard (10 Ir. L. R. 550) is no authority to the contrary.

Mr. Peet contra.—We resist this motion, both on the merits, and for want of form. With respect to the latter it is now too late to make it, as judgment has been marked, and the entry of such a suggestion would be repugnant, and vitiate the record. Smith v. Roberts, (13 Jur. 40.) The affidavit sworn on the part of the defendant is bad, because it does not negative the existence of reasonable and probable cause. The burthen of proof lies on the defendant. Roper v. Shearsby, (1 Cr. & M. 496.) [He was then stopped by the court.]

PER CURIAM.—We are of opinion that, under the circumstances of the present case, which was an action for the non-delivery of goods, the plaintiff was justified in holding the defendant to bail for the value thereof, and that there was no want of reasonable and probable cause. We make

No rule on the motion.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

CLOSE v. BATT.—April 17.

Practice—Bill of Exceptions—Time at which they should be delivered to the Judge—Form of Record.

Where objections were taken to the Judge's charge, and overruled, and the Judge gave time to have the exceptions reduced to writing, and the document was not until after the jury were discharged—Held, that the court could not hear these exceptions, as it did not appear from the record whether they were taken before the jury were discharged.

This was a bill of exceptions taken to the charge of Mr. Justice Perrin, at Down Assizes.

Mr. Holmes was proceeding to state the nature of the exceptions, a portion of which were to the evidence, the remainder to the charge of the learned Judge.

Mr. Whiteside, Q.C., objected to the argument of the exceptions to the charge, the exceptions not having been tendered until after the discharge of the jury.

The learned Judge reported the facts as follows:—

Mr. Holmes (Mr. Joy, Q.C., with him)—At the trial, our objections were overruled by the Judge as each was made, who then gave us time to have the exceptions made up, and they were received by the Judge before the verdict was recorded. [Richards, B.—If the exceptions were not tendered till the jury were discharged, how can we entertain any question on those exceptions?] The dominicle only was not delivered to the judge, but the objections contained in it were made and overruled by him. The Judge having received and signed the exceptions, and they being now upon the record, the court cannot go behind it. The Judge might, if he thought fit, decline to receive the exceptions, as being too late, and we then could have had our remedy under the statute. We were in sufficient time until the verdict was recorded. [Lefroy, B.—We must take the record as it is before us; it distinctly states that the jury were discharged.] [Richards, B.—For anything that appears on the record, the jury may have been discharged before a single exception was taken.]

Mr. Whiteside, Q.C., contra.—The objection must be made while the jury are in the box, Ball v. Mannin, (Sm. & Batt. 461-2). It is absurd to say that a Judge could tell a jury after they were gone, that what he told them was incorrect. [Pennefather, B.—There is nothing in this record to shew that any objection was ever made.] [He cited Stat. of West. 2, c. 31; 2 Coke Inst. 437; Wright v. Sharpe (1 Salk. 288); Armstrong v. Lewis (2 Cro. & M. 274); Armstrong v. Lewis (4 Moo. and Sc. 23, per Denman, C.J.)]

PENNEFATHER, B.—It is utterly impossible to hear these exceptions on the present record.

RICHARDS, B.—We cannot hear these exceptions. If the objections were made in time, I would struggle to let you in.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

In re ROBERT TURNLEY, a lunatic; ex parte HINCKS, CUMMING, SMYTH, and CROMIE.

April 21st and 28th.

Costs—Practice.

A bill having been filed on behalf of the lunatic, in pursuance of the Master's report, in order to clear away doubt from the lunatic's title, which without suit could not have been done, and the lunatic having succeeded, Held, that under the circumstances the principal defendants, were trustees for a charity, were entitled to the costs out of the lunatic's estate.

This was a petition presented under the following circumstances:—Francis Turnley died, seized of considerable real estates, leaving Robert Turnley, the lunatic in the matter, his heir-at-law. Amongst the papers of Francis Turnley were found instruments purporting to be his will, and codicils, by which he devised certain estates to trustees therein named, upon trust to convey the same to the petitioners and others, for a trust to be called the Cushendall Trust.

The immediate devisees disclaimed, in consequence of which the legal estate descended on the lunatic, who remained in receipt by his committee of the rents and profits of the devised lands.

The Master, by his report made in the lunacy matter, found that it would be for the benefit of the lunatic that proceedings should be taken to dispute the validity of the will and codicils, and recommended that a bill should be filed on behalf of the lunatic against the persons taking estates under the will. A bill was accordingly filed, in pursuance of this report, against several parties, including the petitioners, the Commissioners of Charitable Donations, and the Attorney-General, alleging that the will and codicils were executed while the testator was insane, and that the plaintiff could not have his title freed from the claims of the devisees save by a decree of the Court of Chancery, and praying that an issue might be directed to try the validity of the documents. The petitioners by their answer did not assert the validity of the said instruments as the will of Francis Turnley, but submitted their rights to the court. No proofs were made on behalf of the petitioners. On the hearing, the Court directed an issue devisavit vel non, giving the petitioners the carriage of it. The verdict on the issue was in favour of the plaintiff in equity, and against the petitioners; and on the final hearing, a decree was pronounced declaring void the said instruments, purporting to be the will and codicils of the said Thomas Turnley. The petition prayed that the petitioners might be declared entitled to their costs in the suit, and consequential directions.

Mr. F. Fitzgerald in support of the petition.—Cranck v. Brissett, (5 Ves. 398); Hicks v. Wrench, (6 Mad. 93); Johnston v. Todd, (8 Beav. 489); Turner v. Frampton, (2 Coll. 1331); Ex parte Sherwood, (19 Ves. 208).

Mr. Dobbs, for the committee of the lunatic, did not object, but observed that the Commissioners of Charitable Donations being before the court, were sufficient to protect the interest of the charities.

Mr. J. B. Miller in reply.—Lynn v. Beaser, (1 T. & R. 63); Thomason v. Moses, (5 Beav. 81); Ashe v. Berry, (3 Moll. 97.)

LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think this case is very much governed by that case of Ashe v. Berry, reported in (Beatty, 255, and 3 Moll. 97.) There it is stated that the "costs of a bill dismissed were given to the plaintiff, where the fund in litigation could not be enjoyed by the party entitled to it, without the declaration of the court." That is a strong case. However, as it is reported in Molloy, it seems that the Lord Chancellor had at first much difficulty in giving to the plaintiff the costs of a dismissed bill; but eventually retained the bill, making a declaration of the rights of parties, and then gave the costs out of the fund. Some of the other cases seem to have proceeded on the same ground; as to the short case in 5 Ves. it does not appear what the particulars of it were. In Johnston v. Todd, (8 Beav. 489,) "the plaintiffs stating themselves and some of the defendants to be the next of kin, filed a bill for the administration of a testator's estate. Their claim was displaced, upon inquiries directed by the court, and other persons, not parties to the cause, established their right, and became entitled to a large residue. The case being one of great difficulty and doubt, and an investigation being absolutely necessary for the administration of the estate, the plaintiffs and defendants were allowed their costs out of the fund." The Master of the Rolls then says, "The next question is whether the costs of this investigation ought not to be considered as costs in the cause. The inquiry was necessary for the administration of the estate; and the only scruple I have had is this, whether those parties who were originally brought here, and before the Master as next of kin, but whose claims were displaced, shall receive any costs. I think that they ought, and for this reason, because as between them and those claiming through Peter Marshall, it was so doubtful who was right, and so impossible to decide the matter without careful investigation, that if they had not brought forward their claims, there could have been no adjudication." That in fact is giving them their costs, because they brought forward the claims on the estate. I think to the same effect is the case of Hicks v. Wrench (6 Mad. 93.) The case here is particular in its circumstances. These parties do not appear to have instituted any proceeding to disturb the heir at law; but it was found that it would be necessary to have a suit, the trustees having disclaimed. The Master then thought he ought to have a proceeding instituted for that purpose. These parties were called on to come forward; they submitted their claim for the protection of the court, as they were almost bound to do—as trustees for a charity they were hardly at liberty to refrain from so doing. The court directed this proceeding to be taken, which has benefited the lunatic. These parties made no vexatious defence, and I do not think they occasioned any expense by being made parties. Under these special circumstances I do not fear this case being made a precedent, for it does seem strong to say that the heir at law should pay the cost of litigating a will which he set aside; but we must remember that he was the promovant, and that the proceeding was for his benefit. No extra expense having been occasioned, it does seem a proper case for this estate, which is within the province of the court, and which it is able to administer, to pay the costs of all parties.

TILLY v. BROWNE.—May 23rd & 28th.

Practice—Caveat—Opening of an Enrolment.

A caveat was entered and allowed to expire; the plaintiff enrolled the decree without giving notice to the defendant; Held not to be irregular. A caveat should be renewed after 28 days. An enrolment will not be opened for a party who delays the application unreasonably.

This was a motion to open an enrolment of a decree, under the following circumstances:—Carmichael, a defendant, had lodged a caveat on the 27th of June, 1848, the day on which the decree in this cause had been pronounced; on the 27th of December, 1848, the plaintiff enrolled the decree, without giving any notice to the defendant, Carmichael, who had lodged the caveat. The plaintiff, having been informed in the secretary's office that the caveat expired 28 days after it was lodged, and, not having been renewed, it ceased to have any effect; on the 27th of December, 1848, enrolled the decree, without giving any notice to Carmichael. The defendant, Carmichael, had presented a petition for a re-hearing, and on the 2nd of March, 1849, the Lord Chancellor made an order granting the prayer of that petition. On the 17th of March, the plaintiff applied to the Court to have the said order for re-hearing discharged, on the ground of irregularity; and an order was made for that purpose.

Mr. Hughes, Q.C.—The plaintiff has six months to enrol a decree, but when a caveat is lodged, notice should be given by the plaintiff of his intention to enrol the decree. In England, where a caveat has been entered, the duty of giving notice is cast upon the Chancellor's secretary's (2 Dan. C. P. 1007.) In this country there is no case which shews that the Chancellor's secretary ought to give notice, but the practice here is for the plaintiff's solicitor to serve the notice, which in England is given by the secretary. Robinson v. Newdick, (3 Mer. 13;) Enright v. Fitzgerald, (1 D. & W. 72.)

Mr. Christian, Q.C., and Mr. F. Walsh, contra.—No doubt, the practice in England is what has been stated, but it is different in this country. There is no such practice here; nor is it the practice here for the plaintiff's solicitor to give the notice. There are two grounds upon which this application is made,—surprise and irregularity. There is no surprise in this case. Balguy v. Chorley, (1 M. & K. 641;) Barnes v. Wilson, (1 R. & M. 486.) The plaintiff was in no way irregular, for he was informed in the office that the caveat was a nullity. There is a difficulty in such a case as this in opening an enrolment at the instance of one party, where there are several others who do not apply to have it done.

Mr. Collins, in reply, insisted that the case of Enright v. Fitzgerald overruled the English case cited by Mr. Christian, and cited Anon., (1 Ves. Sen. 325, Barry and Keogh, C. P. 468,) as giving the form of the caveat. (Beame's Orders, 308.)

May 28th. LORD CHANCELLOR.—I have in this case inquired what the practice in this country is as to caveats, and I find that the practice has been to renew caveats after 28 days, for the caveat only lasts for that time, and there are several instances of renewals of caveats. I also find that it is the practice of the office to inform parties who lodge a caveat, that it will only continue in force for that time. No doubt, the practice in England is different, Burnet v. Theobald, (1 P. Wms. 609; Beame's Orders, 308;) Robinson v. Newdick, (3 Mer. 16;) Anon., (1 Ves. S. 235;) Shooby v. Lord Muskerry, (7 C. & F. 23;) Barnes v. Wilson, (1 R. & M. 486.) There is no order in this country similar to the English orders of 1698, but I think the course adopted here is equally reasonable; and as I find it has been acted on for a length of time, and as I see nothing inconvenient in the practice, I shall not alter it. It seems, the plaintiff was informed in the office that the caveat had expired; therefore, there was not anything irregular in his proceeding then to enrol the decree. If the defendant, immediately after the caveat expired, had applied to the Court for assistance, the Court might have then thought it reasonable to do so; but now, after the other party has been allowed to go on in the office, and after such a lapse of time, the motion must be refused with costs.

ROLLS COURT.

SEAVER v. FIVEY.—April, 25.

Practice—Motion to dismiss—Amendment.

Notice of motion to dismiss a bill served on the 14th of April, on the same day notice of amendment was served, but the bill was not amended until the 16th, Held that the amendment was no answer to the motion to dismiss.

Mr. Trevor moved that the bill in this case might be dismissed for want of prosecution, under the 82d General Order. The bill was filed to set aside a deed as voluntary and fraudulent against the plaintiff. On the first of November 1848, the answer was filed, on Saturday, the 14th of April, the notice of motion to dismiss the bill was served, and on the same day the plaintiff served notice of amendment, but the bill was not amended till Monday, the 16th of April. In the case of Mark v. Willington, (11 I. E. R. 269,) it was held that an amendment of a bill after notice of a motion to dismiss was no answer to the motion, and the plaintiff was directed to strike out the amendments.

Mr. Leach, contra, contended that, according to the terms of the 82nd Order, the bill should not be dismissed, for it provides that "if the plaintiff shall not proceed with the cause" the defendant may move to dismiss the bill; by the 49th Order the plaintiff is at liberty to amend once after answer, and by so doing he was proceeding with the cause, and so came within the proviso in the 82nd rule. [Counsel also cited Moore v. Lawler, (9 I. E. R. 148,) where the bill was amended after the defendant was entitled to dismiss it, and the Court refused to dismiss the bill.]

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—It has been already decided that after a notice of motion to dismiss a bill for want of prosecution an amendment of the bill is no answer to the motion. It was so held by Sir M. O'Loughlin in Dycers v. Golding, (2 I. E. R. 57) and I have followed that decision; the practice, therefore, is not new. I admit there have been some exceptions to the rule, but those were under special circumstances, and previous to the case of Davies v. Davies, (10 I. E. Rep. 614.) In this case the answer was filed in November, and the necessity for the amendment then arose; it might have been different if the subject matter of the amendment occurred recently. It is the duty of every solicitor, within a reasonable time after an answer comes in, to lay it before counsel for his advice and direction for the conduct of the cause. If the amendment had been made in November the cause could have been set down for hearing this term; and, besides, there is not any affidavit to account for the delay, and, consistently with the case of Davies v. Davies, I do not see how I can avoid dismissing the bill; however, if the plaintiff is willing to strike out the amendments, I will make a similar order to that in Mork v. Willington.

[The plaintiff having declined to take an order that the amendments should be struck out, the bill was dismissed with costs.]

PRATER, Petitioner; RIGHT HON. JOHN, EARL OF PORTARLINGTON, Respondent.—April 25.

LORD PORTARLINGTON, Petitioner; PRATER, Respondent.

Practice—Security for Costs—Petition for Receiver.

A mortgagee resident out of the jurisdiction presented a petition for a receiver, and a conditional order was obtained. Upon a petition to shew cause, the respondent objected to the Petitioner being heard without giving security for costs. The petitioner was allowed to proceed, his solicitor personally undertaking to pay any costs which the Court should direct.

In this case a petition had been presented by Prater, the petitioner in the first matter, who was resident in England, for a receiver under the mortgage act; and on the 20th of January, 1849, a conditional order was obtained. On the 3rd of July, 1844, a petition was presented by the respondent, who also resided out of the jurisdiction, praying that the conditional order of the 20th of January might be discharged, and that the petitioner might give security for costs.

Mr. H. Smythe, for Lord Portarlington.—The petitioner in the first matter, as resident out of the jurisdiction, is bound to give security for costs. Where a client resident abroad applies for taxation of his solicitor's costs, he must give security for the costs of that proceeding. In re Pass- more, 1 Beav. 94, Bodecote v. Bostock, (ibid, note,) in ex parte Seidler, 12 Sim. 106, a petitioner who was resident out of the jurisdiction was directed to give security for costs, although the respondent had answered the affidavits. (See also Anon, 12 Sim. 262.) A foreigner who petitioned to have his claim referred to the Master, was directed to give security for costs. Drever v. Maudeslay, (5 Rus. 11.) A defendant who is resident abroad will not be compelled to give security for costs, although the plaintiff is, Baxter v. Morgan, (6 Taunt. 378.) In a petition under the mortgage act, it was held that the conditional order for a receiver could not be served on a respondent resident out of the jurisdiction. Wolfe v. Jackson, (2 Hog. 194.)

Mr. Green, Q. C., with Mr. Rogers, for the petitioner. The petitioner should not be directed to give security for costs. There is no precedent of such an application as the present.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS made the following order:—

"The petitioner's solicitor personally undertaking to pay any costs which the Court may adjudge the respondent to be entitled to on this motion, the Court doth declare that the petitioner is at liberty to be heard on this motion without giving security for costs, &c."

R. P. H. B. 28, fo. 416.

The cause shewn by the respondent was subsequently disallowed.

RUSKELL v. CHURCH.—April 25.

Practice—Objections to Title—Costs of purchaser.

Where several objections to the title have been taken by a purchaser, some of which are allowed, and others overruled, on motion to discharge the purchaser, and that he be paid his costs, the costs of the objections which have been overruled will be set off against those which have been allowed.

In this case the purchaser had taken several exceptions to the title of the lands sold, some of which had been allowed, and others overruled.

Mr. Hughes, Q. C. for J. Lynam, the purchaser of part of the lands sold in this cause, moved that he might be discharged from his said purchase, and that the accountant-general might transfer to him so much of the stock to the credit of the cause, as would amount to the purchase money, and that he might be paid his costs.

Mr. P. Blake, for the plaintiffs, moved a cross notice, that the taxing master might be directed to tax the costs of any of the several objections filed on behalf of J. Lynam, to the title of the lands which had been overruled, and that said costs might be set off against the costs payable to said purchaser. [Counsel referred to the case of Martin v. Cotter, (9 I. E. R. 44,) where the purchaser was declared not entitled to his costs, although he ultimately succeeded in his objections, on account of the great delay, as he was aware of the defects in the title several months before.]

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I am not aware of any case in which such a discussion as to the costs has been raised on a motion to discharge a purchaser.

My present impression is, that it is not the practice to make such an order. However, I will look into the matter.

May 3.—On this day his Honour made orders in the terms of both notices.

QUEEN'S BENCH—TRINITY TERM.

MIDLAND G. W. RAILWAY CO. v. QUIN.

May 25th.

An action of debt for railway calls having been brought against an infant shareholder, he pleaded infancy at the time of "the making of the contract in declaration mentioned." Held on special demurrer, that inasmuch as his individual liability might in one particular case have arisen independently of contract, the plea was in its present form no answer to the action. Quere, whether the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, (8 & 9 Vic. c. 16,) affects the legal status of infant shareholders?

Debt for railway calls. The declaration, (which was framed in the statutable form,) alleged that the defendant was indebted to the company in respect of a call of £5 a share on 40 shares.

1. Plea, general issue;

2. Plea, onerari non, because he says that he, the said defendant, at the time of the making of the said supposed contract in the said declaration mentioned, was in fact under the age of 21 years—to wit, of the age of 19 years, to wit, at the place aforesaid, &c., verification.

Special demurrer to second plea, assigning for causes, inter alia, that it was uncertain what contract is referred to therein, there being none mentioned, and then declared that the plea should have averred the infancy of the defendant, either at the time of the registration of the shares or of making the calls.

Also, that the plea was no answer to the action, and that by the provisions of the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, an infant shareholder is liable to calls.

* Section 3. "Every person who shall have subscribed the precise sum or upwards to the capital of the Company, or shall otherwise have become entitled to a share in the Company, and whose name shall have been entered on the register of the shareholders hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed a shareholder of the Company."

Secs. 18 & 19 prescribe the formalities to be observed in case of the transmission of shares, "in consequence of the death, or bankruptcy, or insolvency of any shareholder, or in consequence of the marriage of a female shareholder, or by any other lawful means than by a transfer according to the provisions of this the special act," without which formalities "no person claiming by virtue of any such transmission shall be entitled to receive any share of the profits of the undertaking, nor to vote in respect of any such share as the holder thereof."

Sec. 21 provides, that with respect to the provisions for enforcing calls, the word "shareholder" shall extend to and include the legal personal representative of such shareholder, (as defined in sec. 8.)

Sec. 79. "If any shareholder be a lunatic or idiot, such lunatic or idiot may vote by his committee, and if any shareholder be a minor, he may vote by his guardian, or any one of his guardians, and every such vote may be given either in person or in proxy."

Joinder in demurrer.

The defendant appeared and pleaded by his guardian.

Mr. Boyce for the demurrer.—The calls have been made by the company pursuant to 8 Vic. c. 16, (Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act,) sec. 21 & 22. The meaning of the term shareholder is defined by sec. 8, where there is no reservation in favour of infants. In sec. 79, minors holding shares are expressly provided for. Dwaris on statutes, 516–51. A party may become entitled to shares by original subscription, transmission, and assignment. Sec. 18 provides for the case of a female unmarried whilst entitled to shares, and makes her husband liable. The cases where parties have been held liable for rents accrued during their infancy, are analogous. Mahon v. O'Ferrall, (10 Ir. L. Rep. 527;) Kirton v. Elliott, (2 B. & C. 69, 1 Furlong, 114, and manuscript case there cited;) Billing v. Osbey, (Exch. Hil. 1829,) Evelyn v. Chichester, (3 Burr. 177.) The plea here should be taken in the most unfavourable sense for the pleader. In Cork and Bandon Railway Co. v. Casenove, (11 Jurist, 302,) almost the point in question was decided, as it was there held that a party who had attained his majority was liable for calls which accrued during infancy, without any act of ratification on his part.

Mr. Henn, Q.C., and Mr. O'Hara, contra.—This plea speaks of a contract, and this was proper, the declaration merely omitting to set it out, in consequence of the succinct form prescribed by the act. The latter makes no reservation in favour of infants, and the provision of the common law must be taken to apply to them. Contract is the sole medium of liability here. It does not follow, even in the case of a legatee, that he must accept of the gift, (19 sec.) Such acceptance, we submit, cannot be binding till 21. [Blackburne, C.J.—It is evident that the Act of Parliament recognises the existence of an infant shareholder.] The cases referred to respecting lands are distinguishable, and rest on peculiar principles. This is a matter connected with trade. In the case in 11 Jurist, the action was brought after party attained his full age, and Coleridge, J., distinctly avoids giving any opinion as to the liability of a party sued whilst an infant. Lunacy and idiocy are both defences under a plea of non est factum, and it would be quite absurd to hold lunatics and idiots liable under sec. 79. The 19th section treats the vesting of shares in a husband as a legal consequence, and this raises an inference in our favour. The true rule seems to be this, to consider the act as contemplating only such parties as contractors, who are legally of ability to contract. [Blackburne, C.J.—It is not possible to conceive a liability, without some act on the part of the person made liable.] The Court ought not to extend the principle contended for beyond the cases of landlord and tenant. It is very doubtful whether in all these last-mentioned cases the actions were not brought after the infancy determined. Kettle v. Elliott, (cited in 1 Rolle Ab. 731, K.) and Ketsey's case, (Cro. Jac. 820, S. C. Brown. 120,) both of which are probably identical with Kirton v. Elliott, (2 B. & C. 69;) Low v. Griffith, (1 Scott, 458.) The general proposition of law concerning infancy has been laid down in 3 Com. Dig. Tit. Enfants, C. (2.) 565. "So regularly a contract by an infant, if it be not for necessities, shall be void." Hallett v. Parsons, (3 Burr. 1805;) Gibbs v. Merrill, (3 Taun. 307;) Williams v. Moore, (11 M. & W. 246.) This plea of infancy is a sufficient avoidance of the contract.

Mr. Martley, Q.C., in reply.—This demurrer must be allowed, unless the Act of Parliament be repealed by the Court. There may be a shareholder independently of contract, as, for example, by transmission. [Blackburne, C.J.—The plea assumes, that the defendant is liable by virtue of a contract.] The act provides for the registering of an infant. [Crompton, J.—I observe that in the case in the 11 Jurist the pleas negatived fresh registration.] That was merely intended to exclude any implication of ratification. If the argument on the other side prevail, an infant shareholder cannot have an existence. [Moore, J.—Cannot an infant repudiate the act of another party on his behalf?] If so, what is to become of the company? [Crompton, J.—Does not the subsequent registration of a transmitted share amount to a contract?] [Blackburne, C.J.—I cannot suppose that any person can be sued by way of contract, unless either himself or some other party has bound him. How does the case stand, where the father bequeaths his share in a business to his infant son, and directs his executors to carry on the business?] This can only be done through the medium of a subsequent arrangement with surviving partners. [Moore, J.—But would the son be liable for losses in trade incurred by such partnership?] The 27th sec. of the act is also material to be considered.

Cur. ad vult.

May, 29.—BLACKBURNE, C.J., this day delivered the judgment of the Court.—We intend giving no opinion upon the important questions which have been discussed in this case. We allow the demurrer, on the mere ground of informality in the plea, in referring to a contract not stated in the declaration, thus assuming that the defendant's liability could solely have arisen through the medium of contract. The liability of a formal shareholder, strictly speaking, rests solely and directly in contract; but a possible case might arise, where, consistently with the allegation in the plea, the defendant might have been liable—namely, in case he had married a female shareholder. This species of liability would be independent of contract on his part. For this reason we consider the plea bad, but the defendant may amend the same, if so advised, on payment of costs. There is, however, no species of defence which is not open to him under the general issue.

Demurrer allowed.

COMMON PLEAS.—EASTER TERM.

EXECUTORS OF KING v. KER.—May 3.

Principal and Agent—Loan Fund Society—Liability of Officer—Nonsuit.

A. the clerk of a loan society, received money from K. for the purposes of the society, upon an agreement with A. (who acted on behalf and with the sanction of the managers of the society) and that K. should receive £6 per cent. interest upon the loan, being a rate of interest which the society was not legally competent to give. A. upon receiving the money, gave K. the following acknowledgment:—"Mr. Thomas King has deposited with me this day, by his son, the sum of £100 sterling, to be added to the amount of capital in the Drumssett Loan Fund, and for which he will get interest at the rate of £6 per cent. from this date. Dated this 12th March, 1844."

Held, that notwithstanding this receipt, and the illegality of the transaction, A. was not personally liable for the sum lodged with him in an action by the representatives of K.

This was an action of assumpsit for money had and received. The case was tried before the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas at the sittings after last Hilary Term. The action was brought for the recovery of £60 being the balance of a sum of £100 deposited by Thomas King, the plaintiff's testator, with the defendant as clerk of the Drumssett Loan Fund Society. The defendant pleaded the general issue. Upon the trial the plaintiffs proved the rules of the Society, made in pursuance of the act of 6 & 7 Vic. c. 91. The 11th rule was as follows:—"That funds be raised for the use of the society, by deposits bearing interest at the rate of £5 per cent. per annum. Debentures shall be granted for sums amounting to £20; and deposit receipts for sums less than £20. No interest shall be payable on fractional parts of a pound. Three months' notice shall be required previous to the withdrawal of any sum lodged in debentures," &c. The plaintiffs also proved the above acknowledgment, and that on the 1st July, 1847, Thomas King the deceased, sent his son to defendant for the money deposited, whereupon the defendant paid the son a sum of £40; that upon that occasion the defendant changed the figure 6 in the above acknowledgment into a 5, in order to make the interest given appear conformable to the rules of the society; that notwithstanding such alteration, King received £6 per cent. interest, and that no debenture was ever offered to King from the time of the lodgement in the year 1844, up to the month of June, 1847, when the defendant then tendered a debenture to King, which he refused to take, stating that it was his money he wanted, and not a debenture. It further appeared upon the cross-examination of Mr. Piessé, the secretary of the Loan Fund Board in Dublin, and one of the witnesses for the plaintiff, that in the annual account of the Drumssett Society for the year 1844 (which was received at the head office in the ordinary way of business) Thomas King, the deceased, appears entered as a depositor of £100; similar accounts were proved for the years 1845, 1846, and 1847; and by them it appeared that £5 per cent. interest was paid for each year to the said Thomas King, on said sum of £100. [These documents were objected to by the plaintiffs' counsel, but admitted by the court, and read in evidence.]

Upon the close of the plaintiffs' case, counsel for the defendant called upon the learned judge to nonsuit, which, however, he declined to do, reserving liberty to the defendant to move for a nonsuit, in the event of a verdict for the plaintiffs.

The defendant went into his case, and proved, amongst other matters, that the money was converted into a loan by the Loan Fund Society, on the day of its lodgement, or the next day; and that depositors had the privilege of recommending borrowers to the society, which the deceased Thomas King had, on more than one occasion, exercised.

The jury found for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Tombs, Q.C., with whom was Mr. R. M. Mills, showed cause against the conditional order for entering a nonsuit. The plaintiffs could not sue the Loan Fund Society for two reasons; 1st, The rate of interest received by King was contrary to the act of Parliament, and the rules of the society; 2ndly, King had no debenture, which he was required by the rules of the society to have. The defendant, therefore, by entering into a contract with King, which he had no authority to enter into on behalf of the society, has violated his duty, and taken upon himself the responsibility of the contract. [Ball, J.—The receipt shows the facts of the contract, and that interest was to be paid at £6 per cent.; and your case is, that inasmuch as the defendant could not bind the Loan Fund Society, and, although acquainted with the rules, yet was guilty of a violation of them in the contract, he thereby made himself personally liable. Have you any case?] The case of Higgins v. Senior (8 M. & W. 834) is an authority. It was there laid down by the learned judge in his charge, "that if the defendant had acted as agent, not having authority to make the contract, he was liable for so acting, and that he was responsible whether the party knew he so acted or not—that knowledge made no difference." [Mr. Hutton, Q.C.—We rely on that case as an authority for the present defendant. There the contract was entered into in the defendant's own name, and the question was whether he acted as agent or not.] [Ball, J.—Here, however, he enters into the contract for the society, and to do something on their behalf.] The words of the contract are future as regards the society. They are "to be added to the amount of capital," &c., implying that he himself should do something thereafter, in order to make this money the property of the society. It matters not whether the original intention of the testator was to enter into a contract with the society, or with the defendant personally: the defendant exceeded his authority, and was guilty of a breach of duty, he is therefore liable. Appleton v. Binks, (5 East. 148); Story on Agency, p. 118. The evidence which supports this view, is the document itself, in which he contracts that certain things should be done, which could not be legally done, and which were never done in point of fact. It is perfectly clear upon the face of that receipt, that the defendant exceeded his authority.

Mr. Hutton, Q.C. (with whom was Mr. J. Adair), contra.—The whole transaction was evidently one with the society; and though irregular, it cannot fix the defendant with a liability he never contemplated. The returns (which, being regular official documents, signed by the trustees, we submit, are admissible evidence,) show that the defendant as clerk did his duty and transmitted the money to the trustees. It is further in evidence that the deceased recommended borrowers to the society, which he could only have done as a depositor. It was with the full concurrence of King that no debenture was given, as he would not have been entitled to receive more than £5 per cent. interest on such debenture. [Ball, J.—There can be no doubt that the act of Parliament was violated, and very illegal transactions came into. There was gross culpability; but the question is, whether the mere instrument of the parties is liable in this action. It has been laid down in Dunman v. Williams, (7 Ad. & El. 111.) that the burden of showing that the agent had no authority, is that he exceeded his authority, is imposed upon the plaintiff. That decision is very important in this case.] There is no evidence to show that the defendant had not authority to do every thing he did. On the contrary the trustees adopt his acts, and he would have been liable to them in an action if he had not handed over the money. Tenant v. Elliott, (1 B. & Pul. 3.) [Jackson, J.—The plaintiffs say that this was an illegal transaction, and that therefore the defendant is liable. It certainly was a gross irregularity, but an irregularity to which King was a party, and by which he was benefited. Ball, J.—How do the plaintiffs escape from the maxim turpi contractus non oritur actio? Whether the transaction was illegal or not, the defendant was nothing more than a clerk, and if the action is at all, it should have been brought against the principal. Stephens v. Badcock, (3 Barn. & Adol. 551.) Sadler v. Evans, (4 Burr. 1985.) In Spicer v. Lassar, (2 Brod. & Bing. 452,) Park, J. says: "It is not merely because he calls himself agent that he can become liable; he must so frame his undertaking as to make his additional engagement clear beyond dispute." There is nothing of the kind in this case. The fair construction of the instrument is that it was a contract with the society. The effect of that instrument was entirely for the consideration of the judge, who ought, therefore, to have ruled against the defendant.

Mr. Mills, in reply.—The question the judge left to the jury was, whether the loan to the defendant was in his personal or official capacity. The result question, therefore, does not affect us, for it assumes that the loan was to the Drumstick Loan Fund Society. [Jackson, J.—We are not now to look at what the judge left to the jury, or at any thing he did after he refused to nonsuit. We are to consider the question as it stood at the close of the plaintiff's case.] But the evidence of the money having been paid to the society came from the defendant's witnesses.

PER CURIAM.—There was abundant evidence on the face of the plaintiff's case to show that the loan was made to the society. The receipt of William Ker, which is the document on which the plaintiffs sue, and the document coming out of the hands of their own witness, Mr. Piessie, and which were clearly in evidence, are quite sufficient to establish that fact. There is no proof that the defendant had not authority from the society to receive that loan on their behalf upon the terms he entered into.

we do not think, therefore, that any case has been made out to fix him with personal liability.*

Non-suit entered with costs.

TAYLOR v. CRUISE.—June 5.

Non pros—Removal of suit to Inferior Court.

If proceedings instituted in one of the superior courts be removed to an inferior jurisdiction, at the instance of the plaintiff, and with the defendant's implied consent, the defendant cannot afterwards enter a rule for non pros in the court above.

Mr. O'Callaghan, for plaintiff, moved to set aside the order of the 23rd of May, for non pros, "unless declaration filed within four days." Counsel relied on the affidavit of plaintiff, which stated that it was agreed on between the parties—after service of the writ, and before declaration—to abandon proceedings in that court, and to proceed by civil bill, in consequence of the smallness of the demand; that in pursuance of said agreement, proceedings in the superior court were stayed, the civil bill process issued, and a decree pronounced in favour of the plaintiff, which the defendant obeyed by paying the amount, and thereby admitting the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. Darley, in support of the order, read defendant's affidavit, which negatived the fact of his having been a party to the abandonment of the proceedings in the superior courts, and the substitution of civil bill proceedings.

TORRENS, J.—Did the defendant appear below?

Mr. O'Callaghan.—He did, and opposed the plaintiff's claim, and when defeated, paid the debt. It was clear defendant, when below, considered the agreement in existence, as he did not plead a suit pending in a superior court, in which case plaintiff could not have obtained a decree.

TORRENS, J.—We are of opinion that defendant, even if no verbal or written agreement took place, consented to abandon the suit in this court, by appearing below, and admitting a jurisdiction there; the motion to set aside the order must, therefore, be granted, with costs.†

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

COLQUHOUN v. NOLAN AND OTHERS.—April 19.

The statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 82—Commissioners appointed pursuant to, not a corporation.

In an action brought against N., and others, being the town commissioners of Cashel, appointed pursuant to 9 Geo. 4, c. 82, Held that they were properly sued as individuals, and are not a corporate body.

Assumpsit on a special contract and the common money counts brought by plaintiff to recover the price of certain building works done by him for the defendants, Nolan and others, the Town Commissioners of Cashel. On the trial before Mr. Justice

Crampton, at the Spring Assizes for Nenagh, 1848, there was a verdict for the plaintiff below, with liberty for the defendant to move to enter a non-suit if the Court should be of opinion that the Commissioners of Cashel were a corporation according to the true construction of the act of 9 Geo. 4, c. 82, and should have been sued accordingly. There was another point reserved as to the right of plaintiff to recover on the common counts, a special contract having been given in evidence. This point, however, was abandoned by defendant's counsel in argument.

Messrs. Martley, Q. C. and Lynch, Q. C. for the defendants now moved accordingly. The Commissioners have a common name, and a perpetual succession of their property is provided for.

Messrs. George, Q. C., Wall, Q. C. and Hobart for the plaintiff.

PIGOT, C. B.—This was an action of assumpsit, and the declaration contains a count on the special contract and the common counts. As to the first ground of objection relied upon on behalf of the defendants it is contended, that as the terms of the particular contract have not been fully complied with, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. The Court intimated in the course of the argument that this came within the class of cases where the parties who receive a partial benefit are liable pro tanto, and in Lucas v. Godwin (5 Scott, 500) the rule, that applies to such cases, is well laid down. The next and principal point was that the Commissioners of Cashel are a corporation, and ought to be sued as such—a question certainly involved in great doubt, arising rather from the language of the Municipal Act than from that of 9 Geo. 4. A case lately coming before the Court of Queen's Bench, but not as yet reported, has been referred to, and though it was not necessary to decide the question there, yet it was fully raised and argued, and the Court referred to it in delivering their judgment, and expressed a strong and decided opinion upon it. I do not refer to this case as an authority but merely as showing what was the strong impression of that Court as well as of the public, on the question. In like manner, in a cause at present pending in the Court of Chancery, we find those very Commissioners made parties by name, and not treated as a corporation. I refer to those circumstances as indicating strongly that since the act they have not been treated nor considered as a corporate body, and it would require very strong reasoning and authority to induce us now to hold them to be such. Now, there is nothing in the terms of the act necessarily to constitute them a corporate body. It is quite true that where a charter invests a body with certain rights, and contemplates the discharge by them of certain duties, and that those objects cannot be effectuated unless by their being a corporation, in such cases, even in the absence of express terms of incorporation, whatever the words used may be, the law would hold them to be a corporation; and there is no distinction in this respect between a body incorporated by charter and by act of Parliament. But here the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, as to their succession and the mode of suing, are consistent with their not being a corporation. There are two principal points, the succession of the property and the use of a common name,

* Doherty, C. J. and Torrens, J. were absent.

† Doherty, C. J., was absent.

relied on, as constituting these commissioners a corporation. The provisions of the act are amply sufficient to secure the protection of the property without that sort of succession which is peculiar to a corporation. The act provides for the election of commissioners, and that every three years the entire body shall go out, and others are nominated in their stead, and the Legislature enacts that the property shall be conveyed from one set to another. Now, that provision would seem to imply that, though in the preceding section the term "succession" is met with, yet the Legislature seemed to have thought a provision necessary for securing the transmission of the estates. This provision affords a key to our construction, for while on the one hand it provides for the protection of the common property, on the other it indicates that the Legislature did not intend to treat them as a corporation. Then, in the subsequent provisions as to the mode in which they are to be sued, the terms "he" and "they" frequently occurring are inconsistent with the Commissioners not being named individually in such proceedings. If, therefore, the matter rested on the 9 Geo. 4, I should have no difficulty in holding them not to be a corporation. The provisions of the Municipal Reform Act directs these Commissioners to authenticate their proceedings by seal, but without their being a body corporate they may test and vouch the authenticity of their acts by seal or otherwise. That act vests in them property for which there was no guardian, and transfers it from one set of commissioners to another, as if it were by conveyance. On the whole we are of opinion that there is nothing in either act to coerce us to hold them to be a corporation, and, therefore, we are not disposed to unsettle the practice, and we think that in the present case the defendants were properly sued. If it is suggested that any inconvenience may arise from such a view, it must be for the Legislature to remedy it.

PENNEFATHER, B.—There is nothing in the 9 Geo. 4, to make it necessary to hold these commissioners to be a corporation in order to effectuate the object of the Legislature, and there are many provisions inconsistent with that view.

Motion refused.

HAYDEN v. O'RYAN.—May 31.

Practice—Amendment of return to Sci. Fa.

The Court will, as of course, direct the sheriff's return to a sci. fa. to be amended, where by mistake there was a return of nil instead of service.

Mr. Hemphill, on behalf of the plaintiff, applied that the return to the scire facias in this case might be amended. The judgment was marked in Hilary term, 1847, and scire facias issued last Easter term. The defendant resided in the county of Tipperary, the venue of the action in which the judgment had been recovered. Agreeably to the practice of the Court, the scire facias was served on the defendant, and affidavit accordingly. By mistake, a return of nil, instead of service, was indorsed on the scire facias. The officer on this return refused to allow the judgment of revivor to be marked. It is a mere formal amendment, and no party can be prejudiced.

PER CURIAM.—Take the order.

BROADBENT v. POTTER.—June 8th.

Practice.—The general rule of 25th April, 1801*—

Filing declaration.—Nunc pro tunc.

Where the last day for entering appearance to a writ was the 1st of June, which was also the last day in Trinity Term for filing a declaration in as to entitle plaintiff to a judgment or a plea as of that term, and notice of the appearance was not served on the defendant until the following day, in consequence of which delay the plaintiff lost his opportunity of declaring in time; the Court granted liberty to the plaintiff to file a declaration, and enter the rules to plead nunc pro tunc, as of the 1st of June, and the costs of the motion.

Mr. J. Dunne moved that the plaintiff might be at liberty to file a declaration and enter the rules to plead as of the first of June. The defendant had appeared on the 1st of June, but, in violation of the rule, did not serve notice of appearance till the 2nd of June, the plaintiff consequently lost his opportunity of declaring in time. The defendant's attorney excused himself by stating that he had mislaid the copy of the capias, and, therefore, could not enter the appearance.

Mr. R. Ferguson for the defendant.—The plaintiff was not placed in any worse position by our laches, for we had till 9 o'clock, P. M. on the 1st of June to serve the notice of an appearance, and, if served up to that time, it would have been perfectly regular, by 32nd General Order. That would have been too late for the plaintiff to have filed his declaration on the 1st of June, so that he has not been damaged. [Counsel also referred to Ryder v. Stubbs, (2 L. Rec. O. S. 496; Moore & Lowry's Rules, 166.)]

PIGOTT, C.B.—The rule of the Court is express. We must hold practitioners to a bona fide observance of those rules, and as the defendant here seems to have acted so as to retard his adversary, we must hold him to the strict rule.

Motion granted, with costs.

* Saturday, 25 April, 1801.—"It is ordered by the Court, that where the plaintiff's attorney serves a common law subpoena, he shall sign the same with his proper name, and the place of his residence in the city of Dublin, or in default thereof that such service shall be considered null and void; and further, that where the defendant's attorney enters an appearance, he shall serve the plaintiff's attorney either in person or at the place of his residence with notice thereof, or in default thereof, that such appearance shall be considered null and void."

ERRATA.—In page 256, after the words "The learned judge reported the facts as follows," insert "The judge having charged the jury, and jury having retired to consider their verdict, the counsel for the defendant prayed for, and took time to consider their exceptions, and the jury having returned, and said they found for the plaintiff, and having been discharged, the counsel for defendants then, and before the said verdict was recorded, excepted to the said direction of the learned judge."

COURT OF CHANCERY.

MAHONEY v. O'CONNELL.—June 9.

Practice—Subpœna to hear judgment.

Under the 94th rule, ten days must intervene between the day of the service of the subpœna to hear judgment, and the first day of the ensuing term.

In this cause publication had passed on Thursday the 10th May, and the subpœnas to hear judgment were issued and served on the same day. Trinity Term commenced on Tuesday the 22nd May. The officer of the court refused to set down the cause to be heard in Trinity Term, alleging that the subpœnas were not issued in time. The plaintiff petitioned the Lord Chancellor that the cause might be ordered to be set down.

Mr. R. Greena, Q.C. for the petitioner, contended that the subpœnas had been served in time. The 94th rule required the subpœna to hear judgment to be made returnable on the first day of the next ensuing term, and though the 2nd rule orders the computation of time to be exclusive of holidays, and of the first day, it orders it to be inclusive of the last, in which case the subpœnas were issued in time.

Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C. and Mr. Sergeant O'Brien.—The plaintiff was not in time. At-gen. v. Ball, (9 L. E. R. 463), though upon a different rule—the 86th—decides the construction of this. The subpœna must be served ten days before the first day of term, and exclusive of the day of service, and of the two intervening Sundays; these were served but nine days before. The same point was decided in Rees v. Hereford, (3 B. & Ald. 581.)

Mr. Berkeley in reply.—Attorney-General v. Ball shows that there is a distinction between the 86th and the 94th order. In the 86th rule the words are “ten days at least,” here the words “at least” are omitted. Ex parte Farquhar, (1 Mont. & M.A. 7). The word “before” cannot alter the construction—it only shows the direction in which the time is to be calculated.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—There is some doubt about this case. The 86th rule specifies that the notice shall be served ten days at least, not before the examination, but before the day named for commencing the examination. The courts in England have taken a distinction between “days” and “days at least.” In Ray v. Shropshire, (8 A. & E. 173), Littledale, J., says, “We must abide by what has been decided, though it appears to me that a day is a day, whether at least be added or left out.” Whoever discovered that distinction, had at least the merits of great ingenuity. However, I have made inquiry from the officers of the court, and find that the construction which has been put on this rule in the office, is that which has been put on it here. It is perhaps better to follow that practice than to disturb it. I believe that to be the true construction.

No rule on the petition, without costs to either party.

Chancery Petition, book 3, p. 117.

ROLLS COURT.

PHIBBS v. FARRELL.—April 28.

Practice—Motion by Receiver to let lands in the possession of a defendant.

Although in general a motion to let lands in the occupation of a defendant should not be made by a receiver, yet where a receiver having advanced a sum to pay head rent, and save the lands from eviction, obtained an order to set lands in possession of the defendant, the court refused to set the order aside, upon the ground of its having been obtained upon a motion of the receiver.

In this case the bill was filed to raise part of a charge of £800, of which £200 was vested in the plaintiff.

In July, 1848, P. Phibbs, the former receiver, passed his final account, and the sum of £95 14s. 5d. appeared due by him. Shortly afterwards, H. Boyd was appointed receiver; and at the time of his appointment, considerable sums having been permitted to accrue due, on account of head rent, ejectments were brought, and the habere executed at the suit of Lord Aldborough, the head landlord. In order to save the lands from eviction before the time for redemption expired, the receiver advanced the sum of £117 10s. 3d. pursuant to a consent whereby said advance, with interest thereon, was to be a salvage demand upon said lands.

Arrears of head rent still remaining due, on the 16th day of April, 1849, the receiver obtained an order that the part of the lands in the possession of the defendant, W. Farrell, should be let. This was an application on the part of the defendant, W. Farrell, that this order should be set aside.

Mr. R.C. Walker, Q.C. and Mr. P. Blake for the defendant Farrell.—This order which we seek to set aside was obtained upon the application of the receiver. In Wrixon v. Vise, (5 L. E. R. 276,) it is laid down that the receiver has no right to bring forward a motion, which should be made by the plaintiff, and the application was refused with costs on that ground; also in Bruce v. Blennerhasset, (ibid note), a similar application made by the receiver was refused, although he was required to make it by the plaintiff who served him with notice that he would hold him responsible for any rent lost by his delay; besides, in the present case, the demand sought to be raised by this suit is small, and the profit rent over which the receiver is already appointed amounts to £320 per annum, and there is also a sum due by the former receiver.

Mr. Hughes, Q.C. and Mr. W. Woodroffe contra.—The objection that the motion was made by the receiver does not apply, as a sum was advanced by him to save the lands from eviction; he thus was placed in the position of a first incumbrancer. There is still an arrear of head rent due, and if this order is set aside, the receiver may have some difficulty in recovering his demand.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—With respect to the objection that this order which is sought to be set aside, was obtained upon the motion of the receiver, I do not think the observations of the late

Master of the Rolls, in the case which has been referred to, apply. I entirely concur in the view taken by him; and in the case of Ireland v. Bado (7 Beav. 55,) it is also laid down that a receiver ought not to originate any proceeding in a cause, and any necessary application should be made by the parties to the suit, and the general rule is, that the receiver is not to apply to set lands in the possession of a defendant; he has no interest in the matter, and should not, in his character as receiver, originate such a motion. I am prepared to follow the case of Wrixon v. Viss (5 I. E. Rep.), and will not make any order on such application by receivers; but I do not apprehend that because a person happens to be in the situation of receiver he is on that account to lose rights acquired by him in another capacity, and in the present case there is no imputation whatever on the conduct of the receiver, who, under a consent signed by the parties in the cause, advanced a sum of money to redeem the lands, and this advance is the first charge on them. The receiver is thus in the position of a first incumbrancer, and does not come to the court for the purpose of making costs; so far therefore, I consider the objection technical, and will not set aside the order on that ground. In general the court will not set lands in the possession of a defendant, unless the circumstances of the case are such as to require it; but the defendant must shew that it is not necessary to do so. In this case the total rent is £490, the head rent £280, and if £90 be recovered from the former receiver, I think I am justified in permitting the portion of the lands formerly in the occupation of the defendant, to remain in his possession, and by setting aside the order of the 16th April, I do not think I will endanger the security of the receiver.

His Honor made the following order:—

"It appearing to the court that the gross rent payable out of the lands over which the receiver was appointed in this cause, is £495 10s. 7½d. a-year, or thereabouts, and that the head rents payable are £230 19s. 3d., leaving a profit rent of £264 11s. 4½d. a-year, and it appearing that a year's head rent is due to Lord Lorton, up to and including the 25th day of March last, amounting to £152 6s. 11½d., and that there is a sum of £116 6s. 2d. due to Lord Aldborough for head rent, up to and for the 1st day of May, 1849, and making together the sum of £268 12s. 3½d. and it appearing to the court, having regard to the proceedings by the sureties of the late receiver, that there will probably be a fund at the end of twelve months arising from said profit rent of £264 11s. 4½d., and the sum to be received from said sureties, which will be sufficient to pay off said arrear of head rent of £268 12s. 3d., and that the profit rent from and after the said period of twelve months, will be properly applicable to put in a course of payment the sum of £117 advanced by the present receiver to redeem the premises, let the order, of the 16th April, 1849, be set aside without prejudice to the receiver renewing the present motion if he can shew that payment of said sum of £117 is likely to be delayed unreasonably, endangered by the non-payment of the profit rent, and let the receiver have his costs of said order of the 16th of April, 1849, and of this motion as costs in this cause, and let the defendant abide his own costs of this motion."

Lik. 284, fo. 25.

BELCHER v. BELCHER. PHILAN HENSTFERT; HENNESSY.—April 28.

Practice—Defendant appointed Receiver in a cause.

Mr. Drury, on behalf of R. Mortimer, moved that he might be discharged as receiver, and that it should be referred to the Master to appoint a receiver in his place.

Mr. Wall, for the plaintiffs in the third cause, moved that a consent in that cause, that Thomas Izod, a defendant, might be appointed receiver. The consent was signed by several of the parties in the cause, and notice had been served on the other parties. Mr. Izod was entitled to a day upon the estate, and, in a certain event, would become entitled to part of the property in right of his wife.

His Honor made the following order:—

"Let said R. Mortimer, the receiver in the third cause, be discharged as such receiver, and in pursuance of said consent thereon, let the said Thomas Izod, a defendant in the first and third cause, be appointed receiver in the room and stead of said R. Mortimer, on his entering into security by recognizance, &c."

Lik. 284, fo. 16.

O'BRIEN v. BERNARD, April, 28th.

Receiver—Distress—Replevin.

The Court will not make an order to stay proceedings by a tenant in a replevin suit unless it has been some irregularity therein, and the receiver is likely to be defeated on technical grounds.

In this case, on the 14th of March, the receiver was distrained for rents, and notice of distress was served, and in six days after replevins were issued by the tenants whose lands had been seized. It did not appear that any rent had been paid to the receiver, or tenancy admitted.

Mr. Butt, Q. C., on behalf of the receiver, moved that the tenants might be restrained from proceeding in the replevin suits. The proceedings by the receiver have been perfectly regular.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I cannot decide on replevin suits. In cases where the receiver is likely to be defeated on a technical ground, or there has been any mistake or error in his proceedings, I may make such an order as you now seek; but here everything has been perfectly regular, and if I was to make the order, it would be deciding the replevin suit.

BELAS v. NORRIS.—June 4th.

Costs—Retainer—Solicitor.

The case of In re Bracy, (14 L. J. Ch. 299.) where it was held that under a common order directing the reference of a solicitor's bill for taxation, the Taxing Master has jurisdiction to decide a question of retainer, will not be followed in this Court.

This was an application to set aside an attachment issued against Mr. Henry, the plaintiff in one of the causes, for not furnishing an undertaking to tax costs, which by order of the 8th of May he was directed to do when required. Mr. Henry objected to give the requisition, on the ground that he was not liable for the costs as Mr. Wilson had not been retained as his solicitor.

Mr. W. Smyth, for Mr. Wilson, contended that he might have furnished the requisition, preserving his right to dispute the retainer before the Master, and cited In re Bracy, (9 Jur. 417, and 14 L. J. Ch. 299,) according to which case the Taxing Master, under a common order of reference of a solicitor's bill for taxation, has jurisdiction to decide the question of retainer, except as to those items in respect of which the petitioner has in his petition admitted the retainer.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS said he would not act upon the authority of that case.

Mr. Smyth then proceeded to give evidence of retainer.

SCOTT v. HARMANN.—June, 14.

Practice—Receiver—Security.

Mr. William Henderson moved that the receiver appointed in this cause might be at liberty to give security by recognizance, himself in £7,500, and three securities in £15,000, in the aggregate ones in £10,000, and other two in £2,500 each. In the case of Pigott v. Batten in this Court in March, 1849, an order was made similar to that which we now seek, and the amount of the security was less than in the present case.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—It is contrary to the practice of the Court to make such an order as this. In some cases, however, where the amount of the security required was very large such orders have been made. I think in this case I may make the order.

CAMPBELL v. BROWN.—June 14th.

Practice—Receiver—Security.

The Court will not make an order giving liberty to a receiver to give security by a guarantee society.

This was an application that the receiver might be directed to give additional security in the place of one of his sureties, who had left the country in embarrassed circumstances.

Mr. O'Donnell, for the receiver, asked his Honour whether, in the event of there being any difficulty in procuring security, he might be at liberty to give security by means of the guarantee societies, as he understood the banks were in the habit of accepting their security.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS stated that he would not alter the established practice of the COURT.

CLANMORRIS AND ANOTHER v. LAMBERT.

June 8th and 9th.

Process—Statute of Limitations—Amendments.

*A plaintiff having sued out writs of capias ad respondendum against an absent defendant, and having duly filed and continued them, pursuant to the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 7, in order to defeat the bar of the statute of limitations, will be permitted, on payment of costs, to amend formal errors in the endorsements, return, and form of the said writs, even after plea of the statute of limitations pleaded by the defendant, provided he has substantially complied with the provisions of the former enactment.

This was an application by the plaintiffs to amend the several writs of capias ad respondendum issued and filed in this cause, pursuant to the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, sec. 7, in the particulars hereinafter mentioned. The plaintiffs had commenced against the defendant an action of assumpsit, for the recovery of the amount of certain promissory notes, which fell due in the year 1842, and the latter had pleaded the statute of limitations. The plaintiffs had issued the first of the above series of writs within six years from the accruing of the cause of action, and having been unable to effect service on the defendant, had sought to keep alive their remedy by continuing the proceedings pursuant to the statute. The following are the respective dates of the issuing, teste, return-day, and time of filing, of the several writs in question:—

* 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 7, enacts, that "in order to prevent the operation of any statute of limitation, in bar of the cause of action of any plaintiff in cases in which such cause of action would be barred, unless a writ of process issued and was continued for that purpose, every writ or process may be continued by alias and pluries, as the case may require, if any defendant therein named may not have been arrested or held to bail thereunder or served therewith; provided always, that no first writ shall be available to prevent the operation of any statute whereby the time for the commencement of the action may be limited, unless the defendant shall be arrested or held to bail thereunder, or served therewith, or proceedings to or towards outlawry shall be had thereupon, or unless such writ, and every writ (if any) issued in continuation of a preceding writ shall be returned non est inventus, and entered of record within one calendar month after the expiration of the return of such writ or process, including the day of such expiration; and unless every writ issued in continuation of a preceding writ shall be issued within one calendar month after the expiration of the preceding writ, and shall contain a memorandum endorsed thereon or subscribed thereto, specifying the day of the date of the first writ, such return non est inventus—in process not bailable, in case of non-service thereof, to be made by the plaintiff or his attorney suing out the same, and signed by him."

Writ issued.	Tested.	Returnable.	Filed.
1. June, 9	June, 1	June, 16	June 27, 1848
2. June, 27	June, 16,	Nov. 1	Nov. 28, 1848
3. Nov. 28	Nov. 25, 1848	Jan. 10	Jan. 26, 1849
4. Jan. 13, 1849	Nov. 25, 1848	Jan. 20, 1849.

The writs had been all duly issued, and had been filed, (except the last, to which the defendant had appeared,) within the period prescribed by law. The plaintiff's had, however, omitted to endorse on the second, third, and fourth writs the tests and date of the return day of the first of the series. It was apprehended that for want of such endorsements a replication to the defendant's plea of the continuance of proceedings commenced anterior to the bar of the statute of limitations, might fail. An application was accordingly made to the Court, early in the present term, for leave to amend in this respect. Several English cases were cited. As, however, the power of the Court to allow such amendments was more fully canvassed on the occasion of the second application, and the question was therein debated more at large, it will not be necessary to say more with respect to the first, than that it was allowed, the Court considering the authorities to be in the plaintiff's favour.

At the hearing of the motion, the defendants insisted on the existence of other informalities in the proceedings, but the Court were of opinion that these objections were irrelevant to the question then before them. It appeared that the writs subsequent to the first were in the form of originals, instead of running in alias and pluries style respectively. The return of the writ of the 1st of June was, that "The within-named defendant does not reside in the county of Galway." To the writ tested June 16th, it was returned that "The within-named defendant was not to be found in the county of Galway;" and to that of November 25th, that "The defendant is not to be found in the county of Galway to answer."

Mr. Fitzgibbon, Q. C., on the part of the plaintiffs, this day moved for liberty to amend the subsequent writs, by inserting in the second the words "as we before commanded you," and in the third and fourth, the words "as we often before commanded you;" also to amend the return of the writ tested the 1st of June, by expunging the words "does not reside," and by inserting in their place the words "is not found;" and to add to said return, and to those of the writs of the 16th of June, and 25th of November, the words "within mentioned." We seek for the amendment of mere formal slips. Culverwell v. Nugee, (4 D. & L. 30—Alderson, B.); Horton v. Inhabitants of Stamford, (1 C. & M. 773); Williams v. Williams, (10 M. & W. 174); Frodsham v. Round, (4 Dowl. P. C. 569.)

Mr. Joy, Q. C., (with him Mr. Andrew Vance), contra.—The words of sec. 7 are mandatory, not directory. The Queen's Bench and Common Pleas in England have entirely disapproved of the decisions of the Exchequer on this head, and the latter court has latterly retracted. Higgs v. Mortimer, (1 Ex. R. 711.) The return to these writs has not been made by the sheriff, or any officer of the court, but by the attorney of the party. We have already pleaded the statute of limitations, and have acquired a vested right, which it is now sought to divest. The object of the legislature will be frustrated if this application be granted. Brennan v. Monahan, (7 I. L. R. 545, note); Campbell v. Smith, (5 C. B. 196.); 1 Tidd's Practice, 9th Ed. 162, MSS. case, Benson v. King, cited ib.; Roberts v. Bate, (6 Ad. & Al. 778.)

June 9.—Mr. Andrew Vance resumed the argument against the motion.—This is more in the nature of an application to issue fresh writs, and would have the effect of repealing the act. The courts have laid down the principle that they will not amend, in cases where an amendment would not have been allowed before the act. The first amendment asked for, is to make a formal return of non est inventus. Harris qui tam v. Woodford, (6 T. R. 617). The second application is to convert the subsequent writs into an alias and pluries. Kenworthy v. Peppiat, (4 B. & Ald. 288.) The merits of the application are beside the question.

Mr. Fitzgibbon, Q. C. in reply.—It is quite plain that a return of non est inventus was intended. Bilton v. Clapperton, (9 M. & W. 473, S. C.; 1 Dowl. 386, N. S.); Rennie v. Bruce, (2 D. & L. 946—51—per Coleridge, J.) The court will amend at their discretion for the furtherance of justice. R. v. Mayor and Burgesses of Grampound, (7 T. R. 701.) The attorney of the plaintiff acted under the direction of the officer of the court. [Blackburne, C. J.—I deny that he had any right to consult the officer of the court upon the construction of an act of parliament. He ought to have consulted counsel.] Kirk v. Dalby, (6 M. & W. 636); Eccles v. Cole, (8 M. & W. 537.) The courts in England have deliberately acceded to such applications. A line has been definitely drawn by courts of law, with respect to making amendments, and what we seek are within it. Neovius v. Hughes, (9 Ir. L. Rep. 504.) The courts in England did, it is true, make a resolution against amendments in such matters, but they were forced to abandon it.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—Were the present application a res nova, I should feel considerable hesitation in departing from or interfering with the express terms of the statute. There is, however, authority for granting this motion, the courts in England having, in cases similar in character to the present, where the bar of the statute would otherwise have interfered, allowed the parties to correct their slips, just as in other matters of form they have exercised a jurisdiction for the furtherance of justice. I feel bound by their authority, but I am not prepared to go further. The plaintiffs may therefore amend on payment of costs.

CRAMPTON, J.—I concur with my Lord Chief Justice, and think that the amendment should be allowed on the terms. It is quite plain upon this motion, as it has been discussed, that it was the intention of the party to comply with all the requisites which the statute makes necessary in order to prevent the operation of the statute of limitations; it is plain that within the one calendar month all the necessary steps were substantially taken by the plaintiffs' attorney, and the necessity of this application arises not out of an omission by the plaintiffs to do what was required, but by the default of the attorney in not entering on the writs the steps which had actually been taken. Now I agree that there is danger in our departing from the terms of the act; but the consideration that the refusal of an amendment in a matter not of substance but of form, would have the effect of barring a valuable remedy, disposes the court to grant this application. There is, moreover, authority for every branch of this motion. With respect to the return that the party "did not reside" within the county, it is quite plain that this was a mere slip, which had the sheriff made, the court would have ordered an amendment. So also with respect to the amendment of the writs themselves in point of form, and all we are called upon to do is to supply such words for the sake of doing substantial justice between the parties. I am also influenced by another consideration, which is, that our refusal of this motion would tend to exonerate the real debtor, the defendant, and toonerate the attorney for the slip which he has happened to make. PERRIN and MOORE, J.J. concurred.

Motion granted on payment of the costs thereof, and of the amendment; the defendant to be at liberty to amend his pleas.

COMMON PLEAS.

MACKRILL v. DUNLOP.—June 9.

Libel—Change of venue on special grounds.

In an action for libel this court will not change the venue upon special grounds, if issue be not joined upon all the counts in the declaration.

Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q. C., with Mr. Coffey, for defendant, moved to change the venue from the county Louth to the city of Dublin. The action was for a libel alleged to have been published in a pamphlet by defendant, reflecting upon the general management of the affairs of the Dundalk and Enniskillen Railway Company, and containing certain comments having particular reference to the plaintiff, Sir John Macneill, the engineer of the Company. The defendant's affidavit stated, that he could not have a fair trial in Dundalk, as Lord Roden—who was a director of the Company, and whose conduct the defendant, in his capacity of shareholder, had made the subject of comment and censure—was the owner of that town, and possessed considerable influence over the inhabitants, the majority of whom were his tenants, and acted as jurors; and that several of the directors of the Company, and the plaintiff himself, had residences, and great influence amongst the class of persons who were generally summoned on the record panel of the county Louth. Counsel proposed to refer to the pleadings to shew that a fair trial could not be had in Dundalk. [Mr. Whiteside, Q. C., for plaintiff, objected to a reference to the pleadings, as the notice of motion did not refer to them.] [Torrens, J.—I think the pleadings may be referred to, to shew whether the case is a proper one to change the venue or not.] [Jackson, J.—In a motion to change the venue, the court will presume that the pleadings are before it, even though the notice of motion omit to say they would be relied on.] Mr. Fitzgerald, Q. C., read passages from the alleged libel and from the defendant's affidavit to show that the case would be more fairly tried in Dublin than elsewhere, where all the witnesses resided, and where all the Company's books were kept.

Mr. Whiteside, Q. C. contra.—This motion ought to be refused with costs. In the first place issue is not joined. [Torrens, J.—If that be so the motion must be refused I apprehend, unless there be clear authority on the other side. There may be a demurrer filed yet.]

Mr. Fitzgerald, Q. C.—Issue is joined on some of the counts, but not on others, although it might be more regular to have it so. Boyce v. Smith, before the Court of Exchequer, (2 I. L. R. 366,) decides that the venue may be changed before issue joined on all the counts.

TORRENS, J.—There must be a perfect record; and if issue be not joined on all the pleas, it cannot be perfect. We are of opinion that the motion must be refused with costs.*

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

MANDEVILLE v. EYRE.—June 4th.

Practice—Service of Copias on Solicitor of a Person out of the Jurisdiction.

Where lands were by deed conveyed to a trustee resident in England, on certain trusts, and amongst others to receive the rents thereof, and out of the said rents to pay the headrents payable out of one of the denominations of lands comprised in that deed, called East Clonkilty, and by that deed power was given to the trustee to appoint a law and land agent in this country for the purpose of carrying out the trusts of the said deed, and of paying the said rents. The Court substituted service of the copias on the land and law agent.

This was an application to make absolute a conditional order that the service had been deemed good. The defendant was a trustee under a deed of trust vesting certain lands, the property of the Earl of Kingston, in Eyre, upon certain trusts. Eyre residing in England, the process was served on the Messrs. Sadlier, his solicitors in this country. The action was for the head-rent of a denomination of land contained in the trust deed, and was brought by the head landlord against Eyre. It was admitted in the affidavit of Sadlier, that he acted as the solicitor of Eyre, in respect to the estates of the Earl of Kingston contained in the deed, but it stated that this particular denomination had been always in the possession of Lord Kingston, and in answer to a statement in the affidavit on which the application was made, stating that he, Sadlier, had on a former occasion paid the headrent of this very denomination, he stated that he had paid it on account of Lord

* Doherty, C. J. absent.

Kingston. The proof that this denomination was included in the trust deed was this: the affidavit stated on belief that it was so, and a notice had been served to produce the deed, for the purpose of satisfying the Court that this denomination was not in the deed, and the deed was not produced.

Mr. John Pennefather moved that the conditional order should be made absolute. The case of Phelan v. Johnson, (8 I. L. R. 529,) is an authority for granting this motion. It must be taken that the very denomination for which this action is brought is included in the deed, and the Messrs. Sadlier have authority from Eyre to act in respect of those trust premises, and they have on a former occasion paid rent on this denomination.

Mr. Scully, Q.C., contra.—The case of Phelan v. Johnson has gone too far. [Pennefather, B.—The Court cannot allow you to argue as if Phelan v. Johnson were not law. You must shew, if you can, that this case does not come within its principle.] This case seeks to carry the principle much farther than Phelan v. Johnson. It was laid down there that the agent must be strictly one for the subject matter of the suit. The Court cannot presume that the Messrs. Sadlier have any authority from Mr. Eyre to do any act in respect to the denomination, which has been always in the possession of Lord Kingston. Waterhouse v. Hatfield, (9 I. L. R. 38;) Fowler v. Hemsworth, (10 I. L. R. 77;) McCann v. Thomson, (11 I. L. R. 201.)

Mr. Pennefather, in reply, referred to the notice calling upon the Messrs. Sadliers to produce the deed, which he now contended he was entitled to assume contained a power enabling Mr. Eyre to appoint a solicitor for those very lands, that deed authorizing the trustees to appoint both law and land agents for these estates, which appointment the Messrs. Sadliers confessedly held.

PENNEFATHER, BARON.—This case comes before us on a motion to have the service already had in this case deemed good, and it is made on this ground, that, by a deed executed in the year 1841, the estates of Lord Kingston were conveyed to Eyre as trustee, with certain powers, amongst them one to appoint a solicitor; and there is no doubt that the Messrs. Sadlier were appointed land and law agents for all lands in that deed, and to defend all actions relating to those lands. Now, if this action, which is brought by Mr. Mandeville, be brought indisputably respecting lands which the Messrs. Sadlier have authority to act for, there could be no question, either at the bar or on the part of the Court, as long as Phelan v. Johnson is law, that this motion should be granted. We are not now considering whether this action, in all its parts, can be sustained against Mr. Eyre. Now, as incident to the authority to defend the lands conveyed to the trustees must be an authority to defend every denomination contained in the deed. If the action were brought by a stranger, for the recovery by ejectment of that denomination of the land, surely the authority would extend to defend that ejectment. It is said that the lands of Clonkilly are in the possession of Lord Kingston, not that they are not included in the deed. It has been fairly argued that the monies paid by Mr.

Sadlier were paid out of the general moneys of the estate.

RICHARDS, BARON.—I concur in the judgment of Baron Pennefather, and I think this motion should be granted. Mr. Eyre has appointed Mr. Sadlier to act for him in the trusts of the deed, and not for Lord Kingston, and there is a provision in the deed that Lord Kingston shall remain in possession of a certain denomination of the land, and it appears that Messrs. Sadlier paid the headrent of this very denomination out of the general rents of the estate; and this is stated in the affidavit, and it is not denied; but, by way of denial, it is stated by Mr. Sadlier that this denomination is in the sole possession of Lord Kingston, and that any payments he made were on account of the Earl of Kingston. Surely they must have been made on account of the Earl of Kingston, but he does not deny that he made them as the agent of Eyre, or that they were not paid under one of the trusts of the deed. I think the facts of this case are clearly within the principle of Phelan v. Johnson.

LEFROY, BARON.—If I could satisfy myself that the inference which my brother Judges draw from the affidavit was correct, I should not differ from them on the subject of this motion; but I cannot come to the conclusion that the Messrs. Sadlier have authority to act in respect of the subject-matter of this action. The action is brought against a trustee, and thereby he will be personally liable; and by substitution of service on the Messrs. Sadlier, we should place them in a very difficult position; is it made certain that those persons are authorized to appear for Mr. Eyre? They must either appear or let judgment go by default. But it is said they have general authority, and this I think fair; but I think it is going too far, to infer that this extends to the land in the possession of Lord Kingston; but it is said that they paid rent in respect of this very land under the trusts of the deed. I think, giving a fair measure of interpretation to the affidavit of an officer of this Court, when Mr. Sadlier swears that he paid this rent for Lord Kingston, the negative must be inferred, that he did not pay it as the agent of Eyre. Now, do the facts of this case bring it within the authority of Phelan v. Johnson, where the rule was laid down strictly and properly? I think it is stretching the rule too far. The difference between us is, as to the interpretation of affidavit, not the law.

LESSEE LYONS v. WILKINSON.—June 9th.

Practice—Judgment as in case of non-suit—Line of attorney for costs, proceedings being put on end to without his knowledge.

Mr. J. T. Ball moved for liberty to enter judgment as in case of non-suit. The action was in ejectment, and was at issue three terms.

Mr. James Kernan, contra.—The defendant in this action went to America, and left a herd in possession, who, by the authority of the defendant, gave up the possession. Under those circumstances, where the object of the suit was gained, the court not permit the attorney to get a judgment for purpose of costs only.

Bolt, in reply, contended that the prog with respect to giving up the land having without his knowledge, the attorney had a to proceed.

PENNEFATHER, B.—The attorney has no lien for judgment. Let the motion be refused costs, to be paid by the attorney.

SEE DE CLIFFORD v. EJECTOR.—June 11.

Killer applied for liberty to amend the entry rule for judgment in this case. The declara-ejectment contained two demises—one in me of the Baroness de Clifford, the other in f Sir Josias Rowley. The practice in the is to enter the rule in the name of the lessor d in the first demise. By mistake the rule een entered in the name of Lessee de Clifford ey. On discovering the error, the officer re-to allow judgment to be marked. The preapplication was to amend rule entered.

CURLAN.—Take a conditional order to be d on all the parties served with the ejectment se to be shewn in ten days.

DORE v. —

Practice.—Money lodged in Court under plea of tender.

defendant bring money into Court under a plea tender, and the plaintiff do not take it out of ort until the defendant establishes a right to a ss demand for the costs of a judgment in the tion in his favour, the Court will direct the ney to be paid to him in liquidation of that demand.

was an action of assumpsit. Pleas: Tender as rt, General issue as to the residue. The sum d in the plea of tender and lodged in court, plain-attorney drew without any application, as if it been lodged in discharge of the action generally.
defendant obtained judgment for want of a re-tion to the plea of tender, and, as in case of uit, on the general issue. On an application, Court ordered the plaintiff to bring back the ey he had improperly drawn, which being done, fr. D.R. Kane, Q. C. now moved that it be apd to the payment of the defendant's costs which exceeded the sum lodged in Court. [He cited Le w v. Cooke, (1 Bos. & Pul. 332.)]
fr. Charles R. Barry, contra, cited *Calow v.
Went*, (Salk. 597; 2 Ferg. Pr. 932.)

Major, C. B.—The Court is of opinion that the defendant should have this money. My hesitation is from what appears to me to be the settled set of paying money into Court under a plea of tender, that the defendant is and always has been bound to pay, and that admission the Court requires be vouched by the lodgment of the sum tendered.
The defendant thereby admits the plaintiff to be right, and it is the same as if before action brought had said, whatever be the fate of the action the plaintiff is entitled to recover the sum tendered.

This proposition is distinctly stated in Arch. Prac.
204, Ed. 1826, that the lodgment of money under a plea of tender is stronger than that of a lodgment in discharge of the action; both admit the debt. I see no reason for the distinction as to the mode of taking the money out of Court, but it is accounted for by the rule of the judges, which considers the money paid in discharge of the action as if it were struck out of the declaration. This money having been improperly drawn out of Court by the plaintiff, must be considered as if never received by him.

PENNEFATHER, B.—In this case money was paid in under a plea of tender, there is no sound distinction between this case and that of money paid into Court after action brought in discharge of the action.
In both the plaintiff is entitled before the defendant establishes his right to a cross demand. If the money be paid in under a plea of tender, it must be applied for by motion or notice; if lodged after action brought, and in discharge of the action, it is considered as if it were struck out of the declaration, and the plaintiff is entitled to draw without any notice. It appears to me, from the authorities as well as from the practice of the Court, that if the defendant brings in the money under a plea of tender before action brought, the plaintiff has a right to take the money until the defendant establishes a right to a cross demand by verdict or otherwise, not because the plaintiff is not entitled, but because the defendant has established a cross demand; and the Court will distribute the money in their possession in discharge of the defendant's costs. The plaintiff has a right to take the money out of Court, but if he lies by and waits till the defendant establishes a title to what was previously but a contingency, he loses that right. In Le Grew v. Cooke, (1 Bos. & Pul. 332,) cited in argument, Buller, J., says, "I agree, that if the plaintiff be negligent and do not take the money out of Court until after a verdict be passed for the defendant, that the Court will lay hold of it to secure the defendant's costs; and if it could be shewn that the plaintiff was now in that situation, the Court would not let him take out the money without doing justice to the defendant." Cox v. Robinson, (Str. 1027,) and the other authorities were cited in that case, and the deliberate opinion of that learned judge was, that the Court would not do justice by ordering the money to be paid to the plaintiff, while the defendant had shewn an undoubted title to a cross demand. We have been charged with importing equitable principles into our legal decisions. Judge Buller is not liable to a similar charge; he decided on the plainest principles of justice and the strictest principles of law.
I hold this view with great deference to the contrary opinion of my Lord Chief Baron.

RICHARDS, B., concurred.

GREEN v. BLAKE.

Pleading.—Venus—(10 Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 16, Ir.)
In an action against the Sheriff of the county of Galway for a false return, the venue being laid in the county of Wicklow—Held, on general demurrer, that the declaration was sufficient for that stage of the case, as non constat, but that the Sheriff might have made his return in the county of Wicklow.

The action was brought against the Sheriff of the county of Galway, for a false return to a writ of fiat facias. The declaration contained two counts. The venue was laid in the county of Wicklow. General demurrer, on the ground that from the facts appearing upon the face of the declaration, the venue should have been laid in the county of the city of Dublin, or, at all events, in Galway.

Mr. Francis Meagher for demurrer. By the 10 Car. 1, sess. 2, cap. 16,* in all actions against

* "For ease in pleading against many causeless and contentious suits which have been and daily are commenced and prosecuted against sheriffs, justices of peace, mayors, or bayliffs of cities and townes corporate, head-burroughs, portreves, constables, overseers of the poore, tithing-men, collectors of subsidies and fifteenes, and church-wardens and other officers, who for due execution of their offices have been troubled and molested, and still are likely to be troubled and molested, by evil-disposed, contentious persons, to their great charge and discouragement in doing their offices; be it therefore enacted by our Sovereign Lord the King's Majesty, and by the Lords spiritual and temporal, and the Commons, in this Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that if any action, bill, plaint, or suit upon the case of trespass, battery, or false imprisonment shall be brought after the end of this present session of Parliament against any sheriffs, justices of peace, mayor, or bayliffe of any city or towne corporate, head-borough, portreves, constable, tithing-man, overseer of the poore, collector of subsidies or fifteens, church-warden, or any other officer or officers, executing his or their office or offices, and their deputies or any of them, or any other which in their ayde or assistance, or by their commandment, shall doe anything touching or concerning their office or offices, for or concerning any matter, cause, or thing by them or any of them done by virtue or reason of their or any of their office or offices, that the said action, bill, plaint, or suite shall be laid within the county where the trespass or fact shall be done and committed, and not elsewhere. And that it shall be lawful to and for all and every person and persons aforesaid to plead thereunto the general issue, that he or they are not guilty, and to give such special matter in evidence to the jury which shall try the same, which special matter being pleaded, had been a good sufficient matter in law to have discharged the said defendant or defendants of the trespass or other matter laid to his or their charge, and that if upon tryall of any such action, bill, plaint, or suite, the plaintiffe or plaintiffes thereon shall not prove to the jury which shall try the same, that the trespass, battery, imprisonment, or other fact or cause of his, her, or their such action, bill, plaint, or suite, was or were had, made, committed, or done within the county wherein such action, bill, plaint, or suite shall be laid, that then in every such case the jury which shall try the same shall find that the defendant and defendants in every such action, bill, plaint, or suite, not guilty, without having any sheriffs for or concerning any matter done by virtue of their office, the venue shall be laid in the county where the trespass or fact was done or committed. In the case of Collins v. Singleton, (8m. & Batty, 251,) where an action was brought against the Sheriff of Meath, for an escape in meane process, the venue was held to have been improperly laid in the city of Dublin. The venue here ought to have been either in Galway, under the common law rule that a plaintiff may bring his action where any material fact occurred, or under the statute in Dublin, where the return is filed; and this is all that Hennessy v. Synges, (10 Ir. L. Rep. 184,) decides.

Mr. C. Coates and Mr. J. S. O'Callaghan contra.—The objection here if any, has been taken prematurely. In the case of Griffith v. Walker, (1 Wil. 836,) it was held that an action against the sheriff for a false return is transitory, for he may make and deliver his return any where, and that which is false universally so. The averment in the declaration is, "That at the return of the said last mentioned writ, to wit on the 3rd day of November, 1848, to wit, in the county of Wicklow aforesaid, the defendant falsely and deceitfully returned to the said barons, &c., that the said, &c. had not, &c." The demurrer admits the facts as pleaded, and a return in Wicklow by the sheriff of Galway would have been good. [Counsel also relied on Helier v. Hundred of Bunkhurst, (Cro. Car. 211); Carter & Croil's case, (Godbolt, 33); Hennessy v. Synges, (10 Ir. L. Rep. 184); Higgins v. Smith, (1 Hud. & B. 469); Ellis v. Totinham, (Batty, 475).]

PER CURIAM.—The objection to this declaration cannot be sustained on demurrer. The case in Wilson is express on this, that the sheriff may make his return in any county he pleases, and that case is maintained and approved of in Hennessy v. Synges, (10 Ir. L. Rep. 185.) We shall therefore overrule the demurrer, giving the defendant liberty to plead, and the plaintiff to amend his declaration.

Demurrer overruled.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

TER v. LORD LIMERICK; LORD LIMERICK v. HUNTER.—Feb. 17th & 18th, June 19th.

obli Bond—Incumbrance by Remainder-man.

Id horses at prices above their real value to G., young man, entitled to a remainder in tail, as tenant on his father's life estate. G. gave security for the amount of these prices by judgment. A bill filed by a person claiming through G., judgments were ordered to stand as a security for the real value of the horses, although it appeared that the sale had not been merely colourable or for the purpose of raising money.

case came before the Court on pleadings and a. The original bill in these causes was an ordinary creditor bill, filed by R. J. Hunter against Limerick and others, stating a judgment of year 1812, to secure payment of the sum of £2 10s., Irish, obtained by R. Hunter, the father of R. J. Hunter, against Lord Glentworth, father of Lord Limerick, and afterwards assigned to R. J. Hunter by his father, and praying equal accounts and relief on foot of it.

A cross bill was filed by Lord Limerick against R. J. Hunter and Robert Hunter, to be relieved from this judgment, as being given by Lord Glentworth when tenant in tail in expectancy, for inadequacy of consideration. It appeared that Edmund Henry, Earl of Limerick, was in 1808 tenant for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail. In year 1810, Lord Glentworth, his eldest son, and one of the plaintiffs, attained his age, and was till year 1815 wholly dependant on his father for the means of support. Immediately after attaining his age, Lord Glentworth married, thereby much diminishing his father, who only allowed him about £100 per annum till 1815.

Robert Hunter was proprietor and publisher of the Irish Racing Calendar, and a man of experience in "turf matters."

In June, 1812, Hunter had three mares and a colt for sale, all of which animals the bill alleged were of very little value. The bill also alleged, that Lord Glentworth was a person of improvident and extravagant habits, and easily imposed upon. It was alleged, that Hunter, aware of Lord Glentworth's habits and character, and of his considerations of expectancy, formed a design of selling these animals at an extravagant price. It appeared that, by some negotiation, Lord Glentworth purchased three mares and the filly for £2502 10s., and payment of that sum gave to Hunter his bond warrant of attorney, dated the 20th of June, 1812, in the penal sum of £5005, conditioned for payment of £2502 10s., on the day of the death of his father, with interest in the meantime. On the day he entered the judgment on which the original bill was founded. These horses formed the only consideration for the bond and warrant, and it appeared on the evidence that their value was very much below the price charged for them.

By a settlement of the 10th of December, 1814, the estates were re-settled, the new settlement making a provision for the payment of certain antient debts of Lord Glentworth, amongst which, however, this debt was not mentioned. The plaintiff claimed under this settlement. Lord Glentworth died in the life time of his father.

In 1820, and subsequently in 1826, Lord Glentworth and Mr. Hunter entered into certain arrangements, which the plaintiff in the cross cause relied on as a merger of the judgment, and the defendant as a confirmation of it. But the Lord Chancellor was of opinion that they had no such operation.

The bill charged fraud, and that the horses sold were unsound, but the evidence on this part of the case was not satisfactory, and the Lord Chancellor's judgment did not turn upon it.

The answer of Hunter insisted that the horses were sold at a fair price, considering the mode of payment, and denied fraud.

Mr. Brewster, Q.C., (with him Mr. F. Fitzgerald and Mr. Berkeley,) for Hunter.—Inadequacy of value, where there is no fraud, is not a ground for setting aside a sale, even to an expectant heir. All the cases where expectant heirs have received relief, were sales of their estate, loans of money to them, or sales of goods for the purpose of their raising money. Lamplugh v. Smith, (2 Vern. 77;) Whitty v. Price, (ib.) Brooks v. Gally, (2 Atk. 34;) Gwynne v. Heaton, (1 B.C. C. 1;) Coles v. Trecothick, (9 Ves. 234;) Barney v. Beake, (2 Ch. Ca. 137;) *King v. Mr. R. W. Green, Q.C. (with him Mr. Christian, Q.C., and Mr. Jeffcott,) contra, contended that this came within the general principle, and cited Gowland v. De Faria, (17 Ves. 20;) Evans v. Cheshire, (Belt. Sup. Ve. 317;) Chesterfield v. Janssen, (1 Atk. 301, S. C. 2 Ves. 144;) Davis v. Marlborough, (2 Swans, 108;) Twistleton v. Griffith, (1 P. Wms. 310;) *Barney v. Mr. Berkeley.—There was no fraud, nor any thing from which fraud could be implied in the transaction. It was a bona fide sale. A completed sale of this sort has never been set aside where fraud was not involved. Barney v. Beake, (2 Ch. Ca. 137;) Freeman v. Bishop, (Barnard, 15;) Barker v. Vansommer, (1 B. C. Cailliovel*, (1 Ves. 122;) Scott v. Dunbar, (6 Moll. 458.)

Mr. Christian, Q.C. for the defendant.—The position of an expectant heir dealing with his expectancies, is almost like that of infancy. Varnes's case, (2 Freem. 63;) Gwynne v. Heaton, (1 B. C. C. 1;) Edwards v. Brown, (2 Coll. 100.) The case need not rest on fraud. Hicksman v. Smith, (3 Russ. 433;) Bernal v. Donegal, (3 Dow. 151;) Mass v. Royal, (12 Ves. 355.)

Mr. F. Fitzgerald, Q.C., in reply, relied on Barker v. Vansomme, King v. Hamlet. [Lord Chancellor.]—In King v. Hamlet, it does not appear that the goods were sold above their value; they were sold at ordinary shop prices. This is not a common post obit case; the security is for absolute payment, with interest in the meantime. If this had been a sum of money equal to the value of the horses, and such a security given, it could not stand one moment.] Chesterfield v. Janssen. The trade of horse-dealing is so hazardous, that the dealer is entitled to extraordinary profits.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case has been heard at great length. If the Court err, it will not be for want of argument. Some parts of it require further consideration; but I shall state my present view, so far as the case proceeds, on the ground that by the arrangement of 1821 this judgment was satisfied. I cannot accede to the argument of Lord Limerick's counsel, so far as it relates to that arrangement. I think the judgment was not affected, but I do not think it operated as a confirmation. Whatever was the position of Lord Glentworth in 1812, when he entered into this security, that remained till the latest period of his life. The arrangement of 1814 failed to rescue him from his embarrassments, for not long afterwards he was thrown into prison. He seems in 1820, and till the end of his life, to have been in the same position, and on the whole I do not think the transactions of 1820 and 1824 can operate as a confirmation. This is not a post obit bond; it is not like one; it is in form like a common money bond, the term of redemption not being measured by years, but by the life of Lord Limerick, with interest in the meantime. The question is, is the bond to stand for the sum agreed on, or for the real value of the horses? If it had been the case of a promissory note, given under the same circumstances and for the same consideration as this bond, few juries would give a verdict for more than a fair value for the horses. Am I, then, to take the price agreed on as the consideration, or can I go behind the bond to discover the true value?

June 19th.—LORD CHANCELLOR.—The original bill in these causes was filed to raise the amount of a judgment for £5005. Lord Limerick has filed a cross bill, the prayer of which is, "That it may be declared that the said judgment was only a security for the true and actual value of the said mares and filly, and that the said judgment has been satisfied, and that nothing now remains due thereon, and that the said R. J. Hunter may be ordered to cause satisfaction to be entered on the said judgment, or otherwise, if necessary, that the fair and reasonable value of the said mares and filly, at the time of the said sale thereof to the said late Lord Viscount Glentworth, and that what, if anything, is now justly due and owing on the said judgment in respect thereof, may be ascertained under the decree of this honourable Court;" and for consequential directions and general relief. The facts of the case are not many. Lord Glentworth appears to have attained his age in 1810; the precise time is not given; but he appears to have been a person of extravagant habits, finally reducing himself to embarrassment, and at last becoming a prisoner for debt. The plaintiff in the original bill is the son of Mr. Hunter, who in 1812 published the Racing Calendar, and was a dealer in racing horses. In the cross bill it is charged, that Mr. Hunter, having horses which are there represented as being worthless, formed the design of selling them to Lord Glentworth at exorbitant prices, payable at the death of his father, Lord Limerick, with a provision for the payment of interest in the meantime. The allegation in the bill is, that Lord Glentworth, having just attained his age, embarked in the purchase of these horses, and that he was imposed on by Mr. Hunter, that the horses were not worth the money for which credit was given, and that, on the whole, the transaction cannot stand. No question was made on the general principle as to a person in Lord Glentworth's condition. He was in the position of an expectant heir, which from an early period has been held to give a right to the protection of this Court from his own extravagant dealings, whether in plying with or giving security on property in remainder, for inadequate consideration. The doctrine on that subject is spread over many cases, through which I need not now travel. The principle is stated in Peacock v. Evans, (16 Ves. 513,) where Sir William Grant says, "Though inadequacy of consideration between persons who stand upon a precisely equal footing is in this Court of no account, unless from its grossness it is of itself evidence of fraud, yet, under the circumstances in which Evans stood, anything that can be substantially considered an inadequacy is a ground for setting aside the contract." Gowland v. De Faria, (17 Ves. 20,) establishes this, that where it lies on the person dealing with an expectant heir to shew that he has given a fair price. In Aldborough v. Trye, (1 Ves. 5. Cor. 298,) the Lord Chancellor, speaking of that case, says—"There are two propositions, one which was established, and the other supposed to be established, in that case. The one said to be established was, that in a transaction with an expectant heir, it was necessary for the party seeking the benefit of that transaction to show that he gave a fair price;" and lower down in the same page—"Of the policy of that rule it is not my purpose to say anything. That rule has been established in the case of Gowland v. De Faria, and has been recognized since." In one part of the discussion in this case, it was contended that a special position was filled by Mr. Hunter with respect to Lord Glentworth, which disqualified him from having dealings of this sort with him; but nothing of this kind was suggested by the cross bill, and I do not think this case need rest on the position filled by Hunter. The principle which I must apply to this case is that which I have mentioned, if it apply to transactions like this, which is not a sale of a part of the inheritance, and which is not a loan of money, nor of goods to be converted into money. It was contended that a mere sale of goods was not within the principle, and that therefore the plaintiff in the cross bill is not entitled to any relief. The cases relating to loans of money are quite plain, and if I were to consider the value of the animals as so much money, this case would be clear. Waller v. Dalt, (1 Dick. 9, 1 Ch. Ca. 78.) The facts in King v. Hamlet were sufficient to free Mr. Hamlet, on the ground that Mr. King's father, Lord Lorton, was aware of the dealing. That case went much on the doctrine of the protection given to young members of a family dealing behind the back of their parents, and the transaction was upheld for that reason, and because the goods were sold in the course of business, at regular shop prices. There was there nothing to warrant interference, the Court going on those principles, the father being a party, and no extravagant price charged. There are other cases where the dealing was in reality for a loan of money, coloured by an arrangement for the sale of goods. But the question here is, whether the doctrine applies to a case like this, conceding that an extravagant value was put on the animals, and a security taken for it. It was contended that it was justifiable that a security should be taken for them at four times the value of the animals, considering the time the vendor was to lie out of his money, and the risk which he was to run; and without doubt, if the parties stood on equal footing, it is not to be said that the vendor might not put a higher price on his goods for those reasons. But the question arises, whether behind that there is not a principle which will protect persons in the position of Lord Glentworth against circumstances like those. It is necessary to look at some of the early cases, to see whether they do not reach the circumstances of this case. The first to which I shall refer is, Cole v. Gibbons, (2 P. W. 294.) where Lord Talbot said, "That the policy of the nation was to prevent what was a growing mischief in ancient families, that of seducing an heir apparent from a dependance upon his ancestor, who probably would have supported him, and by feeding his extravagancies, tempting him in his father's lifetime to sell the reversion of that estate which was settled upon him, forasmuch as this tended to the manifest ruin of families, therefore the policy of the nation thought fit, though it at first prevailed with some difficulty, to put a stop to so mischievous a practice, by setting aside all these bargains with young heirs for reversions." There the doctrine is applied to sales, as it is in Twistleton v. Griffith, (1 P. W. 310,) where the Lord Chancellor said "he saw no inconvenience in the objection, that at this rate an heir without difficulty could not sell a reversion; this might force him to go home and submit to his father, or to bite on the bridle." Shelley v. Nash, (3 Mad. 232.) The Vice-Chancellor says, that in more modern times it has been considered "that it was a fit rule of policy, to impose upon all who dealt with expectant heirs and reversioners the onus of proving that they had paid a fair price, and otherwise to undo their bargains, and compel a re-conveyance of the property purchased." With regard to fraud, much of the case is founded on the alleged fraudulent design on the part of Hunter, but mixed with it is the question of extravagant price, and as the rule is stated in Bowes v. Heaps, (3 V. & B. 117,) "mere absence of fraud does not necessarily decide the validity of the transaction." In 1 Story Eq. Ju., sec. 348, it is stated that "contracts of a nature nearly resembling post obit bonds have in the cases of young and inexperienced heirs been often relieved against upon similar principles. Thus, where tradesmen and others have sold goods to such persons at extravagant prices, and under circumstances demonstrating imposition or undue advantage, or an intention to connive at secret extravagance and profuse expenditure, unknown to their parents or other ancestors; Courts of Equity have reduced the securities and cut down the claims to their reasonable and just amount." Now, with regard to the doctrine of King v. Hamlet, I think this transaction was not known to Lord Limerick; it is not alleged that it was, and it seems even to have been concealed from him, for when a family settlement made provision for the debts of Lord Glentworth, there was no mention made of this debt. In so far, therefore, as this case rests on the general doctrine, there is that distinction between these cases. Bill v. Price, (1 Ves. 467;) Berny v. Pitt, (2 Ves. 157,) are common cases of post obit. As to the parties who seek this relief, they are entitled to it if Lord Glentworth himself could have had it: that is established in Evans v. Cheshire, (Blet. sup. 317;) Molony v. Lestrangle, (Beat. 406.) Barker v. Vansommer, (1 B. C. C. 149,) was a case of goods sold to be turned into money, and therefore does not apply to the present case; but the Lord Chancellor says—"It is argued by one gentleman that this was a mere sale; that therefore the Court cannot look into it. I allow, that if it was in the common course of trade, it would be so. That was the reason upon which the Court of Exchequer refused relief in the Duke of Lancaster's case." In Gwynne v. Heaton, (1 B. C. C. 9,) it is laid down, that "the heir of a family dealing for an expectancy shall be distinguished from ordinary cases, and an unconscionable bargain made with him shall not only be looked upon as oppressive in the particular instance, and therefore avoided, but as pernicious in principle, and therefore repressed. This must be taken to be the established principle. But it is objected that here the son had no allowance. That circumstance occurred in many of the cases. Nutt v. Hill had everything in its favour; the father was corrupt, it was clear of fraud, save such as arises from inequality only. In Barnardiston v. Lingood, (2 Atk. 133,) and Chesterfield v. Jansen, Lord Hardwicke treated inequality as a mark of fraud. Curwyn v. Milner was perfectly free from fraud; it was £500 to pay £1000 on the decease of either of the parents; he paid the money, and afterwards brought his bill, and was relieved on the same ground with the relief against marriage brokerage bonds. In those cases, fraud is not the ground of relief; it is the example and pernicious consequences." Brooke v. Gally, (2 Atk. 34,) may be distinguished from this case, for there the goods were advanced to an infant, who gave a promissory note for the amount, immediately on coming of age; but there Lord Hardwicke says—"The case the nearest to this is, the imposition upon young heirs in the lifetime of their ancestors, who, though of full age at the time of the fraud, yet, if his necessities, extravagancies, or the severities of his parents made him submit to the imposition, this Court will give relief merely to discourage attempts of this nature." There are, however, some cases very near the present case. Two are in Vernon, which, though not very fully reported, bear on the alleged principle, that a mere sale is not within the general doctrine. The first is Lamplugh v. Smith, (2 Vern. 77.) "The plaintiff, with other young heirs, being drawn in to buy stockings and such like goods at an extravagant price, and to accept of assignments of bad securities, and jointly to enter into securities for the payment of the monies agreed on, the bill was to be relieved against those." There it was declared "that the plaintiff should be liable to so much only as came to his own hands, and should not be answerable for his companions, and therefore referred it to a Master to examine and certify what of the goods came to the plaintiff's own hands, and what was the real value thereof, and on payment thereof, and on re-assigning such of the securities as the plaintiff had, his security was decreed to be delivered up." Whitley v. Price is reported immediately after that case, and is to the same effect. It is stated that there "the plaintiff was likewise a young heir, and had been drawn in to buy ribbands and braided wares, &c., at an extravagant price, and the case being the same in effect with the case immediately preceding, had the like rule." There is nothing in either of these cases to show that it was a dealing to raise money under colour of buying goods; it is simply stated that the plaintiff was drawn in to buy ribbands, &c., at extravagant prices. Freeman v. Bishop, (Barnard, 15,) is reported in a book of little authority, but the facts are very fully reported. "Freeman, being between twenty-two and twenty-three years of age, became acquainted with Bishop, who was a jockey, and during the space of a twelvemonth's time, bought thirteen horses of him. His method was, not to buy above one at a time; but he used to ride them hard, soon grew tired of them, and then re-sold three of them to the defendant, at much lower prices than he contracted for. He paid no money down, but the whole was run upon credit, and at the time that a horse was bought, Bishop frequently lent him a little money too, and then a note was given for the price contracted for the horse, and for the money at the same time; but four of these horses were at high prices; 42 guineas was the price of some of them, and £40 the price of others; however, it was sworn that the horses were not sold to him at a higher price than they were really worth, except two of them, and even as to these, one of them was only sold at about two guineas above the market price, and the other about £3." "The whole money at last amounted to £800, and thereupon he consented to mortgage his reversion." "The bill was brought by Freeman against Bishop, to be relieved against this mortgage, on payment of what was due on account of the horses, and the money that was lent to him." "The Lord Chancellor was of opinion that the mortgage should only stand as a security for what was really due on account for the money lent, and on account of what was due for the horses. To ascertain what was due for the horses, the defendant was to have liberty to bring his quantum meruit; and so his Lordship was pleased to decree accordingly." It is true, that case is reported in a book of little authority, and one which Lord Mansfield said he would not allow to be cited, (2 Burr. 1142;) however, it is also reported, (2 Atk. 39.) Now, there there is a clear admission of an important proposition by Lord Hardwicke, who takes no notice of anything, save that in such a case the Court will enter on an inquiry of the real worth of the goods. Barry v. Banks, (2 Ch. Ca. 139,) was manifestly a colourable sale to raise money, and therefore I shall not lay any stress on it: but, considering the general principle, the position of Lord Glentworth, and the value of the goods, the Court would abandon a part of its duty if it did not put this transaction in the way of inquiry. Here is a man, reckless in expenditure wholly unwarranted by his then property, giving security of a most oppressive character, not for his necessary support, but for the purpose of indulging a wild disposition, without present means, encouraged by another party, who obtained from him securities for £2500, while I cannot discover actual value of more than £500 given for those securities. This Court would give up a valuable jurisdiction, if it refused to grant relief under such circumstances. I do not see why it should abstain from relieving the plaintiff here; the case is much like that of Freeman v. Bishop. It seems, then, that, looking at this part of the case, the plaintiff is entitled to relief, and that the Court, either by reference to the Master or by an issue, will inquire the real value of the animals, though that may be difficult to determine. The plaintiff has failed in sustaining that part of his cross bill which alleges that the new securities put an end to his debt; but I think that nothing which occurred can act as a confirmation of it. Lord Glentworth seems all his life to have been an expectant heir, to have been in the same pecuniary difficulties, and to have been many years a prisoner for debt. Everything relied on as a confirmation of these securities, occurred while he was in prison. The defendant cannot rely on any dealings under those circumstances as confirmation, as it is said in Molony v. LeStrange, (Beatt. 413,) "All acts, to have the effect of confirmation, must be purely voluntary, and done with the intent to ratify that which the party knows he is entitled to disaffirm." In the transactions here there is nothing like such confirmation. While on the one hand, therefore, the plaintiff has not shown that this judgment was satisfied, on the other, Mr. Hunter has failed in proving that it was confirmed. I think it is a case for inquiry, either in the office or before a jury, as to the real value of the horses; and of course I must declare that the judgments can only stand as securities for the sum really due. This case is distinguishable from Peacock v. Bann, for there the original bill, which was dismissed, was to carry into execution an incomplete contract.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—TRINITY TERM.

LESSER DE BURGO v. GABBETT AND ANOTHER.
May, 24, 26, 29, June, 1.

Ejectment—Leasing power—Clause of Surrender—Liberty to cut turf for sale—What shall be considered waste.

Ejectment on the title for the lands of Derryharsna, Derrylusk, Burglashy, and Derrera—

The declaration contained seven demises, all laid on the 27th of March, 1848. The defendants claimed to hold the lands in question under a lease executed by Sir John De Burgho, the father of the principal lessor of the plaintiff, to Joseph Gabbett, bearing date the 23rd of August, 1817, for 999 years, at the annual rent of £100, late currency. The plaintiff impeached the lease, as not being within the leasing power contained in the marriage settlement of Sir John De Burgho. This settlement was dated the 6th of May, 1808, and by it the lands of Drumsally, Drumclogher and Dromalta, Coolready, Coolriery, Castleconnell, Derryusk, Clean Lackah, in the county of Limerick, and the lands of Fairy Hall in the counties of Limerick and Tipperary, were settled to the use of Sir John De Burgho for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. By this settlement, four distinct leasing powers were reserved as to the several denominations of lands contained therein, but the only power that was alleged to warrant the lease in question was the first leasing power, which related to the town and lands of Castleconnell, and to no other lands. That power was as follows:—"Provided always, and it is hereby agreed and declared, that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Sir John De Burgho, during his life, by indenture or indentures, to be sealed and delivered by him in the presence of, and attested by, two or more credible witnesses, to limit and appoint, by way of demise or lease, all or any part or parts of the said honours, manors, lands, hereditaments, and premises hereby agreed to be settled, with the appurtenances, as consist of the lands of Castleconnell, with the messuages, edifices, buildings and appurtenances, to any person or persons whomsoever, for any life or number of lives, or for any term or terms of years, absolute and determinable on any life or lives, and either in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, so as there shall be reserved on every such limitation or appointment, by way of demise or lease, the best or most approved yearly rent or rents, to be incident to the immediate reversion of the hereditaments so to be limited or appointed, that can or may be reasonably had or gotten for the same, without taking any fine, premium, or foregift for the making thereof, and so as there shall be contained in every such indenture of limitation or appointment, by way of demise or lease, a condition of re-entry for non-payment of the rents thereby to be reserved, and so as the person or persons to whom such limitation or appointment shall be made, his, her, or their heirs, executors, and administrators or assigns, shall not, by any clause or words to be contained in any such indenture, be made distainable for waste, or exempted from punishment for committing waste."

At the trial of the cause before Mr. Justice Ball, at the Summer Assizes for the county of Limerick, 1848, the plaintiff went into evidence to shew that the lands demised by the lease of 1817 formed no part of the town and lands of Castleconnell, and, consequently, that the lease could not be upheld under the leasing power, which related only to those lands. Several witnesses deposed that the demised lands were called and known by the name of Portcrusha, and not Castleconnell, and that the lands of Cloon and Lacka separated the demised lands from the lands of Castleconnell. The plaintiff also gave in evidence ancient maps, and relied on them, as establishing that the lands demised formed no part of the lands of Castleconnell. This evidence was encountered, on the part of the defendant, by the production of several witnesses, who stated that they always heard the demised lands called Castleconnell. The plaintiff further contended that the lease in question was void, and called for a direction in his favour—first, because it contained a clause of surrender; secondly, because it gave permission to the lessee to cut and sell turf, thereby rendering him punishable for waste; and, lastly, because the number of years in the lease was absolute, and not determinable on lives; but the learned Judge refused so to direct the jury. The plaintiff then went into evidence to shew that the lease was made at an undervalue. At the close of the defendant's case, the learned Judge, with the concurrence of both parties, left the following questions to the jury:—

1st. Whether the entire of the premises comprised in the lease of 1817 were, at the time of the execution of the settlement of the 6th May, 1808, part of the lands of Castle Connell? The jury found in the affirmative.

2ndly. Whether the said lands, or any part thereof were, at the time aforesaid, part of the lands of Portcrusha? The jury found in the negative.

3rdly. Whether the lease of 1817 was made at the most improved yearly rent which could be reasonably had for the same, at the time of its execution? The jury found in the affirmative.

The learned judge then directed the jury to find a verdict for the defendants, reserving liberty to the plaintiff to move to set it aside, and to enter a verdict for himself, if the court above should be of opinion upon the whole of the case, that he was entitled thereto.

A rule nisi having been obtained in Michaelmas term last, to set aside the verdict for the defendant, and to enter one for the plaintiff, pursuant to leave reserved, or for a new trial,

Mr. Henn, (with him Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q. C.) now showed cause.—The mere introduction of a clause of surrender into a lease does not render it void. Lord Muskerry v. Chinnery, (Llo. & Goo. Sug. 185; Sugden on Powers, vol. 2, p. 359—364; App. 629.) Shashy v. Lord Muskerry, (1 Cl. & Fin. N. S. 576.) With respect to the power to cut and sell turf, we have now a right to assume that the lands in question are part of Castleconnell, and, as it appears from the evidence, that those lands contained a large quantity of bog, it must be inferred that they could only be rendered valuable by cutting turf. Unless, therefore, a power like this was given, no beneficial rent could be received. A power to cut turf for sale may or may not be waste according to circumstances. If a bog be only useful as a bog, and forms the principal subject of the demise, the inference to be deduced from the authorities is, that a right to cut turf for sale shall be inferred. (See the cases collected in 1 Fur. L. & Ten. 313.) Copinger v. Gubbins, (9 L. Eq. R. 304.) The lease is also impeached, because it makes the tenant punishable for waste, but the law will not allow that to be waste which is not any way prejudicial to the inheritance. Barret v. Barret, (Hetley, 35;) Grubb v. Lord Burlington, (5 B. & Ad. 507;) Anon. (1 Hog. Rep. 147;) Saunders's case, (5 Rep. 12). Masey v. Gubbins, (Longf. & Touns. 88,) is distinguishable from the present case, because there the bog was not the principal subject of demise.

Mr. Bennett, Q. C. and Mr. Napier, Q. C. contra—The words of the leasing power require that the term shall be absolute, and that the lessee shall not be made punishable for waste. A lease with a clause of surrender cannot be considered an absolute term, for the rent is not continued until the end of the demise. Muskerry v. Chinnery does not settle this question, for in that case the tenant for life was empowered to take a fine to any amount. The lessee was made punishable for waste, when a right to cut turf for sale was given to him. The making and selling bricks was held to be waste, and an injunction granted, even though the lease was made without impeachment of waste. Bishop of London v. Web, (1 P. W. 527.) When the surface or soil is taken away it is an injury to the inheritance.

Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q. C. in reply—The case went to the jury upon a conflict of evidence. The provision enabling the tenant to cut turf is confined to the bog, and the strict construction of law with respect to what shall be considered waste, has latterly been relaxed. Lawton v. Lawton, (3 Atk. 14.) [Perrin, J.—Your difficulty is, that cutting turf for sale is prima facie waste, unless it be shewn that that was the manner of using the property, and you have not given evidence of that custom; at least no question was left to the jury upon the subject.] The evidence has established that the whole of thing demised was bog. [Moore, J.—I have very great difficulty in coming to the conclusion, that an unlimited power of cutting turf for sale, with a clause of surrender, would not have the effect of causing a great injury to the reversion.] The court ought to be liberal in the construction of leasing powers; the lessee can seldom know the nature of them. Assuming the verdict of the jury to be right, and that the bog forms part of the lands of Castle Connell, we have brought our case within the words and intention of the first leasing power.

BLACKBURNE, C. J. (stopping him). We will not trouble you any further, for we are satisfied, after a careful examination of the evidence, that, without violating any principle of law, or interfering with any decided authority, justice requires the subject should be again considered by a jury, and I shall therefore say no more upon this part of the case. On the part of the plaintiff, it was sought to enter a verdict for him upon legal objections of very considerable importance, which have been taken to this lease as not being an execution of the leasing power. We are called upon, however, to consider these objections on hypothetical statements of a fact, and considering the difficulty of the questions which have been argued, we are of opinion that we ought not now to pronounce a final decision upon them, but should let the case go to another trial, thereby affording an opportunity either by a special verdict, or a bill of exceptions, of having the opinion of another court taken upon the subject. Under these circumstances, we think that the verdict ought to be set aside without costs upon either side.

Rule absolute for a new trial.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.*

SAMUEL LINDSAY, ASSIGNEE OF WILLIAM O'CALLAGHAN v. SAMUEL M. GOING.

Insolvent Act, 3 & 4 Vic. c. 107—Sale by sheriff after arrest, and before vesting order—Title of assignee under vesting order.

The sheriff seized, on the 23rd of April, under a writ of Fi. Fa., founded on a judgment on a bond and warrant of attorney. A. B. the insolvent, was arrested at his own request, at the suit of another creditor, before the sale, which took place on the 23rd of May. On the 15th of June he presented his schedule to the Insolvent court; on the following day the order was made vesting his property in the plaintiff. In an action of trover against the sheriff by the assignee, Held, that the sheriff was not liable under the 48th sec. of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 107, and that the vesting order had no relation to the date of the arrest.

This was a writ of error from the judgment of the Court of Exchequer. The action was trover against a sheriff for an illegal seizure under an execution against the goods of W. O'Callaghan, an insolvent. The declaration stated, "that William O'Callaghan, before he became insolvent, and before the making of the court for the relief of insolvent debtors of an order vesting the real and personal estate and effects of the said William O'Callaghan in the provisional assignee, to wit, on the 23rd day of April, in the year of our Lord, 1846, at Clonmel, in the southern riding of the county of Tipperary, was lawfully possessed as of his own property of, [stating it fully], and being so possessed, he, the said William O'Callaghan, afterwards, and before the making of the said vesting order as aforesaid, casually lost the said goods and chattels out of his possession, and the same afterwards, and before the making of the said vesting order as aforesaid, to wit, on the 23rd day of April, in the year 1846, there came to the possession of the said defendant by finding; yet the said defendant, well knowing the said goods and chattels to be the property of the said William O'Callaghan, before the making of the said vesting order as aforesaid, and of right to belong to him and appertain to the said plaintiff as assignee as aforesaid, since the making of the said vesting order as aforesaid, but contriving and fraudulently intending to injure the said William O'Callaghan before the making of the said vesting order as aforesaid; and the said plaintiff as assignee as aforesaid, since the making of the said vesting order as aforesaid in this behalf, hath not, though often requested so to do, as yet delivered to them, or either of them, the said goods and chattels, or any part thereof, but hath hitherto wholly neglected and refused so to do, and afterwards, and after the commencement of the imprisonment of the said in the year 1845, converted and disposed of same to his own use, to wit, at Clonmel, in the ern riding of the county aforesaid, to the found a special verdict—"That William laghan was, in the year 1843, a shopkeeping on business in the town of Tipperary—that aid William O'Callaghan, on the 13th day of ary, in the year 1844, executed to a person of ame of Jane Ryan, a bond and warrant of ey, to confess judgment thereon, which bond arrant of attorney bore date respectively the day of June, 1843, upon which bond, judgment entered up in the Court of Common Pleas, a 21 days after the execution of the said war-

-that the said Jane Ryan proceeded to and wive the said judgment in Easter Term 1845, bat a writ of fi. fa. founded on the said judg-
-issued against the goods of the said William laghan, at the suit of the said Jane Ryan, which writ of fi. fa. the said defendant on 3rd day of April, 1845, seized the stock in the shop of the said William O'Callaghan t after the seizure, and on the 18th day of 1845, and before the sale which took place e 23rd day of May in said year, 1845, the said am O'Callaghan was arrested under a writ of ad satisfaciendum, which writ was issued at uit of one John Millner, and the creditor of aid William O'Callaghan, and was lodged in nel gaol. And the said jurors upon their ay, that said arrest under said writ of capias satisfaciendum, was made under and by the fions of the said defendant himself—that after arrest, and while said William O'Callaghan till in custody under said writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, and upon the 23rd of May, 1845, id defendant did, under the said writ of fi. fu., ad to sell, and did sell the said stock in trade oods so seized, and convert the same into r, which the said defendant received. And id jurors upon their oaths further say, that id William O'Callaghan afterwards, on the lay of June, in the said year of our Lord 1845, hile he continued in custody under the said capias ad satisfaciendum, petitioned the court e relief of Insolvent Debtors in Ireland, for charge; upon which petition a vesting order erwards made, and bears date on the 16th
June, 1845—that by the said vesting order, estate of the said William O'Callaghan was in plaintiff, who was appointed his assignee, at the said William O'Callaghan was him-rged as an insolvent. And the said jurors, their said oaths further say, that the said det had in his hands before and at the time of id sale, certain civil bill decrees, and certain of fi. fa. founded upon judgments in adverse and which civil bill decrees, and last mentioned ents had been issued against the goods of the William O'Callaghan. And the said jurors r say, that some of the said last-mentioned ions had been delivered to the defendant on th of May, 1845, and others on the 21st of 1845, and that the said civil bill decrees delivered to the said defendant on the 22nd of May, 1845." The jury then found the value of the goods on the declaration, and concluded in the ordinary form. The court below, having given judgment for the defendant, the plaintiff brought his writ of error, to reverse that judgment. The principal point for argument noted was, "That inasmuch as the sale by the defendant was had under an execution which issued upon a judgment obtained on a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, and inasmuch as said sale took place after the commencement of the imprisonment of the insolvent, the plaintiff, as assignee of such insolvent, as the law stands, especially referring to the statute 3rd and 4th Victoria, chap. 107, sec.

48, was entitled to sue the defendant in tort for such sale and conversion."

Mr. Ryan, with him Mr. Napier, Q.C.—The question in this case arises upon the true construction of the 48th section of the 3 & 4 Vic., c. 107, and to give effect to that section, this action must be upheld. I fully concede that the vesting order vests the property in the assignee. Under the 48th section the insolvent is prevented giving a bill of sale. Suppose a bill of sale had been given to this creditor, after the imprisonment, and before the vesting order, will it be contended that the assignee could not bring trover to recover the goods transferred by the bill of sale?
When a party goes into prison, that is an intimation to his creditors to stay their proceedings. [Pennafather, B.—Suppose he chose to lie in prison for six years, are the creditors to stay their hands for that time? Or suppose a writ was put into the hands of the sheriff, and he held it for a considerable time, and a venditioni exponas sued out, how long is the creditor who has his execution to be tied up? Perrin, J.—The bankruptcy cases go on the principle that the sheriff seizes the property of one which belongs to another.] Cooper
v. Chitty, (1 Burr. 20, S. E.; 1 Sm. L. C. 239.) I rely entirely upon the construction of the 48th sec.
[Pennafather, B.—In Groves v. Cowham, (10 Bing.
5.) the property was changed, and Mr. Smith appears to me to draw a conclusion from that case which is not warranted.] The 48th sec. sets aside the writs of execution, so as not to act upon the property. Becke v. Smith, (2 Mee. & W. 191); Burris v. Towney, (3 Nev. & Per. 88). You must put the same construction upon the 47th and 48th sections. This case is not to be distinguished from Kelcey v. Minter, (1 Scott, 616.) The assignment has reference to the imprisonment, Guy v. Hück- cock, (5 Nev. & Man. 660,) and has the effect of a vesting order. Squire v. Huetson, (1 Q.B. Rep. 308.)
[Perrin, J.—Suppose the creditor applied for a venditioni, and the sheriff suggested that the insolvent was in prison, would the court grant a ven- ditioni? Or if the sheriff returned that the goods were on his hands for want of buyers, would the court compel him to sell?] The execution creditor would be prevented from taking the goods of the party in prison, and the sheriff is equally bound to take notice of that fact. [Crampton, J.—It was conceded that Kelcey v. Minter would be exactly in point, if the action in that case was against the sheriff. I doubt that, because in the present case the sale took place before the vesting order, whereas in that case the sale was after the property vested in the assignee by assignment.] There is nothing in Kelcey v. Minter about the assignment; the essential part of the action in trover is the possession. [Crompton, J.—They were not the plaintiff's property at the time of the conversion. Perrin, J.—According to your argument, at the time of the sale the right of action was vested in the insolvent, and there was then a conversion; is there any clause transferring that right of action to the assignee?] The 30th sec. of 3 & 4 Vic. c. 107, gives the assignee a power to recover.

[They cited Whitmore v. Green, (18 M. & W. 104); Lord Ashton v. Burke, (Longf. & T. 398); Jones v. —, (Hard. 111, 7 Bac. Ab. Trover.)]

May 22, 23.—Mr. Lynch, Q. C., with Mr. J. Pennafather.—The plaintiff's pleading precludes him from recovering. The allegation is, that up to the time of the vesting order, the goods were in the possession of the insolvent. The argument on the other side is founded on a mistake as to the law of bankruptcy and insolvency. In the former, the property vests in the assignee from the time of the act of bankruptcy. In Balme v. Hutton, (9 Bing. 471,) the actual property was in the assignee at the time of the seizure. The sheriff did not obey the exigency of the writ, for he took the goods of B. as if they were those of A. It is admitted there is no vesting by relation in insolvency. Woodland v. Fuller, (11 Ad. & El. 859); White v. Bartlett, (9 Bing. 378); Sims v. Simpson, (1 Bing. N. C. 313). [Blackburne, C. J.—The plaintiff's counsel do not go upon the question of relation; they allege the property to be in the assignee.] The case of Groves v. Cowham, (10 Bing. 5,) is an authority in our favour. Tyndal, C. J., who decided that case, presided in the Court of Error which decided Balme v. Hutton, (9 Bing. 471.) Notley v. Buck shews that the sheriff is liable, because he was in the same position with the execution creditor. Kelcey v. Minter shews that the sheriff is liable not only for the proceeds of the sale, but for the value of the goods. The party is in this dilemma—if they succeed at all, it must be by showing that the property is in the assignee, and they have averred the contrary.

[They cited Garland v. Carlisle, (2 Cr. & Mee. 69); Barnard v. —, (1 Bing. N. C. 306.)

Cur. ad vult.

June 16.—BLACKBURNE, C. J. delivered the judgment of the court. [After stating the pleadings, and the facts as set out in the special verdict, he proceeded]—The court are of opinion that the plaintiff had no right to sue the sheriff. The cause of action stated in the declaration is the partial conversion of the property of the insolvent; the facts afford prima facie evidence that that was not so, because the vesting order was not made until after the sale by the sheriff; and as the insolvent himself could not sue, neither could his assignee. It is contended that, according to the true construction of the 48th section of the Insolvent Act, 3 & 4 Vic. c. 107, this sale was avoided, and that the act entitles the assignee to bring his action in this form. That construction would amount to this, that an action of trover is maintainable, not by the person whose property is converted, but by a person having no property whatever in the goods at the time of the conversion. If that be the effect of the 48th section, a conversion has taken place, and the plaintiff must succeed. (Having read the section.) The words plainly mean the creditor issuing the execution. "No person shall, after the commencement of the imprisonment of such prisoner, or himself or herself of any execution." That can mean the sheriff. Taking the language of the legislature, according to its literal interpretation, to mean the plaintiff, the sense clearly is to prevent interference of creditors, and put the specialty in simple contract creditors on the same footing. That construction fulfils all the requisites of the act, and leaves the sheriff every necessary protection; it would be unjust to deprive him of it, and there can only effectuate that object by holding the act of the sheriff to be lawful. No answer is given to the objection that obvious injustice would be done by holding to the contrary. It was the duty of the sheriff to sell the property of the insolvent; he could make no return to the extent that the property was otherwise than in the insolvent; he could have no pretext for refusing to execute the writ. Is there to be any limit as to the date at which the debtor must file his petition? Need not do it for ten years, or at all, and in the meanwhile is nothing to be done? If compelled by the express words of the act to hold that it is so, we must. The authorities cited by the plaintiff are principally cases in bankruptcy, and where they may be the policy of those decisions, it is not settled that the assignee has a title by relation under the insolvent statutes there is no such title. Up to the time of the vesting order, the legal title to the property is in the insolvent. The case of Cooper v. Chitty, (1 Burr. 20), has no application to the present, and shews only, that after assignment a right in the bankrupt's property vests in the assignees from the date of act of bankruptcy. In cases were strongly relied upon to shew that when the execution issues on a judgment or a bond or warrant of attorney, that the right is suspended from the time of the imprisonment, and that therefore the sheriff and execution creditor are respectively liable. The first is Groves v. Cowham, (10 Bing. 5) the facts show that the creditor was in prison previously to the issuing the execution, and the assignment to the plaintiff was prior to the sale. In the other case—Kelcey v. Minter, (1 Scott. 61) that was pressed upon the court, to shew the liability of the sheriff and the creditor, the language of Tyndal, C. J., was relied on to shew that the act of the sheriff was tortious. The report does not say when the sheriff's sale took place. We have considered it due to the importance of the case, to procure a copy of the pleadings; in which it appears that in this case, as in that of Groves v. Cowham, the property vested in the assignee before the conversion, and, consequently, does not apply to the case before us. If the sheriff's liability is co-extensive with that of the creditor, and that the creditor is not responsible, the sheriff incurs none, unless he acts after the property becomes vested.

Judgment affirming.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

MATURIN v. WILSON.—June, 20, 21.

To remove temporary bars—Evidence of outstanding leases—Form of prayer.

a plaintiff by his bill states a legal title, and the existence of outstanding terms, it is at a matter of course for the Court to remove temporary bars, for the purpose of enabling him to bring an ejectment. When the bill stated leases outstanding terms and the answer admitted a fact of their existence, but ignorance as to where they were, or by or to whom granted. Held to be sufficient evidence of their existence to enable the plaintiff to grant relief.

Maturin, the plaintiff, filed his bill on the 2nd of February, 1847, stating that Edmond Wilson, deceased, at the time of making his will, seized in certain ground in the city of Dublin, on which several houses were erected, "subject to certain leases thereof which are still subsisting." That the said Edmond Wilson was also seized to him and his heirs of certain lands in the county of Antrim, held under leases for lives renewable for ever, and of freehold premises. That the said Edmond Wilson duly made and published his last will in writing, dated the 29th day of June, 1839, and duly proved, and thereby devised all his property, both real and personal unto his wife, Maria Wilson, for the term of her natural life, and after her decease unto the plaintiff. That the testator died in 1840, without having revoked or altered his said will, leaving behind him said Maria Wilson, his widow, and the defendant, John Oldham Wilson, his heir at law, and the said Maria Wilson died in 1845. The bill prayed that the whole or considerable portions of the said estates were held under leases granted by the said testator previous to the execution of the said will, or by the persons through whom he derived title, for terms of years and for lives, several of which leases are still subsisting. That he was unable to discover among the title deeds of said estates the counterparts of said leases, and therefore unable to state whether the whole, or what part of the said estates was in the possession of tenants, at what terms were outstanding, and in whom the same were vested. That by reason of the said outstanding terms he was unable to proceed by ejectment, and that the defendant would not consent to his right to set up at the trial of the ejectment these outstanding terms or temporary bars. That the title deeds of the said estates were in the possession of the said defendant, and that the defendant was also in possession of the estates, under an order issued on a judgment in ejectment of the High Bench, but he stated that the said will was read up on in that ejectment, and that he was bound by the said ejectment, to which he was not a party. The bill prayed that an issue should be directed to try whether the freehold estates of the said testator were well devised to the plaintiff, and if it should be found that the said estates were well devised by the said will, then that the defendant might be directed to deliver up to the plaintiff all title deeds, leases and writings relating to the said freehold estates, and to come to an account with the plaintiff of the rents and profits of the said estates, which were received by him or by any person for him since the death of the said Maria Wilson, and to pay the same to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff might have the aid of the Court in order that he might assert his legal title to the said estates, and for that purpose that the defendant should be restrained from setting up on the trial of any issue to be directed by the Court, to try the validity of the said will, any outstanding terms to prevent the plaintiff from recovering at law, and for the purpose of having such issue tried as aforesaid, that all necessary directions might be given, the plaintiff offering to give every facility consistent with his title to have the question tried expeditiously and prayed general relief.

The defendant, by his answer, admitted the title of the testator; stated in respect to the leases, that none of them were in his hands, or in the possession of his agent; that he was unable to set forth by whom, and to whom, and at what rents the said leases were granted; but he believed that the said premises in the city of Dublin were underlet to several tenants for their lives, renewable for ever; and that the premises in the county of Antrim were let to tenants for various terms. The answer impeached the validity of the will.

Mr. Brewster, Q.C., Mr. Martley, Q.C., and Mr. James C. Lowry for the plaintiff.

Mr. Whiteside, Q.C., Mr. McDonough, Q.C., and Mr. Sterne B. Miller for the defendant, contended that the plaintiff had failed to make any case by his bill to entitle him to the relief prayed. This is an ejectment bill, and not the ordinary bill to remove temporary bars. The bill prays an issue; no case has been made for such relief; no trust has been stated, and the court will not grant an issue unless a trust exists. There has been no evidence given of the existence of temporary bars; and the statement in the bill, and the vague admission in the answer, in respect to outstanding leases, is not sufficient. The plaintiff ought to have given proof of the existence of those leases or outstanding terms. The death of Maria Wilson has not been proved. One witness says he believes she is dead, and this witness is not a member of her family. [The following cases were cited and commented on in support of the arguments on this branch of the case: Crow v. Tynell (3 Mad. 179); Jones v. Jones (3 Mer. 169); Blenerhasset v. Day (2 Ball and B. 127); Lord Fingal v. Blake (1 Mol. 116); Keogh v. Keogh (2 Mol. 92); O'Connor v. Malone (6 C. and F. 591); Short v. Lee (2 Jac. and W. 496); Corporation of Arundell v. Holmes (4 Bea. 331.)] It was also further contended that the plaintiff having acquiesced in the former trial, ought not to be assisted now Pike v. Hoare (1 Anst. 421); Lord Lorton v. Lord Kingston (5 C. and F. 343); and that relief could be obtained at law, which was the proper tribunal to determine questions on wills of real property; therefore this court should not grant an issue, on the trial of which, the defendant would be placed in a less advantageous position, than in an action of ejectment in a court of law.

Mr. Lowry in reply, cited Hamilton v. Lyster (7 I. E. R. 560.)

LORD CHANCELLOR.—As to the removing of the temporary bars in this case, the only difficulty arises on the evidence of their existence; where they exist it is a matter of course for this court to give relief, unless the conduct of the plaintiff has been so improper as to afford ground for the court to refuse its aid. I have not heard anything that could lead me even to suppose that there is anything against conscience in Mr. Maturin setting up this will; and I think he is in no way implicated in the former action which has been tried. That was upon a different will. He was, in fact, interested in that will being set aside, and the plaintiff was interested in its being established. That will gave her the absolute estate; while this will gives her but a life estate in the testator's property. I have been strongly urged to look into the merits of this case; but I do not think I am at all bound to do so, and on them I give no opinion, one way or the other. The question is simply this: is a devisee entitled to the assistance of this court, who files his bill, stating that he claims under a legal devise, and that he is hindered by the existence of temporary bars, or outstanding terms, from asserting his right in an action at law? I think it is a matter almost of course to give him this assistance. I do not think it is necessary for the plaintiff to bring his action of ejectment first, and then to come to this court; I think it is more convenient to come to this court first, to have the impediments removed, and then to bring his action. There is some difficulty here as to the evidence of the existence of temporary bars. I shall examine the evidence offered by the plaintiff. First, it is said, that there is no evidence of the death of the tenant for life. Now I think that is a question to be tried in the action; and for the proper trial of that action, the temporary bars must be removed; then the plaintiff must shew that the tenant for life is dead before he can make out his title. The bill states that there are leases and outstanding terms, and the answer admits that the defendant believes there are leases; but states he cannot set out the particulars; which shews that the leases were not made by him. I think the fair inference is, that they were made by the testator, or by some one under whom he derived the estates in question. The prayer is inaccurate; but I think it is substantially a prayer to have temporary bars removed. The case of Keogh v. Keogh is a very plain case. It seems it had been the practice to file bills praying for an issue, and that was improper where no trust existed; but even in that case the court removed temporary bars, by making that a part of the order dismissing the bill. I shall retain this bill until the plaintiff shall bring his ejectment, restraining the defendant from setting up temporary bars; but I shall reserve the question of costs for further directions.

“Let the bill be retained for twelve months, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring such action of ejectment as he may be advised, the defendant to be restrained from setting up any outstanding legal estate in bar of any such action. Reserve further directions and costs until after the trial of the said action, with liberty to the parties to apply as they may be advised.

Note.—By consent of the parties, the ejectment is brought in the Court of Common Pleas within a fortnight, and the defendant's solicitor to accept service of the ejectment.”—Reg. Lii 102, fo. 202.

ROLLS COURT.

ROCHE v. COLLINS.—April, 27th.

Attachment—Receiver—Notice upon tenant to pay Rent.

Where the order to pay rent has been served by a Receiver on all the tenants of lands, and subsequently entered into possession of part of the lands, to obtain an attachment for non-payment of rent against A., it is not necessary but it should have been served with the order to pay rent.

In this case, a conditional order for an attachment for non-payment of rent had been obtained by the receiver against G. D. Lynch, and this was motion to shew cause. From the affidavit of Lynch it appeared that his father had been tenant of the lands for several years, and after his death his mother remained in possession as tenant until 1847, when she died. The affidavit shewed that Lynch derived no benefit from the lands; that he never paid any rent, or was served with an order to pay rent, and that he endeavoured to use said lands to the best use for the benefit of his family, as a trustee for them.

From the receiver's affidavit it appeared that since his appointment in 1837, he had frequently received rent from said G. D. Lynch.

Mr. O'Hea, for G. D. Lynch, contended that Lynch was not liable as a tenant to a receiver, as he had not been served with any order to pay rent to the receiver.

Mr. Leahy, contra.—This case comes under the rule laid down in Southwell v. Armstrong, (1 Cr. & Dix. E. R. 603.) (S. C., 1 I. E. R. 32,) where it was held, that if a receiver on his appointment serve the order to pay rent upon all the tenants, a party who subsequently becomes a tenant in the place of one who has been served, may be attached for non-payment of rent, without any further service of the order.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I will follow that of Southwell v. Armstrong, which I think is rightly decided; for where a tenant has been served with the order to pay rent, and another person afterwards comes into possession, I do not think it necessary that the successor should also be served, and as this person has been in possession of the property, and taken upon himself the management of it, I will disallow the cause shewn, with costs.

ALSTON v. ALCOCK.—April, 28th.

Practice—Minor matter—Motion for reduction of rent.

Mr. Burke moved for a reduction of rent.
Mr. Berwick, Q. C. for the receiver.—This being a minor matter this application is quite unnecessary.

The Master has authority to make the order required.

Mr. Foley appeared for the inheritor.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS said that in this case he would have no difficulty in granting a reference, but the motion was unnecessary; he would, however, allow the motion to stand over until an application was made to the Master.

HARVEY v. LAWLER.—April 28.

Practice—Promissory note—Purchase.

Mr. Lawless moved to make a consent a rule of court. The consent was, that the National Bank, the purchasers of part of the lands sold under the decree in this cause, might be at liberty, with the privy of the Accountant-general, to lodge in the Bank of Ireland, to the credit of this cause, the promissory note of C. Fitzsimon, one of the public officers of said bank, for the sum of £200—one-fourth of the purchase money of said lands; and also a promissory note for £600, the residue of said purchase money. There was a sufficient sum lodged in court to pay all the incumbrances, except about £200, and the consent that his promissory note be taken, was signed by all the parties having any interest in the matter.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I will not allow parties on consent to vary the practice of the court; it may create the greatest embarrassment. I will make no rule on the motion.

ROBERT J. WEIR, Petitioner, J. ORMSBY, Respondent.

WILLIAM WEIR, Petitioner, SAME, Respondent.
April, 28th.

Receiver—Continuing proceedings—Judgment Acts.

The Court has authority to permit the assignee of a judgment creditor to continue proceedings in his own name; but where the original proceedings have been taken by a trustee, and an assignment has thus been rendered necessary, the Court will not give the costs of the motion to continue.

In this case, W. Weir, the petitioner in the second matter, together with the respondent, and as a surety for him, executed a joint and several bond to one K. D. Lloyd, to secure the sum of £1200, upon which judgments were entered. Lloyd having required payment, W. Weir was compelled to pay the amount, and thereupon the judgment was assigned to R. J. Weir, as a trustee for said W. Weir. On the 11th of January, 1848, a petition was presented by said R. J. Weir, and a receiver appointed over part of the lands of the respondent. R. J. Weir being in declining health, at the request of W. Weir, by indenture of the 22nd day of January, 1849, assigned said judgment to W. Weir. Shortly afterwards, R. J. Weir died.

Mr. W. D. Ferguson, on behalf of W. Weir, moved that the proceedings already had might stand and be revived and be continued for and in the name of the said W. Weir, and that he might have the benefit of same, and that certain lands in the possession of the respondent might be let. In the case of Daly v. Blake, (10 I. E. R. 36,) an order was made similar to that which I now seek; also in the Court of Exchequer.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—You may take an order to continue the proceedings, similar to that in Daly v. Blake; but I will not give any costs, for the petitioner might have proceeded without the intervention of a trustee, and these costs have been incurred entirely by his own act.

GURRY v. O'LOUGHNAKE.—April, 29th.

Practice—Examination—Notice—Irregularity.

The Court is not bound to suppress depositions in all cases of irregularity, and where by accident the defendant's solicitor gave but two days' notice of examining a witness, instead of four, as required by the 87th general order, the Court permitted the depositions to stand, with liberty to the plaintiff to cross-examine the witness.

The bill in this cause was filed to restrain the defendant from issuing execution on foot of a judgment, and to set aside some deeds, as being fraudulent and void. The replication was filed on the 6th of January, 1849, and was served on the 8th. The rule to pass publication with a week's respite, was entered on the 13th of April, and was served on the 14th. On the 18th of April, notice was served on behalf of the defendant, of his intention to examine a witness named J. Fahey, who was examined on the 20th; publication passed on the 23rd of April. This was an application on behalf of the plaintiff, that the deposition of J. Fahey be suppressed, on the ground that same was taken irregularly, and contrary to the general order of the Court, and notice pursuant to the 87th general order had not been served four days before the examination of said witness, and publication had passed before the time for his examination had regularly arrived. From the affidavit of the defendant's solicitor, it appeared that the bill was filed for an injunction to set aside certain deeds, as being fraudulent; that J. Fahey was the only witness examined on behalf of the defendants, and he was subscribing witness to the execution of the deeds which were sought to be set aside. The affidavit also stated, that the defendant's solicitor was unacquainted with the residence of the said J. Fahey, which was not discovered until late on the 17th of April, and notice of his name as a witness was transmitted to plaintiff's solicitor on the 18th; and that up to the time of making the affidavit, defendant's solicitor had not read, nor did he know what evidence Fahey had given.

Mr. Hughes, Q. C., and Mr. Murphy, for the plaintiff. Four clear days are given by the general order, for the purpose of enabling the other party to ascertain who the witnesses are, where they reside, and to prepare for their cross-examination. In the present case, no opportunity was given for inquiry or cross-examination, and the depositions of this witness ought to be suppressed.

Mr. Lynch, Q. C., and Mr. Sherlock, contra—

The defendant served notice of the name of this witness as soon as he was able to discover where he resided. It is not imperative on the Court to suppress depositions in every case of irregularity. Attorney-General v. Ball, (9 I. E. R. 463, 2 Dan. Ch. Practice, 580.)

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The 87th general order is quite distinct in its terms, and under it "The notice of witnesses intended to be examined shall describe the witnesses by name, place of residence, and addition, and before whom the witnesses are to be examined, and such notice shall, in all cases where a witness is to be examined before the examiner in Dublin, be duly served four days, &c., before the examination of the witnesses shall be commenced." Nothing can be more precise. In the present case there has been an irregularity, which appears, however, to have been accidental. The notice was served on the 18th of April, and the witness was examined on the 20th, and publication passed on the 23rd, clearly in violation of the rule, the object of which was, to give time for inquiry. The case nearest to the present is that of Cholmondeley v. Clinton, (2 Mer. 81,) where, however, no notice was served, which makes it somewhat stronger than the present case; and the Chancellor, Lord Eldon, gave the defendant the option, either of permitting the plaintiff to re-examine the same witnesses, or of allowing the depositions to stand, with liberty to cross-examine the witnesses; and I will follow the course adopted in that case.

"The Court having offered to the plaintiff the option of suppressing the depositions of J. Fahey, giving the defendant liberty to re-examine said J. Fahey, or permitting the depositions to stand, with liberty to plaintiff to cross-examine, let said depositions stand, and let plaintiff be at liberty to cross-examine the said J. Fahey, and let such cross-examination close within one week, and let the defendants produce said J. Fahey for cross-examination, and give 24 hours' notice thereof, and let defendant pay plaintiff £5 for his costs of this motion."

Lib. 284, fo. 373.

MURDOCK v. MURDOCK.—May, 15th.

Writ of Ne exeat granted—Not prayed by Bill.

Where a defendant's intention to go abroad arises or is first discovered in the course of a cause, a writ of Ne exeat will be granted, although it is not prayed by the bill.

The bill in this case was filed to administer the assets of Robert Martin, deceased, and prayed for an account. The defendant had been served in Scotland with a subpoena to appear and answer; but although the time had expired, no appearance had been entered. From the plaintiff's affidavit it appeared, that, on the day before the application, the defendant went to Belfast, and there stated that it was his intention to return to Scotland forthwith.

Mr. Gibbon now moved for a writ of Ne exeat. The bill does not pray for the writ, but where the matter on which the application is grounded has occurred subsequently to the filing of the bill, the Court will grant the application. (3 Dan. C.P. 386.)

Mr. W. Smith, Am. Cur., mentioned the case of Beale v. Jacob, where Sir E. Sugden granted a writ of Ne exeat in chamber, and held that the bill need not pray the writ in that case. There, however, the matter on which the application was grounded arose subsequently to the filing of the bill.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS made the order.

VANCE v. RANFURLEY.—June 8th.

Practice—Amendment—Under 49th general order, striking out plaintiff not allowed.

Mr. Trevor applied that the deputy Keeper of the Rolls might be directed to amend the bill of revivor filed in this cause, by striking out the names of two of the co-plaintiffs, and making them defendants, and introducing amendments to make the bill a bill of revivor and supplement. There had been no answer, and no order to revive; the officer had declined to make the amendments required, as it had not been the practice to strike out plaintiffs by amendments under the 49th rule. Counsel contended, that under the terms of the 49th order, which provides "that the plaintiff, until an answer, plea, or demurrer shall be filed, shall be at liberty to amend the bill as often as he may be advised, without any rule or order for that purpose." In any case where the Court would allow the amendments to be made, the plaintiff, under the 49th order, might before answer make the amendments necessary; and in order to shew that the Court would allow the amendments required, he cited the case of Smith v. Walsh, (1 I. E. R. 167,) where a bill was filed by a widow to raise the arrears of a jointure charged on lands by her marriage settlement. The defendant having by answer denied the husband's power to jointure, alleging that the husband was only tenant in tail, and that the estate tail had not been barred; an amended bill was then filed, praying for dower in case the plaintiff was not entitled to jointure. The defendant neither answered nor appeared at the hearing, and the Court decreed the plaintiff entitled to dower, and directed an account of the arrears. This amended bill was held to be in continuation of the original suit. The alteration made in that case was much greater than what is required in the present case; also in the case of Ring v. Nettles (3 I.E.R. 53), after the defendants had answered in a suit by husband and wife, relating to the wife's separate estate, leave was given to amend the bill, by striking out the husband's name as a co-plaintiff, as he had become insolvent; and by substituting in his stead a party to sue as next friend of the wife; and also by inserting the names of the husband and his assignee as defendants. The amendments should be inserted in the bill of revivor. (White on Supplement and revivor, 104.)

The MASTER of the ROLLS said, that the Deputy Keeper of the Rolls had communicated with him on the subject of this case, and stated that it was not the practice to amend a bill by striking out plaintiffs under the 49th general order, as there was a side-bar rule enabling plaintiffs to dismiss the bill with costs against them; and that he would follow ctice, whatever it might be. On the following s Honor directed notice to be served, specifying amendments sought, in order that there be a document to send to the officer to de-: the practice.

EQUITY EXCHEQUER.

LEVINGS v. MONTMORENCY.—June, 4th.

IGE, Petitioner, BILLING, Respondent.

ce—Lien of solicitor—Bringing deeds in order of the Court—Taylor v. Gorman, (6 I. L. 330, S. C.)—On appeal, (7 I. E. R. 259,) Iden v. Desart, (2 D. & W. 405,) and Bozon v. Bolland, (4 My. & Cr. 354,) considered.

a solicitor has a general lien upon papers of his client, which are required for the purposes suit, the Court has the power of forcing him in the deeds, and of preserving his rights if they existed on the papers.

utill, on behalf of the petitioner, William the receiver in the cause of Levings v. Montmorency, moved that James G. Billing and Theobald Billing do hand over to the petitioner, or in Court, subject to their lien thereon, all deeds and tenants' leases, subject to such order the Court shall seem proper. The petition, that previously to the appointment of the receiver as receiver in 1847, the defendant, W. Montmorency conveyed the estates in the name mentioned to the respondents, upon condition to sell and dispose of the same for the payment of the debts affecting the estate, and apply the proceeds to the use of the defendant; that, the same not being registered, the respondents were not made parties to the cause; that it was arranged that the costs and expenses of the preparation of deeds in respect of the intended sale were in that instance to be paid to the respondents; that the remembrancer having directed the petitioner to bring ejectments against the defaulting defendant, he applied by notice to the Messrs. Billing, who in reply alleged that they held the papers as trustees for the sale of the estates, which was known to be so by the plaintiff's solicitor, and the parties to the cause, and as such trustees had incurred certain expenses and costs, for which they claimed a lien on the said estates, and particulars of which claim they had furnished to the solicitor for the defendant, De Montmorency.

Rollstone for the respondents, relied on Iden v. Desart (2 Dr. & W. 405), and Taylor v. Gorman, (6 Ir. Eq. Rep. 330, S.C. 7 I. Eq. Rep. 259.)

Bozon v. Bolland (4 My. & Cr. 354), and moved that bringing the deeds into court would deprive the solicitor of his lien; that according to those authorities, the lien was not transferable to the fund, and he consequently preferred his right to retain the deeds in his possession. [Lefroy, B.—Lord Eldon frequently held that the court would make an order, that the deeds be brought in without prejudice to the lien. The whole question in Blunden v. Desart was, whether the solicitor had not waived his lien; and in Iden v. Bolland, Lord Cottenham decided that the solicitor having voluntarily brought in the deed was entitled to his lien, for the costs in the cause only.] [Richardson, B.—I think the court should have the power of preserving for the solicitor the same rights he had upon the deeds themselves. It would be monstrous to say, if a solicitor have a lien against a subsequent creditor, that a prior creditor is not to have any means of reaching the papers, and that the whole cause is to be stayed.]

PENNEFATHER, B.—I do not see what objection can exist to the solicitor's bringing in the deeds by order of the court, without prejudice to his lien. The question is, whether the court cannot order in the deeds in invitum, reserving to the party such rights as he would have had if they were not brought in. Lord Chancellor Sugden decided Taylor v. Gorman on grounds different from those upon which the Master of the Rolls acted. I do not understand him as deciding that if the order was made in invitum, the lien of the solicitor would not still exist. He thought the Master right upon another point; but he decided that the solicitor, having executed the deed, and voluntarily brought the deed into court, had waived his lien. We will grant the motion in the terms of the notice; we will take care of the rights of the solicitor by a special direction; but I am far from saying such an order is necessary; I think the ordinary order to bring in the deeds without prejudice to the lien would be quite sufficient.

"Let said J. T. Billing, and T. Billing, deposit on oath forthwith in the office of the Chief Remembrancer, the several title-deeds, &c. in their hands, power, or custody, without prejudice to the lien, if any they have, against any of the parties, or against the fund, reserving to the court the consideration of such order as they may hereafter think fit to make against the parties or the fund, and declare the receiver entitled to the costs of the motion to be allowed him in passing his account."

QUEEN'S BENCH.—EASTER TERM.

CARMICHAEL v. WATERFORD AND LIMERICK RAILWAY COMPANY.—May, 3rd & 4th.

Action on the case—Overmarking execution—Principal and agent—Malice—Corporation—Attorney and client—Reasonable and probable cause.

In an action on the case for MALICIOUSLY and INJURIOUSLY over-marking a writ of ca. sa., and causing the plaintiff to be arrested thereon, it is not sufficient in order to prove malice in the defendant to show that his attorney or agent was actuated by malicious motives.

Held also that a mere mistake on the part of the attorney was no proof of malice in him, and that the facts relied on by the plaintiff in the present case amounted to nothing more.

Semble that the same rule would apply equally to the cases of an individual and a corporate body.

Action on the case. The declaration contained four counts, in the first and second of which the defendants were charged with having falsely, maliciously, and injuriously caused and procured a certain writ of ca. sa. issued against the plaintiff to be marked at foot with the sum of £585. Os. 2d., whereas £280.

16s. only was due. The third and fourth counts substituted the words wrongfully and injuriously for wilfully and maliciously. The damages were laid at £2000. The general issue had been pleaded and a sum of money, consisting of over-levy and interest, together with £50 to answer damages, had been paid into Court. The action had originally been tried at Cork Summer Assizes of 1848, before Moore J., when a verdict was had for the plaintiff for £500 damages, and in Hilary Term last a rule was made absolute to set aside the verdict on the ground of misdirection by the learned judge who had charged the jury, that in his opinion proof of actual malice in fact was not necessary, and that such malice as would sustain the action might be inferred from gross neglect. The arguments and judgment on that occasion have been reported at pp. 186-8 of this vol., where also is given a full statement of the pleadings in the suit, and of the evidence adduced at the trial. The cause came on to be tried a second time at the Cork Spring Assizes of 1849, before Richards, B., where evidence having been gone into similar to that given on the former trial, the learned judge told the jury, that in case they were of opinion that the execution had in fact been over-marked, the next question for them was, whether the evidence in the case warranted the inference that the execution was so over-marked maliciously or not; that it was not necessary to enable the plaintiff to recover that he should shew that each or any one of the managing body of the Company had exhibited enmity towards the plaintiff, or had been influenced by malicious motives in the issuing and overmarking of the writ against the plaintiff, but that if the person professionally employed by the defendants against the plaintiff acted so in the transaction as to warrant the inference that the overmarking had been malicious on his part, the defendants were responsible in this action for the consequences of his act; that a mere mistake, however, was no foundation for an action like the present, and that it was for the jury to draw their own conclusion from the facts in evidence. The jury found again for the plaintiff with £600 damages. A conditional order was obtained in the course of this Term to set aside the second verdict on the ground of misdirection and of its being contrary to the weight of evidence. Cause was to-day shewn against making the same absolute by

Mr. Bennett, Q. C. (Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q. C. with him.)—This action is not founded on the statute but at common law. It is absurd to draw a distinction between the acts of an individual and those of a Company. Here the Company gave instructions for the commission of a certain act which caused the arrest of the plaintiff, and that notwithstanding the positive assurance on the part of their attorney that he should have notice of any proceeding on foot of the judgment against him. There was abundant evidence in this case to warrant an inference of malice in the defendants. Nicholson v. Coghill, (4 B. & C. 21); Ravenga v. Mackintosh, (3 B. & C. 693, per Holroyd, J.) The other side may rely on Sinclair v. Eldred, (4 Taun. 7,) but all that that case decided was that the mere fact of a defendant having been non proceesed in an action in which he had held the plaintiff in the principal case to bail was not per se evidence of malice. Austin v. Deb- nam, (3 B. & C. 139,) is an authority in our favour. Saxon v. Castle, (6 Ad. & El. 652, per Littledale, J.) The arrest here was calculated to injure not only the character of the plaintiff but also his mercantile credit.

Mr. Serjeant O'Brien, and Mr. Martley, Q. C. contra.—Even assuming the learned judge's charge to have been right, there was no evidence of malice to go to the jury. The verdict is clearly against the weight of evidence. With respect to the authorities cited by the other side, in Saxon v. Castle the question of malice did not arise at all, it not having been even averred in the declaration, and for this the verdict was set aside. In Ravenga v. Mackintosh, Lord Tenterden, C.J. left it to the jury to say whether the defendant had acted bona fide, and believing that he had a good cause of action or not. In Nicholson v. Coghill, the question of malice was left to the jury, and Holroyd, J., in that case says, that "two ingredients are indispensably necessary to the maintenance of an action of this kind, malice and want of probable cause, and the plaintiff must produce such evidence of both as will enable the jury fairly to infer them." In Sinclair v. Eldred, the plaintiff was ultimately nonsuited, and in Austin v. Debnam malicious notions were clearly chargeable to the defendant. We rely on the cases of Gibson v. Cheaters, (3 Bos. & Pal. 123.) De Medina v. Gross, (10 Q. B. 152.) The reasoning of Lord Denman in the last case strongly applies to the present. Moore v. Gardiner, (16 M. & W. 595.) In this case we have given distinct evidence that the overmarking complained of originated in a mistake. There is a definition of what constitutes malice in the notes to 1 Wms. Statutes, 130. Our next objection is, that the malice to ground the present action should have been on the part of the individual who is sought to be made responsible, and not of his attorney. There are certainly cases of trespass in which the principal has been held answerable for the acts of his agent or servant, acting within the scope of his authority. [Crompton, J.—Take the case of a client directing his attorney to issue execution for the exact sum due, and the attorney maliciously inserting in the writ a larger sum. Would the client be liable therefor?] We admit that an action will lie against the attorney or client, or both, in case malice be brought home to them individually. Cresser v. Pilling, (4 B. & C. 26.) The test of a principal's liability for the act of his agent is, whether such be within the scope of the authority of the latter. McManus v. Crickett, (1 East. 106.) Croft v. Oliver, (4 B. & C. 590.) [Crompton, J.—When the act of a servant is lawful, the master is liable, if it be done within the scope of the servant's authority; not so, however, when the servant's act is unlawful.] Thynne v. Russell, (1 J. & S. 161; Story's Law of Agency, 456.) [Blackburne, C.J.—One man's malice cannot be the malice of another.] There is a third question in this case, as to whether a corporation can be liable in such an action. [Blackburne, C.J.—If an individual can be held liable for the acts of his agent, so can a corporation. Perrin, J.—This question appears on the record.]

Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q. C., in reply. That which is, in the cases referred to, called "express malice," means nothing more than malice in fact as distinguished from malice in law. The jury were at liberty to infer malice in fact from the absence of probable cause, Mitchell v. Jenkins (5 B. & Ad. 593); Arbuckle v. Taylor (in D. P. 3 Dow. 180); Purcell v. Macnamara (9 East. 361); Parrott v. Fishwick (9 East. 362, note.) Gross and culpable negligence affords a presumption of malice, S Starkie on Evidence, 725. [Crampton, J.—The overmarking here would appear to be a mere mistake.] In all the precedents there is no averment in cases of this kind to be met with, of want of probable cause, and the form of the present declaration was borrowed from Chitty on Pleading (Ed. 1831.) We, nevertheless, proved the absence of probable cause. We admit the principle laid down with respect to the liability of a principal for the act of his agent, with this qualification, that it must either be an act done by the express direction of the principal, or subsequently adopted by him, as in the present case, Jarman v. Hooper (1 Dowl. & C. 769). The judge did not tell the jury that they were to consider the company liable for the intentions of their attorney. In every case, the issuing of a writ is the act of an attorney, and so is its overmarking, and yet the statute renders his client liable, Raid v. Mitchell (4 Ir. L. R. 322.) With respect to the liability of a corporation, The Queen v. The Great North of England Railway Company (9, Q. B., 315), is in point.

BLACKBURN, C. J.—In this very important argument three questions have been raised for our consideration, with respect to one of which, the court is not called upon to pronounce any opinion, namely, as to the absence of probable cause, and whether the learned judge would have been justified in telling the jury that from want thereof, they were at liberty to infer malice in the defendants. We do not find any averment of the want of probable cause in a single count of the declaration, and no allusion thereto is made in the charge of the learned judge. Therefore, even though, in point of fact, no probable cause existed, the question is not now properly before the court. We are now simply reviewing the charge. It is impossible, however, to leave this subject without observing, that the judgment was entered in May, 1847, and though the plaintiff was apprized of proceedings having been taken against him, and though the fullest opportunity was allowed him of shewing that he was unjustly charged with a larger sum than was really due, yet for a period of six months, he never availed himself thereof, even after a notice, on the part of the Company, of their intention of enforcing their demand, with the particulars of which he must have been perfectly cognizant. If, therefore, the question of probable cause had properly been before the jury, and I had been the presiding judge, I should have been slow in arriving at the conclusion that there was not abundant evidence of the existence of probable cause. But with respect to the proposition which we have chiefly to consider, it is quite plain that the learned judge told the jury that to sustain the present action, it was not necessary for the plaintiff to shew that the defendants henceforth were actuated by malice, but that it was sufficient to prove that malice existed on the part of the agents or persons employed by them: in other words, that the malice of one man might constructively be deemed that of another. No authority has been cited to maintain such a proposition, which is repugnant both to reason and common sense. Where one person is employed by another, his acts, as agent, by authority derived from his principal, whether express or implied, are to be considered as the acts of the principal; but it is quite a distinct question, whether malice, which is a mental operation, an act of the mind can, by implication, be extended from one man to another. In my opinion, it is impossible that such a proposition can be maintained. We now come to the third question, as to whether there was evidence of malice on the part of the persons professionally employed, and who issued the execution. The learned Baron, as stated in his report, told the jury, that if the persons professionally employed by the defendants to conduct the action against the plaintiff, acted in such a way in that transaction as to warrant the inference, that the overmarking of the execution was malicious, the defendants in the present action were responsible. Now, the person who issued the execution was Mr. Newman, and he states in his evidence, as it appears on the report, that so far from being actuated by malice, he was not at all aware of the payment which had been made, and accordingly any intention to impute malice to Mr. Newman, was fairly disclaimed at the bar. Then with respect to Mr. Tandy; can it be presumed that he was actuated by malice? He was employed by the Company, and appears faithfully to have discharged his duty. The bank gave notice to the agent of the Company, and that officer gave notice to Mr. Tandy. A letter was certainly written to him containing such notice, which is alleged to have miscarried, and on search cannot be found. Here was a casualty—and to the miscarriage of that letter, and to that alone, are to be attributed all the subsequent occurrences. Whatever blame, therefore, exists, if any there be, arises solely in respect of the loss of that letter; but the sum total of the evidence, so far from shewing malice, proves the contrary; and I am clearly satisfied, that there was not a scintilla of evidence that any person was actuated by malicious motives in the transaction, or that the overmarking originated in anything save accident or mistake.

CRAMPTON, J.—I entirely concur in the judgment of my Lord Chief Justice. I am at a loss to discover a scintilla of evidence to go to the jury from which malice in the defendants, or those employed by them, could be inferred. Undoubtedly the Company are answerable for the acts of their agents; but as it is conceded that it is impossible to fasten malice on Mr. Newman, it is necessary for the plaintiff to go beyond the evidence which affects him. If it had been proved, that a person acting for the Company had said to Mr. Newman 'We have been paid £300 on account of the judgment which was obtained for £600; but the Company does not wish to give credit for such payment,' and that gentleman in consequence had issued execution for the whole amount, this might be a circumstance from which malicious motives might be inferred. So far however from this, the Company do everything which is fair and just: they write to inform Mr. Tandy of the payment of the money; and if a casualty occurred respecting the letter, that does not raise a presumption of malice either in Tandy or the Company. Suppose, on the other hand, that he did receive the letter, but forgot it, or from negligence or carelessness omitted sending it to his Dublin partner—is that evidence of malice? There is not, therefore, any ground, in my opinion, for imputing malice either to Mr. Tandy or Mr. Newman. But grant (however absurd and incredible it may appear) that both these gentlemen were influenced by malicious motives, in what way are the defendants, who are responsible for the acts, not the motives, of their attorney, connected therewith? I think, therefore, that the judge should either have nonsuited the plaintiff, or at all events have told the jury that there was not any evidence of malice, instead of directing them that although they should acquit the company, collectively and individually of malice, nevertheless, in case such could be inferred from the acts of the agents, they should find for the plaintiff. Such would, in my opinion, be no less than to impute to one man the guilt of the other, in a way not warranted by principle, authority, or common sense. I think, therefore, that the order for the new trial should be made absolute, without costs.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

GRUBB and ANOTHER, v. M'KENNA.—May 24.

Pleading—Charter-party—Condition precedent insufficiently averred.

A Declaration on a Charter party, set forth a stipulation that the ship should proceed to Dublin, or as near thereto as she should safely get, and deliver the cargo on being paid the freight as therein mentioned; and that one-third of the freight should be paid in cash on the unloading and right delivery of the cargo, and the rest by approved bills, payable in London at four months following, &c. The declaration contained an averment that the said ship did therewith proceed to Dublin, and did then and there deliver her cargo, &c. Special demurrer on the ground that the unloading and right delivery was a condition precedent, and that there was no averment of the unloading. Held, that the declaration was bad in not averring an unloading as well as a delivery of the cargo.

Assumpsit on a charter party. The declaration contained four special counts on the charter party: a count for freight, and the common counts. The first count was, as far as it is material to the case, as follows:—For that whereas, &c., by a certain charter party, &c., it was witnessed that the said ship, &c., and that being so loaded she should forthwith proceed to Dublin, or so near thereto as she might safely get, and deliver the same on being paid the freight as follows:—For timber, &c., one-third of the freight to be paid in cash on unloading and right delivery of the cargo, and the remainder by good and approved bills, payable in London at 4 months following, &c.; and that the said ship being so loaded did therewith proceed to Dublin, and did then and there deliver the said cargo to the said defendant, to wit, at the place aforesaid. Averment of general performance and breach.—That the defendant did not pay one-third of the freight of the said cargo in cash, on unloading and right delivery of the said cargo, &c., &c.

The 2nd, 3rd, and 4th counts were substantially the same as the first. Special demurrer to the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th counts, on the ground that as well the unloading, as the right delivery of the cargo was a condition precedent, and that the performance thereof had not been averred.

Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald Q. C. and Mr. Donohoe for the demurrer.—The averment in the declaration is, "That the said ship, being so loaded, did there-with proceed to Dublin, and did, then and there, deliver the said cargo &c.; and the contract was to unload and deliver; and that was clearly a condition precedent. [Pigot, C. B.—The only question is, whether the delivery does not imply the unloading. There is no doubt that otherwise it is a condition precedent, and performance of it must be averred.] There might have been a delivery on board ship before the cargo was unloaded; yet the charter party does not contemplate payment of the freight until the duty of unloading is fulfilled. In practice it is usual to deliver the goods, and divert the property therein, before any unloading of them has been effected.

Mr. David Lynch, Q. C., and Mr. Harris for the declaration.—If a plaintiff shews a substantial performance of a matter of a general nature, it is frequently sufficient to state it in general terms, without alleging particularly how he performed it, (Chitty on Pleading i. p. 338.) In Comyns Dig. Title Pleader, (c. 60), it is laid down, "but to allege performance in words, which in evidence import it is sufficient, as, if a promise be to receive A. and B. ut hospites, and to find necessities; if he alleges that he received them and found necessities, it is sufficient without saying ut hospites." The case of Gould v. Stephens (1 Salkeld 25) is an authority for that proposition, so is Wallace v. Scott, (Strange 88.) In the latter case, the plaintiff declared that the defendant in considerations would make him a set of sails worth £45, promised to pay so much for them upon request, and averred that the plaintiff made the sails. A demurrer on the ground that it was not averred that the sails were worth £45 was overruled. On this point counsel cited Chitty on Contracts (567); Chitty on Pleading (l. 362), and relied particularly on Alsager v. St. Katherine's Dock Co., (14 M. & W. 794); Yates and others v. Raibon, (2 Moore, 294); but here at all events the delivery involved unloading. This is a contract with a carrier, and in such a case an actual delivery is necessary, Boulter v. Arnott (1 Cr. & M. 334.)

PER CURIAM.—We are of opinion that the unloading of the cargo was a material element in this contract, and a condition precedent, the performance of which should have been averred. We must therefore allow the demurrer.

Judgment for the defendant.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

LYNDSEY v. LYNDSEY.—June 26, 27, 28; July 3.

to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses stated in 1838 J. L. made a will; that in 1845 he made another will, by which the former was revoked; that in 1846 the second will was destroyed in the direction of the said J. L. In 1848 J. L. died, without making any further will, and plaintiff, as his heir at law, entered into possession of his real estates. The bill then stated that the widow of J. L. made some claim under the will of 1838, and prayed that the evidence of the witnesses to the will of 1845, and of the person who destroyed same might be perpetuated. Plea, that there were tenants in possession of part of the real estate, who had not paid rent to, or acknowledged the title of the plaintiff, and that the matters in dispute could be immediately tried by action at law against the tenants. Held, that the plea was bad, as the tenants might not set up the plea in defence, and even if they did, there was nothing to show that the defendant would be bound by the proceedings in that action; also the plea was bad in not negating the existence of any tenants, such as a mortgagee being in possession, which, independently of the existence of the tenants, might be an answer to the action against the tenants.

There was an appeal from the decision of the Master of the Rolls. The facts of the case will be found on page 218.

Mr. Acheson Henderson for plaintiff—Dorset v. Blyth, (Prec. Ch. 531); Angell v. Angell, (1 Sim. 110. 83); Dew v. Clarke, (Ibid. 108.) The object of the plea is, that the plaintiff could try the matter by an ejectment against the tenants. The plea, however, is bad, both in substance and form. It is bad for duplicity, (Mitf. Plead. 341); Story v. Indor, (2 Atk. 630, Sto. Eq. Pl.); Whitbread v. Rockhurst, (1 B. C. C., 404.)

Mr. Dobbs in support of the plea.—The plaintiff pleads that he is in possession of the whole of the estates. The plea contradicts that statement. Clarke v. Hoare, (14 Ves. 59.) A recent case before Lord Langdale, shows that mere matter of pleading, all leading to one point, does not make a plea double. Kirkman v. Andrews, (4 Beav. 1.) The substance of the plea is that a party is entitled to file a bill of this sort, till he has found every means to have his evidence sifted at trial.

That rule is to be deduced from two or three authorities. Brandlyn v. Ord, (1 Atk. 571); Parry v. Watts, (1 Vern. 441); Dew v. Clark, (1 Sim. & Stu. 98.) What we have pleaded is the power to try the right at law. Angell v. Angell, (1 Sim. & Stu. 89.) A witness cannot be punished for perjury, for assertions cannot be published in their life time. Wadale v. Lowe, (2 R. & M. 192.) On principle the court will not give such aid, till the right has been tried at law.

Mr. Longfield, Q.C. with Mr. Dobbs.—If action is brought against the tenant for rent, he would be obliged to file his interpleader bill. [Lord Chancellor.]—The difficulty which I feel is, that this plea is only an attempt to adopt the old Irish practice to force the party to contend with the tenant. In Dew v. Clarke, the action was with the trustees, and must have raised the question; there the plea separates the tenant from the defendant. We say he refuses to acknowledge the plaintiff's right. [Lord Chancellor.]—You do not say how.]

Mr. F. Fitzgerald in reply.—Foulds v. Midgley (1 V. & B. 138.) Dew v. Clark does not apply.

July 3. LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case has come before me on appeal from the Master of the Rolls. The bill was filed to perpetuate testimony, and the plaintiff claims to be heir-at-law of John Lyndsey, deceased. The bill states that John Lyndsey, being seized in fee of the house and demesne of Laugboy and other estates in the bill mentioned, on the 3rd of April, 1838, made his will, by which he bequeathed to his wife Helen H. Lyndsey, and her heirs, all the estates of which he should die seized. The bill then states that John Lyndsey, being still so seized, on the 5th of December, 1845, made another will in writing, which is also set forth in the bill, the effect of which was to alter the former will, and to revoke the provisions thereby made for Mrs. Lyndsey; different other matters are then set forth, and the bill states the attestation of the will, and several matters to shew that the will was afterwards destroyed, and by that means the plaintiff, who was his heir at law, became entitled to the estates upon the death of John Lyndsey, which occurred in August, 1848; that after the death of John Lyndsey, the plaintiff entered into possession of the house and demesne, and the other estates, and is now in possession thereof, and hoped he would enjoy same without opposition. It then charges that Helen H. Lyndsey, the widow, claims under the will of April, 1838, which she contends is not revoked; that she refuses to try whether that will has been destroyed or revoked, until after the death of the witnesses to the subsequent will, and of White, the witness to its destruction, whereby the plaintiff will be deprived of the benefit of their testimony; and the bill prays that the witnesses may be examined, and that their testimony may be preserved. To this bill a plea has been put in by the defendant, which, not disputing that the plaintiff is heir of John Lyndsey deceased, states that on the death of J. Lyndsey, in August, 1848, she entered into possession of the mansion house and demesne, under the will of 1838, and took possession of the title-deeds, and remained in possession of the house and demesne, and title-deeds, until the 27th of October, 1848; that the plaintiff came upon that day with several persons and turned her out of possession of the house, and took the title-deeds, which he still retains; that the remainder of the real estates are in the occupation of tenants, some of whom held by lease, and some as tenants from year to year; that they all pay rent; that those in occupation have not paid rent to plaintiff since the death of said J. Lyndsey, and have not acknowledged him by attornment, or otherwise; that therefore complainant is not in possession of all the real estates; that one of the tenants holds, &c., at the rent of £32, and refused to pay rent to, and did not acknowledge the plaintiff; two or three other persons are also specified as holding part of the lands as tenants, and similar averments are made concerning them. The plea then states that defendant is advised that the plaintiff could proceed by action at law against the tenants named, and can thereby assert his right to the real estates of which J. Lyndsay died seized, and the court ought not to perpetuate the testimony of the witnesses.

This is the substance of the plea, that the complainant is in a condition to proceed at law against some or one of these parties named in the plea, and that this court is not called on to interfere. From the way in which the statements in the plea are made, it would appear that they are all tenants for terms of years, or from year to year. The defendant admits that J. Lyndsay died seized, and the tenures are also mentioned.

The first question is, whether this case falls within the principles and reason of the authorities, and is the plaintiff in a condition to try the matters stated? or, in order to sustain the plea, is it sufficient merely to show that there are third persons who may dispute the title in the manner alleged? The authorities are nearly uniform, and show that if there be a means of trying the legal title stated in the bill, this court will not interfere to perpetuate testimony until the plaintiff produces his witnesses in a court of law to establish the truth of what he states, and submits them to a cross-examination; the authorities go to that extent. Thus in Mitford's Equity Pleading, page 52, 4th ed., it is laid down that in such a case "the bill ought also to shew that the facts to which the testimony of the witnesses proposed to be examined is conceived to relate, cannot be immediately investigated in a court of law, as in the case of a person in possession without disturbance;" and in Wyatt's Pr. Reg. 73, "If a matter be properly triable at law, as a title, and the plaintiff can have an opportunity to try it there, this bill is not to be brought here till the party has affirmed his title at law; if he does it will be dismissed upon a demurrer." In Bechinall v. Arnold, 1 Vern. 354, there was a "bill to prove a will and to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses; the defendant pleaded himself a purchaser without notice of any such will, and insisted that unless there had been a verdict in affirmance of such will (nothing hindering the plaintiff but that if he had a title he might recover at law,) the plaintiff ought not to be admitted to examine his witnesses, thereby to bring a cloud over a purchaser's estate, and upon debate the court allowed the plea;" and in the same book, page 441, in the case of Parry v. Rogers, there was "a bill to examine witnesses to preserve their testimony touching the title of certain lands in the bill mentioned. The defendant demurred, because there was no impediment that hindered plaintiff from trying his right at law, and that he had not obtained any verdict in affirmation of his pretended title. Demurrer allowed." And in the case of the Duke of Dorset v. Girdler, (Finch. 531,) the bill was for a commission to examine witnesses and perpetuate testimony. The defendant demurred that the plaintiff had not verified his title at law, and therefore had no right to bring his bill in the first instance; but the demurrer was overruled, and the difference taken by the Court, "that if one is out of possession having only right to fishery common rentcharge,

(it should be, "or rentcharge,") he who brings such a bill ought never to be allowed to do so, but a demurrer to it will be good, because he may and ought first to enter his action and establish his title at law; otherwise, publication not being to pass till after the death of the witnesses, (as in those cases it never does, without special order of the Court,) they may be guilty of the grossest perjury, and yet go unpunished; besides that, the party having a remedy at law, the other side ought not to be deprived of the opportunity of confronting the witnesses and examining them publicly, which has always been found the most effectual method for discovering the truth." These cases, on the whole, establish this principle, that if the plaintiff has an opportunity of bringing the matter before a Court of law, this Court will not assist him; but the proceeding at law must be such as that the matter will be tried in it; it must be of such a nature, that the plaintiff will have an opportunity of trying the title at law, and in which the question will be tried, and it is not enough that the plaintiff may have an opportunity of going to law with third persons, who make no title as against him, and who may or may not set up the claim on which the defendant relies, who are not in privity with the defendant, so as to make the proceedings evidence against the defendant.

It is important to see the real bearing of the plea in this case; it states that the plaintiff entered into possession of the house and demesne; and, so far, there was no necessity for the plaintiff to try the title at law; he has obtained possession, legally, it must be assumed, although the statement is, that by force, &c. that must be taken to be the same as the statement of vi et armis in trespass, and means that the plaintiff found an intruder in the house, and turned her out of possession. So far, the plea would seem to sustain the statement in the bill. It is difficult to say, that the plaintiff is to be deprived of relief in this Court because he could bring an action of trespass against this lady, for the momentary possession from the time of his entering and turning her out. Indeed, that part of the case appears to have been abandoned, and the substantial part of the plea is the allegation, which is wound up by the averment at the conclusion, that part of the land is in the occupation of tenants who hold at rents payable to the defendant; it is plain, that if the plaintiff was to bring an action against any of these parties, there is nothing in the plea to shew that the defendant would be bound by what might take place in that action. The plaintiff might go on against every tenant on the estate, without having advanced one step farther. Whether these tenants would set up the will on which the defendant relies, is unknown, and whether they did or not, it would be the same to the plaintiff, so far as the question between him and the defendant is concerned. I do not see how it has been shewn that the question of title can be tried between the plaintiff and defendant, or that the actions against the tenants would necessarily raise that question. The authorities are to the effect, that until a party has tried his title at law, he cannot proceed in a suit such as the present; but it must be shewn, that by proceeding at law the title will or will not be affirmed. It is not enough to shew that proceedings may be taken, by the evidence in which the defendant will not be bound, and the plaintiff might have to begin over and over again. There are no averments in the plea to shew that the tenants acknowledged the defendant's title, the only averment is, that they held by rents payable to her, and there is no averment to shew that any such proceedings would be binding on the defendant. The plea admits possession of the house and demesne taken by the plaintiff, and that puts him in privity with all the estate, and that is a possession in him of the entire. Also the plea should conduce to a single point; the point here is, that the plaintiff can adopt proceedings at law, which will determine the question, and the statement in the plea is, that the tenants refuse to pay the plaintiff their rents; but that is quite consistent with the fact of a mortgagee being in possession, and that the tenants are bound to pay their rents to him. There may be leases in reversion, also there may be many other similar cases, and they should be all negatived, in order to reduce the matter to a single point. The plea itself should do so, and shew that the plaintiff not only may try, but has, an opportunity of trying that single question in a Court of law. By following the course pointed out in the plea, the plaintiff may be driven to try the question, not with the real defendant, but with a number of tenants, many of whom appear, from the amount of their rents stated, to be within the jurisdiction of the Civil Bill Courts, and which would have the effect of harassing them; and although that is an objection more on the ground of convenience, still it is deserving of some consideration. The case of Dow v. Clarke, (in 1st Sim. & Sta.) which was so much relied upon in argument, when examined, will be found not to be an authority in support of this plea, and must be considered with regard to the special circumstances of the case. It is plain that the proceedings at law in that case, if successful, not only might, but would, have established the right of the party. There was but one tenant, and he had paid rent to one of the devisees in trust. There was privity between the tenant and defendants, and a verdict against the tenant would be admissible evidence against the defendants. The observations of the Vice Chancellor must be considered as having regard to the circumstances of the case, and are to be taken secundum subjectum materiam. The case was totally different from that now before me, in which there is nothing to shew that if the plaintiff proceeded against every one of these tenants he could ever obtain a verdict which would establish his title as between him and the defendant. As I have said before, there may be many circumstances which will prevent the real question in this case from being tried in an action against the tenant, and the plea would have negatived the existence of these facts. Upon that part of the case there is a very late authority, Rawlinson v. Moss, (6 Hare, 601); there was a bill of revivor, and a plea was put in by the representatives of a deceased defendant that the party whom they represented was never served with a subpoena to appear and answer, and did not appear nor answer the original bill. The plea was overruled as bad in substance, for it did not exclude the fact that the deceased person might, by other means, have been bound by the proceedings in the original cause. The Vice Chancellor, in giving judgment in that case, said, "That in order to sustain a plea, the defendant should have shewn not only that the deceased defendant had not entered an appearance, but that there had been neither act nor acquiescence on her part nor any other circumstance by which she was bound in the former suit; the averments in this respect were very imperfect." I think the plea in this case is imperfect in not negating the existence of any facts which would prevent the title from being tried in an action against the tenant; it does not reduce the case to a single point. For these reasons I consider the plea is bad, and the order of the Rolls must be reversed.

ROLLS COURT.

STEWART v. HASSARD.—May 1st.

Lease set against assignment—Waiver.

Lease in 1819 containing a covenant, that the lessee his heirs and assigns should not set, sell, alienate, or otherwise dispose of any part of said demised premises, without the consent in writing of the lessor, and in case of breach a penal rent was reserved; in 1824 leases assigned with consent, in 1835 there was another assignment without consent. HELD, that the consent to the first assignment was not a general waiver of the covenant, and the lessor was entitled to the penal rent.

By indenture of the 1st day of May, 1819, and made between George Hassard of the one part and Andrew Staples Clarke, said G. Hassard demised the lands of Skea to the said A. S. Clarke, at the yearly rent of £34 2s. 6d., late currency, to hold for a term of three lives and sixteen years, and said lease contained the following covenant, "and it is further agreed upon by and between the said parties, their heirs and assigns, that he, the said A. S. Clarke, his heirs and assigns, shall not set, sell, alienate, or otherwise dispose of any part of said demised premises, without the consent in writing of the said G. Hassard, his heirs or assigns, under the penalty of ten guineas additional yearly rent to be recovered over and above the said reserved yearly rent of £34 2s. 6d." In the year 1824, A. S. Clarke, the lessee, being desirous of disposing of his interest in the premises, wrote to said G. Hassard upon the subject of the clause against subletting, above-mentioned, and received the following letter:

"DEAR SIR—I am aware of what you say of the clause in your letter prohibiting letting without my consent; although I regret your leaving my neighbourhood, yet if it is advantageous to your family I will give my consent. As to my signing any deed I consider there is not any necessity, &c.

(signed) GEORGE HASSARD."

After the receipt of this letter, by indenture of the 26th of October, 1824, the said A. S. Clarke conveyed his interest in said lands to John Joyce, and to this deed G. Hassard, the lessor, was a subscribing witness. For several years John Joyce sublet a part of said lands without any further permission from the lessor, and without being called on for the penal rent. In the year 1835 J. Joyce advertised his interest in the premises for sale by auction, and Thomas Beresford became the purchaser thereof. Previous to the appointment of the receiver in the case the penal rent of ten guineas had been reduced by G. Hassard, the lessor, to the sum of five guineas, and same was paid by T. Beresford to Mr. Hassard and to the receiver for several years. The receiver having laid a statement of facts before the Master, from which it appeared that said T. Beresford did not reside in said premises, but had sublet same without any consent, and that the sum of £42 7s. 2d., including the penal rent of five guineas per annum, was due up to the 1st of November, 1848. On the 13th of February, 1849, a conditional order for an attachment for non-payment of said sum was issued against Beresford, and

Mr. J. Brooks, Q. C. now moved to shew cause.—In this case the receiver has no right to the increased rent of five guineas a-year, as the condition against assigning or under-leasing is wholly gone and determined, the lessor having once consented to an assignment, and the condition being entire when once dispensed with, is destroyed. Dumpor's case, (4 Rep. 119; Furlong, L. & T. 556, and cases there referred to.)

Mr. B. Lloyd, and Mr. Hassard, contra.—In this case there was a license given by the lessor to alien once, but that does not destroy the condition; there is a material difference between waiving the covenant or condition altogether, and the waiver of a particular breach. "In modern times the courts have generally considered that a waiver of the breach is not, as was held in Dumpor's case, a waiver of the covenant." Doe v. Pritchard, (2 N. & M. 495.) The omission of the landlord to avail himself of a forfeiture at one period does not waive his right to avail himself of a continuing breach at a subsequent period. (Furlong, 1221.)

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The original lease in this case bears date in 1819, and the assignment to which the lessor consented was in 1824. The Amended Subletting Act of William 4, was passed in 1832, by which it is provided that any matter thereafter to be done shall not be construed a waiver of any covenant, therefore, if the waiver took place after this Act of 1832 there would not be any doubt, and Dumpor's case would not apply. In this case, however, I do not think there was a general waiver, for where there is a covenant such as the present, and, in a particular instance, the lessor says, "you may assign," I do not think that is to be considered a general waiver of the covenant. I consider that was only a particular agreement—a waiver of the covenant as between these parties. The covenant provides that the said A. S. Clarke, his heirs and assigns, shall not set, alienate, or otherwise dispose of any part of said demised premises, without the consent in writing of the said G. Hassard, his heirs or assigns, under the penalty of ten guineas additional yearly rent, to be recovered over and above the said received yearly rent, &c. I do not think that in this case there has been any general waiver of the covenant, and what took place with regard to the assignment to Joyce was only a particular agreement between the parties. I must, therefore, disallow the cause shewn against this attachment; and in this case it is to be observed that a similar construction has been put on the matter by the parties themselves.

Lib. 284, fo. 212.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—TRINITY TERM.

KELLY, ADMINISTRATRIX OF ELEANOR KELLY v. SHAW.—May 25th and June 1st.

Covenant—Demurrer—Cessation of interest—Under-lease of a term of years by an administratrix—Her personal representative entitled to sue for the rent. Drue v. Baylie (1 Freeman, 402) considered and approved of.

Covenant for rent by administratrix of lessor against assignees of lessee. Plea, that the lessor had nothing in the premises, except through M. K., deceased; that M. K. was possessed of the premises for the residue of the term until his death. That administration was granted to the lessor, whereby she, as administratrix, and not otherwise, became possessed of the premises for the said term; that the lessor died, "whereby all her estate in the premises ceased and determined." Replication, that the lessor was not, at the time of making the said lease, possessed of the premises for the said term, as administratrix of M. K., as in the said plea alleged. HELD, upon special demurrer, First, that the plea was bad, as it alleged that there was a TOTAL cessation of the estate in the premises. Secondly, that the personal representative of the lessor was entitled to sue for the rent.

Covenant. The declaration stated that Eleanor Kelly was lawfully possessed of a messuage and tenement for a term of 100 years, whereof 60 years and upwards were then unexpired; and that being so possessed thereof by an indenture made between her of the one part, and Michael Doyle of the other part, she demised the said messuage and tenement unto the said M. Doyle, his executors, administrators and assigns, from the 1st December, 1830, for a term of 60 years, yielding to the said E. Kelly, her executors, administrators, and assigns, during the said term, the yearly rent of £30, payable quarterly. And the said M. Doyle thereby covenanted for himself, his executors, administrators and assigns, to pay the said reserved yearly rent to the said E. Kelly, her executors, administrators and assigns, on the days and times appointed for the payment thereof. By virtue whereof the said M. Doyle entered upon the demised premises, and was possessed thereof for the said term. Agreement, that afterwards, to wit, on the 31st October, 1831, the said E. Kelly died intestate, and that letters of administration of her chattels and effects were, on the 13th August, 1833, granted to the plaintiff. By reason whereof the plaintiff became possessed of the reversion, and being so possessed thereof, and the said M. Doyle being so possessed of the demised premises, afterwards, and during the said term, to wit, on the 1st January, 1840, all the estate and interest of the said M. Doyle in the demised premises, by assignment, came to and vested in the defendant; whereupon the defendant entered, and became possessed thereof for the resi-

he said term: Further averment, that after and so became possessed of the demised by assignment, and after the death of the Kelly, to wit, on the 1st of September, 1847, rent became due and was still unpaid to the administratrix, contrary to the tenor of the said indenture, and of the said copy of the said M. Doyle, and to the damage of plaintiff, as administratrix, of £50.

actio non, because he says, "that the said had nothing in the said message and pre- save and except through and under one Kelly, deceased, and before the said E. as possessed of the said message and pre- o wit, on the 1st of January, 1820, the said y was possessed thereof for the residue then and unexpired of and in the said message, e appurtenances, and then continued pos- hereof, until, and at the time of his death, ng so possessed, afterwards, to wit, on the uary, 1823, the said M. Kelly died, and after th, to wit, on the 1st December, 1823, ad- ation of all and singular, the goods and s, rights and credits of the said M. Kelly ly granted to the said E. Kelly, whereby the Kelly, as such administratrix, and not other- hen and there became, and was possessed, of d message and premises, with the appurten- for the said term, and continued, and was ed thereof, as such administratrix, and not ise, up to and until, and at the time of the g of said indenture of lease. And the de- nt says, that after the making of the said in- re of lease, and before the breach of covenant e declaration mentioned, to wit, on the lat ry, 1834, the said E. Kelly died, and there- and thereby, all her estate, term, and interest l in the said message and premises, with the tenancies, ceased and determined, and this fendant is ready to verify."

plication. "That the said E. Kelly was not, time of the making of the said indenture of possessed of the said message and premises, be appurtenances, for the said term, as admi- natrix of all and singular the goods and chattels, and credits of the said M. Kelly, in manner rm as the said defendant has in his said plea t behalf alleged, and this the plaintiff prays be inquired of by the country." The demurrer to the replication. Joinder in demurrer.

Mr. Meagher, with him Mr. O'Leary, in support of the demurrer.—The court will have to consider, upon this pleading, whether, where an administra- trix makes an under-lease of a term of years, which belonged to the intestate, reserving rent to herself, her executors, administrators, and assigns, the per- sonal representative of the administratrix, or the administrator de bonis non of the intestate, shall have the rent. Drue v. Baylie (1 Freem, 392-402), will be relied on at the other side, to shew that the personal representative of the administratrix, the plaintiff in the present action, is the party entitled; but the authority of that case has been very much shaken by subsequent decisions, Catherwood v. Chabaud (1 B. & C. 150); Hirst v. Smith (7 Term R. 182.) [Blackburne, C. J.—Have you an authority to shew that the administrator de bonis non can sue upon a contract of the administrator?] The administrator de bonis non is entitled to the reversion (Saund. 370, note), and the rent when recovered, becomes assets; but if the reversion passed to the personal representative of the administratrix, the rent would cease to be assets. [Perrin, J.—Have you a case, where an administrator de bonis non recovered in the name of the administrator? The only way the administrator de bonis non could recover, would be as assignee.] One of the state- ments in the plea is, that E. Kelly was possessed as administratrix, and not in her own right. [Moore, J.—Why is the plaintiff not at liberty to traverse that averment?] The replication is, that E. Kelly was not, at the time of making the lease, possessed as administratrix, and not otherwise. This is a traverse of a conclusion of law. Perrin, J.—It traverses a matter of fact.] The replication is also bad for ambiguity. It is uncertain whether it is a denial of possession as administratrix, or that, be- fore the making of the lease, such possession deter- mined. It would be open to the plaintiff to make either case at the trial. [Moore, J.—It is but one issue, though capable of being proved in two ways. The traverse of the words, "and not otherwise," appears insensible. Perrin, J.—Taylor v. Need- ham, (2 Taunt. 278), is an authority to shew that the assignee of a lease by indenture is estoppel by the deed which estops his assignor.]

Mr. Hayes and Mr. Napier, Q.C. contra.—Drue v. Baylie has been approved and confirmed. Sk-f- fington v. Whitetrust, (3 Y. & Coll. 1); Skeffing- ton v. Budd, (9 Cl. & Fin. 219); Elliott v. Kemp, (7 Mee. & W. 306); Williams on Ex. 783, note; Latch. 266. The administratrix appropriated this lease to herself, and made it in her own right. Barber v. Lemon, (12 Jur. 246). There is an affirmative allegation on the one side, and a nega- tive denial on the other; the plea says that E. Kelly was solely possessed as administratrix, and the re- plication denies that. Curbois v. Brereton, (2 Jones 397); Grisell v. Robinson, (3 Scott, 829.)

The court desired to hear

Mr. O'Leary, in support of the plea.—The action is by the assignee of the reversion, against the assignee of the lessee. The word assigns in the covenant must mean assignee of the estate, and not a mere personal representative. (Co. Lit. 210, a.) The plaintiff claims as assignee of the estate, and we say that the estate of the lessor ceased at the death of the lessor. Brudnell v. Roberts, (2 Wils.

148.) The true question raised on the pleading is, whether the plaintiff, upon taking out letters of administration, was entitled to the reversion. We allege that the person claiming the reversion is not entitled to the reversion. The declaration should either have stated, that the term vested in E. Kelly and came to the plaintiff, as her administratrix, or, admitting that E. Kelly took, as administratrix, it should have shewn something whereby she acquired the possession in her own right.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 1st.—BLACKBURN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the court.—This case comes before the court upon demurrer to the replication; and it has been argued by the plaintiff that the plea is bad. It is an action of covenant for rent, brought by the administratrix of the lessor, against the assignee of the lessee. The declaration states, that E. Kelly, the intestate, was possessed of the demised premises for a term, whereof sixty years and upwards were then unexpired; that being so possessed, she made the indenture of demise therein set forth; it then states her death, and that letters of administration of her chattels and effects were granted to the plaintiff, by reason whereof the plaintiff became possessed of the reversion. The plea, which is very inaccurately framed, and on special demurrer would be held bad for uncertainty, says, that E. Kelly has nothing in the same premises, except through Michael Kelly deceased; that said M. Kelly was possessed thereof for the residue then to come, and unexpired, not saying what residue, and continued so possessed until his death; that administration was granted to the said E. Kelly, whereby she, as administratrix, and not otherwise, became possessed of the premises for the said term, no term being mentioned in the plea. The plea then avers the death of E. Kelly, whereby all her estate in the premises ceased and determined. The replication is, that the said E. Kelly was not, at the time of making the said lease, possessed of the premises for the said term, as administratrix of M. Kelly, as in the said plea alleged. If the right of the plaintiff to recover in this action, depended upon the result of whether E. Kelly was possessed of the premises, suo jure, or as administratrix, it would be necessary to consider and determine, whether the issue tendered by this replication, was a proper one. But the defence made by the plea is, that the title of E. Kelly is at an end, and that, therefore, the plaintiff, who sues as her representative, cannot maintain this action. If this argument be well founded, it would follow, though the lease is still subsisting, and there is a covenant to pay the rent during the term, that no rent could be recovered from the original lessee or his assignee, by any one, as the plea does not allege that there is an administrator de bonis non, and non constat that there will be; so that if this be a proper and well-founded allegation, there is a total cessation of the estate and interest of E. Kelly in the term. Such a proposition is not maintainable in point of law. A specific rent was reserved by the lease, to continue during the term, and, whoever may have the right to recover it, beyond all question, that rent belongs to some one. To say, then, that the estate in the premises has totally ceased, is repugnant to the plainest principles of law. Drus v. Baylis is, however, an express authority in support of the plaintiff's right to recover. I have taken down the particulars of that case. It was an action of debt on a bond to perform covenants in a lease, and from the report it appears that the only question was, whether or no the executor of the lessor had a right to the rent, it being admitted that if the rent was gone, so were the bond and covenant; it was argued that the rent went with the reversion to the administrator, de bonis non, and not to the executor of the lessor; and that if the lessor was liable in that action to the executor, he would be doubly charged, for the administrator de bonis non would also sue him for the rent; but Hale, C. J., in giving judgment, says, "the administrator had a double capacity in him when he made this lease; one in his own right, and the other in right of his intestate; and though he had the term wholly in right of the intestate, yet, by making a lease of part, he appropriated that to himself, and had the rent in his own right; and so having the rent in his own right, the administrator de bonis non could not claim it, because he came in paramount." And again he adds—"The administrator having power to dispose of the term which he had in right of the intestate, the rent which is reserved to him and his executor, is a continuing interest in them in the same right." That passage is a complete answer to the allegation in the plea, that there is a total cesser of the right to recover this rent. It also has a direct application to the case we are now considering, for there is in this lease, an express covenant to pay the rent, while the estate continued—and that covenant binds the assignee. Drus v. Baylis must be considered a decision of very great authority, and I do not find that it is impugned by any subsequent case. Mr. Williams in his work on executors, at page 783, cites it, without reference to any case questioning its validity, and the doctrine established by it has been followed in Skeffington v. Budd (9 Cl. Fin. 219), and Curtis v. Brereton (2 Jones, 397.) For these reasons, we are of opinion that, the plea being bad, the demurrer to the replication must be overruled.

Demurrer overruled.

COMMON PLEAS.—TRINITY TERM.

CLARKE v. KELLY.—May, 25th.

Act of Union—Taking plea off the file.

The court will not permit a plea, calling into question the power of the Imperial Parliament to bind Ireland, to be argued; but will direct it to be taken off the file, although no motion for that purpose has been made by the opposite party.

Declaration in replevin. The defendant pleaded three avowries, each to the effect that the defendant was collector of poor rates for the electoral division of Drumlane, within the Cavan union, and, as such collector, distrained the lands in the declaration mentioned, being parcel of such electoral division for arrears of poor-rate due thereout. To each of these avowries the plaintiff filed several pleas, all to the same effect. The second and principal plea was flows:—"Because he saith that long before me when, &c., to wit, in the year of our Lord, the kingdom of Great Britain, and the kingdom of Ireland were separate and independent kingdoms, and being so separate and independent, an international compact was entered into, upon by and between the said kingdoms, the purpose of uniting the said kingdoms, at the same time separate and independent kingdoms, in corporate union, and the said William saith, he said international compact was set out and in a certain treaty, which treaty was entered concluded, and ratified by and between the kingdoms, then independent and separate as said, long before the time when, &c., to wit, the year of our Lord, 1800; and the said William saith, that by the said treaty it was stipulated, covenanted, and agreed, that the said kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland, up to that time independent and separate kingdoms, should be united ever in an incorporate union, upon certain conditions and conditions set out in said treaty, and thenceforth and for ever form one kingdom, styled the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and the said William saith, that the treaty so entered into as aforesaid, was embodied in a certain act of Parliament of Great Britain, then a separate and independent kingdom, to wit, in an act made and passed in the session holden in the 39th and 40th years of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, entitled 'An Act of Union between Great Britain and Ireland,' and was also embodied in an act of the Parliament of Ireland, then also a separate and independent kingdom as aforesaid, to wit, in an act made and passed in the session holden in the year of the reign of his late Majesty, George the Third, and entitled, "An Act of Union between Great Britain and Ireland;" and the said Parliament of Great Britain and the said Parliament of Ireland each separately confirm, ratify and establish for the said treaty so as aforesaid entered into and agreed; and said William saith that by force and effect of said treaty and of the said several acts of Parliaments of Great Britain and Ireland then entered separate and independent kingdoms, the said international compact set out and stated in the said treaty of Union became and is the written constitution and supreme fundamental law of this country, and the rights, privileges and immunities secured to the subjects of this kingdom by the said treaty became and are fundamental rights, privileges and immunities of the said subjects of this kingdom, and no Parliament or other authority whatsoever is fully competent to alter or destroy. And the said William saith that by the said treaty of Union the said Parliament was created and constituted, to wit, "The Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland," and that to the said Parliament so created, constituted and styled, were assigned legislative powers for the government of the United Kingdom and the several portions thereof were given by the said treaty, which had so been created and constituted it. And said William further saith that said legislative powers so assigned to the said Parliament by the said treaty as said were marked out, and limited, and defined by the articles of the said treaty; and that the said Parliament hath not any power, jurisdiction, or authority in this country other than such power, jurisdiction and authority as have been given to the said Parliament by the said treaty of Union, whereby the said Parliament was as aforesaid created and constituted. And said William further saith that the powers of taxation which the said Parliament should be legally authorized and empowered to exercise over the said United Kingdom and the several portions thereof were stipulated, covenanted and agreed upon by and between the said kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland, at that time separate and independent kingdoms as aforesaid, and were and are set forth in the seventh article of the said treaty of Union. And said William further saith, that by the said 7th article of the said treaty, it was covenanted and agreed, by and between the said kingdoms, at that time separate and independent as aforesaid, that the said parliament of the United Kingdom should be authorized to impose and levy, within that part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, called Ireland, an amount of taxes, which should bear to the entire taxation of the United Kingdom, the proportion of 2 to 15, provided such amount could be raised without imposing, upon any article in Ireland, a tax greater than was borne by a similar article in Great Britain. And said William further saith, that by the said article it was further stipulated and agreed upon, that if at any time the separate debt of Ireland should bear to the separate debt of Great Britain, the proportion of 2 to 15—then, and in that case, the said parliament of the United Kingdom should be authorized and empowered to pass an act consolidating the revenues of the two kingdoms. And that after the passing of such act, said parliament should no longer be bound to regulate the taxation of the United Kingdom, and of the several parts thereof, by and according to the proportion above-mentioned; but by and according to another arrangement, stipulated and agreed upon, by and between the said two kingdoms as aforesaid, and set out in the 7th section of the 7th article of the said treaty. And the said William further saith, that by the said 7th section of the said 7th article of the said treaty, it was covenanted and agreed upon, by and between the said two kingdoms, that, after the passing of the said act last-mentioned, the said parliament should be authorized, empowered, and bound to defray all future expenses thenceforth to be incurred, together with the interest and charges of all debts contracted previous to the passing of said act, indiscriminately, by equal taxes imposed on the same articles in any other country; and should be authorized and bound to impose and levy, with equal or uniform taxes only, subject to such particular exemptions or abatements, in Ireland or Scotland, as circumstances might appear from time to time to demand. And the said William further saith, that afterwards—to wit, in the year of our Lord 1816, the said debt of Ireland bore to the said debt of Great Britain, the proportion so as above required, in order to authorize the said parliament to consolidate the revenues of the two countries. And that thereupon the said parliament being by virtue of the said covenants in the said

7th article above-mentioned, competent so to do, passed an act in the session holden in the 56th year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, entitled "An act to consolidate into one fund, all the public revenues of Great Britain and Ireland," and thereby carried into effect, the provisions and purposes of the said 7th section of the 7th article of the said treaty of Union. And said William saith, that thereupon, and since the passing of the said last-mentioned act, the powers of taxation possessed by the said parliament, extend only to the imposing or levying of equal and uniform taxes upon the subjects of the United Kingdom; subject to the exemptions and abatements aforesaid. And the said William saith, that the said parliament is not legally competent to impose any other taxes, save and except such equal or uniform taxes, subject to said exemptions and abatements; and that the subjects of this kingdom are not legally bound, or compellable to pay any other taxes, save such equal or uniform taxes, subject to such abatements and exemptions as aforesaid. And the said William further saith, that the said parliament is bound by said treaty, out of the entire produce of said equal or uniform taxation, as from a common fund, to defray indiscriminately all expenses to be incurred from the time of passing the said last-mentioned act; and which are to be defrayed by taxes laid on by parliament. And the said William saith, that parliament has not power, under the said treaty, or at all, to allocate a particular tax to the payment of a particular and specified expense; and that no subject of this kingdom is legally bound or compellable to pay any tax so allocated. And the said William saith, that the said powers of taxation so above, stated to be delegated by the said treaty to the said parliament, must be exercised directly by said parliament; and cannot be again delegated legally by the said parliament to any person or persons whatsoever. And that no subject of this kingdom is legally bound or compellable to pay any tax, except such tax shall have been directly imposed by the said parliament, according to the covenants and provisions of the said treaty. And the said William saith, that the tax described in the said first avowry of the said John, as a rate for the relief of the poor of 3s. in the pound upon the rateable property, within the electoral division of Drumlane, in the said Cavan Union, therein stated to be leviable under and by virtue of certain acts of parliament, in that behalf made and provided, and on account of the non-payment of which the said William was taken as aforesaid, is not an equal or uniform tax as aforesaid; but an unequal tax, and one which the said parliament of the United Kingdom is not legally competent to impose or levy, on or from the said William; and which the said William is not legally bound or compellable to pay. And the said William further saith, that the produce of the said tax described in the said first avowry of the said John, as a rate for the relief of the poor, is not applied indiscriminately, in the manner and form appointed and directed in that behalf, as above stated, by the said treaty of Union in discharge of all expenses; but is appointed by the said parliament to pay a certain specified expense, to wit, the support of the poor of the Union of Cavan, and none other, contrary to the express covenants and provisions in the said treaty of Union, above stated. And the said William further saith, that the said tax described above, as a rate for the relief of the poor, has not been imposed directly by the said parliament, according to the covenants and provisions of the said treaty of Union above stated; but by certain persons, called Guardians of the poor of Cavan Union, to whom the said parliament has attempted to delegate the said power of taxation, so as above stated, to have been delegated to the said parliament by the said treaty of Union; which delegation of its power of taxation, by the said parliament to the said guardians, the said William saith, is contrary to the said covenants and provisions of the said treaty of Union, and is insufficient to authorize the said guardians to legally impose or levy the said rate; or make the said William legally bound or compellable to pay the same; and this the said William is ready to verify, &c.

The remaining pleas differed from the above, only in the manner in which the same objection was put forward. To these pleas the defendant demurred.

Mr. J. C. Lowry, with whom was Mr. Brooke, Q.C., was about to open the demurrer, when the court interposed, and intimated, that unless the opposite side showed some grounds for such a plea, they would direct it to be taken off the file.

Mr. Hercules Ellis, with whom was Mr. O'Beagan, Q.C., contended, that the articles of Union constituted an international treaty, which no subsequent act of parliament could vary; and cited Sutton v. Sutton, (1 Russ. & My. 63.) [Jackson, J.—We cannot listen to such an argument. [Doherty, C. J.—The general impression of the court is, not only that we ought not to listen to this plea; but that it ought to be taken off the files of the court. Can you show any grounds why we should not adopt that course?] Marriott v. Wilson (8 T. R. 31, & C. 1 B. & P. 490), decided before Lord Mansfield, is an authority that the court may control an act of parliament. [Doherty, C. J.—Here is a plea, that for the first time in the course of 49 years, calls in question the power of the Imperial legislature to bind Ireland.] If the court feels such a strong opinion on the subject, let this demurrer be allowed, in order that there may be an appeal. [Ball, J.—We cannot allow the demurrer without hearing it; and to do so, would be to violate our duty.] The authorities prove this to be a good plea. If the court persist in the course that has been intimated, they will deprive the plaintiff of all means of trying the question. [Torrens, J.—We do, of trying a question which ought never to have been raised, and which we cannot for a moment bear argued.

DOHERTY, C. J.—For the reasons which have already been mentioned by each member of the Court, and which do not require to be enforced, we order these pleas to be taken off the file. They ought never to have been there, and the Court will not permit them to remain one second after it has heard them.

SCOTT v. SCOTT.—June 16th.

Practice—Receiver.

The court having, on the hearing, expressed a strong opinion in favor of the plaintiff had, however, at the request of the defendant, left the plaintiff to bring an ejectment, in which the defendant obtained a verdict which was set aside by the court in which it was tried as against evidence. The Lord Chancellor subsequently granted a receiver unless the defendant secured the rents to be received by him.

This was an action on the part of the plaintiff. The bill was filed to carry into execution the trusts of a certain deed of 1807, and for a receiver. At the hearing the court was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief prayed by his bill to an account of the rents and profits of the lands for six years previous to the filing of the bill, but the defendant so requiring, the cause was directed to stand over with liberty for the plaintiff to bring an ejectment, the defendant being restrained from setting up temporary bars. The plaintiff brought his ejectment; the jury found for the defendant, but the plaintiff, by an order of the Queen's Bench, set aside the verdict as against evidence. The affidavit in support of the motion stated that the defendant Scott was in possession and receipt of the profits of the lands, and that in case the plaintiff ultimately succeeded the defendant would be unable to pay the meane rates, and had no property in this country. The affidavit further stated that the jurors in the county of Clare where the lands lay were pre- judiced against the plaintiff, and that the defendant resided in that county and was most popular amongst them.

Mr. Brewster, Q.C., and Mr. W. W. Brereton for the motion.—Where there is a strong probability of title in the plaintiff, and the rents be in danger, the court will appoint a receiver. Mordaunt v. Hooper, (Amb. 311,) Stillwell v. Williams, (6 Mad. 49; S. C. Jac. 280;) Lloyd v. Passingham, (3 Mer. 697;) Huguenin v. Basby, (13 Ves. 105.)

Mr. Christian, Q.C. and Mr. F. Fitzgerald, Q.Q. contra.—There is a distinction between an issue directed to a court of law and giving leave to bring an ejectment. E. of Fingal v. Blake, (2 Moll. 50;) Lloyd v. Trimblestone, (ib. p. 81.)

Mr. Brereton, in reply.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—The court has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver where there is a strong probability of title in the plaintiff, and there is danger to the rents which he seeks to preserve by the aid of the court. Cases where this relief is given between heirs at law and devisees are common, and I cannot see the distinction between these cases and the present. So far as probability of title goes, we have the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench and of this court, which, I apprehend, amounts to this, that so far as shown by the defendant he has no title. The peculiarity of this case is that the plaintiff has been authorized to try his title by ejectment, an issue not having been directed. However, I do not think that of much consequence; suppose this receiver had been granted on the answer instead of being sought for after the hearing, I apprehend that the court would not be embarrassed in giving leave to bring an ejectment. This case is the converse of that. Buckland v. Souther, (reported in a note e, 4 Y. & C. Ex. 373,) is not quite the same, as there an issue was directed. In Clark v. Dew, (1 Rus. & My. 103.) the principle did not apply, as there was not a strong probability of the plaintiff's success; the Prerogative Court having decided against the will under which the plaintiffs claimed. The Lord Chancellor rests also on another ground, "I would ask besides if the property is exposed to any danger in the mean time while it remains in the possession of the defendants? The plaintiff is already bound to pay over a considerable sum to the defendants under an order of this court, and so long at least as he retains that sum in his hands he has a sufficient security for the rents and profits should it ultimately appear that he is justly entitled. On both these grounds the motion must be refused." The principle is also shown in Mordaunt v. Hooper, (Ambler, 311); and the only question to be determined is, whether the facts come within it. In my opinion they do, but if the defendant can prevent the expense of a receiver, he should as I have already suggested, be allowed to do so by giving security by recognizance within a fortnight.

ROLLS COURT.

BRYAN v. RICHARDSON.—May 1st.
Practice—Receiver in Courts of Chancery and Exchequer.

On the 5th of February, 1848, an order was made in the Court of Exchequer, referring it to the Remembrancer to appoint a receiver over certain lands. On the 30th of June following, an order was made in this Court for the appointment of a receiver over the same lands. This order was set aside, it not having been stated to the Court that the order in the Exchequer had been made.

In the year 1832, by order of the Court of Exchequer, a receiver was appointed over the property of the defendant, in a suit in which Jane Richardson was plaintiff. This receiver continued in possession till March, 1846, when the defendant undertook to pay the arrears of jointure to recover which the bill had been filed. On the 5th of February, 1848, an order of the Court of Exchequer for the appointment of another receiver was obtained by William Long, a creditor of the defendant who refused to act. On the 14th day of June, 1848, an order was made in the Court of Chancery, in the cause of Bryan v. Richardson, for the appointment of a receiver over the same lands as the receiver in the Exchequer cause had been appointed. On the 5th of Feb. 1848, an order was made in the Exchequer referring it to the Remembrancer to appoint a new receiver in the place of William Long.

Mr. Stokes, on behalf of Jane Richardson moved that the receiver in this Court might be discharged, or restrained from receiving the rents until the claims of the said Jane Richardson were paid.

Mr. J. W. Carleton, contra, for the petitioner referred to the case of Marchioness of Downshire v. Tyrrell, (Hayes, 354.)

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—Where there are suits in the Court of Exchequer and this Court, the proper course is to apply to the Exchequer for the discharge of the receiver, and that Court will probably make the order, if satisfied that the suit in this Court will afford relief to all parties. His Honour made the following order:—

"And it appearing to the Court that when the order of the 30th of June, 1848, was made in this Court, the Court was not informed that an order had been made by the Court of Exchequer, on the 5th of February, 1848, referring it to the Remembrancer to appoint a receiver, let said order of the 30th of June be set aside, so far as it refers it to the Master to appoint a receiver over the lands over which the Exchequer receiver had been appointed, and let each party abide their own costs of this motion."*

Lib. 284, fo. 240.

STAMER v. NESBITT.—May 10th.

A decree of the Court of Chancery in Ireland directed that the plaintiffs, who resided in England, should pay to a defendant her costs of suit. This defendant, previous to exemplifying the decree, issued a subpoena out of the Irish Court of Chancery, and caused it to be personally served on the plaintiffs.

Held, that this proceeding was unnecessary, and the costs of this personal service should not be allowed to the defendant.

Semble, that the 41 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 6, which provides for the exemplification of Irish decrees in the Court of Chancery, applies to decrees or orders which direct payments of costs generally, as well as those in which a particular sum is named.

By the decree in this cause, bearing date the 6th of December, 1848, it was ordered that the plaintiffs pay to the defendant, Mary E. Nesbitt, her costs of this suit; on the 28th of February, 1849, the costs were taxed to a sum of £762 9s. 9d. All the plaintiffs being resident in England the defendant's solicitor considered that previous to the exemplification of the decree, which was for costs alone, to the court of Chancery in England it was necessary that a personal demand should be made under a subpoena, and, accordingly, on the 5th of March a subpoena was issued for the sum of £762 9s. 9d. and 19s. 5d., post costs, and a special messenger was sent from Dublin to Warwickshire, London, and Somersetshire, to serve the subpoena upon the plaintiffs, and to make a personal demand. The costs not having been paid, on the 7th of April the defendant was entitled to exemplify the decree.

There had been an agreement that the plaintiffs, George Wheildan, F. W. Tomlinson, and the Rev. W. Stamer, as trustees for the other plaintiffs, were to pay the costs out of trust funds in their hands, but they had been advised not to do so unless under the pressure of legal proceedings. On the 17th of April the sum of £762 9s. 9d. was paid, being the amount of the taxed costs, and an undertaking was given by the plaintiffs' solicitor to pay any sum they were legally bound to pay for the costs of the sub-

, and serving same in England, these costs, as ed, amounted to £16 ls. 11d., but the plain- efused to pay same unless directed to do so by urt. This was an application on behalf of the ant that the plaintiffs, in pursuance of the un- ing do pay the sum of 19s. 5d. being the post ark at foot of the subpoena in the cause, so the sum of £16 ls. 11d. being the costs of pies of said subpoena and of the personal ser- f same in England, and of the affidavit of ser- and demand.

Hughes, Q. C. and Mr. C. Andrews for the ant.—The 41 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 6* points out ethod of exemplifying decrees in the court of ury in England, but this statute only applies where there is a sum named in the decree, at such a one as this, which is for payment of merely. Service of subpoena is the proper : to be taken before exemplifying the decree. erson demanding costs should have authority ieve the money. (Dan. C. P. 1025.) The na, by the terms of it, gives that authority; it s that the party "shall pay or cause to be paid said — or the bearer thereof the sum of —." Smith's Orders, Appendix 37, and 30th al Order provides that it shall be in the form Appendix, the subpoena should be served per- y. (Seton on Decrees, 419; Beame's on Costs, dition, p. 249.)

F. Fitzgerald, Q.C. and Mr. W. F. Darley, a.—It cannot be contended that this statute applies to cases in which the decree directs a sum to be paid; a demand was proper ight have been made by letter; there was no ility of incurring the expense of sending a e over to England to serve this subpoena;

And be it further enacted, that in all cases where in it between party and party, any decree shall be pro- d, or any order made for payment of or for account- r money by the High Court of Chancery, in that 'the United Kingdom called Ireland, the Lord Chan- Lord Keeper, or Lords Commissioners for the cus- f the Great Seal of Ireland, for the time being re- ly, shall, upon application made to him or them ively, cause a copy of such order or decree to be filed and certified to the Court of Chancery in that f the United Kingdom called England, under the Seal of Ireland, and the Lord Chancellor, Lord ., &c., of England, shall forthwith cause such order re, when it shall be presented to them respectively, mitted, to be enrolled in the Rolls of the High of Chancery in England, and shall cause process of ment and committal to issue against the person of rty against whom such order or decree shall have ade respectively, in order to enforce obedience to rformance of the same, as fully and effectually, to all and purposes, as if such order or decree had been ly pronounced in the said Court of Chancery in ly; and it shall and may be lawful to and for the Chancellor, &c., of England for the time being, from e time, to make orders on petition, as the occasion quire, for payment of money levied under such pro- aforesaid into the Bank of England, with the privity Accountant-General of the said Court, to the credit e the benefit of the party who shall have obtained order or decree, and the Governor and Company of ank of England are hereby authorized and required to e and hold all such moneys, subject to the orders of id Court of Chancery, provided always that no such e shall be charged with or subject to poundage, when shall be paid out by order of the said Court."

with the subpoena there should have been a power of attorney to receive the money.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—Previous to the 41 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 6, when a decree of the Court of Chancery in Ireland was affirmed or reversed on appeal, the practice was, to enter a side bar rule, and the decree of the House of Lords became decree of the Court of Chancery in Ireland. In the case of Ferrall v. M'Cann, (Fl. & K. 635,) Sir M. O'Loughlen directed the clerk of appearance to issue a subpoena for the costs of an appeal; but in other cases, where process of the Court of Chancery in this country could not be issued, the 41 G. 3 provided a summary remedy, which enables a party to enforce the order of this Court, which, by means of exemplification, also becomes an order of the English Court. There is no advantage to be gained from issuing an attachment out of this Court against a person in England, and out of the jurisdiction. I think the expense of serving this subpoena upon the plaintiffs in Eng- land, where process of this Court could not be enforced, was unnecessary, and this motion must be refused.

STANNUS v. FRENCH.—June, 15th.

Receiver—Tenant under the Court.

A receiver will not be permitted to become tenant under the Court of the lands over which he is appointed, even upon consent of the parties in the cause.

Mr. Blackburne moved to make a consent a rule of Court, that the receiver in the cause might be declared tenant under the Court.

From the affidavit of the receiver it appeared that in pursuance of the Master's report an ejectment had been brought against the tenant of part of the lands, consisting of about 46 acres, and possession obtained; shortly after notice was given requiring any person wishing to become tenant of the land to come in and make proposals, but no proposals were made. The receiver also obtained possession of other lands adjoining which were similarly circum- stanced. The affidavit stated that the receiver had a large farm adjoining, and was willing to become tenant under the Court of these lands at a fair rent. The consent was signed by all the parties in the cause except a trustee of a term.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS, in the absence of any authority in support of the application, refused to make the consent a rule of Court.

EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.

MACEVERS & ANOTHER v. BERKELEY.—May 27th.

Notice of dishonour—Competency of witness, Hart v. Hopkins (6 Q.B. Rep.) affirmed.

On the trial of an action against the drawer of a bill of Exchange, a witness proved that he had served the defendant with an account of the plain- tiff's demand, amongst the items of which was the amount of the bill in question; and that the de- fendant had objected to several of the charges made, but had passed over in silence the item re- lating to the bill. No direct evidence of presentment and notice of dishonour was adduced. Held—That there was a prima facie case to go to the jury, that the defendant had due notice of dishonour of bill.

The son of the testator, whose executors the plaintiffs were, was examined as a witness and objected to, on the ground that he was directly interested in the result of the trial. Held, that his evidence was admissible.

Assumpsit.—The declaration contained two special counts, and the money counts. The first count was a bill of exchange, of which the testator of the plaintiffs was drawer, and the defendant acceptor. The second count stated another bill, made payable in the body at a particular place, of which the same testator was holder, and the defendant was drawer. Plea, 1st general issue, 2nd statute of Limitations, to the first count, and on the latter issue there was a finding for the defendant. The case was tried at the sittings, after last Hilary Term, before the Lord Chief Baron. A son of the testator, John Burke, was produced on behalf of the plaintiffs. This witness proved, that on his applying to the defendant for payment of the account claimed by the plaintiffs, which account comprised the bill, the subject matter of the action, the defendant objected to several items of the account, amongst others, to being charged with the premiums of a certain policy of insurance mentioned therein. A notice to produce the original account had been served on the defendant at 10 o'clock on the Wednesday preceding the trial, the defendant residing at Derrynane, in the county of Kerry. A witness, Wilson, also proved, that on being served with the account, the defendant objected to the items of the account relating to the premiums on a certain policy of insurance, and for the costs of the proceeding on the bill in first count mentioned. On the case of the plaintiffs being closed, the counsel for the defendant called for a nonsuit on the following grounds: 1st, that the testator's son was an interested witness, and his evidence was inadmissible. 2nd, that the notice to produce the original account was not served in sufficient time before the trial, to authorise the admission of secondary evidence of its contents. 3rd, that there was no proof of presentment or notice of dishonour of the second bill to defendant. The learned judge, reserving liberty to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit, sent the case to the jury, telling them that they must take that what passed between the defendant and the witness Wilson, amounted to an admission that the defendant was liable for the amount of the bill, provided they thought him liable for it, on the ground of consideration. The jury found for the plaintiffs on the second bill.

Mr. T. Fitzgerald, Q.C., and Mr. J. Reeves now moved to set aside the verdict. First, as to whether there was a sufficient notice of dishonour in this case. To dispense with such a notice there must be an express promise to pay, or a distinct admission of the debt. In Read v. Reynolds (1r. Term Reports 85), it was held, that an offer to give security, did not dispense with the want of notice in due time; and Burke v. Molloy (ibid. 145) decides, that directions given by the indorser to a third person, long after the bill was due, to make the best terms he could with the holder did not amount to notice. So a mere offer to give a bill by way of compromise, for the sum demanded, does not obviate the necessity of proving notice. Cumming v. French (2 Camp. 106, n.) Counsel also relied on Borradale and others v. Lowe (4 Tau. 93), as to the competency of the witness Burke, he was son of the testator, and therefore interested in the recovery of the assets of his father, as one of the next of kin. It comes within the principle of Carr v. Dunne. (1r. E. Rep. 292.)

Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C. and Mr. Lecky, contra.—The question is, whether a party reading over an account, and objecting to certain items, putting the others over sub silentio, among which latter is a dishonoured bill of which he is drawer, is a prima facie case for a jury. Lundie v. Robertson (7 East. 231), decides that a promise by an indorser to pay the amount of a note is, prima facie, an admission that it had been duly presented and dishonoured, and that the defendant had notice thereof. The case of Dixon v. Elliott (5 C. & P. 437) went on the same principle; Campbell v. Webster (2 M. & S. 258) goes farther, and decides that any acknowledgement by the drawer of a bill, of his liability to pay, is evidence to be left to the jury, of a due notice of dishonour, Leslie v. Lockhart (1 E.R. 89), affirms the same principle. Pepper v. Quay (10 I. E. R. 274.) As to the competency of the witness Burke. The only ground of objection, since the 6 & 7 Vic., c. 85., must be, that the son being the testator's next of kin, the plaintiffs are only trustees for him, and he is necessarily interested in the proceeds of the action. Now in Hart v. Stephens (6 Q. B. 937), the same objection was made to the competency of a husband, in an action brought by his wife's administrator, and on the same grounds—and the objection was overruled; Dunne v. Scott (1 Camp. 100.)

Pigot, C.B.—This case is perfectly free from doubt. It was left to the jury on the principle stated in the authorities, of the propriety of which there is no doubt. The principle is plainly this, that where there has been such conduct on the part of the defendant, from which the jury may infer that he admitted his liability, a liability dependant on the circumstance of presentment and notice—that is tantamount to an admission of the facts on which such liability arises. No rules are more familiarly known than those which regulate bills of exchange: every one knows that to make a drawer or indorser of such liable, presentment and notice of dishonour are necessary. In the present instance, there was a specific demand of payment, in writing, made on the defendant. The merits of the demand were discussed in his office; the written document comprised a demand on foot of the bill of which defendant was the drawer. He disputes some of the items, but offers no objection to those which have reference to the bill. Independently of those circumstances it was proved that the bill was drawn by the defendant, payable at his own house, on his own brother-in-law. It was also in evidence that that brother-in-law tried the defendant's house when he had occasion to go to Cork. It is perfectly clear, that on all these grounds the verdict was a proper one. As to the inadmissibility of the evidence, I refer only to Hart v. Stephens—that is a clearly analogous case. There the plaintiff was administrator of the witness's late wife; it is plain that as husband the latter was entitled to the wife's pay—in point of law he was solely interested in it—that case distinctly rules the present. Here is a person examined, who is interested in the assets of the intestate. There is no suggestion even how his debts were not satisfied and paid off. When that case does arise, it will be time enough to deal with it.

PENNEFATHER, B.—I concur in the judgment of my Lord Chief Baron, and in the reasons which he assigns for it. The case of Hart v. Stephens is even stronger than the present one; for there the witness objected to was sole next of kin. As to the other point, the cases go to shew that no express promise, or no express admission are necessary to dispense with notice.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.*

GRAYDON v. THE MARQUIS OF CLANRICARDE.

May, 28th and 30th.

Grand Jury rate—Liability of Crown property—Post Office.

The property of the Crown can be only made liable by express enactment and not by implication, and is therefore not liable to Grand Jury cess.

The General Post Office is not a public building within the meaning of the Police valuation acts, and even if it were it would be liable to Police tax alone.

This was a writ of error from the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas on a demurrer to the defendant's replication. This case was not argued in the court below, the same question having been previously decided on similar pleadings after full argument in the case of the Earl of Lonsdale v. Wilson, (reported in 8 Ir. Law, 412,) and which the Grand Jury had intended to bring before this court, had not the defendant died. A new distress was then made by the defendant in the present action, the pleadings in which are similar to those in that of the Earl of Lonsdale v. Wilson.

Replevin. The declaration contained two counts. The first count set forth the taking of the goods and chattels of the Post Master General in a certain house called the General Post Office in the city of Dublin. To each count the defendant filed three avowries respectively similar, and in the first avowry to the first count avowed as collector of grand jury cess in the parish of St. Thomas in the county of the city of Dublin under the 33 George 3, c. 56. The second avowry, because he was collector of public rates to be levied by grand jury presentment in the parish of St. Thomas, in the county of the city of Dublin, and that as such collector he took the rolls, and by virtue of the statute in such case made did provided, and for a certain cess, to wit, £95 creed payable and in arrear out of the premises were the same were taken. The third avowry—because he was collector of public money to be levied by grand jury presentment in the parish of St. Thomas in the county, &c., and as such collector he took the goods, &c., under the statute in that case made, &c. To each of these avowries the plaintiff filed two pleas, the first plea to the first avowry—that the locus in quo was in the bounds, possession, and occupation of her Majesty, in right of her crown, concluding with a verification; the second plea to the first avowry was, that the locus in quo was her Majesty's Post Office in the county of the city of Dublin in the possession and occupation of her Majesty's Post Master General, in trust for her Majesty, in right of her crown for the purposes of her Majesty's Post Office, concluding with a verification; to these pleas respectively the defendant filed the following replication: "That the house called the General Post Office was and is situate in the parish of St. Thomas, within the police district of the Dublin metropolis, and was and is assessed to a certain sum, viz. £1200 in the police valuation or assessment for police district of Dublin metropolis, pursuant to the statute in that case made, &c., whereby and by force of the statute in such case made, &c., it became and was liable to grand jury cess in the parish of St. Thomas;" to each of the replications the plaintiff filed a general demurrer.

Mr. Perrin for the plaintiff in error.—This case arises on a demurrer to the defendant's replication, and is, whether the Post Office is liable to this rate. The former mode of applotting the grand jury cess was regulated by the 33 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 2, 4, 5, and now by the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 51. The question depends upon the construction of this act. The first section enacts, "That after the commencement of this act all sums to be raised by the grand jury presentments in the county of the city of Dublin, &c., shall be apportioned and applotted according and in proportion to the value of each and every such house, &c. as contained in the valuation made under the 3 Geo. 4, c. 118, and the 1 Vic. c. 25, (the statutes by which the valuation of the police tax is regulated) and that such apportionment and applotment shall be liable to be varied according as such police valuation shall be altered or varied." Section 2 enacts, "That the grand jury cess shall be chargeable on the tenements liable according to their value respectively in such police assessment, and recoverable as it is." And the third section enacts, "That the treasurer of the county of the city of Dublin shall demand of the justices of police a copy of the declaration which is to be laid before the grand jury, who are to class the several sums to be raised, &c. according and in proportion to their respective valuation in such general valuation and assessment." The Post Office is a tenement within the meaning of the Police act, 7 W. 4, c. 25, s. 1, and the 1 Vic. c. 25, ss. 4 & 5; render all such tenements liable to grand jury cess. But the Post Office is said to be exempted upon the general right of the Crown. Although the Crown may not be within all the provisions of an act it may come within the beneficial provisions of an act. The Post Office is a public building within the 47 Geo. 3, c. 109, & 54 Geo. 3, and all public buildings liable to be assessed under the provisions of these acts are made liable to police tax by the 2 & 3 Vic. c. 78, s. 10. An answer can be given to all the cases which may be relied upon at the other side that in none of the statutes was a right to distress given, but here a right is given. It appears on the record that these premises were within the police valuation, we contend that they are liable to be assessed.

Mr. Orpen, (with Mr. Greene, Q. C.) contra.—The Crown cannot be charged unless the act contains express words to that effect. The Crown cannot be distrained. In Ros v. Darley, (1 Hud. & R. 442.) Bushe, C. J., p. 448, says, "As it was suggested by my brother Vandeleur, in the course of the argument, it appears by the record that the locus in quo was the King's Custom House, and, therefore, by virtue of the King's prerogative, not at any time liable to be assessed for taxes." Moade v. Warburton, (Al. & N. 287.) Lands in possession of the Crown cannot be distrained. Gibson v. Moran, (6 Law Rec. N. S. 141.) Both these cases were confirmed. 3 & 4 Vic. c. 58, s. 7, (private act,) regulates how the Castle of Dublin is to be taxed, and how paid; (Moore's Compendium of Poor Laws, 51.) If the intention was to charge the Crown, it should be done in express terms. The fact of there being a power to distrain, is an argument to shew that it was not intended to charge the Crown. The property of the Crown is not liable by implication. Smith v. Blythe, (1 B. & Ad. 509.) It is the duty of the Grand Jury to omit out of the valuation of each parish the valuation of the Queen's buildings. The 2 & 3 Vic. c. 139, s. 20, and 5 Geo. 4, c. 118, (private act,) expressly exempted premises in possession of the Crown. [Blackburne, C. J.—Your argument is, that the premises are exempted by the act under consideration.] The 2 & 3 Vic. c. 78, s. 6, refers to the 20 s. of the 5 Geo. 4. The 3 & 4 Vic. c. 96, expressly enacts, that the Post-master General is a body corporate and a trustee for the Queen. The cases cited show that the property of the Crown is not liable, unless by express enactment. The only question is, is there any Act of Parliament which expressly makes the Crown liable? The 38 Geo. 3, c. 56, regulates the assessment upon the solvent inhabitants of the parish; is there anything in this Act to make the Crown liable? The 1 & 2 Vic. c. 25, regulates, not the Grand Jury cess, but the Police of Dublin. The 1 & 2 Vic. c. 51, s. 1, appears to be an Act for the levy of Grand Jury cess, but leaves the matter where it was before. It is said that the effect of the 2 & 3 Vic. c. 78, is inferentially to enact, that all the property of the Crown is made liable, not to the police tax, about which the Act is conversant, but for the Grand Jury cess; but there is no express enactment in this Act to that effect. Even suppose it was bound to say that the Crown was liable under this Act for the police tax, what is there to shew the Crown was bound to pay the preceding Grand Jury cess? That argument does not even amount to implication.

Mr. Napier, Q. C., in reply.—The whole question turns upon the construction of the three acts, the 2 & 3 Vic. c. 78, 47 Geo. 3, c. 109, and the 54 Geo. 3 c. 221. I admit, the Post-office is a public building, but there is a great difference between the public buildings and a palace for the residence of the Crown. Under the 5 Geo. 4, c. 118, the policy was to make the police assessment and grand jury cess commensurate. There is no reason why public buildings should be exempted. I admit, the latter could not be distrained. 1 & 2 Vic. c. 25, s. 4, give a power to appeal. Whatever was the arrangement under the Police Act, that was to regulate the Grand Jury cess.

Cer. suit ad.

May 30th. BLACKBURNE, C.J., now delivers judgment.—It appears to have been admitted in the course of the argument in this case, and it seems to be the fair result of the authorities, that the Post-office, being a property in the hands of the Crown, cannot be liable to a tax or rate unless by some plain and specific enactment of the Legislature. The plaintiff in error has contended that the Acts of Parliament to which he relies amounted to such an enactment; and the proposition which he relied on was, that the Post-office was liable to be rated for the support of the police of the metropolis of Dublin, and that all property so rated was liable to the payment of Grand Jury cess. In support of this proposition, he relied in the first instance, to the 1 Vic. c. 25, which provides for the support of the police, and makes rateable all houses, lands, and tenements included in the general valuation of the city under the Geo. 4, c. 118. The assessment under this Act was to specify the names of the several owners or occupiers of the premises assessed, and it has been contended by him that this Act authorized the rating of the property of the Crown. The matter referred to relates to the levy of Grand Jury cess. It is the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 51: and this Act, after citing the 5 Geo. 4, c. 118, and the 1 Vic. c. 25, which have been already referred to, provides that the Grand Jury cess shall be chargeable on the like tenements, and payable by the like persons, and recoverable in the same manner as the police tax, under the provisions of the said recited Acts. These provisions merely extended to the assessment and recovery of the Grand Jury cess, the provisions and powers relating to the police tax. So far, there was no pretext for saying that the property of the Crown was made liable for the cess, but the plaintiff has contended that the 2 & 3 Vic. c. 78, s. 10, made it liable to the police tax, as a consequence, to the Grand Jury cess. We are, however, of opinion, that it has not been made liable to the police tax by the above sections: we think the Post-office is not a public building within the meaning, and liable to be rated for the purposes of the 47 Geo. 3, c. 109, and 54 Geo. 3 c. 221; and that even if it were, it would be liable to the police tax alone, and could not be made liable, by construction or inference, to any other tax, without a violation of the established rule of construction. Though my brother Perrin dissenting in this judgment, he has directed me to say that he has some difficulty in assenting to the opinion of the rest of the Court, and the ground of that difficulty is, that this is not Crown property for the immediate use and purposes of the Crown, in the sense which ought to exempt it from the imposition of taxes, which enure to the benefit and accommodation of the property itself.

Judgment affirm.

S. v. BELFAST AND BALLYMENA RAILWAY COMPANY.*—April 25.

Issues—Companies Clauses, (8 & 9 Vic. c. 18) Lands Clauses (8 & 9 Vic. c. 20)—Accommodation works—Right of owner to compensation for consequential injury.

the prosecutor was possessed of a piece of land on the sea-shore, on which he erected a dwelling house for the purpose, among others, of enjoying, of which enjoyment he was deprived, in consequence of a railway embankment raised by the dwelling-house and the sea.

By a majority of the judges, that a man is lay against the Company under the provisions of the 68th section of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 20, Lands Clauses Consolidation Act), and that is not a subject for compensation under the provisions of the 94th sec. of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 18, Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.)

As error from the judgment of the Court on the Bench, on a demurrer to the return to a mandamus issued at the suit of the plaintiff against the Company, to compel them to do certain accommodation works which the plaintiff contended they were bound to perform, in conformity with the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. The error was brought into Court under the provisions of 9 & 10 Vic. c. 118.

The writ of mandamus stated, that whereas, by an Act of Parliament made and passed in the 1st of Parliament held in the 6th and 9th years of our reign, intituled an Act for making a railway from Belfast to Ballymena, in the county of Antrim, with branches to Carrickfergus and Randals (and hereinafter, for the sake of distinction, called as the special Act,) it was amongst other things enacted, that the several Acts of Parliament made and passed in the 1st of Parliament held in the 6th and 9th years of our reign, (being the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, above referred to,) it amongst other things enacted, that the same should apply to every railway which should by Act of Parliament be authorized to be constructed, and that the Act now in question should be incorporated with such special Act, and all the provisions of the Act now in question so far as they should be expressly varied or excepted by such special Act, should apply to every undertaking authorized thereby, so far as the same should be applicable to such undertaking, and should form part of such special Act, and be read together therewith, as forming one Act. And whereas, by the 68th section of the said

Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which is incorporated with and forms part of the said special Act, and which same section is not, by the said special Act, varied or excepted, it is (amongst other things) enacted, that the company shall make and, at all times thereafter, maintain the following works for the accommodation of the owners and occupiers of land adjoining the railway, that is to say: such and so many convenient gates, bridges, arches, culverts and passages, over, under, or by the sides of, or leading to or from the railway, as shall be necessary for the purpose of making good any interruptions caused by the railway, to the use of the lands through which the railway should be made, and such works shall be made forthwith after the part of the railway passing over such lands, shall have been laid out, or formed or during the formation thereof; also, all necessary arches, tunnels, culverts, drains, or other passages, either over or under, or by the sides of the railway, of such dimensions as will be sufficient at all times to convey the water as clearly from the lands, lying near or affected by the railway, as before the making of the railway, or as nearly so as may be, and such works shall be made from time to time, as the railway works proceed. That the company shall not be required to make such accommodation works in such a manner as would prevent or obstruct the working or using of the railway, nor to make any accommodation works, with respect to which the owners and occupiers of the lands shall have agreed to receive, and shall have been paid compensation instead of the making them. And whereas we have been informed in our court here, by James O'Neill Falls, of Greencastle, in the county of Antrim, attorney at law, that he is in the occupation of a piece or parcel of ground, adjoining the said railway, lying within the sea-mark, and adjoining on the west on the road leading from Carrickfergus aforesaid, and on the east adjoining Belfast Lough, and situate in the townland of Greencastle, otherwise Cloughcastle in the county of Antrim; and also that the said James O'Neill Falls is in the occupation of another piece or plot of ground, strand, or slob, adjoining the said railway on the east side of the road leading from Belfast to Carrickfergus, next adjoining on the north thereof the property of the said James O'Neill Falls, and running back to low water-mark in the Belfast Lough; and is also in the occupation of another piece or plot of ground, strand, or slob adjoining the said railway, on the east side of the said road leading from Belfast to Carrickfergus aforesaid, next adjoining on the south thereof, the property of the said James O'Neill Falls, and running backwards to low water-mark in the Belfast Lough, and in the townland of Greencastle, and county of Antrim. That within the last ten years he erected a dwelling house, offices, and other improvements on the said pieces, or parcels of land, and expended thereon from £1500 to £2000, and that his principal inducement in expending such money was the situation of said property so contiguous to the sea, affording facilities to the said James O'Neill Falls, and the members of his family, to enjoy sea-bathing, fishing, and boating; and further, that there is a small rivulet running at the south side of his premises, from which a gut has been formed by the said rivulet and the sea ebbing and flowing thereto, and through which almost at all times of the tide before the erection of the embankment hereinafter mentioned, a boat could have passed to and from the sea, close up to the lawn at the rear of the said James O'Neill Falls's premises; and further, that the said rights of sea-bathing, boating, and fishing have been constantly exercised by the occupiers of the said premises for the last 50 years, and have been continually exercised by the family and servants of the said James O'Neill Falls, from the period of his becoming possessed of the said premises, up to the period of the erection of the embankment by you hereinafter mentioned, upon and through the said lands in the occupation of the said James O'Neill Falls. That you have raised an embankment upon a portion of the lands in his occupation, and that by reason of the erection of the said embankment, the said James O'Neill Falls, and his family and servants, are now completely excluded from access to the sea, and that the said embankment is about 20 feet high from low water mark. That you the Belfast and Ballymena Railway Company, have, by the raising of the said embankment for the purposes of the said railway, caused great interruption to the use of the lands in his occupation through which the said railway has been made. That on the 29th day of September last, he caused a notice in writing to be served on your Secretary, specifying the accommodation works required by the said James O'Neill Falls to be made by you, in consequence of the interruption to the use of the said lands caused by the said embankment; and that he caused to be annexed to the said notice, and to be served at the same time, a plan of the said accommodation works which he so required. That the accommodation works so required by him are necessary for the purpose of making good the interruption caused by the said railway to the use of the lands in his occupation, through which the said railway has been made, and that accommodation works can be made in such a manner as will not prevent or obstruct the working or using of the said railway; and further, that the said required accommodation works are not works with respect to which the said James O'Neill Falls has agreed to receive, or has been paid compensation instead of the making of the said works. That you, the said Belfast and Ballymena Railway Company, in reply to the demand for such accommodation works by the said James O'Neill Falls, declined, and positively refused to make any accommodation works whatever.

The return of the Company stated, that on or about the 13th day of March, 1846, and long previous to the issuing of the said writ of mandamus, a notice bearing date the 13th day of December, 1845, was served on the said James O'Neill Falls, by and on behalf of us, the said Company, and in said notice we, the said Company, stated the particulars of the lands required by us, the said Company, to be purchased from the said James O'Neill Falls, and by said notice he was informed that we, the said Company, were willing to treat and agree with him for the purchase of the pieces or portions of land, and premises, and of his estate or interest therein, which were required for the purposes of the said company, and which are parcel of the premises in the said writ of mandamus mentioned, and parcel of the premises which the said railway company were authorised to purchase by virtue of said statutes, in said writ of mandamus mentioned; and also to treat and agree with him as to the compensation to be made for any damage or injury that might be sustained by him by reason of the execution of the works, which by the said acts of parliament, in the said writ referred to, or some of them, we, the said company, were authorised to execute. And by said notice the particulars of the estate and interest of the said James O'Neill Falls in said lands, and of the claims made by him in respect thereof, were demanded from him. And the said James O'Neill Falls was, by said notice, further informed that if, within 21 days from the service thereof, he neglected or refused to treat, or should not agree with us the said company, that then we, the said company, would proceed as by law we were entitled. That James O'Neill Falls having failed to state the particulars of his claim in respect of said lands, or to treat with us the said company in respect thereof. And the said James O'Neill Falls and the said company not agreeing as to the amount of the compensation to be paid by us the said company to the said James O'Neill Falls for the interest in said lands belonging to him or which he was by this or the special act enabled to sell or for any damage that might be sustained by him by reason of the execution of our said works for twenty-one days after the service of said notice. We, the said company, more than twenty-one days after the service of said last-mentioned notice, to wit, the 27th day of December, 1847, caused another notice to be served upon the said James O'Neill Falls by and on behalf of us the said company offering him the sum of £85 for the interest which he was able to sell in the said lands, slob or strand, and as a compensation for all damages to be sustained by him by the execution of our said works, and said last-mentioned notice further stated that if within ten days after the service of the same he did not accept the said offer, we, the said company would, at the expiration of that time, issue our warrant and cause a jury to be summoned to inquire into and assess the sum or sums of money to be paid for the purchase of the said land, slob or strand required for the said works, and the sum to be paid by way of compensation for all damages to be sustained by him by reason of the execution of the same.

That by the 94th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, it is provided as to intersected lands that if any such land shall be so cut through and divided as to leave on either side of the works a piece of land of less extent than half a statute acre, or of less value than the expense of making a bridge culvert or such other communication between the lands so divided as the promoters of the undertaking are, under the provisions of this or the special act or any act incorporated therewith, compellable to make, and if the owner of such lands have not other lands adjoining such piece of land and require the promoters of the undertaking to make such communication, then the promoters of ertaking may require such owner to sell to each piece of land, and any dispute as to the value of such piece of land or as to what would be the expense of making such communication shall be referred to the jury or arbitrators, as may be, shall, if required by either party, and by their verdict or award the value of any severed piece of land, and also what would be the expense of making such communication. That part of the land of said James O'Neill Falls divided by the said embankment as is mentioned, and which part lies between said land and the sea, or Lough of Belfast, was of much less value than the expense of making a bridge, culvert, or other communication between the land so divided as the promoters of the undertaking are compellable to make by virtue of the statutes in such case made and provided, or of them, and the said James O'Neill Falls and other lands adjoining said piece of land, and divided as aforesaid, and lying between said embankment and the sea or Lough of Belfast; and the said James O'Neill Falls having been the promoters of the said undertaking to make such communication, we, the said company, and such promoters by means of the premises, and in force of the statutes in such case made and provided, became entitled to require the said James O'Neill Falls to sell to us, the said company, the piece of land lying between the embankment of said railway and the sea or lough of Belfast, and the said embankment from the other side of said James O'Neill Falls; and thereupon we, the said company, did cause another notice to be served on said James O'Neill Falls, bearing date the 22nd day of November, 1847, and which was duly served on the said James O'Neill Falls, on the 25th day of November, 1847, and we, the said company, by said last mentioned notice did require the said James O'Neill Falls to treat with us, the said company, for the purchase of the said slob, or ground, covered with water at ordinary tides, and lying between the said embankment of said railway and the sea or lough of Belfast. That said James O'Neill Falls again for more than 21 days failing to treat with us, we, the said company, by another notice, bearing date on the 27th day of December, 1847, and served on said James O'Neill Falls on the 27th day of December, 1847, offered the said James O'Neill Falls the sum of £5 for the interest which he was to sell, and that we were willing to purchase the said land, slob, or ground of said James O'Neill Falls, lying between said embankment and the sea or lough of Belfast, and as compensation for damages to be sustained by the execution of said works; and said notice further informed said James O'Neill Falls, that if within ten days of the service thereof, the said offer was not accepted, we the said company would, at the expiration of said last mentioned term, issue our warrant to the sheriff to cause a jury to be summoned to inquire into and assess the sums of money to be paid for the purchase of the said land, slob, or ground, covered with water at ordinary tides, and lying between the embankment of said railway and the sea or lough of Belfast, and also the sum to be paid by way of compensation for all damages to be sustained by him by reason of the execution of the said works. That James O'Neill Falls still disregarded said notice, and not having given any answer thereto, we, the said company, in pursuance of the provisions contained in the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and more than 10 days after the service of said last-mentioned notice—that is to say, on the 1st day of March, in the year of our Lord, 1848, did by our warrant under our common seal, issued to the sheriff of the county of Antrim, require him to summon a jury, in compliance with the directions of the said last-mentioned Act, to ascertain and determine the sum or sums of money to be paid by us, the said company, for the purchase of the estate and interest of the said James O'Neill Falls, of, in, and to the respective pieces or parcels of land referred to in the said notice of 18th December, 1845, and 22nd day of November, 1847, and also the sum or sums of money to be paid by us for the damage, if any, to be sustained by the said James O'Neill Falls in respect of the purchase thereof, and also to ascertain by their verdict the value of said slob referred to in the said notice of the 27th day of December, 1847, and also to ascertain by their verdict what would be the expense of making a communication by an arch under said railway, or such other communication as we, the said Company, were by law required to make between the said slob ground and the other lands of the said James O'Neill Falls, from which same was severed by the said railway embankment. That in pursuance of the several Acts before referred to, we, on the 4th day of March, 1848, being more than 10 days before the time appointed by said sheriff for holding said inquiry, served a notice, bearing date the 4th day of March, 1848, on the said James O'Neill Falls, informing him that the sheriff of the county of Antrim, in obedience to said warrant, had appointed that he would, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, on Thursday, the 16th day of March then instant, at the Court-house in Howard-street, in the town of Belfast, in the said county of Antrim, empanel a jury, pursuant to the statutory provisions in that behalf, to inquire of, and assess, and give a verdict for the sum or sums of money to be paid by us, the said Company, for the purchase of the parcels of land required for part of our said works, by the said acts authorized, and also the sum or sums of money to be paid by way of compensation for damages by reason of the execution of the works of the said undertaking, and to ascertain by their verdict the value of the slob ground outside the embankment of the said railway, in the said notice to treat of the 22nd of November, 1847, served on said James O'Neill Falls mentioned, and to ascertain by their verdict what would be the expense of making a communication by an arch under said railway, such as we, the said company, were by law required to make between the said slob ground and the other lands of the said James O'Neill Falls, from which same was severed by said railway embankment; and said notice required the said James O'Neill Falls to attend at the time and place therein and hereinbefore mentioned, otherwise the said inquiry should not be proceeded with, but the compensation to be paid would be ascertained according to the enactments in that behalf. The return then stated the summoning of the jury in pursuance of the statute. The default of Mr. Falls at that inquiry, that then in pursuance of the Lands Consolidation Act nominated two justices of the peace, who nominated a surveyor to determine by his valuation the purchase or valued money to be paid by us, the said company, to the said James O'Neill Falls, for, or in respect of the purchase by us of the said pieces or parcels of ground, hereditaments and premises, and the appurtenances thereunto respectively belonging, and also the sum or sums of money to be paid by us for the damage, if any, to be sustained by the said James O'Neill Falls, in respect of the purchase of the said pieces or parcels of land and other premises, or otherwise injuriously affecting the said James O'Neill Falls, by the exercise of the powers of the said act of parliament referred to, and to ascertain the value of the piece of ground of the said James O'Neill Falls, severed from the other lands of the said James O'Neill Falls, by the said embankment of said railway, and lying between said railway and the sea or Lough of Belfast; and also what would be the expense of making a communication by an arch under the said railway, such as the said company are by law required to make between the said last mentioned slob, ground, and other lands of the said James O'Neill Falls, from which same was severed by the said railway embankment. It then stated the declaration of the surveyor to discharge his duty faithfully. That after having viewed and inspected said premises, did declare, that having inspected and valued the said pieces or parcels of land, slob, or strand, lying opposite to, or being part of the townland of Greencastle in said nomination mentioned; and also the slob ground covered with water at ordinary tides, and lying between the embankment of the said railway, and the sea or Lough of Belfast, and which was severed by said embankment of said railway, from the other lands or slob of said James O'Neill Falls in said nomination also mentioned, and having ascertained the damage which had been done and would be sustained by the said James O'Neill Falls in respect of the purchase of the said pieces or parcels of land and other premises or otherwise injuriously affecting the said James O'Neill Falls in said nomination, and said writ also mentioned, and also having considered what would be the expense of making a communication by an arch under said railway, such as we the said company were by law required to make between the said slob ground and the other lands of the said James O'Neill Falls, from which the same was severed by the said railway embankment, did, by that, his valuation in writing, determine that the sum of £1 and no more, was the value and should be paid by us the said company, for or in respect of the purchase by us of the said piece or parcel of ground, hereditaments and premises, being the premises occupied by said railway and the embankment thereof, with the appurtenances thereto belonging, for the residue of the term of 61 years, being the interest therein of the said James O'Neill Falls, and that the sum of £49, and no more, was the compensation money, and should be paid by us for the damages sustained or thereafter to be sustained by the said J. O'Neill Falls in respect of the purchase of the said piece or parcels of land and other premises, or otherwise injuriously affecting the said James O'Neill Falls by the exercise of the powers of the Lands Clauses Consolidation act, 1845, or the Belfast and Falmouth Railway act, 1845, or any act incorporated therewith, and in lieu of all crossings, communication with the sea, or accommodation works, that £5 and no more, was the value of the slob ground of the said James O'Neill Falls covered with water at ordinary tides, and lying between the said embankment of said railway, and the sea or Lough of Belfast, and which was severed by said embankment, from the other lands of the said James O'Neill Falls. And that the sum of £50 would be the expense of making a communication by an arch under the said railway, such as we, the said company were by law required to make between the said slob ground, and the other lands of the said James O'Neill Falls, from which same were severed by the said railway embankment, of 3 first mentioned several sums of money making the whole the sum of £55. That on the 21st April the company tendered, and on the 21st April lodged in Bank of Ireland with the privilege of the accountant-general, and to the credit of the said James O'Neill Falls, the sum of £55, and caused a deed, that before the taking of any of the proceedings hereinbefore mentioned, the whole of the capital or estimated sums for defraying the expenses of the said undertaking of us the said company, had been subscribed under contract binding in value thereto, their heirs, executors, and administrators for the payment of the sums by them subscribed. That to make the works required by the said James O'Neill Falls, would greatly obstruct the working or using of the said railway for the period of two months at the least, and for these reasons and causes, we, the said company, ought not to be required to make or cause to be made such slob, tunnel, or passage, under the said railway, or in said writ of mandamus mentioned.

Demurrer. The points noted to be argued were—That the return is insufficient by reason of its omitting to negative the exceptions contained in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, with respect to the power of the company to purchase intersected pieces of land, and also by reason of the omission in the return of the several averments mentioned in the said demurrer, and the promoter will also contend that the return is insufficient for not shewing any legal authority in the company to serve the several notices relied upon in the said return, and also that the service of such notices, even if legally effected, does not constitute in law any sufficient answer to the demand of the prosecutor for accommodation works as specified in the said writ.

And further, that the said company having by their said return, admitted a permanent obstruction of the prosecutor's right of access to the sea and the shore thereof, have not shewn any sufficient ation for such obstruction, or any sufficient for their refusal to comply with the provisions of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, with respect to the making of the accommodation works.

son, J.—This is a writ of error brought to reverse the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench. A writ of error issued against the company, at the instance of Mr. Falls; to that there was a return by the company, and the Queen's Bench overruled the decision to that return. I cannot but feel that this question of considerable importance, calculated to affect the interests of railway companies, and of the owners and occupiers of land through which railways may run. It is also a question of much public utility, and I am willing to confess my opinion on this subject a good deal. I have, however, come to the conclusion, that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench ought to be reversed. The question depends upon the construction of two acts of Parliament, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act. It is impossible to look at those acts of Parliament as independent statutes; it is manifest on the face of them, that they are incorporated; and reading them together, we have to consider whether the injuries, of which the prosecutor complains, are properly the subject of pecuniary compensation under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, or whether he is entitled to have accommodation works executed for him under the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act. Let us first see what is the complaint made by the prosecutor; he states that he lately had a dwelling-house at considerable expense, on a piece of land, and that his chief inducement in so doing was, that he might enjoy the sea, which had been enjoyed by the occupiers of the premises for fifty years. He then states that the company raised an embankment upon a portion of the lands in his occupation, twenty feet high, which completely excluded him from all access to the sea. The words, "use of the lands," in the Acts, have been the subject of some criticism, but I think the fair meaning of those words is, the enjoyment of the lands; this is plain from the context. What he complains of is, that by reason of the severance of his lands, he is cut off from communication with the sea—that is the grievance for which he seeks redress; and what he requires is, that he may have the use of his lands, so as to get access to the sea. The prosecutor then states, that he served a notice on the company, specifying the accommodation works which he required to be made; and then the mandatory part of the writ is that the company shall make such works as shall be necessary for the purpose of making good the interruption caused by the railway to the use of the said lands—which I consider to mean the enjoyment of the premises. That is the scope of the writ; and the company in their return make this case:—They set forth the 94th section of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 18 (the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act), and then state, that the part of the land cut off by the railway embankment, was of less value than the expense of making a communication between the lands so divided; and that they served a notice on the prosecutor, requiring him to treat for the purchase of the said land; that upon his disregarding their notice, they had the lands valued, and lodged in bank, to the credit of the prosecutor, the amount of the valuation. I think it must be admitted, that if the injuries, of which the prosecutor complains, are properly the subject of pecuniary compensation, within the meanings of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, the return is good; but if, on the other hand, this proposition cannot be established, the return is bad. If we look to what was the policy of the legislature, when passing these railway acts, we will find, that it was intended that private individuals should not suffer any injury from railways. There are a large class of injuries, which are made the subject of compensation; but there are some which are not. It appears to me, that loss of access to the sea, for the purpose of fishing, bathing and boating, is not, properly, the subject of compensation; to one, these things may be valuable, and not to another. I now proceed to examine the enactments of these statutes. [His Lordship here referred to the 68th section of the Railway Clauses Company's Act, upon the true construction of which, he said he felt some difficulty; he also referred to sections 21, 22, 23, 39, 47, 48, 49, of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and proceeded.] Sec. 49 of this latter Act, gives compensation for the damage sustained by the severance of the lands, or otherwise injuriously affecting such lands, confining the compensation to the damage done to the land, as land. This shews what the Legislature meant by the words "disputed compensation" in the 39th section of this Act. The injury complained of by the prosecutor, does not come within the 49th section: the injury is not an injury to the land, or a cutting off a piece of his land; it is for the non-access to the sea; it is on account of the embankment which cuts him off from the sea, it is because he has lost that which he cannot enjoy unless he has access to the sea. The 49th section was not framed to include the case of personal inquiries, which are independent of land. Sec. 54 of this Act gives a special jury at the request of either party, and sec. 56 provides "that any other inquiry than that for the trial of which such special jury may have been struck, may be tried by such jury." That very clause was enacted to enable the special jury to inquire what would be compensation for an injury such as is here complained of. The loss of fishing, bathing, and boating is not an injury to the land. Se. 69 and 72 of this act are confined altogether to injury to land; s. 78 is a remarkable one; it applies, however, only to cases where the amount is ascertained by agreement. The 93 s. has no reference to the present case. The return is grounded on the 94 s. The Company say they have severed a piece of land from the rest, and that that piece of land, so severed, is of less value than the expense of making a communication between the lands so divided, and that they purchased that piece of land. If the accommodation works were required only to connect the piece of land which has been so severed, I think they are right; but, in my opinion, the 94th sec. does not apply to a case where a party complains of an injury unconnected with land. The question is, had the Company the power to apply the machinery of those acts to a case like the present. It is clear, the Legislature had in contemplation, when penning these enactments, such injuries as the prosecutor here complains of. If the 94th sec. were to receive the construction contended for by the Company, this absurdity would follow, that if there was a small part of the lands cut off, the Company could avoid making the accommodation works, by purchasing that piece of land; whereas, if the railway went along the margin of the sea, they would then be obliged to execute the works. The case put by my brother Moore, in the court below, of a person being deprived of a power to draw manure, does not apply, for that, being an injury to the land, admits of compensation. The prosecutor relies on the 68th section of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, and that section is compulsory on the Company; it is for making good any interruption; and it has only two exceptions,—one where the party has agreed to take compensation; the other, where the works would prevent or obstruct the working of the railway. There should be another proviso in this section, if the Company be right, to the effect, that where a party had received compensation by a verdict of the jury, the Company should not be required to make the accommodation works. Sec. 16 is material in this respect, for it shews the anxiety of the legislature to give compensation to private individuals. No contract was made by the prosecutor for any compensation, and I am not aware of any clause in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, enabling the Company to give pecuniary compensation for the loss of such easements as bathing and boating. The next objection applies to the return, and is, that the return does not aver that this was not ground built upon within the meaning of the 93rd section of the Land Clauses Consolidation Act; but, in my opinion, the words such land in the 94th section do not apply to land in a town, or land built upon, but to the intersected lands. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the demurrer ought to be allowed.

LEFROY, B.—We have to consider whether the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench is right. The effect of that judgment was to refuse to the prosecutor works of accommodation which he sought. It is material to see what he sought, and what he did not seek. He states generally that he and his family had occupied these lands for a considerable time, and had enjoyed bathing in the sea; he does not rest there, for if he did, the mandamus must be refused; but he goes on to say, that the railway ran through his lands, and that in consequence he and his family were excluded from access to the sea. If he had rested his case on this, that, having lands near the sea, a railway was interposed between him and the sea, he would be without a remedy; for there is not anything in these Acts of Parliament which gives to her Majesty's subjects a right of access to the sea, if they should happen to have lands along the sea-side, and a railway was to be run between them and the sea. There are no such provisions, but there is this provision, that if a railway runs through a piece of land, and so intersects it as to occasion an injury, the owner has a right to have that injury removed, and a tunnel or passage made which would enable him to go from one side of the land to the other. If a party's own land goes down to the sea, the simple and only right he has is to obtain from the Company a culvert or passage which would enable him to go from one part of the land to the other. This is the very right claimed. The prosecutor says that his land is intersected, and his access to the sea cut off, and he requires that the Company shall make such works as will enable him to go from one part of his land to the other. Virtually it comes to this, has he a right to the culvert? If he has not, he will be shut out from the sea. It would be a strange interpretation of the meaning of the 68th section, to say, that in providing works of accommodation to relieve a party from any interruption to the use of his land, that section contemplated that he was to have relief from being shut out from the use of the sea. That would be a strange interpretation of these words, "the use of the lands," to mean "the use of the sea." Prima facie, he has a right, by the 68th section, to the use of the land, but not to have a communication to the sea; he may have it as incidental to the land, but the injury is not his being deprived of the sea. It is quite another question, whether that is a right to be compensated in damages; we are now considering whether he has a right to specific accommodation works under the 68th section. Supposing him now to have a right to accommodation works, to enable him to go from one part of the land to another, if his right to relief be founded on intersection, the basis of his right is intersection; there is no other injury but intersection. If it is in virtue of the intersection of his land, that he is to get specific works, must he not be bound by every provision in the act that gives him the right. The case made by the mandamus is for intersected land, the claim is for intersected land, to make a culvert, because the railway has intersected the land, and have not the company a right to say, the value of the land is less than the price of the culvert you require us to make. If the company have not this right, the words must be expunged from the act of Parliament. The company called on him to sell that piece of land, and upon his refusing to do so, they had it valued, pursuant to the terms of the act of Parliament. The 49th sec. of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 18, prescribes the mode of

ing the premises, whenever there is a dispute the amount of compensation to be paid for damage sustained by the owner of the land, by reason of the severing of the lands taken from the lands of such owner, "or otherwise injuriously using such lands." He is entitled to have damages if the lands left in his possession are injured. And, however, that he will also be deprived of access to the sea; but if the company are entitled to purchase these lands, and are obliged to do so for the incidental injuries, is it to be said they must also make him a culvert—that they give him a right of access to the sea. I cannot think the legislature intended any thing of the kind, though the railway might run along the whole or all portions of land which are less than half an acre, are subject to this enactment; and the legislature has given the company this right. The case before us is one of intersection, the prosecutor asserted his right on this basis, and where, I ask, is the provision that gives a right of access to the sea, jure sea. You cannot have the relief, which is only for securing the communication from one piece of intersected land to another, for this absurdity would follow, that the man who had paid you for the land, should give you a culvert through their own land down to the sea. You do not ask for a culvert to give you a communication with the land, but with the sea. Can that be done, this being a case of intersection? The company say we will take this piece of land from you, and give you compensation for it. My argument I have assumed that the act of severance is confined to cases of intersection. The effect of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 20, is wholly conversely, "lands" intersected by the railway, and has reference to a party being shut out from the sea? I have endeavoured to explain why I hold that the case before us is right, and that the prosecutor is entitled to the relief which he seeks. The answer to him by the company is this, we meet you on the ground put forward in your writ; you ask for accommodation works, and we say it would be convenient to us to comply with your request.

11. J.—I am of opinion that the prosecutor sought his case within the 68th section of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 20; this is an enactment completely applying to all cases, save where the party has been shut out from the sea, or where the making of accommodation works would obstruct the use of the railway; on the part of the Company, however, it is contended that a third exception should be grafted into this section, which would have the effect of releasing them from the necessity of making accommodation works which the prosecutor requires. They say the value of the piece of land cut off is trifling in amount, and they insist upon purchasing it, by exercise of the powers conferred on them by the 94th section of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 18, but, in my judgment, my argument on behalf of the prosecutor is right, it is said that this case is not within the 94th section. That section does not contemplate any more than that the prosecutor should get the value of the severed piece of land, and it cannot be said from it that he was to get compensation for the description of damage or loss, including the loss or damage by reason of being cut off from the sea. The true meaning of the section I take it to be that the severed piece of land was the only thing for which he was to get compensation, and the real question for consideration is, whether this is a case in which the Company can insist upon purchasing the piece of land, or in which the prosecutor is entitled to have accommodation works made for him. In my judgment the prosecutor is so entitled, and the Company are not at liberty to say they will purchase this piece of land, but are bound to build accommodation works under the 68th section. The piece of land or slob in question remains still in the hands of the prosecutor, there has been no conveyance of it to the company, and they could have therefore acquired no title to it under the 94th section. Cases might be put where the most palpable injustice would arise if the company had such a power. The case of a mansion house cut off from the high road has been put forward by the counsel for the prosecutor, and it is stated in the judgment of the Queen's Bench that such a case does not admit of compensation, because the access to the high road is essential to the enjoyment of the mansion house; the owner, however, might have a limited enjoyment of the house without going to the high road. If a certain amount of inconvenience was to regulate whether a case was to be kept out of the operation of the 94th section the inquiry would be as to the degree of inconvenience, and the difficulty would be to know where to draw the line; suppose the case of a merchant debarred from landing his goods so as to have them conveyed to his stores, is that a case in which a person so circumstanced is bound to take compensation, and to seek a place elsewhere to land his goods? is that a case in which the Legislature intended that a person so circumstanced should take money? Suppose the case of a wharf or quay, or take the present case; it is stated in the mandamus and not traversed that the principal inducement the prosecutor had to expend his money was that he and his family might enjoy sea-bathing, fishing and boating; is not that essential to the enjoyment of his property? The construction which I put on the 94th section is, that where a party requires nothing more than mere access from one part of his land to another that shall be a case for compensation, but where the owner requires access to the severed piece of land, not for its own sake, but as a means to an end, that is not a case in which he shall be obliged to take compensation. It is plain for all other purposes section 94 has an application, that is, in all cases where mere access is required. But it is not only a constrained, but an unjust construction to insist upon the prosecutor's taking pecuniary compensation, when no amount of it would satisfy his purpose. Does he then come literally within the 94th section? The modes of proceeding, previously provided, are four. It is the fourth we are to deal with—namely, the power of adjudication by the surveyor. When the section points to the jurisdiction, it limits the proceedings, and confines it to two out of the four; being entirely silent as to the authority of the surveyor, the person who has been acting here. If this case come literally, or at all, within the 94th section—if, in fact, the act of the surveyor is without authority, this would take the case out of the 68th section. It is said that the interruption here complained of, is not to the land, but to the use of the sea; that the right is in some degree personal, and not appertaining to the land. The mandamus states in terms, that the company by their embankment, excluded the prosecutor from access to the sea, and that the effect of it was to interrupt him in the use of his lands. So far as regards the term, use of the lands, by the acquiescence of the company in the statement, the prosecutor can put his own construction on it. But have we not in the 74th section, a reference to the use of these terms? It is also said, that no specific relief is prayed in the writ; that it should have pointed out the particular works required. The case made by the mandamus is only, that he was deprived of the use of his lands; and for this reason, that the 68th section contains no specific directions. It stands admitted, that the company had the means of knowing what works were required, and it therefore was not necessary, nor would it be proper to specify them in the mandamus, Re v. Bristol Dock Co. (6 B. & C. 181, S. C. 9 Dowl. & Ry.) Does no inconvenience arise from the company being at liberty to become the purchasers of the piece of land between the sea and the railway, and thereby cutting off all communication; so that if this railway were to extend along the coast, the company might have the public effectually stopped from communication with the sea. Taking into account the expenses, which it is now admitted the prosecutor has incurred; it is said he must be satisfied to take £49 for the loss he has sustained, and I do not find he has any mode of increasing the amount; he did not appear, and as far as I can see, the act of parliament leaves him without a remedy. This is a position, in which I do not think the legislature intended any man should be placed; and for these reasons I think the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

RICHARDS, B.—After the full consideration this case has already undergone, I shall not occupy the public time at any great length. The case of the prosecutor rests upon the 68th sec. of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20; and the company have proceeded under the 49th sec. of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18. The latter section cannot, in my judgment, be considered as superseding the provisions of the 68th section. We are to construe these acts of parliament consistently with each other, and, if we can, give a construction which will effectuate their several provisions. Wherever a communication is necessary, the company are bound to make accommodation works. There are only two exceptions to their liability, and these exceptions afford them ample protection. If, therefore, the only injury suffered by the prosecutor, was the injury to the land, the company would not be required to make accommodation works. It is a mistake to suppose that it was in respect to the piece of land cut off, the prosecutor required accommodation works. Whenever an occupier has lands adjoining the railway, I think a party would be entitled to accommodation works, though the railway did not go through his lands. If a party, by virtue of his land, had a right of way over another man's land, through which the railway passes, he would have a right to accommodation works. The prosecutor alleges, that before the company ran the railway through his land, he had access to the sea. This he was entitled to, as an easement incident to the enjoyment of his land. His land extended to the sea, he had a common law right to fish and bathe there, and it was necessary for him to go through his land for those purposes. He used it before as a way to the sea; he cannot now do so, but his right still exists, unless the company have a right to deprive him of that they have no right to. The allegations in the return do not bring the company within the exceptions in the 68th section. The company can make the accommodation works, without obstructing or injuring the working of the railway. I am, therefore, of opinion, the judgment of the Court below ought to be reversed.

PERRIN, J.—The prosecutor complains of two interruptions; he says that he was in the occupation of premises adjoining the sea-shore, from which he had access to the sea, and that the company made an embankment which deprived him of that access. From the writ and from the return it appears that the embankment divides his lands. The mandamus proceeds to state, that the prosecutor called for accommodation works, and the return states—[His Lordship here stated the return, and proceeded].—The substance of these, taking them together, is, that the prosecutor complains of the interruption to the use of his land by the embankment, and the interruption of bathing, boating, and fishing, and insists upon a culvert to make good his loss. The company rely on the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and say they have given full compensation under the 49th section of that Act. The mandamus and return are not as satisfactory as they might be, but the interruption complained of in the writ is, that the railway has so cut through the prosecutor's land, that he cannot proceed from one part of it to the other. The company answer this by saying that they have taken the course pointed out by the statute, and have become the purchasers of the piece of land cut off under the 94th section of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 18. There is no repugnancy between the 94th section and the 68th section of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 20. In ascertaining the value of that piece of land, the surveyor had a right to consider all the advantages and rights which attached to it. We must, therefore, take that finding as the value of that piece of land, and that the surveyor included all the easements and enjoyments which were attached to that piece of land. On the other hand, I do not think that the answer given by the company, in respect of that piece of land, is an answer to the rest of the complaint. I hold, that the accommodation works are not confined to lands intersected, but apply to all lands adjoining, and that the company were bound to answer that interruption. It appears to me that they have answered it. I doubt that this mandamus is warranted. I doubt whether an individual has a right to a mandamus for exclusive accommodation works. Sects. 70, 71, 72, and 73, were passed for arranging these rights, and I do not think the Legislature contemplated works for each individual, but for the public. The meaning of the Act of Parliament was, that they were to be settled by the Justices; and I do not think that the mere intersection gave an absolute right to an individual to get accommodation works. I have felt a difficulty arising out of the terms of the writ; it does not specify the nature and character of the interruption, but commands the company to make such convenient culvert for the use of the lands, leaving it uncertain whether the want of boating, bathing, and fishing, or the use of the lands, is the grievance. This case differs from Res v. Bristol Dock Co., because in that case it was a public company, and the mandamus went to perform a public work; whereas here it is to do an act for a private individual. What is the return to be? What is the interruption now to meet? Are the Justices to interfere, or is each person along the shore entitled to have a mandamus. The prosecutor neglected the notice that was served on him before the company took possession of the land; he was bound to state what damage he would sustain. It is said, this was not an injury to the lands; it is, however, as owner of the lands that he claims to have relief. The company acted under the provisions of the 49th and 68th sections; the surveyor was called on to value the land severed, and the compensation to be given for the damage sustained by the execution of the works, and the company were to be bound by the valuation; and, I think, where a party has neglected to treat, has neglected to put in any claim, has declined to attend the empaneling of a jury, has allowed the company to proceed in the alternative course of applying to two justices and the surveyor has determined the amount, that is conclusive, and that the party has not now a right to treat all these proceedings as a nullity, and to ask for a mandamus. Is it to be said that a party not satisfied with an award is to treat it as nothing. The Company are bound; and is the prosecutor to say, I want access to the sea, I am not bound by the proceedings. In my judgment these proceedings are to be so regarded; they bound the Company, and I think it would be anomalous if every man had a right to complain. For these reasons I am of opinion that this is not a case where a peremptory mandamus ought to go.

CRAMPTON, J.—Two questions arise upon the demurrer taken to the return to this mandamus: first, whether the mandamus has brought the case within the 68th section of the 8 & 9 Vic. cap. 20, and if it has, secondly, whether the return, relying upon the 94th section of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 18, has taken away the right to specific relief prayed by the mandamus. The second is an important question, and upon which a great difference of opinion exists. I adopt the construction which my brother Richards has put upon these two sections—a construction reconciling the apparently two conflicting acts of Parliament. The mandamus in substance states, that the prosecutor was possessed of property running down to the sea, and had a right to the use of certain easements, growing out of the character of his possession; that there was an interruption to his right to the use of his lands, in the words of the act of Parliament, and it prays for a communication to the different parts of his lands. The argument on behalf of the Company is founded on the 94th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and if that section be applicable to this case, the Company are right, but if it be not applicable all that has been done under it goes for nothing; it is coram non judice; it could not bind any one, and the prosecutor is entitled to the slob and to the accommodation works which he requires. It is a mere petitio principii to say that the Company have got this land, and that they are entitled to give pecuniary compensation. If the 94th section does not give them a title to it the prosecutor's title remains as it was before, and the question is, has he a right to get the interruption removed. A very important argument has been founded on the fact that this is an application by an individual for a mandamus. He is the owner of land, and the railway passes through it; he is injured, and the Company admit it; no one else complains; he may in point of fact be the only person who was injured, and it would certainly be a strong construction to hold, that, because there was not a number of persons in the district who were injured, no mandamus should go. Two principles are continually kept in view; the first is, that private rights must give way to public purposes, and the second is, that liberal compensation is to be given to every person injured by the railway. Compensation is of two kinds, pecuniary compensation to be given by a jury, and accommodation works for the owners and occupiers of land adjoining the railway. A party may be entitled to pecuniary compensation for his land; in some cases pecuniary compensation is the only compensation, but I consider the facts of this case bring it within the 68th section of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, and that the prosecutor is entitled to have the specific performance of these accommodation works. It is sufficient to read that section of the act of Parliament to see that the case of the prosecutor comes within it. An accommodation of the kind must be made by the Company: but two exceptions are provided for in this legislation, namely, where such works might prevent the working or using of the railway, and where there has been an agreement between the parties; take away these two exceptions, and the 68th section is imperative on the Company, and universal in its comprehensiveness. I shall not stop at these exceptions, because they are negatived by the mandamus, and not traversed. Every fact stated in the mandamus, and not traversed by the return must be taken to be admitted. The Company say that the estate and interest in the premises are now vested in them by the proceedings which they have taken under the 94th section; upon that section they rely for their defence, and insist that the purchaser is bound to take pecuniary compensation, and to give up his property to them. They cannot set up any case of waiver on the part of the prosecutor, for on the face of the mandamus it appears that before any step was taken under the 94th section, a notice was served on the Company calling on them to make their works. Can it be said that the prosecutor retains all the commodious use of his lands after all communication with the sea is cut off? The prosecutor does not acknowledge the property as being in the Company. In my opinion the 94th section does not apply to the case now before the court. For these reasons I think the judgment should be reversed.

June 7th.—TORRENS, J.—I have fully considered this case, and concur in the opinion of my brothers Crampton, Richards and Ball, that judgment should be given for the plaintiff.

PENNEFATHER, B. concurred in the opinion of the Court below.

PIGOT, C. B. considered the case to be one of great doubt and difficulty, but was of opinion that the prosecutor was entitled to relief under the provisions of the 68th section of the 8 Vic. c. 20, if his case was sufficiently stated.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court below should be affirmed. The prosecutor can have every compensation under the 49th section of the 8 Vic. c. 18. As the majority of the Court are of a different opinion the judgment of the Court below must be reversed.

*Judgment reversed.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

DELAP v. HALL.—February 12, 18.

Will—Construction—Power of disposition amongst issue of tenant for life—Bequest of chattels real to A. for life, with remainder to his lawful issue, to be disposed of to them as he may think fit, and on failure of his lawful issue over, held to vest the absolute interest in A.

This case came before the Court on pleadings and proofs. The question arose upon the constructions of a bequest in the will of Robert Delap, in the terms following:—"I leave to my son, Joseph Delap, 30 acres of my land, of the south side of Tully-garden, adjoining Mr. Richardson's estate, subject to a proportional part of my debts and legacies, and a proportional part of the Primate's rent and renewal fines, during his natural life, and, at his decease, in remainder to his lawful issue, to be disposed of to them as he may think fit, and in failure of his lawful issue, to my son John Delap, and his issue in like manner." The lands of Tully-garden were held for a chattle interest from the Primate. Joseph Delap had made no disposition of the said lands under this will, but William Delap, the plaintiff in the original suit, claimed as his only child against purchasers from Joseph Delap. William Delap died, and his administratrix filed a bill of revivor, which now came on to be heard.

Mr. R. W. Green, Q.C. and Mr. R. Armstrong for the plaintiff. The question is, what interest the legatees took. The first limitation is for life expressly. Merest v. James, (1 Brod. & Bing. 484.) Issue is an expression more flexible than heirs of the body. Lees v. Moseley, (1 Y. & C. Ex. 589;)

Atkinson v. Hutchinson, (3 P. W. 258.) Even in freeholds, it could only give an estate tail by implication. Lampley v. Blower, (3 Atk. 396;) Target v. Gaunt, (1 P. Wm. 432;) Forth v. Chapman, (ib. 663.) In Jesson v. Wright, the words were heirs of the body, not issue, and that case decides nothing with regard to personality. Hockley v. Mawbey, (1 Ves. Jr. 143,) governs this case. Peacock v. Spooner, (2 Ver. 195;) Dafforne v. Goodmoan, (2 Vern. 362;) Hodgeson v. Bury, (2 Atk. 89;) Morse v. Ormond, (1 Russ. 382;) Radford v. Radford, (1 Koe. 486.)

Mr. Brewster, Q.C., Mr. Christian, Q.C., and Mr. S. B. Miller, for the defendants.—Without the power, J. Delap would have taken no estate tail, and therefore the absolute interest in personality. Robinson v. Robinson, (2 Vez. St. 215;) Manning v. Moore, (Al. & Nap. 96.) The case, therefore, rests entirely on the power. The limitations here are very unlike those in Lees v. Moseley. Hockley v. Mawbey, (3 Bro. C. C. 81, 8 C. 1 Ves. 1. 143,) has been much shaken by subsequent cases. Doe dem. Jesson v. Wright, (2 Bl. 1;) Sele v. Barter, (2 Bos. & P. 485;) Simmons v. Simmons, (8 Sim. 22;) Croly v. Croly, (Batt, 1;) Doe v. Applin, (4 T. R. 82;) Doe v. Cooper, (1 East, 229;) Ward v. Bevil, (1 Y. & J. 512.) The question, in fact, is, in what sense the testator used the word "issue." It properly means the whole line of descendants, and must, unless something control it, have that force given to it. Britton v. Boothby, (2 Sim. & Stu. 463;) Caulfield v. Maguire, (2 Jo. & L. 141;) Green v. Harvey, (1 Her. 428;) Love v. Wyndham, (1 Lev. 290.)

Mr. Armstrong, in reply.

June 22nd. LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case comes before me on a bill, by which the representative of William Delap claimed to be entitled to the interest in certain leasehold premises, which had belonged to Robert Delap, and which passed under his will. The plaintiff contended that they passed to William Delap, as son of Joseph Delap, one of the persons named in the will of R. Delap. The question in the case is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to that interest under the provisions of the will. The property is a chattel interest in Armagh; there have been subsequent renewals and other dealings with the property, but unless the plaintiff can sustain his case upon the construction of the will, all other questions fail. The material words on which the question depends, are—"I leave to my son, Joseph Delap, 30 acres of my land, of the South side of Tully-garden, adjoining Mr. Richardson's estate, subject to a proportionable part of my debts and legacies, and a proportional part of the Primate's rent and renewal fines, and also my lease in Cavan, under James Tisdall, Esq., and my house and tenements in Dungannon"—Nothing turns upon this part of the property, which was not mentioned in the case—"during his natural life, and, at his decease, in remainder to his lawful issue, to be disposed of to them as he may think fit, and on failure of his lawful issue, to my son John Delap, and his issue in like manner." The other part of the same premises he bequeathed to John Delap, with remainder to Joseph, in the

The only then is whether there is anything in the give a different construction. The words as having this effect are, "to be disposed ; lawful issue, as he may think fit." The cases on et are numerous, and the only difficulty ecting the cases which bear only on the oint of this will, which turns merely on r of appointment amongst the children. ases tend to this, that the mere introduc- power such as this is not enough to take the general doctrine. The first case to hall refer is Dos v. Applin, (4 T. R. 82); e is Seale v. Barter, (2 Bos. & P. 485.) s a devise "of all the testator's lands to ohn, and his children lawfully to be be- ith power to settle the same, or any part y will or otherwise to them or any of e should think proper, and in default of over," it was held that John took an l, and that this construction "was not by the power." The power, it was said, Alvanley in delivering the judgment of , "had some operation, since it enabled e to dispose of the estate to his children, going through the forms of a recovery ; over, because it enabled John to make en take by purchase, did not make it im- on the court to give the estate to the y purchase, in all events, and to confine ife estates as tenants in common." I state the argument in Jesson v. Wright, (2 Bligh.

O. S. 11), which case appears to me to be a clear authority for the same proposition, that a mere power to divide amongst issue will not control the general doctrine. The devise there was "to William Wright for life, and from and after his decease, unto the heirs of the body of the said William lawfully issuing, in such shares and proportions as he, the said William, should appoint, and for want of such appointment to the heirs of the body of William, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and if but one child, the whole to such only child, and for want of such issue over." The next case is that of Croly v. Croly, (Beatty 1), where the devise was "to the use of my younger son Richard, for and during the term of his natural life, and from and after his decease to the use and behoof of his issue male or female, in such proportion or proportions as he shall think proper, by his last will and testament to devise the same." That was held an estate tail in the first taker; it shows strongly that a mere power of appointment will not cut down the estate tail to a life estate. I find it impossible to distinguish it from the case before the court. Then there are two cases in the Exchequer here, Irwin v. Cuff, (Hayes 30); Briscoe v. Briscoe, (ib. 34.) Irwin v. Cuff was a devise in trust for "Henry Irwin for life, without impeachment of waste, and from and after his decease, in trust for such of his issue male and their issue male as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such issue, over." That was held an estate tail in Henry; and Baron Pennefather then threw doubt on Hockley v. Masbey. Briscoe v. Briscoe was very much to the same effect. The same doctrine was followed in a very strong case in the Exchequer, Watson v. Bourne—it is not reported, but Mr. Brewster has given me a note of it. The devise there was to trustees for the testator's widow till her second marriage or death, "after her decease, to permit testator's sons, Benjamin and Thomas, to receive the rents in equal shares during their respective lives, and from and after their and each of their decease, to permit such of the issue, male and female, of the testator's said sons, to receive their father's share of the said residue, in such shares and proportions, and for such estates as their fathers and the testator's wife during her widowhood, or their fathers, after her death or marriage should by deed or will appoint, subject to a power given to each of his sons to jointure, and in failure of such appointment to permit the respective issue male and female, of such of testator's said sons as should fail to make such appointment, and their heirs to receive their fathers' proportion of the residue of the said rents in equal shares and proportions, and from and after the decease of any of testators said sons without issue, then to permit the survivor or survivors of said sons and their respective issue to receive the shares and proportions of such son or sons so dying without issue, with the like powers and limitations as expressed concerning their original shares." That was held an estate tail. I cannot well imagine a stronger case than that, because of the additional restriction in the power giving the wife a share in it; but the court seems to have held the general doctrine too strong.

It only shews how little effect will be given to a power of appointment to control a devise which amounts to an estate tail. Martin v. M'Causland, (4 I. L. R. 340), is much to the same effect: "I leave and bequeath to my son Robert M'Causland, during the time of his natural life, all my estate, right, title, and interest in or to the lands of, &c., and in case my son Robert shall marry with the consent of his mother, then I devise the same to any issue he may happen to have, in such manner as he shall by deed or will direct, limit, or appoint, and for want of such appointment, to go equally amongst them share and share alike; but in case my son Robert shall die without issue," over. That was argued at great length in the Common Pleas, and the court was of opinion that it was an estate tail. Another case which I shall mention is that of Whittrill v. Thompson, which I cite not for its authority, but as being the latest case on the subject. It was decided here in June, 1848. I offered a case to a court of law, but that was declined, and the decision acquiesced in. The testator there, after giving the residue of his property to his son Joseph Whittrill, gave and devised "to my said son all my real and freehold estate, and to his issue male and female, in such manner and proportion as he may by deed or will, duly attested, direct, limit, or appoint, with power to my said son to charge the same with an annuity by way of jointure, and in case of the death of my said son without lawful issue," then over. The court held, that Joseph Whittrill took an estate tail, under that devise; which concludes the line of cases down to the latest moment, shewing that a power of appointment would not, of itself enable the court to put any other construction on words of this nature. I must allude to another case of great importance here, not only as being strong in itself, but because it applies the doctrine to personal property—that is Simmons v. Simmons (8 Sim. 22), where the will was of all the testator's real and personal property to Gwin Simmons, upon trust, "That he shall dispose of all, or any of my property as he shall deem best for the benefit of my dearly beloved daughter, Elizabeth Simmons, to whom I leave all during her life, for her separate use upon her own receipts, and free from the debts, control, and interference of any husband in case she marries; at her decease she shall be at liberty to will the same to her issue as she may think fit; but in case of her dying without issue." The Vice Chancellor held, that that gave an estate tail in the freehold, and an absolute interest in the personalty which was devised in the same will; that, however, is of no consequence, for it is settled, that words, not only in the same will, but in the same clause, may receive a different construction with regard to personalty and to realty. Several cases were referred to on behalf of the plaintiff, which may in general be distinguished from the present. One was Hockley v. Mawbey. That case has often been doubted; and it seems very uncertain whether if it were now to arise in specie, it would receive the same decision. It is, however, distinguishable from this case so much, that it cannot be relied on as authority. The question turned not so much on the wording of the limitation or of the power, as on that of the limitation over, as to whether it did not control the prior bequest. There was in that case, much argument as to whether the failure of issue was to be construed as meaning a general failure of issue, or to be restricted to issue living at the death of the tenant for life; but the court decided on other grounds, saying, "The limitation to the son and his issue, would be an estate tail—and perhaps the aptest way of describing an estate tail, under the statute. But it is clear he did not intend it to go them as heirs in tail, for he meant that they should take distributively, and according to proportions to be fixed by the son." So far, that case appears to conflict with the class of cases to which I have referred; and if it had rested on that alone, it might be difficult to distinguish it. However, even if the other peculiarities of that case did not distinguish it, it would be better to be governed by the other class of cases, as its authority has been much shaken. Target v. Gaunt is the common case of a bequest of personalty, with a power of disposition to the issue, the will not giving any estate at all to the issue, save by the exercise of the power. Lees v. Moseley (1 Y. & C. Ex. 569), turned completely on the construction of that particular will; the devise there was, "To my son Henry James for life, with remainder to his lawful issue, and their respective heirs in such shares and proportions, and subject to such charges as he the said Henry James shall by deed or will appoint; but in case my said son Henry James shall not marry and have issue, who shall attain the age of twenty-one years, then I give and devise this moiety to my son Oswald and his heirs for ever." It was held there merely that Henry James did not take the absolute interest; but it may be inferred from the judgment, that his children attaining twenty-one would have taken by purchase. Baron Alderson in delivering the judgment of the court says, "Upon the whole, therefore, we have no doubt in this case that the testator's intention was not to give his son an estate tail; and we think that we best effectuate that intention by construing the words, 'lawful issue' in this will, accompanied by their context as words of purchase, and in so doing, we do not impugn the authority of any decided case to be found in the books, for there is not one in which these words with such a context as in this will, have ever been held to be words of limitation." With only such a context, as we have in this will, to affect the words of limitation, the general doctrine of the cases from Doe v. Applin down to Simmons v. Simmons, appears to establish that the mere power of appointment will not control the original devise. Merrett v. James (1 Bro. & Bing. 484), turns on the introduction of additional words, giving the estate over, if the issue die under twenty-one. On the whole I think that here a general failure of issue was contemplated. That without the power of appointment, it would have been a clear case of an estate tail; and that the introduction of those words is not sufficient to alter it. The consequence is that this bill in this cause cannot be sustained.

ROLLS COURT.

MONTMORENCY v. PRATT.

ment was obtained by the guardians of a poor union for rate due by the defendant as immediate lessor; after the proceedings at law a receiver was appointed over the defendant's interest in the lands out of which the rate became due. On an application by the guardians that the receiver might be directed to pay this rate, Held, the obtaining of the judgment against the immediate lessor did not prevent the guardians from proceeding against the occupier under the 6 & 7 c. 92, s. 3, and that the receiver was bound to the amount.

In the case the defendant, Mervyn Pratt, being rated in the sum of £116 6s. 0½d. for poor rate Ballina union, in December, 1847 proceedings taken for the recovery of that sum, and on the 1st of June judgment was marked in the Court of the Bench for the amount due and costs; after proceedings a receiver was appointed over the property of the defendant, including the lands out of which said sum of £116 6s. 0½d. became due. The receiver, on being applied to for this sum, refused to pay same without an order of the court for that purpose, as judgment had been obtained for the amount.

On behalf of the guardians now moved that the receiver might pay to said guardians this poor rate due by the defendant out of the property over which the receiver had been appointed. Judgment is no satisfaction of the poor rate. rate v. Mitchell, (3 East. 251.) one of three covenants gave a bill of exchange for part of the sum secured by the covenant, and on this bill a sum was recovered; it was held that such a recovery was no bar to an action of covenant against the receiver. In Lloyd v. Moore, (9 Jur. 772.) a solicitor attached his client for non-payment of his costs, afterwards caused the order to be registered, it was held that the solicitor might enforce his lien on the fund; also a judgment obtained in an action of covenant for rent which remains unsatisfied will not defeat a condition of re-entry for the rent. (Furlong, L. & T. 1151); and Rush v. W. J. (3 Cr. & Dix. 162.)

Orpen, contra.—The rates now applied for are due before the appointment of a receiver, the guardians having obtained a judgment for the amount cannot now be paid in priority to the creditors. O'Grady v. Glover, (1 Jur. 153); Howe v. Howe, (8 I. L. R. 273.)

23.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case the defendant has been rated for poor rate as immediate lessor, and judgment was obtained for the amount due. This motion has been resisted on the ground, that this judgment having been obtained, the nature of the demand has been changed. By 6 & 7 Vic. c. 92, sec. 2, any rate payable by an immediate lessor can be recovered by action or suit in the superior courts, or by civil bill; and by the 3rd section it is provided that if the rate is not paid by the immediate lessor within four calendar months after the making thereof, it shall be lawful for the guardian to give notice in writing to the occupier to pay the rate due, and after the expiration of one calendar month from the time of giving such notice it shall be lawful to recover such rate from the occupier, or, upon his default, from any subsequent occupier; and every occupier may deduct from his rent the whole of any such rate he may have paid. It appears to me that the judgment against the defendant is not an extinguishment of this claim for poor rate against the occupiers under the third section, and I consider the remarks of the Vice Chancellor in Lloyd v. Mason, (4 Hare, 136,) are in point; and in page 138 he says, "A mortgagee who recovers judgment on his bond or covenant cannot, so long as the judgment remains in force, sue his debtor on the same bond or covenant, but he does not thereby lose his collateral security." In the present case I do not think that the judgment against the immediate lessor affects the right of the guardians to proceed by service of notice upon the occupier; and as a receiver has been appointed this claim should be discharged by him.

"Be it so; and £5 for the costs of this motion within one month after service of this order on said receiver, and let said receiver have credit for such payment in passing his account, and let said receiver and plaintiff abide their own costs of appearing on this motion."

JARDAN v. GREY.—May 24th.

Practice—Injunction—Exceptions to answer.

Answer filed on 31st March, exceptions taken on the 18th of April, which were abandoned; a motion to continue an injunction was too late, not being within the time directed by the 62nd rule.

Mr. Hughes, Q. C., moved to continue an injunction.

Mr. Sherlock, contra.—In this case the answer was filed on the 31st of March, and notice served on the same day. On the 18th of April, notice of exceptions was served, and on the 10th of May these exceptions were deemed abandoned, under the 76th general order, and the answer was deemed sufficient. [Counsel referred to Pryto v. Hudson, (8 Sw. 363, note,) where it was held, that where exceptions are shewn as cause against dissolving an injunction, and the answer is reported sufficient, the injunction cannot be revived on the merits disclosed in that answer. Also to the case of Cos-tigan v. Hinchey, (1 Hogan, 45.)]

Mr. Joy, Q. C. in reply.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—By the 62nd general order, an injunction obtained before answer, is dissolved without further order, unless within 14 days from the filing of the answer, the plaintiff serves notice of a motion to continue it. In the present case there has been a breach of the order of the court.

"And, it appearing to the court, that the said answer was filed on the 31st of March last, and the notice of the filing of such answer was given on the day after; and the exceptions to the said answer having been abandoned, and notice of this motion not having been given until the 11th of May, after the injunction stood dissolved under the 62nd general order. And it appearing to the court, that there is not sufficient Equity confessed on the answer for the renewal of said injunction, refuse this motion with costs, to be paid by plaintiff to defendant when taxed, &c."

IN RE CORKERS, MINORS.—May 26th and June 9th.

Condition in restraint of marriage.

Bequest of an annuity of £50 to A. V. C., a widow, for her life provided she did not marry again.

Held that the annuity determined on the second marriage of A. V. C., and the proviso that she should not marry again was not a condition subsequent so as to be void as in restraint of marriage.

The petition in this case stated that Chambre Corker, late of Cor Castle, the father of the petitioner, made his last will and testament, dated the 16th of July, 1841, and after several specific bequests he gave an annuity of £50 per annum to his daughter-in-law, Anna Victoria Corker, the widow of his son Chambre Corker for her life, provided she did not marry again, or sell or in any way dispose of same; that in the year 1848 said Anna V. Corker intermarried with Henry Ainslie, and that said annuity was thereby determined, and the petition prayed that the rents of the lands charged with said annuity might be paid to the parties entitled, except said A. V. Corker.

Mr. Jones for the petitioners.—This is a condition precedent. Luxford v. Cheek, (3 Lev. 125;) Sheffield v. Lord Orrery, (3 Atk. 282; 1 Jarman on Wills, 731.) Due on the dem. of Dean and Chapter of Westminster v. Freeman and wife, (1 T. R. 389;) Fry's case, (1 Vent. 203.) And in Webb v. Grace, (2 Ph. 701,) there was a covenant to pay an annuity to a person during her life, and a proviso that in case she should at any time thereafter happen to marry the annuity should be reduced, that was held to be a covenant to pay the full annuity until marriage, and afterwards the reduced annuity, as the proviso for reduction of the annuity was part of the original gift, and was not a condition subsequent, and void as being in restraint of marriage. [Counsel also referred to Acherley v. Vernon, (Willis 159;) Scott v. Tyler, Dick. 712;) Lowe v. Peers, (4 Burr. 2225;) Grace v. Webb, (14 Sim. 884;) Brooke v. Spong, (15 M. & W. 153;) Cooke v. Turner, (14 Sim. 502.)]

Mr. Barnes contra.—There is no disposition over, and this condition should be construed strictly; the estate is given for her life and must vest. Conditions in defeasance must be construed strictly. (4 Burr. 2055; 1 Jarm. 732.) Milvers v. Slater, (8 Ans. 295;) and in Marples v. Banbridge the testator bequeathed to his wife, should she survive and continue unmarried, all his goods, chattels, estate and effects, to possess same during the term of her natural life, and from and after her death be disposed of same; the widow married, and it was held only to be a condition subsequent, and in terrorem.

June 9th.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The whole question depends on the construction of the will of Mr. Corker, by which he bequeaths this annuity to Anna V. Corker for her life, provided she does not marry again. The question has been decided in a very recent case before Lord Cottenham, Webb v. Grace, (2 Ph. 701,) there was a covenant in these terms, "That J. Webb, shall pay to E. Castle, for and during the term of her natural life, subject to the proviso hereinafter contained, an annuity of £40, provided always, and it is hereby agreed and declared by and between the parties hereto, and it is the true intent and meaning of these presents, that in case the said Eliza Castle shall at any time hereafter happen to marry, then from and immediately after her marriage the said annuity of £40 shall be and is hereby reduced to £20 only, which said sum of £20 shall in such case be paid and payable unto the said E. Castle from the time of her marriage for and during all the remainder of her life." In giving judgment the Lord Chancellor said "The questions which have arisen as to conditions subsequent in restraint of marrying do not appear to me to apply: there can be no doubt that marriage can be made the ground of a limitation ceasing or commencing; it is unnecessary to refer to the authorities for this purpose. Richards v. Baker, Sheffield v. Lord Orrery, Gordon v. Adolphus were cited in the argument. If then this grant is a grant of £40 per annum until marriage, and from that event happening of £20 per annum for life, there can be no doubt but that such a gift is lawful, and that after marriage there can be no demand for the £40 per annum. This claim is grounded on contract and obligation on the part of the grantor; the parties claiming must, therefore, prove that their claim is within the terms of the contract and obligation. What then are these terms? is there in this any contract or obligation to pay £40 annum after the marriage of E. Castle? the argument in favour of the claim assumes that there is an unqualified grant of an annuity of £40 per annum for life, and an attempt to defeat the gift by an illegal condition subsequent; this proposition I think fails in all its parts, for there is not any unqualified gift of an annuity of £40 for life, the contract and obligation is to pay to Eliza Castle during her life, subject to the proviso hereinafter contained, an annuity of £40, at certain times specified. The contract and obligation is not absolute and unqualified, but explained, qualified and bound by the proviso, and must be construed precisely in the same manner as if the terms of the proviso had been introduced into and made part of the contract and obligation. It is, therefore, to pay £40 per annum to her during so much of her life as she shall remain unmarried." Master Brooke, I have been informed, has come to the same conclusion upon this question which arose before him in another case. I consider that this annuity, was determined, and will make the order according to the prayer of the petition.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

MACNAMARA v. BLAKE.—Jan. 26.

Objections—Pleading Supplemental Bill—Want of parties—Bill of Review.

On hearing a bill was allowed to stand over to and by adding parties. The plaintiff added necessary parties by a supplemental bill, which added new matter affecting the parties to original suit. Held, that they were necessary parties. Semble, that a supplemental bill cannot be used to modify the original decree.

The case came before the court on an appeal from the Rolls order allowing the demurrer.

Sergeant O'Brien and Mr. Maley, for the plaintiff.

R. W. Green, Q. C., and Mr. F. W. Walsh for the defendant.

THE CHANCELLOR.—This case came before me on appeal from an order made at the Rolls, on demurrer to the bill, taken by the defendant, J. Burke. The Master of the Rolls, on hearing cause, allowed the demurrer. From his decision the plaintiff has appealed to me. The case was argued on both sides; but in the view which I have taken, it is not necessary to go so fully into the facts or the arguments, as might otherwise have been required. The Rolls order must be affirmed, and the defendant must succeed. The plaintiff seeks to raise a portion of a charge of £10,000, created by a settlement of the 25th November, 1773, as a charge for younger children, under one of the portions which the plaintiff claims through Henry Butler, one of the signees of a part of the charge. The bill purports to be supplemental to a bill filed by the same plaintiff on the 8th of October, 1844, purporting to be a supplemental bill, and it seeks to state in detail the case made by that bill of 1844, in a manner sufficient to put in issue only the filing of that bill, but the facts stated therein. As I have said, the bill of 1844 was itself supplemental, the plaintiff here, claiming under the charge made by the settlement of 1773, on the issue of Xaverius Blake, the elder, asked for benefit of certain proceedings in this court, which may be described as follows:—In the year Xaverius Blake confessed a judgment, and on proceedings were taken. In 1815, a decree was made on foot of that judgment was obtained, and the report was made up in 1818. That cause is known as Bachelor v. Blake. By the first decree therein it was referred to Master Ball, to account of the real and personal estate of and Xaverius Blake, and of the incumbrances affecting the same, with liberty for creditors to appear and prove. The Master on that reported the sum due to Bachelor by Xaverius Blake. This sum of £10,000 which the settlement provided for by a term of 500 years, was also sold, and was allocated to the persons entitled, of whom was the person whom the plaintiff sues. By the final decree the report was made. Bachelor was declared entitled to the benefit of the proceedings in a cause of Blake v. Bachelor. It was declared that Bachelor's was the charge in the lands of Xaverius Blake, and it was directed "that a sale should be had of the said lands for payment of the sum due on foot of the judgment, and the several other sums which were so as aforesaid reported due, with costs, and that the said John Bachelor should be paid the amount of his said demand out of the produce of such sale, and that the other incumbrancers should be paid according to priority." That decree directs a sale of the fee-simple and inheritance of the lands for the payment not only of the judgments, but of the portions which were only secured by a term. It does not appear to have been done by consent, and therefore prima facie, this seems to be a decree, erroneous in ordering a sale of the inheritance for payment of a charge only affecting a term. In effect the difference is nothing, perhaps it may even be better for the inheritor that the fee, than that a long term, should be sold; but that is not to the purpose. There was then an order for rehearing, and on the rehearing the former decree was affirmed, and the Master was ordered "to set up and sell the lands in the report mentioned, or so much thereof as would be sufficient to pay the sums due on foot of the judgment which was so assigned to the said John Bachelor, and the several sums reported due under the said indenture of marriage settlement, of the 25th November, 1773. And that the said John Bachelor might make up and enroll the decree with costs," which was accordingly done. And so it now stands with that decree duly enrolled, according to the practice of the court. The plaintiff by his bill of 1844 took up the case then, and stated a variety of matters not material to the present question; he finally prayed "that he might have the benefit of the suit of Bachelor v. Blake, and the decrees made, and the accounts taken, and the report made therein, and that the several decrees made in that cause might be carried into execution, so far as might be necessary for the plaintiff's relief, and that an account might be taken of what was due to the plaintiff on foot of the sum due to him, and also an account of all prior and contemporaneous incumbrances, and that all necessary accounts might be taken of the said parts, shares, and proportions of the said sum of £10,000, for securing the payment of which the said trust term of 500 years, created by the said settlement, and that the plaintiff might be paid what should appear due to him," and so forth. That prayer of the bill of 1844, to have the benefit of the decree for selling the fee-simple, and inheritance of the lands is qualified in this way by adding the words, "so far as might be necessary for the plaintiff's relief." I do not see any valid objection to the right of the plaintiff to have the benefit of the former suit, so far as is necessary for his relief, though he cannot file a bill to have the benefit of the decree for the payment of his portion of the sum of £10,000. It must be, as laid down in Hamilton v. Haughton, (2 Bli. 169), a bill to carry into execution the decree generally. A party seeking to carry out a decree must do so for the benefit of all persons interested under it, as well as of himself. Having filed that bill, the plaintiff proceeded in the cause. A supplemental bill was rendered necessary by the birth of a child of Walter Blake the younger; and it eventually came to hearing. At the hearing the objection was taken that the decree was erroneous, and the plaintiff could have no benefit of it, on account of the direction to sell the inheritance. Much discussion took place, and it appeared to the court that if any relief could be given, it could only be by departing from the direction of that original decree; but that in order to decide on it, the court must have every one before it, who was interested in that decree, partly that the security might not be affected in their absence, and partly on the ground alluded to—that in a bill to carry out a decree, the plaintiff must act for the benefit of all interested under it. On these grounds the court ordered it to stand over, with liberty to bring the other parties interested before the court; these appear to have been the representatives of Bachelor. The simple course would have been either by amendment to introduce them by name, with an averment that they were the persons, making no other variations; or which would also be not improper, to bring them before the court by supplemental bill; it is clear by the authorities that you may do so. The plaintiff, therefore, might have done what he has done, so far as he has gone right; that is to say, might by supplemental bill have made those persons parties; but he seems to have thought he had more to do, and he does accordingly do more. I have omitted to mention the trusts of the settlement of 1842, through which J. H. Burke the defendant, who has taken this demurrer, is a necessary party to this suit, and if they had been mentioned at the hearing, liberty would have been given to the plaintiff to make the persons interested under it parties; and, as in the case of Wood v. Wood, (4 Y. & C. Ex. 135), that would have entitled him to take whatever steps might be necessary against them. In that case the marginal note is, that "when the court gives leave to amend, by adding parties, the power so given is in no case to be considered illusory, and therefore when it is necessary to read evidence against the new party, the plaintiff, notwithstanding the order be merely to amend, may file a supplemental bill, and he may incorporate in such bill any other matter which might, independently of the order to amend, be the subject of a supplemental bill." An order had there been made, that the bill should stand dismissed, unless the plaintiffs amended their bill, by adding the official assignee as a party. Then, as Baron Alderson said, "instead of doing this, the plaintiff has filed a supplemental bill, in which he introduced new matter, to which he made the former defendants parties." A motion was made to take the bill off the file, and it was held that the party had a right to adopt the course he had taken. The court said, "If the party has a right to treat a supplemental bill as a compliance with the order of this court, I do not think he alters his position by including other matters proper to form part of a supplemental bill in that bill. For this he does not want the permission of the court, but has a right to include those matters in a supplemental bill."—In this country the 56th general order gives such permission.—"Suppose the plaintiffs here had amended their bill in the way in which the defendants suggest they ought to have done, and had also, after doing this, filed a supplemental bill, including the new matters, I am not aware that the defendants could have objected to it. If so, it seems to me that they may well consolidate the new matter in a supplemental bill, filed under the permission to amend. This would be, in fact, the most convenient and compendious mode of proceeding." On the authority of that case, therefore, so far as the plaintiff rightly brought the defendants before the court—that is, rightly constructed the suit—he was justified in doing so, by supplemental bill. The question is, what else he has done. He has introduced a variety of statements relating to orders for various purposes in Bachelor v. Blake, and the other causes, and introduced into the present suit for two reasons—one declared, and the other easy to be guessed. He declares a purpose to use them by way of estoppel, in this way, that the parties having, by those orders, acted on the decree of 1819, cannot object to it. These are all material as to the right to this money having been barred by the statute of limitations; and also—on the authorities referred to in Dundas v. Blake, (1 Ir. Jar. 121), in which I lately gave judgment—to sustain the plaintiff's demand, if the suit were not to be treated as supplemental. Altogether I cannot say that these statements are irrelevant; they seem of vast importance, whether as sustaining the right to the decree of 1819, or as if he began now for the first time on the settlement of 1773, without basing his right to relief on that decree. But the more important they are, the more important it is that all parties whom they may affect should be before the court. The more I look at them, the more I think that all the parties to the bill of 1844 should be here in this bill. The parties deriving under the settlements of 1799 and 1809, who might be much affected by this proceeding, have a right to see before a decree on estoppel, that they are protected. The decision in Jones v. Howell, (2 Har. 342), is in point, in which the rule is laid down how far parties to the original bill are necessary parties. There the defendants "to an original bill were held to be necessary parties to a supplemental bill against a new defendant, where the interests of such original defendants, as well as those of the new defendant required that the new defendant should be a party to the suit. Dyson v. Morris, (1 Har. 413), also bears upon this part of the case. The interest of the original defendants is the test whether they are or not necessary parties. They have an interest to see that there is no decree founded on an estoppel which ought not to bind them; they have an interest to see that the instrument to bar the statute of limitations is not improperly used. On that ground I must say, that the bill is wrong. I might stop there, but when I look at the prayer, there is a good deal to observe. The plaintiff appears to have framed it on the assumption that it is a case for the court to do what it has done in some cases, that is, not carry out fully the decree of 1819, but carry it out so far as it is right, and it is contended that on the bill of 1844 that can be done. The words "so far as may be necessary for the plaintiff's relief," are not material, and it does not appear whether that can be done by consent, as in the case of O'Connell v. Macnamara, (3 Dru. & W. 411); whether by the court stopping short, and only doing part of what had been previously decreed; or whether, as in Hamilton v. Haughton, (2 Bli. 169), the bill must be re-cast, for that case does not decide that a party is at liberty to take up an erroneous decree, and amend it. Lord Redenbale says,

"The amendment to this bill may be not only by making proper parties to it, but by framing his bill according to the rights of the parties, namely, to have the proper trusts carried into execution," which seems rather to imply that the plaintiff must file a new bill to carry out the deed, than modify the former decree, which is the relief which the present bill seeks. After stating what I have alluded to, this prays that the plaintiff may be entitled to the full benefit of the suit so instituted by Bachelor, and of the former decrees. It goes somewhat beyond the bill of 1848, but is not inconsistent with it; it goes on, "And if your lordship shall be of opinion that the said several decrees which were made in this cause, ought not to be carried into execution according to the terms thereof, then that the same may be carried into execution for the benefit of the plaintiff, in such manner, and from and with such modifications as to your lordship shall seem meet." What is the meaning of, modify a decree? Is it that the court is to take an enrolled decree, and modify, that is vary it, which the court has not power to do, except on a bill praying to open the enrolment, and vary the decree for errors apparent on it, or such other grounds as the court allows, which this bill does not do? It goes on then, "that an account may be taken of what is due to your suppliant on foot of his charge, and also an account on foot of all prior and contemporaneous incumbrances, and that all other necessary accounts may be taken on foot of the other parts, shares, or proportions of the aforesaid sum of £10,000, and that your plaintiff may be paid what shall appear due to him, or in default thereof, that what shall be found due to plaintiff on foot of his demand, and all prior and contemporaneous incumbrances may be raised by a sale of a sufficient portion of the townlands, &c. comprised in the said term of 500 years, according to the nature of such charges, and as the same respectively affect the inheritance in the said lands, or are secured only by means of such trust term, and that all proper parties may join." That is to say, the court is to go back to the report passed by the decree of 1819, take up the account on that report, and make a new decree as if there had been none, and thus have one decree enrolled directing a sale of the fee and inheritance, and another directing an account and sale of the term, or of the fee, as the case might be. No such bill was ever heard of; no such decree could be made, save on re-hearing, or on a bill of review for error apparent. If we look to the recent cases on variation, we find them even more strict as to the practice than the earlier authorities. In Davis v. Bluck, (6 Beav. 393,) the case was not so strong as it is here. In that case "a contract was entered into for the sale of the vendor's interest in a lease and premises at Doncaster, known as the betting rooms, for the remainder of the lease granted by A. A bill for specific performance was filed by the purchaser, in which (in the decree) the agreement was treated as comprising the premises held of A. An account of the rents was directed; it turned out that the rooms and premises were partly under A and partly under B; whereupon the vendor filed a second bill, praying a declaration that the whole was comprised in the agreement. Held, however, that the plaintiff could not, upon a re-hearing, obtain the relief asked by the second bill, nor could he, by such second bill, obtain the relief thereby prayed, while the decree stood in its present form; that is to obtain the relief asked, the original cause must be re-heard with the second, and consequently, that the second bill was a supplemental bill, in the nature of a bill of review, which ought not to be filed without the leave of the court." I did not advert to the leave of the court, the want of which is an additional element of irregularity here. I will refer now to a case showing that such relief can only be obtained on a bill of review; the facts were not so strong as they are in the case before me, that is, the case of Toulman v. Copeland, (4 Hare. 41), on re-hearing; it also illustrates the difficulty of making a variation in a decree. It turned on the question, whether a substantial vendition was sought. It was the same thing in Ogilvie v. Heron, (13 Ves. 563), which was a decree pro confesso. Then, what does this bill seek to have done? Is it to have the plaintiff declared entitled to the benefit of the decree? or that a new decree be made? In Perry v. Phelps, (17 Ves. 173,) Lord Eldon seems to doubt whether a bill of this kind is open to plea or demurrer; he says, "If it is competent to the plaintiff, not filing a bill of review together with a bill of revivor and supplement in order to have the relief which may be obtained by such a bill, but stating that he will not determine whether there is error apparent in the decree, contending that there is, but in case it shall not prove so, electing in his prayer to make it a mere bill of revivor, or supplement, or both; the consequence is, that all the protection against a bill of revivor, founded on error apparent in the decree, is gone by the effect of that alternative prayer. In the case of newly-discovered facts the leave of the Court must be obtained, which gives protection, but this difficulty occurs from putting the case in the alternative, that the defendant can neither plead nor demur, he must be brought to a hearing, and may incur all the vexation of a suit, whether it shall turn out to be a bill of review or not." The modern doctrine seems to be that a bill contrary to the course of the Courts is open to demurrer. I do not know, however, whether there be any such case; I can only find Story Eq. Pl. Sec. 638, where, speaking of demurrer to bills not original, he says, "It is also a good cause of demurrer to a bill of either sort that it is not brought according to 'the course of the court.'" At all events although on this defect of parties I shall allow the demurrer, I shall give the plaintiff leave to amend by adding parties.

ROLLS COURT.

HAMILTON GEALE AND WIFE v. JOHN NUGENT AND OTHERS; MICHAEL MOLONY, PETITIONER, EDWARD JOHN NUGENT, RESPONDENT; SAME PETITIONER v. SAME RESPONDENT.—July, 21.

An attorney or solicitor ought not to be appointed a receiver, and if he should be appointed the Court will, upon application for that purpose, direct him to be removed on that ground.

When several judgments are vested in the same person, separate petitions for the appointment of receivers should not be presented on foot of each judgment—they should be included in one petition.

Any solicitor who nominates a solicitor's clerk or apprentice to the office of receiver, will be suspended from practising in this court.

If a solicitor, solicitor's clerk, or apprentice, shop-keeper, or person carrying on a profession or trade, is nominated or appointed receiver, he will be removed, and the person having the carriage of the proceedings will have to pay the costs of the appointment of a new receiver.

Mr. Brewster, Q. C., and Mr. De Moleyns, on behalf of the plaintiffs in the first cause, moved that Henry Joly, the receiver in this cause and matters, be removed from said receivership, and that the said receiver do proceed forthwith to pass a final account.

[The facts of this case will be found fully set forth in the Master of the Rolls's judgment.]

Mr. Hughes, Q. C. and Mr. Tuthill, for the Receiver.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case a motion has been made on the part of the plaintiffs in the cause, that Henry Joly, of 76, Harcourt-street, the receiver in the matters and cause, should be removed, and that he should proceed to pass a final account, and that the balance, if any, which shall appear due on foot of his account, shall be paid to the plaintiffs in part discharge of the interest due to them. The plaintiffs contend that Mr. Joly is a solicitor, and should on that account be removed; and it is insisted that he has been guilty of default in the discharge of his duty. As to any particular acts of default they should have been specified in the notice of motion if intended to be relied on, but there is no doubt that the arrear due on the property over which the receiver has been appointed has considerably increased. The counsel who moved this motion were not fully instructed, but having had inquiries made, and having called for the documents, the following appear to be the facts of the case: In Michaelmas Term, 1844, a judgment was obtained at the suit of John Henry Dunne against the respondent, Edward John Nugent, in the penal sum of £823 11s. By deed of assignment of the 17th of Dec. 1844, J. H. Dunne assigned the property to the petitioner Michael Molony. In Hilary Term, 1842, Richard Deane Keane obtained two judgments against the said respondent, each for the sum of £71 5s. 9d. Mr. R. D. Keane is a solicitor. How two judgments were obtained for what appears to be the same demand, does not appear. By deed of assignment of the 4th of January, 1845, the said two judgments were assigned to the petitioner, Mr. Michael Molony, the deed reciting that there was due on the two judgments £65 4s. 5d. In Trinity Term, 1845, Mr. M. Molony, and a Mr. McCullagh, being trustees in a settlement, the particulars of which do not appear, obtained a judgment for £3,200 against the said respondent. The judgment of Michaelmas Term, 1844, and the two judgments of Hilary, 1842, being vested in Mr. Michael Molony, and the judgment of Trinity, 1845, being vested in Mr. M. Molony and Mr. McCullagh, Mr. M. Molony appears to have employed Mr. George Augustus Labatt as his solicitor. The judgment of 1814 was vested in Mr. M. Molony for his own benefit. The two judgments of 1842 were vested in him as trustee for his solicitor, Mr. George Augustus Labatt. The judgment of 1845 was vested in Mr. Michael Molony and Mr. McCullagh, as trustees in a marriage settlement, the trusts of which do not appear. The petition in the first matter was presented in the month of February, 1846, on behalf of Mr. Michael Molony, by Mr. G. A. Labatt, as his solicitor, under Sir Michael O'Loughlin's act, for the appointment of a receiver. The effect of Mr. Labatt not including the other judgments in the same petition was to accumulate costs. In the month of May, 1846, Master Henn, under the order of reference in the first matter, appointed Mr. H. Joly to be receiver over certain lands in the County of Westmeath, the profit rent of which was stated in the petition to be £173 6s. 9d. a-year. On the 4th of March, 1847, Mr. George Augustus Labatt, as the solicitor for Mr. M. Molony, presented another petition under the same act, in respect of one of the two judgments of 1842, which was vested in Mr. M. Molony, when the former petition was presented, praying that Mr. Joly, the receiver, should be extended to the second matter, and to appoint him over additional lands, the profit rent of which was £153 9s. a-year. The latter petition alleged that as to this judgment Mr. M. Molony was trustee for his said solicitor, Mr. G. A. Labatt. The receiver was accordingly extended, and appointed over such additional lands in May, 1847. Mr. Labatt omitted to include the second judgment which was vested in Mr. Michael Molony, as trustee for him, reserving that, I presume, for a future petition. In Trinity Term, 1847, Mr. Labatt presented a third petition on foot of the judgment of Trinity Term, 1845, in the name of Mr. Michael Molony, and Mr. McCullagh, to extend the receiver already appointed, and to appoint him over additional land in the county of Longford. That petition was dismissed with costs, on what ground I am unable to say. There ought to have been but one petition to appoint a receiver, and supposing that the Lord Chancellor's Secretary should have objected in respect of his fees to the including all the judgments in one petition, there should at the utmost have been but two petitions, the one to appoint and the other to extend the receiver, the costs of the former being about £26, and of the latter about £10; but by the course adopted of presenting separate petitions, and seeking on each occasion to have the receiver appointed over additional lands, the three petitions, if an order had been made on the third petition, would have involved costs to an extent which, according to the ordinary calculation, would have amounted to from £75 to £80; and there was no excuse whatever for not including in the same petition the judgments in the first and second matters. The costs were doubled by the course adopted. The plaintiffs in the cause, who are in no default, and who are merely seeking in a legitimate manner to recover their demand, obtained an order to extend the receiver in July, 1847. What the rental of the additional lands over which the receiver was extended in the cause I do not exactly know. It was stated by counsel to be upwards of £500 a year. The arrear of interest due to the plaintiffs on foot of their demand amounted in January, 1848, to £681; and they have not received one shilling of their interest since the extension of the receiver. The facts which I have already stated do not directly apply to the question which I have to decide; but I have adverted to them to the oppressive use made, and attempted to be, of Sir M. O'Loughlin's Act. With respect to appointment of Mr. Henry Joly to be receiver, I made inquiry, and I find that he was admitted an attorney of the Court of Exchequer on the 5th of May, 1844; an attorney of the Court of the Bench in Hilary Term 1847; a solicitor of the Court of Chancery in July, 1847; and an attorney of the Court of Common Pleas in May, 1847.

When the order of reference to appoint a receiver was made in 1846, in the first matter, Mr. George Augustus Labatt, as solicitor for the petitioner, proposed four names to the Master for the purpose of having one of them appointed receiver. The four persons named were Marcus Tuthill, of Main View Cottage, Sandymount, Esq.; James G. of North Cumberland-street, in the city of Dublin, solicitor; Henry E. Joly, of Harcourt-street, in said city, solicitor; and Lewis Darcy, of Harcourt-street, in said city, Esq. Mr. Labatt has received a letter from his client, the petitioner, in which it is stated was received in May, 1846, recommending Mr. Henry Joly for the office of receiver. The petitioner states in that letter that Mr. Henry Joly was receiver in the cause of Joly v. Rumley, in which the petitioner was tenant; and he says, "I wish him and mention my name." Thus of the four persons nominated to act as receivers over lands in the county of Westmeath, two were Dub-jurors, another resided at Sandymount, near Dublin, and the fourth in Jervis-street, Dublin. Of the two esquires I am not aware, probably some of the same class of esquires who figure in the list of receivers returned to Parliament, several of whom I understand turn out to be attorneys' and attorneys' apprentices. I cannot find the names of these esquires in the Directory. Mr. Henry Joly was not at this time (1846) a solicitor of the Court of Chancery, but he was an attorney of the Court of Exchequer, and Master Henn appointed Henry Joly to be receiver. I am clearly of opinion that an attorney or solicitor ought not to be appointed to the office of receiver, and I shall upon ground remove him, and this question can be decided before the Lord Chancellor on appeal. I delivered my opinion upon that subject very fully in the case of Reynolds v. Reynolds, so long ago as January, 1848. It appears from a report which was published of that case that I made, amongst other observations something to the following effect:—"The gross mismanagement of estates under the Court of Chancery was a matter of public concern, and from a return recently published it would appear that from 1841 to 1843 (and the return would probably be still more remarkable if carried down to 1847) an additional arrear of £100,000 amounting to a quarter of a million of money had arisen from the bad management of estates by receivers. The case then before him was one which called for the animadversion of the court, and the mismanagement had arisen from the person appointed to have the carriage of the proceedings not having it to be his duty to exercise care and consideration in nominating a competent receiver; for was it to be supposed that a practising attorney or barrister was a proper person to act as receiver? As it, he would ask, extraordinary when such an appointment had been made that the tenants upon the property were in such a state of combination against the payment of the rent, when so recently as 1843 they were, according even to the admission of the solicitor for the receiver, industrious and peaceable? He did not apply his observations to a solicitor only, but to practising physicians, barristers, or any other persons who from the occupations of their time by professional business were unable to attend to the duties of the office of receiver. Receiverships under the court had been made the subject of patronage. In many cases solicitors entered into a contract for the sale of receiverships, and stipulated to get a proportion of the poundage; and in one case he had made an order that the sum thus improperly received should be lodged in court with six per cent. interest. Persons having the carriage of proceedings did not nominate local gentlemen who were acquainted with the property; and if a gentleman who had been resident in the neighbourhood had been appointed, he would have looked after the tenantry, who were proved to have been peaceable and industrious, and they would have paid their rents instead of being in a state of combination, owing five or six years' arrears. All this had been the result of appointing a practising solicitor as receiver instead of a country gentleman; but owing to pursuing a different course, the management of property under the Court of Chancery had become a reproach to the court." After giving judgment at great length upon the particular facts of that case, and fixing the receiver, with a large amount of arrears lost by his default, I added, that "I hoped I should never again hear of a practising solicitor, medical man, barrister, or trader, being appointed a receiver." An extract from the judgment will be found in a note to Mr. Kennedy's digest of the evidence taken before the landlord and tenant Commissioners, vol. 2, page 1034. That case went before the Lord Chancellor upon appeal, and his lordship was therefore well aware of my opinion. I have frequently repeated that opinion since. The Lord Chancellor has taken no step, although a year and a-half has elapsed since that judgment to remedy this abuse; and the Masters have constantly appointed solicitors to the office since the case of Reynolds v. Reynolds; one of the Masters having expressed his entire dissent (in a case which came before him, in which he appointed a solicitor to be receiver) from the doctrine laid down by me in that case. If it were necessary I should be able to show, upon the plainest grounds of public policy, that, unless under very peculiar circumstances, members of the legal profession ought not to be appointed to the office of receiver. It is not necessary, however, now, that I should do so, the report of the eminent persons who were members of the Receiver Committee being clear and unequivocal upon the point. That opinion, (although opposed to the 129th general order of the Court of Exchequer, framed when the present Lord Chancellor was Lord Chief Baron, and the view expressed by Sir W. M'Mahon, in a case in Hogan's Reports), is sustained by the high authority of Sir Edward Sugden. Lord Eldon's observations in Wynne v. Lord Newborough, in 15 Vesey, in relation to practising barristers and members of parliament, applies much more strongly to solicitors. As no attention has been hitherto paid to what I have stated, either by the Lord Chancellor or by the Masters upon this subject, or by the solicitors of the Court of Chancery, and as the Masters have been in the habit of appointing solicitors, shopkeepers, attorney's clerks, apprentices, and other unfit persons to the office of receiver (imposed on I have no doubt in many cases by the party having the carriage of the proceedings)—it may be right that I should inform the solicitors who practice in this court, that if any solicitor, solicitor's clerk or apprentice, shopkeeper, or other person carrying on any profession or trade, shall be in future nominated and appointed to be receiver, I shall, upon an application for that purpose, unless some strong reason to the contrary is shewn, remove such receiver, and make the plaintiff, or the petitioner, or receiver, or the solicitor having the carriage of the proceedings, pay the costs of the appointment of the new receiver. The masters ought to open books in their offices, in which queries should be put, which should be answered by every solicitor proposing a receiver, and by every person nominated to the office. The answers to such questions should be inserted in writing in such books, and signed by those parties; and if those questions were properly prepared, it would be impossible that the class of unfit persons who have been appointed under the denomination of esquires and gentlemen could in future be appointed. The Masters ought, in my opinion, to submit to the Lord Chancellor, under the provisions of the 108th general order of the court, such suggestions as would prevent a recurrence of the improper appointments which have hitherto so frequently taken place. Many other steps should be taken which it is not necessary upon this occasion to state. I was informed when in London, that upon inquiry it appeared that many of the esquires and gentlemen in the list of receivers returned to Parliament turned out to be attorneys' clerks and apprentices. A system of the grossest fraud and deception has, I believe, been practised upon the Masters. I have no power to make general orders, but orders are necessary to reform the disgraceful system, which, I am glad to say, is now fully exposed. Whether the Lord Chancellor should or should not do so, I am unable to state; but I shall in this court, visit any future attempt to nominate an improper person to be receiver with the utmost severity; and if I shall find an attorney's clerk or an attorney's apprentice, again nominated to the office, I shall not have the slightest hesitation in suspending from further practice in this court the solicitor who adopts such a course. What has been the result of appointing an attorney to be receiver in this case? The rental is stated to be several hundreds a year; the arrear due by the tenants has greatly increased; not a shilling has been paid to the creditors; a sum, however, of £187 13s. 10d. costs has been paid to the receiver and petitioner's solicitor, and £30 more is claimed, amounting to £217 13s. 10d.; and thus the main object of petitions under the sheriffs' act has been obtained in this case. I shall, therefore, order that Mr. Joly shall be removed as receiver, and proceed to pass a final account—that it be referred to the Master to appoint, a fit and proper person to be receiver in his place and that the plaintiffs shall have the carriage of this order. I do not fix Mr. Labatt or Mr. Joly with the costs, as the Masters have thought it right to appoint attorneys and solicitors to the office, but they must abide their own costs. It is satisfactory to me that I am in no way responsible for the enormous evils which have arisen from the system, my opinion expressed in January, 1848, having been entirely disregarded. If, however, in future a solicitor or attorney should be nominated to the office of receiver and appointed, I shall fix the party who nominates him with the costs of appointing a new receiver.

MASTER LITTON'S OFFICE.

MOLONY v. NUGENT—July, 27th.

MASTER LITTON.—It is my desire to correct some errors which appeared in a report in the public papers of what I stated here on Wednesday last. Since the Master of the Rolls' judgment in the case of Molony v. Nugent, the question continues to be daily proposed to me, whether if a competent, and respectable, and solvent man, or man of business, understanding the duties of an agent, and resident upon, or close to, the lands named in the pleading, and whose appointment as receiver is desired by the parties, shall be proposed to me for the office of receiver, I will refuse to entertain the question of his nomination, because the party proposed is a solicitor? My answer has been that I shall not refuse to entertain it, notwithstanding the judgment and opinion given by the Master of the Rolls in that case. And further, that if I shall deem him, upon a consideration of the circumstances of the estate and his qualifications, the best man, I will appoint him. I am bound, in the first place, to follow the law as I find it; and, in the next place, in the important duties with which I am entrusted, and which I am bound to perform to the suitors and the public, I must follow my own opinion, if it be not opposed to, or at variance with the law. The course which I thus announce it is my intention to pursue, is sustained by the law, and the uniform practice of more than half a century, both in England and in Ireland—by the Court of Exchequer—presided over by four learned and experienced men, its barons—by the uniform practice of the four Masters in Chancery, and of the Chief Remembrancer of the Exchequer; and, above all, by the opinion of the head of the court, the present Lord Chancellor, who, in the case of Loftus v. Stephenson, to which I shall again advert, has decided the very point. If the Lord Chancellor should ever be found to agree with the Master of the Rolls, and should, by his decision, alter the law as it has uniformly prevailed in his court, the suitors and the public may be assured, that the Masters will follow, in spirit and in letter, whatever decision shall be so pronounced. If he shall pronounce a general order on the subject, as suggested by the Master of the Rolls in his judgment (but which for the sake of the suitors and the public I anxiously hope he never may), he may be assured that he will find that the Masters of the court will yield implicit deference to the order of the head of the court, whatever their own opinions may be. If an act of parliament should pass, by which solicitors shall be pronounced incapable to act as receivers, much as we should deplore an enactment as very injurious to the interests of the public, we should, of course, carry it into full effect. But, on behalf of the suitors and the public, we have a right to require that the law of the land shall be altered by act of parliament, or by the head of the court, before we shall be called upon to act—as upon an altered law—especially where we are of opinion that such alteration would prove greatly detrimental to the public interests. In giving my reasons for considering that the opinion of the Master of the Rolls—"that solicitors should never, or should, only under special circumstances, be receivers,"—is erroneous, and that it cannot, consistently with the interests of the suitors, be followed, I premise that I have, in my appointments of receivers, always required, as essentials, residence upon or near to the lands, personal character, habits of business, solvency, and a knowledge of the duties of an agent, having reference as well to the interests of the tenant, as to the interests of the landlord. In all these qualifications, I find, as a general proposition, the local resident solicitor infinitely superior to the country gentleman; and yet, the class of country gentlemen would appear to be the only class left to us, if the Master of the Rolls' judgment be rightly reported, from which we could in future select a receiver. A solicitor has some knowledge of the law of landlord and tenant, and hence he avoids the perpetual irregularities and illegalities into which, in dealing with the tenantry, a country gentleman so often falls. A solicitor knows the peculiar rules of the court, as to the dealing with tenants of the court, the limited powers of distress, the favour shown to good tenants in the letting of lands, the form of affirmance by the receiver of the justice and fairness of the proposals for the taking of lands, which are brought before the Master for his approval, and he is acquainted with the many other protections to both landlord and tenant, which, by the rules of the court, are thrown around the suitors, as well as around the tenants of the court. A country gentleman receiver knows not any of them, hence continued delay, expense, and trouble. He is wholly ignorant of all the points which arise between landlord and tenant (and they are many) in relation to the poor laws. He pays away money (as, for instance, interest on charges and maintenances) which he ought not to pay without an order; and he requires an order for the payment of head rent and tithe rent charges, which he is bound to pay without an order. He does nothing without reference to his solicitor, and his solicitor becomes the receiver, without the responsibility of the office. Hence heavy demands for costs made, because the solicitor has been employed by the receiver, but which would not, and could not be made if the receiver were a solicitor. In the passing of accounts the contrast is still more apparent, and it is all in favour of the solicitor receiver. Various rules as to accounts have been of late years made by the Masters, and confirmed by the Lord Chancellor. When these rules are attended to, the account presents upon the face of it arithmetical demonstration of its accuracy which cannot err. When they are neglected all is confusion, and the suitor is subject to the effects both of mistake and of fraud. I advert especially to the reconciliation rule, now the law of the court, and to other practical rules regulating the form of accounts, the value of which, to the suitors and to the public, none can appreciate save those who are conversant with the details; and no man filling a judicial office in the Court of Chancery can be so, save the Masters in Chancery, before whom these details pass daily and hourly, and whose duty it is to require that these rules shall be accurately abided by. The accounts brought before the Masters by the receivers, who are solicitors, are, in most cases, excellent. Perfectly acquainted with these rules, they, generally speaking, accurately follow them. They lodge their accounts within the periods prescribed by the rules of the court, saving the expense of extending the time for passing the account, and all the mischiefs attendant upon delays—whereas, the accounts sent up by country gentlemen receivers are, generally speaking, tissues of errors, and have in a very great number of instances to be sent back to them for correction and amendments—hence extensions of time for passing the accounts, and its attendant costs become necessary—balances remain in the hands of the receiver—failure in his circumstances—necessity to require payment from his sureties, and all the evils which attend the administration of an estate by an inefficient officer. I repeat it, and aver it upon the experience of nearly seven years as a Master in Chancery, and of thirty years of Bar practice, confined for many years almost exclusively to practice in the Courts of Equity, that a resident solicitor, possessing adequate qualifications in other respects, is the best agent and receiver. And, I will add, (a fact which every practical man knows), that in many counties of Ireland at present we cannot obtain any others than solicitors who would be at all qualified to act as receivers. So that, in this point of view also, the rule proposed by the Master of the Rolls, if adopted, would prove quite destructive to the suitors of the court. The opinions of the Master of the Rolls, I would say, have been adopted from three or four extreme cases (and none but extreme cases appear in his court) which have been brought before him—cases which have presented very large arrears of rent uncollected; but it is to be remembered, that these cases have occurred within the last three years, the most disastrous to the agricultural interests of Ireland, which have occurred within the memory of the present generation, and a period exactly coeval with the period of the exercise of his judicial functions. As to the suggestion that a solicitor can create costs for himself, by reason of his office as receiver, no practical man can, for one moment, entertain such a question. No proceeding can be adopted by a receiver without the order of the Master, made in the presence of, or upon notice to, all parties. No costs of any other proceedings can be, by the law of the court, allowed. I have thus, I think, shewn that the opinion of the Master of the Rolls, that in no case (save on special grounds) shall a solicitor be appointed a receiver, is not a well-founded opinion; and I am now to state that it is opposed to the opinion of the Court of Exchequer, and of the Chief Remembrancer—to the opinion of the four masters of the Court of Chancery—and, above all, to the opinion of the Lord Chancellor, the head of the court, whose opinion has been expressed by a deliberate decision upon the subject. The law of the Court of Chancery in this respect has never been doubted. Sir William M'Mahon, a very experienced and painstaking judge (as stated by the Master of the Rolls himself in his judgment) decided the point—Mr. Smith, in his book on receivers, lays it down as the law of the court—all the Masters of the Court of Chancery have acted upon it, uniformly, as long as any living man can remember. Sir Edward Sugden's general orders, in excluding solicitors' clerks only, virtually established that solicitors are eligible. The general orders of the Court of Exchequer, in excluding solicitors' clerks and solicitors concerned in the cause, virtually established that solicitors generally are eligible, and the four Barons of the Exchequer and the Chief Remembrancer have given this construction to their rule, and act upon it. The Master of the Rolls is right in saying, that Sir Edward Sugden, at one time, entertained the opinion that it would be better not to appoint a solicitor or attorney receiver. Whether he still entertains that opinion I have not any means of knowing. But this I do know, that whatever his individual opinion was when he was Lord Chancellor of Ireland, he acted not according to that opinion, but according to the law and practice of the court. That he did so is established, not only by the general order I have adverted to, but in the case of Pepper v. Foster, in which case I appointed Mr. M'Creight, attorney-at-law (so describing him) receiver. Sir Edward Sugden who perused my report, communicated with me upon this very subject, and having heard my reasons, and been assured of the law and practice of the court, he deliberately confirmed my report, and Mr. M'Creight is still acting as receiver. Will the Master of the Rolls remove him, and make the solicitor who nominated him pay costs? I trow he will not. In this state of the law and practice about two years since, there came to be discussed, in the Rolls Court, the case of Reynolds v. Reynolds. In that case, the Master of the Rolls expressed his opinion as strongly as he has done in the case of Molony v. Nugent. The Masters did not, as suggested by the Master of the Rolls, disregard his opinion; but having considered it, the Masters arrived at the conclusion that it was not a sound opinion, or one which could be acted upon consistently with the law of the court, or the rights of the suitors, or the interests of the public, and they declined to act upon it. In this state of things, the case of Layton v. Stevenson, about a year since, came before me upon an order of reference for the appointment of a receiver. It was a case of great magnitude in point of property, and there were proposed two candidates for the receivership—one a solicitor, Mr. Bruce, of Belfast; the other gentleman not a solicitor. Able counsel were heard by me on both sides. The case of Reynolds v. Reynolds was relied upon as establishing the Master of the Roll's opinion; and it was fairly stated that, if I should appoint Mr. Bruce, there would be an appeal from my decision. I did, notwithstanding, appoint Mr. Bruce; and that there might be no mistake as to my intentions, I styled him in my report, "Attorney at-Law;" and requested of the able counsel who attended before me, to state in court-ous, but decided terms, to the Master of the Rolls in open court (which was done), that I could not follow his opinion, as declared in the case of Reynolds v. Reynolds, but must continue to appoint solicitors receivers in all cases where I considered them, under the circumstances of the estate, the best men. The appeal came on to be heard in the Rolls Court. The discussion of it occupied almost an entire day. The Master of the Rolls, yielding to the force and power of the law, surrendered his opinion, and confirmed my report. There was an appeal to the Lord Chancellor; he confirmed my report so far forth as the principle of appointing solicitors receivers was involved, and though the report was sent back to me for the moment, that I might reconsider a question as to the association with Mr. Bruce of other persons as advisers in reference to a certain question touching the machinery of a mill, yet on the return of my second report, Mr. Bruce, solicitor, was confirmed in his office as receiver, and holds it still. Will the Master of the Rolls remove him, and make the solicitor who nominated him pay costs? I trow he will not. This case, in the view of the profession, established the law of the court, if it had ever been doubted. In point of fact, it did—not by mere opinion, but by the concurrent decisions of the Master in the cause, the Master of the Rolls, and the Lord Chancellor, in a very contested case, devoid of any peculiar circumstances—establish that a solicitor, if otherwise eligible, and where there were rival candidates, is not ineligible because he is a solicitor. I do not understand how it is that the Master of the Rolls can free his judgment from the force of this decision, to which he was a party, affirming and following as it does the settled law of the court. He may make orders, setting aside the appointment by the Masters of such receivers (which appointments they must continue to make); but I must say that it appears to me perfectly clear, unless the law of the land shall be altered, that all such orders must be reversed. I conclude my observations by reading what Master Henn has put into my hands, in writing, that what he publicly stated two or three days since in his court may not be misunderstood. He has desired that I should read it publicly. Whatever comes from that learned functionary and most just judge, has ever been received by his brother Masters as it has been with the public, with that attention, deference and respect which his learning, his experience, his sense of justice, his caution in dealing with the rights of others, and his strict adherence to the law and practice of the court, so justly entitle him to. His words are these:—

"If the head of our court were to pronounce a decision affirming the principle, that in no case ought a solicitor to be a receiver, I would hold myself bound by the authority, and would follow it strictly; or if a general order of the court were pronounced to the same effect, I would strictly obey it; but, in the absence of a direct authority by the head of the court, or of any general order of the court prohibiting such an appointment, I do consider that in every case in which, by the law of the court, the selection of a receiver person to be a receiver is committed to my discretion, I am not only entitled, but bound to exercise that discretion to the best of my own judgment, without reference to the opinion of any individual, having it in the judge of the appellate jurisdiction to deal with it according to his duty, if of his judgment, and that I would be guilty of a dereliction of my duty, if, in such a case, I were to yield up my opinion in deference to that of any other person, unless I knew the opinion of that other person to be final and conclusive. Holding that to be my opinion, be it right or wrong, the solicitor is entitled to, and I would not corruptly and dishonestly if I did not give him the benefit of it."

COURT OF CHANCERY.

HUTCHINS v. O'SULLIVAN.—February 3rd,
May 5th, 26th, and July 22nd.

Statute of Limitations—Liberty to prove.

A judgment creditor revived against the heir, but not against the executor of the consor. After an allocation order in a suit for the administration of the consor's estate, the judgment creditor obtained leave to come in and prove, by a motion, on notice to all parties. The fund in court was produced from the sale of personalty of the testator. Held that the Master was precluded from going into the question whether the judgment was barred as against the executor, and that the proper time for raising the question of the statute is on the application for leave to come in and prove.

The bill in this cause had been filed for an account of the real and personal estate of Morty O'Sullivan, the elder, deceased. A decree to account was obtained in 1834. The master made his report, and a final decree for a sale was made the 26th Jan., 1836. Under this decree, certain chattels real were sold, from which the fund in court was produced. By an order of the 4th day of December, 1845, it was referred to the Master to allocate this fund. In Michaelmas term 1810, Daniel Callaghan, the elder, obtained two judgments each for the sum of £533 8s. 4d., Irish, against Morty O'Sullivan, the elder. On the 15th of October, 1844, two writs of sci. fa. were issued on these judgments by Daniel Callaghan, the executor of Daniel Callaghan, against John O'Sullivan, the heir at law, and against the terre tenants of Morty O'Sullivan, the elder, on which after defence taken, revivors were obtained, but no sci. fa. was issued, nor revivor obtained against Morty O'Sullivan's executor. Under O'Sullivan's will, John O'Sullivan was tenant for life of Morty O'Sullivan's personal property. By a motion on notice to all parties in the cause, including the executor of Morty O'Sullivan, the elder, Daniel Callaghan obtained an order of the 5th March, 1846, "That he be at liberty (at his own expense) to go before the Master in the cause, and file a charge on foot of the two judgments, and at his own expense, obtain a report as to whether there be any, and what sum due on foot of the said judgments; and if the Master shall find that there is any sum due on foot of the judgments, then, that the Master, in proceeding under the said order of the 4th December, 1845, do have regard thereto, and report the priority of such demands when proved, and include the same in the allocation report, to be made under the said order."

Daniel Callaghan duly filed his charge under this order, to which John O'Sullivan filed his discharge, insisting that the judgments were barred against the personal representative, by the statute of limitations; and that, therefore, they could not be proved against the fund in court, which was entirely the produce of personalty.

The Master, by his report under the order of 1846, filed the 19th of June, 1847, found that there was due on foot of the said judgments, for principal and interest, the sum of £984 15s. 5d., sterling, being the full amount of the penalty. This report was subsequently, by a motion at the Rolls, varied by reducing the amount reported due; a portion of the interest being held to be barred by the statute.

By the allocation report of June, 1848, the Master, amongst other things found, "Having regard to the said order of the 5th day of March, 1846, I find that there is due to the said Daniel Callaghan, on foot of the said two judgments, in the said last mentioned order referred to, for principal, interest, and costs, the sum of £835 11s. 0½d., sterling, but that the said sum so due to the said Daniel Callaghan, is not payable out of the funds now to be allocated, inasmuch as the said funds are the produce of the personal estate of Morty O'Sullivan, and the said judgment was never revived against the personal representative of the said Morty O'Sullivan." Daniel Callaghan moved to vary this report, contending that under the order of 1846, the Master was bound to find the sum reported due a charge upon the fund. Upon Daniel Callaghan's objection the Master of the Rolls, on the 23rd of December, 1848, made the following order:—"It appearing to the court upon the said Daniel Callaghan's motion that by the report of the 19th of June, 1847, the Master thereby reported that there was due on foot of the judgments vested in the said D. Callaghan the sum of £984 15s. 5d., and for costs, the farther sum in the said report mentioned; and it appearing on the face of the said report that a summons was served on Ellen O'Sullivan, the personal representative of Morty O'Sullivan, the elder, the consor of the said judgments who did not appear or contest the rights of the said D. Callaghan; and it further appearing that by the discharge of J. O'Sullivan, the heir at law of the said M. O'Sullivan, it was insisted that the said judgments were barred as against the personal estate of the said M. O'Sullivan by the statute of limitations; and it appearing further that two objections were taken to the said report of the 19th of June, 1847, one of which was allowed, but which in no way affected the said question, as to whether the said judgments were barred by the statute of limitations as against the personal estate of Morty O'Sullivan, the elder, deceased, the consor of the said judgments. And whereas the Master, by his report of the 30th of June, 1848, has found that there was due to the said Daniel Callaghan on foot of the said two judgments the sum of £835 11s. 0½d., but that the said sum was not payable out of the funds then to be allocated by the said Master, inasmuch as the said funds are all the produce of the personal estate of Morty O'Sullivan, and the said judgment was never revived against his personal representative. And whereas counsel for the said Daniel Callaghan in support of the objections now before the court to that finding insists that the Master is concluded by his former report of the 19th of June, 1847, made after a summons was served on the personal representative of the said M. O'Sullivan, the elder, and that although no evidence was laid before the Master under the order of reference upon which the report of the 19th of June, 1847, was made, or under the order upon which the present report of the 30th day of June, 1848, was made to take the case out of the statute of limitations; as to the said personal estate of the said Morty O'Sullivan, the elder, the Master could not consider such question being so concluded by his former report of the 19th of June, 1847; and it further appearing to the court, after communication with the said Master, that he did not intend to decide by the said last-mentioned report any question that the personal estate was liable to the said two judgments, no evidence having been laid before him to take the case out of the statute of limitations as to the above personal estate. It is ordered by the Right Honourable the Master of the Rolls that the Master in this cause be and he is hereby at liberty to re-consider his report of the 19th of June, 1847, and to amend the same, and to find, if he shall so think fit, as he has found by his last report of the 30th day of June, 1848, that the said two judgments are barred by the statute of limitations as to the said personal estate. And it is further ordered that the said Daniel Callaghan be and he is hereby at liberty, if he shall so think fit, to go into evidence, or prove any matter which took place within the last twenty years, prior to the said Daniel Callaghan filing his charge under the order of reference of the 5th of March, 1846, or any other matter which the said Daniel Callaghan shall be advised, to take the case out of the statute of limitations as to the said personal estate, such evidence to be concluded within such time as the said Master shall direct. And it is further ordered that the said Daniel Callaghan be and he is hereby at liberty to take such objection or objections to the said report of the 19th of June, 1847, after the Master shall have amended the same as he shall be advised." Daniel Callaghan now appealed from the Master of the Rolls' order, and moved to vary the Masters' allocation report.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case came before me on appeal from an order at the Rolls. Many objections were disposed of, but those which remain to be considered are those of Daniel Callaghan, who claims to be a judgment creditor of a person named Morty O'Sullivan. The bill was filed for relief on a specialty debt of O'Sullivan. The first decree is of the 7th May, 1834, which is the ordinary decree to account. Under that decree a report was made, on which the final decree was founded. The report was of the 25th of January, 1836, by which it appeared that the property consisted of a chattel real, and of some freehold property, and that the only creditor who had come in and proved was the plaintiff himself. Under that decree this chattel real was sold, and the proceeds being paid into court, an order was made to allocate the funds produced by the sale of the chattel. In that state of the case Callaghan, applied to the court by notice of the 28th February, 1846. He was a judgment creditor of M. O'Sullivan, by two judgments of Michaelmas Term, 1810, but he did not come in under the decree, and was precluded from the benefit of the proceedings in the cause. He then applied to the court in the ordinary way for liberty to go in and prove his demand on foot of his judgment. As I have said, his judgment was one of the year 1810, but it had been revived before the commencement of the cause. In Michaelmas, 1844, it was again revived against the heir, and the tenants of Mortimer O'Sullivan. A plea of the statute of limitations was put in, and a verdict was obtained by the plaintiff, on the ground of payment made within twenty years. On that the application was made to the court, as I have mentioned, on notice to all parties in the cause. The heir-at-law was then tenant for life of the chattel interest, and the fund was wholly produced by the sale of it. Thus, in truth, the application was made against the chattel interest, on notice to the personal representative, and the person having the beneficial interest in the lands. That came before the court, and on the 5th March, 1846, an order was made in these words. [His Lordship read the order.] On that the parties went into the office, where the usual proceedings took place; but it being the practice, on an order of this kind, to make a separate report of the sum due, the Master accordingly made his report of the amount due on foot of O'Sullivan's judgments. [His Lordship here read the report of the 19th of June, 1847.] So far the Master satisfied the order in finding the sum due. It appears that about that time John O'Sullivan died, and Mortimer, who succeeded to his claim, was an infant. He took objections to the report as to the amount of the sum found due. One was, that under the circumstances, only six years interest should have been allowed; thus he admitted that the principal sum was due. That came on to be heard, and was allowed, and in consequence the matter stood thus on the order and Master's report:—By the order, the Master was directed to find whether any, and what sum, was due to Callaghan; and by the report, as varied, he found that £839 11s. 0½d. was due. It seems that the Master adopted the opinion, that notwithstanding the first order, and the allocation order, he was at liberty to enter into the question, whether, as the revivor was not against the personal representative, he was to give him any of this fund produced from the personalty of M. O'Sullivan, and accordingly refused to allocate any portion of it to Callaghan. As I infer, from what has been stated, Callaghan insisted at the Rolls that the order of 1845, and the report of June, 1847, were conclusive, and that nothing more was to be done than to allocate the money. It appears that the Master of the Rolls took that view, and thought that while the allocation order, and the report of the sum stood, the Master's report could not be varied from them. The order made at the Rolls on Callaghan's motion, was as follows. [His Lordship here read the order appealed from.] There is much difficulty in that course. It is unusual for the court on motion to send back a report which has been accepted to and confirmed, in order to raise a question of the statute of limitations. In that state it comes before the court. It struck me that there was much question whether the order allowing Callaghan to prove did not stand in the way of bearing any such objection. At the time when that order was made, all parties were before the court. There could be no mistake as to the fund from which it was intended to raise the amount, and that it was the fund of personality which alone was in court to be distributed. It was open to the personal representative to have contested the debt then, and it would have been a matter of course for the court to have disposed of the question whether this was a debt, when that objection could be taken, if that question had been then raised by her. At the time that order was made, Martin v. McCausland had been decided, and there was not then the strong opinion against that case which has since arisen; indeed that case has never been expressly overruled, and though much doubt has been thrown on it, it may happen that on debate in a court of law on that question, it may be decided that a personal representative is bound by a revivor against the heir at law. However that may be, the words of the statute are very general, and this proceeding on the judgment was just as much a proceeding as if there had been no suit pending. I apprehend, therefore, that this question should then have been raised, and that it will be found, that the executrix, having allowed it to go to the office she will be bound. In Berrington v. Evans (1 Y. & C. Ex. C. 434), the Chief Baron says, "The words of the statute are, 'that after a certain day no action, suit, or other proceeding shall be brought to recover any sum of money secured by any mortgage, judgment, either at law, or in Equity, but within twenty years after the right shall have accrued.' Now I am not prepared to say whether—if I could be satisfied that the bill was filed with Kemp's consent, and he meditated like Berrington to prosecute his claim under that bill—whether, under those circumstances, I should arrive at a different conclusion. Even then, I apprehend he would have to give a satisfactory reason for remaining so long without calling in the aid of this court in his own person. But supposing that he never knew of the filing of the bill, or of the progress of the suit, and that twenty-five years after the right had accrued, upon a new discovery of the suit having been instituted, and of funds being in court, he petitions to be allowed to go before the Master and to make his claim, can I say that his petition is not a proceeding in Equity within the statute." Lower down he says, "Considering, therefore, that this is a proceeding in Equity to recover money upon a judgment, upon which twenty years have run, and that it comes within none of the exceptions of the statute, I am of opinion that the claim is barred." Thus he treats this as proceeding within the act. In Lord St. John v. Boughton, (9 Sim. 219), the Vice-Chancellor says, "I am of opinion, therefore, that the right of the petitioners to the same due on these bonds has been acknowledged by a writing signed by the agent of the person by whom the same are payable, and that the petitioners ought to be at liberty to go in before the Master and prove their debt." That was also a case decided on petition, (equivalent to a motion here,) and treating it as a proceeding. In O'Kelly v. Bod- kin, (2 I. E. R. 361,) the question was not directly before the court; the question of interest had been saved by the report, and when Berrington v. Evans was cited, and it was stated that the court there did not determine what would be the effect of the creditor proving his demand under the decree, Baron Pennefather says, "They did so in fact; the question there was, whether the creditor was barred or not. The only thing relied on to take the case out of the operation of the statute was the pendency of the suit; but the court determined, that inasmuch as the creditor stated that he was not aware of the institution of the suit until after the final decree was pronounced, he could not in any wise consider that suit as his own, and being of that opinion, the court properly refused to go before the officer and prove his demand." Thus, as that decree was a difficulty in the way of the Master, in the present case there is the further difficulty of disturbing the intermediate report. I have not found any direct authority to say whether or not the statute of limitations can be relied on in the office under such circumstances. My present impression is, that this matter is not open on such an inquiry, and that as long as the original order to come in and prove exists, such a defence is not open to the party. If the parties wish to discuss the case again on the effect of the original order, they are at liberty to do so; but my present impression is, that it having been made in the presence of all parties, it is as it was said in Berrington v. Evans, &c., a "proceeding," and that it is no more open to parties to raise that question in the office, than it would be after a decree to account on a bill filed regularly, to set up the statute of limitations in the office, as a bar to the plaintiff's debt.

According to the permission of the Lord Chancellor, a motion was brought in on the 26th May 1849, to insist that the statute of limitations was open to the debts in the office, notwithstanding the order of the 5th March 1846, or otherwise to vary that order by declaring that it was to be without prejudice to any question as to the funds properly applicable to the payment of the sum, if any, to be found due on the foot of the said judgments.

Mr. Rogers and Mr. Lawson for the motion.

Mr. Christian, Q. C., and Mr. Dousy, Q. C., contra, for Callaghan.

July 22.—LORD CHANCELLOR.—I do not think the order of March 1846 can be varied. On the other point, I am of the same opinion I before intimated. It is not necessary for me to go into the detail of the cases; on reconsidering them, I still think that the "proceeding" within the statute is taken by the application to the court to become a party to the suit. It appears from O'Kelly v. Bodkin, that the court always, on the first application, decides whether the party is at liberty to prove, notwithstanding the statute of limitations; and that the same rule must apply to orders of this kind, which is applied to the statute of limitations, in all such cases, that it must be raised as soon as possible. In suits, that rule has been long established; so far back even as the time of Lord Hardwick, in Prince v. Haylin, (1 Atk. 498). And on the same principle, it was held in a very late case, Rock v. Callin, (6 Har. 531). "That, notwithstanding the principal question in the suit be the right of the plaintiffs to two annuities, one of which has been paid; the defendant, on a decree being made for the arrears of the unpaid annuity, cannot set up the statute of limitations as limiting the period of the account, if the benefit of the statute be not claimed on the pleadings. The Vice-Chancellor says that it would be obviously improper to permit a defendant, at the hearing of a cause, to insist upon the statute of limitations, if he has not set up that defence upon the pleadings. If the statute be pleaded, the plaintiff may be able to show cause, taking the case out of the statute, which he cannot be expected to do, if the objection be not taken. Is the court in such a case to refer it to the Master, to inquire whether the statute ought to be allowed as a bar to the claim, before the decree is made?"

The Master of the Rolls order was varied, and the report went back on Callaghan's objections.

O'Sullivan's motion was refused, but without costs.

Ch. Motion Book 4, pp. 244, 254, 290.

ROLLS COURT.

O'KEEFE v. LANIGAN.—May 11, 12.

Practice—Amendment after issue joined and witnesses examined, refused.

After issue joined and witnesses examined by the defendant, the plaintiff will not be permitted to amend the bill by introducing new matter, which will alter the frame of the suit, and to which an answer is required.

On the 2nd of March a motion had been made in this cause, for the production of a mortgage for the purpose of inspecting an alleged indorsement. A report of this application will be found ante p. 210, where the nature of the suit is fully stated. That motion was refused without prejudice to the plaintiff amending the bill, by putting in issue this alleged endorsement, and without prejudice to the plaintiff applying to the court when the defendant should have put in an answer to the bill when amended. A commission for the examination of witnesses was taken out on behalf of the plaintiff, and on the 2nd of April notice was served of speeding same on the 24th; on the 11th notice was served of witnesses names to be examined on the part of the plaintiff; on the 20th of April, upon the discovery of new evidence, notice was served by the plaintiff, that he would not proceed with the examination, and on the 24th of April, notice was served by the defendant, with the names of three witnesses to be examined before one of the examiners in chief in Dublin, and cross interrogatories were subsequently lodged by the plaintiff. On the 30th of April, the rule for publication was entered. From the affidavit of the plaintiff it appeared that notice had been served of the names of five witnesses to be examined on the part of the defendant, and the commission had not been executed; also that neither the plaintiff or his solicitor had been informed of the contents of any of the depositions taken in the cause, and that from the discovery of new evidence, and the necessity of consulting counsel, plaintiff had been unable to apply sooner to the court. The bill had been amended once since answer, by putting in issue a letter to which an answer had been required. The plaintiff's affidavit also stated, that some of the matters sought to be introduced by amendment, only came to the knowledge of the plaintiff or his solicitor, subsequently to the time of serving notice of the witnesses names.

This was an application on the part of the plaintiff, that the defendant might be restrained from further proceeding on the rule of the 30th of April, to pass publication in the cause, and that the plaintiff be at liberty to withdraw the replication without prejudice to the commission issued for the examination of witnesses, and to amend the bill by putting in issue a deed of mortgage of the 1st of March, 1834, a letter of the 8th of April, 1843, a statement of one of the defendants respecting the manner in which C. O'Keefe, jun. disposed of his property, a diary alleged by the defendant to have been kept by the said C. O'Keefe, and a proposition made by him respecting the taking of a farm.

Mr. Greene, Q.C., and Mr. Lowry for the plaintiff.—In Mitford E. Pl. 363, last Ed., it is laid down that a plaintiff may obtain leave to amend his bill after replication, and leave will be granted to the plaintiff to withdraw the replication, and amend the bill. In O'Grady v. Barry, (1 I.E.R. 11,) an amendment was allowed six weeks after the last answer. An order to amend may be obtained at any time before publication. 1 Danl. C. P. 396. In the case of Smith v. Gould, (7 I.E.R. 271,) a second amendment after answer was allowed, although the last answer was filed twelve months previous.

Mr. W. Smith and Mr. Maagher contra.—In this case it does not appear that any reasonable diligence has been used by the plaintiff, and it should appear by the affidavit in support of the motion, that all the matters sought to be introduced by these amendments became lately known to the plaintiff, and he should satisfy the court that this motion could not have been sooner brought forward. [Counsel also referred to Calvert v. Ganly, (1 Ph. 518); Davis v. Davis, 10 I. E. R.; Roach v. Johnstone, (3 Har. 638; 1 Ph. 78.)]

May 12th.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case, the replication was filed in February, and on the 2nd of April. Notice was served by the plaintiff, of speeding a commission to examine witnesses, on the 24th. A day or two previous to this, a notice was served by the plaintiff, stating his intention of applying for liberty to amend the bill. The defendant was permitted to examine witnesses, and cross-interrogatories were lodged by the plaintiff, although it appears that he did not examine. Early in April, three witnesses were examined on the part of the defendant, and no application has been made to suppress these depositions for irregularity; and at this stage of the proceedings, after three witnesses on the part of the defendant have been examined, I am called on to allow an amendment, not by adding parties or amending the prayer of the bill, but amendments of a most extensive character, and calculated to alter the entire frame of the suit. There may be cases in which this Court will exercise its jurisdiction at the hearing of the cause, and, under peculiar circumstances, will allow it to stand over, for the purpose of amendment; and it may be contended, that if an amendment may be made when the cause is at hearing, by adding parties, and possibly by altering the frame of the bill, an amendment may also be made at this stage of the proceedings. It is not necessary for me to offer my opinion on that point, but what I am called on to say is, whether I will allow amendments which will alter the entire frame of the suit, and to which an answer is required, and in respect of which a discovery is sought. What will be the state of the record, if the bill becomes demurrable by this amendment? for a bill may become demurrable by amendment. The ground of the demurrer may for the first time arise out of the new matter introduced, and may be taken advantage of by plea or demurrer. In this case the replication has been filed, and three witnesses examined, by the defendant. This replication must now be withdrawn, and what is to become of the evidence of the three witnesses who have been examined? It will be necessary to have a new replication, new examination, and there may be one case made by the original bill, and another by the amended bill. It will be necessary to have a new record; no case has been cited to me, in which a similar application has been granted. In the case of Milligan v. Mitchell, (1 M. & Cr. 442,) liberty was given to amend the bill, by shewing the plaintiffs were unable to bring all proper parties before the Court, and Lord Cottenham said, "Under that order, made at the hearing of a cause in which two persons were plaintiffs, and in which depositions had been taken, the bill is amended by adding certain other plaintiffs, and inserting allegations and charges of no inconsiderable length, relating to matters connected with those new plaintiffs. The cause is again brought to a hearing, with the additional plaintiffs on the record, such plaintiffs having adduced no evidence, and making no case at the hearing; and the question is, whether the bill is to be dismissed generally, or whether those plaintiffs shall be at liberty to attach themselves to the former cause, and to avail themselves of the evidence in that cause, under the pretext afforded by an order authorizing the original plaintiffs to amend the bill by adding parties or shewing why all proper parties could not be brought before the Court. The course which has been taken was perfectly unjustifiable; no authority has been cited in support of it, and on principle it cannot be supported. The plaintiffs having taken the original record from the Court, and introduced a totally new record, how could these witnesses, supposing them to have sworn falsely, and their depositions to be read, be indicted for perjury? They are depositions in a suit of which the record no longer exists." Also the observations of Vice-Chancellor Sir J. Leech, in the case of Wright v. Howard, (6 Mad. 105,) are applicable to this case, and the affidavit should shew that the plaintiff could not with all due diligence bring forward this application at an earlier period. — Refuse this motion, with costs, to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant when taxed," &c.

OWEN JAMES KELLY, AND SARAH HIS WIFE,
AND OTHERS, Petitioners.—May 12.

Practice—Solicitor refusing to attend taxation of costs.

This court will make an order compelling a solicitor to attend and tax his costs, and if the taxing-master has been unable to proceed, on account of his non-attendance, he will have to pay the costs of the motion.

Mr. Darley moved, on behalf of Patrick Dolan, and Marianne Dolan, his wife, that Alexander J. Humphrey might forthwith tax and mark his costs, acting as solicitor in the several matters, in the petition mentioned, and lodged by him in the Master's office, on the 25th day of July, 1845, and that the amount due on foot thereof might be ascertained—the petitioners offering to pay the balance which might be found due upon such taxation. In consequence of Mr. Humphrey's refusal to attend, the Master has been unable to tax the costs.

June 2.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case I felt some difficulty, and referred it to the taxing master, who stated that such a case had never come before him, as a solicitor refusing to attend to tax his costs. I was not sure whether, under the circumstances, the Master would not be justified in striking out all the costs; however, upon consulting Master Henn, he informed me that the practice has been for the court to make an order to compel the solicitor to attend. I will make such an order, and if he disobeys, it will be at his peril.

"Let the said Alexander J. Humphrey proceed within ten days, or such further time as the taxing master shall allow for that purpose, to have the costs claimed by him, and in the petition mentioned, taxed, &c., and in the event of the said Alexander J. Humphrey not having his costs taxed within said period, or such further period as the taxing master shall allow for that purpose, let the petitioners be at liberty to make such application against the said A. J. Humphrey, as they may be advised, although the last day for serving notice on petitions may have elapsed; and it is further ordered, that the said A. J. Humphrey do furnish, on oath, to the solicitor for the petitioners, a list of all credits to which the petitioners are entitled against said costs—the petitioners undertaking to pay the amount of any which shall appear to be due on such taxation, after all just credits; and it is further ordered that the said taxing master, on taxing and certifying said costs, do take an account of all such credits, and strike a balance, and it appearing from the certificate of Master O'Dwyer, that he was unable to tax or certify the costs of Mr. A. J. Humphrey, under the General Order of the court, in consequence of his continued non-attendance before the said taxing master, let the said Mr. A. J. Humphrey pay to the petitioners the costs of the said petition, and of this application, and refer it to the taxing master to tax same."

R. P. H. B. Lib. 30, fo. 2.

M'DERMOTT v. O'CONNELL.—May, 14th.

Practice—Rule for publication entered too soon, set aside for irregularity.

Replication filed the 1st of March, amended the 5th, rule for publication entered the 1st of May, set aside for irregularity, and an application that this rule might be permitted to stand, notwithstanding the irregularity, was refused.

The replication in this cause was filed on the 28th of February, but was not served until the 1st of March; on the 5th of March the replication was amended by adding several defendants, pursuant to an order of the 2nd of March previous; but no copy of this order or of the amended replication was served on the defendant's solicitor. On the 1st of May the peremptory rule for publication was entered and served. This was an application on the part of the defendants, M. A. Mahony, K. Mahony, and J. Barry, that this rule for publication should be set aside.

Mr. Greene, Q. C. for the motion.—By the 93rd General Order it is provided, that any defendant, after the expiration of two months from the replication filed, and the plaintiff, after the expiration of two months from the replication served, shall be at liberty to enter and serve the peremptory rule for publication; in this case the two months would not expire until the 5th of May, as the replication was amended on the 5th of March. The plaintiffs are clearly irregular, and the rule for publication was entered too soon, and should be set aside.

Mr. Serjeant O'Brien, contra, moved a cross notice, that in case the Court should be of opinion that the rule for publication was entered and served irregularly, and before the proper time, that said rule and the proceedings consequent thereon might be permitted to stand, notwithstanding such irregularity. This rule is not peremptory in its terms. The case of Attorney-general v. Ball, (9 Ir. E. R. 463,) shews that the rules may be relaxed; under the 98th General Order ten clear days notice is to be given of the examination of witnesses before a commissioner examiner; in that case only nine days notice was given, and the Court refused to suppress the depositions; there is a discretion which may be exercised by the Court.

Mr. Berkley, in reply.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The plaintiff has been altogether irregular. In general a pleading is considered as filed the day upon which notice is served, and it would be strange to allow a replication to be amended and publication to pass the next day. I do not think this cross notice can be sustained.

"Let said order, dated the 1st of May, 1849, to pass publication in this cause, be set aside, and no rule on the cross notice, and let plaintiff pay said defendants, M. A. Mahony, K. Mahony, and J. Barry, £7 for the costs of this motion."

BLAKE v. COMINS.—May 26th.

Practice—Payment of money into Court—Admission in answer of an agent.

Bill filed against an agent for an account; admission in the answer of a sum due, ordered on motion to be paid into Court.

The bill in this case was filed by a landlord against his agent for an account; by the answer it was admitted that there was a sum of £253 in the hands of the defendant.

Mr. P. Blake now moved that the defendant might invest in government stock the sum of £253 19s. 10d., being the amount admitted by his answer to be in his hands, and might transfer same to the credit of the cause. In the case of Gordon v. Rothley (8 Ves. Jun. 572), a defendant was ordered on motion to pay into court a balance maintained by a report. In Wood v. Downes (1 Ves. & B. 49) a similar order was made, and the case of Fairley v. Freeman was there cited, in which a sum admitted by an answer to be in a defendant's hands, was ordered on motion to be paid into court.

Mr. F. Maagher contra.—It is only in the case of trustees or personal representatives that an order to bring money into court is made on interlocutory application (2 Dan. C. P. 1636), and has never been done in the case of an agent; besides, in this case, the plaintiff gave an order to a person named O'Flaherty, who had been the former agent to receive this money, and we may be compelled to pay him.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—If you pay Mr. O'Flaherty in pursuance of this order, I will not compel you to bring the money into court; but if not, I order the money to be lodged in court, and not to be paid out without notice to Mr. O'Flaherty.

"Be it so, with liberty to the said defendant to apply to the court that said sum may be transferred to Mr. O'Flaherty, and the costs of this motion be costs in the cause."

DOOLEY v. HARDING.—May, 26th.

Where a defendant in a cause has been found a lunatic by commission, this Court will not, on the application of the plaintiff, appoint a guardian ad litem, to file an answer for the lunatic.

Mr. Hughes, Q. C., on behalf of the plaintiff, moved that one of the clerks in court might be appointed a guardian ad litem, to file an answer for the defendant to the bill in this cause; an appearance had been entered for the defendant by his solicitor, but by an inquisition subsequently held under a commission of Lunacy, the defendant was found a lunatic. [Counsel referred to Crawford v. Kenaghan, (1 Dr. & Wal. 195.)]

Mr. B. Murphy, contra, contended that the action was irregular and unnecessary, the defendant having been found a lunatic by the commission.

Mr. Hobart, in reply, referred to Shelford on Lunacy, 561.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—This application is irregular, and although orders, similar to that sought, have sometimes been made; it is only in cases where the defendant has not been found a person of unsound mind by a commission of lunacy.

"It appearing that a committee has been appointed in the matter of Harding, a lunatic, so rule, &c."

WILLIAMS v. WALKER—July 18.

Judgment creditor—Supplemental bill—Pleading.

Where a bill was filed subsequent to March, 1843, and by a supplemental bill judgment creditors were made notice parties, a decree was made giving them liberty to surcharge and falsify the account taken in the original cause, and in default, that they should be bound by the proceedings.

This cause was set down to be heard pro confesso against the inheritor, who had been brought before the court by supplemental bill. Some judgment creditors of the inheritor, who had not been made parties in the original cause, were made notice parties to the supplemental suit, and the inheritor had been made an answering party. The bill was filed, and a decree pronounced in the original cause, subsequent to the general orders of 1843, the cause was now set down to be heard pro confesso against the inheritor, and the bill prayed that the judgment creditors who had been made notice parties, should be bound by the proceedings and decree in the original cause, and that they should be at liberty to surcharge and falsify the accounts in the original cause and in the event of their neglecting so to do, within such time as the Master should appoint for that purpose, that they should be bound by these accounts.

Mr. Lyons for the plaintiff.—In the case of Rutledge v. Rutledge (8 J. & Lat. 307, S. C. 8 I.E.R. 84), after the new rules of March 1843, a supplemental bill was filed against judgment creditors of the inheritor to have the benefit of a decree for a sale made in 1847, and it was held that these creditors were properly made notice parties, and a decree was made that they should have liberty within a limited time, to surcharge and falsify the original accounts. Also, in McDowell v. Skerrett, reported in the note to Rutledge v. Rutledge, a similar decree was made. These cases establish that under the old practice, judgment creditors not before the court when a decree was pronounced may be made notice parties to a supplemental bill. Since the late general orders these cases are stronger than the present, for according to the old practice, judgment creditors should be made answering parties, and the original bill, in the present case, was filed since the new rules, by which it is only necessary to have made judgment creditors notice parties in the original cause.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I will make the order in this case in the same form as that in Rutledge v. Rutledge.

"Let the plaintiff's bill in this cause be taken pro confesso against the said defendant, Thomas Walker, for want of answer; and let the said J. Coote, &c. be at liberty to surcharge and falsify the accounts under the decree to account in the original cause, wherein R. C. Williams was plaintiff, and the said Thomas Walker and several others were defendants, bearing date the 30th day of May, 1845, provided the said defendants shall do so within such period as William Brooke, Esq., the Master in said original cause, shall appoint; and in case the said defendants shall not so surcharge or falsify said accounts within the period to be so limited by the said Master, then let the said plaintiffs have as against the said defendants the benefit of said decree pronounced in the original cause, on the 31st of January, 1848, and accordingly let the same be carried into execution against the said defendants." R. H. B. 20, fo. 824.

COLE v. BATCOCK—May, 30.

Pleading—Bill of Exchange—Gambling Consideration.

To a declaration upon two bills of exchange the defendant pleaded "That before and at the time when he first became and was the indorsee and holder and interested in the bill of exchange the plaintiff knew they were given for an illegal consideration." The plaintiff replied, "That he did not before or at the time when he first became and was the indorsee and interested in the said bills know they were given for an illegal consideration."

Held, on demurrer to the replication, that as the statement in the plea meant a single allegation that the plaintiff became indorsee and interested at the same moment, or, in other words, had then notice of the illegality, that the traverse was good.

The plea also alleged that the money was lost at a certain game called "Hazard," and that the plaintiff well knew that was the consideration for the bills. The replication alleged that the plaintiff did not know that the bills were given for the consideration in the plea mentioned.

Held also that it was a good traverse, the replication being in the same words, must be taken to be co-extensive with those of the plea.

Held, that the traverse did not throw the onus upon the defendant of proving a knowledge, in the plaintiff, of the illegality before and at the time of his becoming holder, as if he proved a notice of it before he became so, it would follow he had it at the time.

This was a writ of error from the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, (reported 11 Ir. L. Rep. 306). The action was assumpsit upon two bills of Exchange by the indorsee against the acceptor. The declaration contained two counts on the bills, and the money counts. The defendant pleaded non-assumpsit to the whole declaration, and to the counts upon the bills, "That before the accepting of the said bills of exchange in the said first and second counts mentioned, or either of them, by the defendant as therein mentioned, to wit, on the 21st day of June A.D. 1845, at Dublin, in the county of the city of Dublin aforesaid, the defendant did lose to one George Maugham, and the said George Maugham did win of the defendant, a certain sum of money, to wit, the sum of £500, by gaming and playing at a certain game called "hazard," and the said sum of £500 so lost by the said defendant as aforesaid, and so won by the said George Maugham as aforesaid, being and remaining unpaid and unsatisfied, heretofore, to wit, on the 21st day of June, 1845, to wit, at, &c., aforesaid, it was agreed between the said George Maugham and the defendant that the payment thereof should be secured by two bills of exchange to be accepted by the defendant; and the defendant avers that in pursuance of the said agreement, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, to wit, at, &c., the defendant, for securing the said payment of the said sum of £500 so won and lost as aforesaid, accepted the said two bills of exchange in the said first and second counts respectively mentioned, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided; and the defendant avers that the said two bills of exchange so accepted as aforesaid were and are the identical bills of exchange in the said first and second counts respectively mentioned, and the defendant further saith, that the plaintiff, before and at the time when he first became and was the indorsee and holder, and interested in the said two bills of exchange, or either of them, to wit, on the 21st day of June, A. D. 1845, to wit, at, &c., aforesaid, well knew that the same had been, and were, and that each of them had been, and was so made upon and for the said illegal consideration." To the plea, the plaintiff, protesting that there was no such illegal agreement as that stated in the plea, and that the said bills were not given upon an illegal consideration, replied, "that the said several bills of exchange in the said first and second counts respectively mentioned, were indorsed to the said plaintiff after the 31st day of August, A. D. 1845, and before the said bills respectively became due, to wit, on the day and year in the said declaration in that behalf mentioned, to wit, at, &c., aforesaid, for valuable consideration: that is to say, for and in consideration of the said plaintiff discounting the same and paying therefor to the said George Maugham, being then and there the holder thereof respectively, a large sum of money, to wit, the amount of the several sums of money in the several bills of exchange respectively mentioned, less by the interest thereon for the time which the said several bills respectively then had to run; and that he the said plaintiff did not before, or at the time when he first became and was the indorsee and interested in the said two bills of exchange, or in either of them, to wit, on the 21st day of June, A. D. 1845, to wit, at, &c., know that the same had been or were, or that either of them had been, or was, made upon or for the illegal consideration in the second plea of the said defendant alleged; and this he the said plaintiff prays may be inquired of by the country," &c.

BLACKBURNE, C. J.—This is an action of assumption, and the declaration contains two counts on separate bills of exchange, and the money counts. It is an action by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the acceptor. The defendant pleaded the general issue, and a special plea to both the counts on the bills of exchange. To this plea a replication was put in, which was demurred to. The court below gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff. The plea in substance alleges that there was no consideration for the sum of money in the bills of exchange mentioned, but that it was lost at the game of hazard, and "that the plaintiff before, and at the time when he first became and was the indorsee, and holder, and interested in the said two bills of exchange, &c., well knew that the same had been and were, and that each of them had been and was so made upon and for the said illegal consideration." The replication traverses that statement, "That the said plaintiff did not before or at the time when he first became and was the indorsee, and interested in the said two bills of exchange, or in either of them, to wit, &c., know that the same had been or were, or that either of them had been or was made upon or for the illegal consideration in the second plea alleged." This traverse, it was argued, was too large on various grounds. The first is, because the defendant by his plea says that the plaintiff had notice both when he became indorsee, and interested in the bills. It is, however, a clear answer to this to say, that on this record the plea says that the plaintiff became indorsee and interested at one and the same moment of time. If the indorsement to the plaintiff, and his becoming interested in the bill, could be distinct acts, they are not so pleaded; but as pleaded, the construction to be given to it is, that it contains a single averment, that at one and the same moment he had notice of the illegal consideration. This is the real meaning of the plea. The next objection is of the same kind, namely, that the replication is bad, because it avers that the plaintiff did not know that the defendant lost the money (i. e. for or "upon the consideration in the second plea alleged") at the game of hazard, and does not deny that it was lost at any other game. To this objection the answer is, that the words of the replication being the same as the plea, the construction must be the same. The traverse is of the very matter alleged in the plea, and the words are co-extensive. The next objection is that the traverse should be in the disjunctive—that the traverse is in such a form as would require from the defendant proof of notice before, "and" at the time of the indorsement, whereas notice, before "or" at the time would sustain the plea. This objection is untenable. If the defendant gave proof of notice before the plaintiff became indorsee, such proof will of necessity establish that he had notice at the time of his becoming indorsee; nor is the defendant inconvenienced in any defence he could have made. Independently of this, the traverse is right in form, simply negating the form of the plea. The last objection is, that the replication does not deny that the plaintiff had notice when he became the holder. This is in effect the same as the first objection, and is to receive the same reply. All the allegations are connected with the copulative "and," traversing the single averment in the plea, that the several acts were done at the same moment of time. We are therefore of opinion, that the judgment of the court below must be affirmed.—Judgment affirmed.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

KEAN v. STRONG.—Feb. 2, 3, and May 30.

Coram Blackburne, C. J., Doherty, C. J., Pigot, C. B., Pennefather, B., Torrens, J., Crampton, J., Perrin, J., Richards, B., Jackson, J., Moore, J. Abernethy, J. and Lefroy, B.

Covenant, construction of.—Evidence.—Bill of Exceptions.

Where in a lease there are covenants for renewal and quiet enjoyment (with intervening covenants), the first unqualified, the latter qualified, and the covenants are not inconsistent with each other, the general covenant is independent and uncontrolled by the qualified covenant, and was held to be rightly set forth in the declaration as an unqualified covenant.

Held that evidence of the value of a lease was admissible—though not strictly applicable to the issue raised—for the purpose of guiding the jury in their estimate—the question being wholly one of damages.—Richards, B. dissentiente.

Held that where the renewal, if granted, would be valueless, the grantor having no interest from which to renew, that the judge should have directed the jury to find for nominal damages.

*Held that exceptions to different expressions in the judge's charge seriatim, without stating clearly what the judge did tell the jury, or what the defendant requested him to tell them, was not a proper mode of framing a bill of exceptions; and, per Blackburne, C. J., that on this ground alone the exceptions should be overruled.

This was error from the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, on exceptions to the ruling of the Lord Chief Baron, on the trial at Armagh Summer Assizes, 1847. The action was in covenant by the assignee of lessee against the personal representatives of the lessor. The declaration contained four counts upon the same covenant. Pleas, non est factum to the lease of 1800, and also to the assignment of it in 1820, and plene administravit. There were other pleas which were not now before the court, being held bad upon demurrer—(reported 5 I. L. R. 540.) The second count (which alone was before the court) stated that John Maxwell, on the 1st day of November, in the year 1800, demised to Joseph Craig, his executors, administrators, and assigns, certain lands with the appurtenances, except as therein excepted, to hold with the appurtenances except as aforesaid, to the said Joseph Craig his executors, administrators, and assigns, from the said 1st day of November, 1800, for the term of twenty years, at a certain rent, "and the said John Maxwell did in and by the said last mentioned indenture for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, covenant, promise and agree to and with the said Joseph Craig, his executors, administrators, and assigns, that at the expiration of the demise then granted, he, the said John Maxwell, his executors, administrators, and assigns, would renew the then present lease, or any future lease which should be granted of the said last mentioned premises, by adding thereto such number of years as in that present demise, that is to say the term and space of twenty years, and so on at the end or expiration of every term, he the said John Maxwell, his executors, administrators, and assigns, should and would make out a new lease, or renew the then present or any future lease which should be granted of the said last mentioned premises, for the term and space of twenty years, and so on to be continued." The declaration then stated a covenant by the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to pay to the lessor, his executors, administrators, and assigns, a triennial fine of £1 2s. 9d. during that demise; the entry of the lessee; the assignment on the 17th April, 1820, by the lessee, of his whole interest to William Craig, in as beneficial a manner as he held it himself, and subject to all the covenants of the original lease of 1800; that William Craig, being so possessed of the said term, and of the said right of renewal, died in the month of April, 1820; that the plaintiff Jane Kean, before her marriage, took out administration, and became thereby possessed of the residue of the said term of twenty years; and her marriage with the plaintiff in October, 1820; the death of John Maxwell the lessee, on the 20th of January, 1820; and that the term of twenty years granted by the said John Maxwell, expired on the 1st of November, 1840. The regular payment of the triennial fines by Joseph and William Craig, and by said Jane before her marriage, and by her husband and her since her marriage to the said John Maxwell in his life-time, and to his executors since his death, and the demand of a renewal by the plaintiff, and the refusal of the defendants. In the lease, after some intervening covenants, there was a qualified covenant for quiet enjoyment as follows—"And the said John Maxwell does covenant, promise, and agree to and with the said Joseph Craig, his executors, administrators, and assigns, that he and they paying the hereby reserved rent and receiver's fees and duties, and performing the conditions hereinbefore mentioned and expressed shall and may quietly and peaceably hold, and occupy, and enjoy the hereby granted premises with their and every of their appurtenances, except as before excepted, without the let, hindrance, or molestation of him the said John Maxwell, or any other person deriving by, or from, or under him."

The plaintiff gave in evidence the lease of 1800, and the assignment in 1820; endorsed on the lease of 1800 was the following memorandum:—

"Received from the within-named Joseph Craig the sum of £950 sterling, as a fine for the within-mentioned lands of Manooney, given under my hand this first day of November, 1800.

(present.)

The following receipt was also given in evidence, subject to objection:—

"Received from Mr. Joseph Craig on account of a purchase of a part of Manooney farm, Nine hundred and thirteen pounds, fifteen shillings, sterling.
Dublin, Sep. 20, 1800.

By procuration from John Maxwell.
JOHN MAXWELL.
EDWD. ARMSTRONG.

£913 15 0

Now received, 36 5 0

£950 0 0—in full,
JOHN MAXWELL."

Dec. 22, 1800.

* The difference of opinion in the Court was rather on the result of the evidence, than on the legal propositions here stated.

Evidence of the payment of the rent and renewal fines to John Maxwell and his executors, under the lease of 1800 was also given. Mr. H. L. Prentice, a witness for the plaintiff, was asked what was the value of such a farm held under a College lease, taking into consideration the risk on the one side that the College might not renew, and the chance on the other side that they would? The question was objected to, but admitted by the Lord Chief Baron. There was no evidence of any demand of renewal, nor of any tender for execution by the plaintiff of any deed of renewal, all of which matters were subject of exception by the defendant. The defendant gave evidence that the lands in question were a part of the College estate, and proved a lease of them to Robert Maxwell for twenty years from the 30th of March, 1754, and renewals thereof to 1769. On the 22nd of February, 1774, the lease was renewed to Henry Maxwell, to whom the renewals were granted till 1816, after which period they were made to Maxwell Close till 1824, the last renewal proved. The payment of rent under the lease was proved, the practice of the College to renew, and the will of Robert Maxwell, the first lessee, whereby he devised his interest to Henry Maxwell, and that probate thereof was granted to John Maxwell, one of the executors; that Henry Maxwell in 1816 devised his interest to the Reverend Samuel Close, who, on the 31st of December, 1816, devised his interest to Maxwell Close; that Henry Maxwell had possession under the will of Robert Maxwell, and that John Maxwell, who made the lease of 1800 to Joseph Craig, paid a rent of £19 10s. to Maxwell Close for the premises demised by John Maxwell in the lease of 1800; that Maxwell Close had given John Maxwell notice to quit, and recovered possession of these premises under a judgment in ejectment in Hilary Term, 1822, and continued in possession till he sold the land to the defendant Strong. Evidence was given of a search for the habere under which Maxwell Close obtained possession, but that it could not be found. There was no evidence of rent being paid to any person by J. Maxwell prior to 1818. The defendant admitted assets. The charge of the Lord Chief Baron was thus stated in the bill of exceptions:—

And the said counsel for the said defendant did then and there insist that the said learned Judge ought to direct the said jury that inasmuch as it so appeared in evidence as aforesaid that all the estate and interest which the said John Maxwell in his life time had or the said defendants his executors as aforesaid as such executors had in the said premises demised by the said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800, were evicted as aforesaid by the said Maxwell Close, having such title paramount thereto, as aforesaid, the said plaintiff was not entitled to a verdict for more than nominal damages; but the said learned judge then and there refused so to inform and direct the said jury, and on the contrary thereof, after stating to the jury the issues upon which they were to find, and the evidence relating to the said issues, told the said jury that they were also to assess the damages sustained by reason of the breach of covenant stated upon the record, and that the question of damages was one entirely for the jury; and the learned Judge read for the said jury the covenant for renewal contained in the lease of 1800, and told, and directed the said jury that it did not amount to a contract that John Maxwell would have such an interest as would enable him, at the expiration of the lease, to grant such renewal; and the learned Judge read to the said jury the covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in the said lease, and told them that the latter covenant was such that if an eviction by title paramount, that is to say, by any person claiming and having title not derived through or under John Maxwell, took place during the term of the said lease, or after its expiration, and after a renewal of it damages could not be recovered for such an eviction upon the last mentioned covenant, or upon a similar covenant contained in such renewal. And the learned Judge told the jury that as no damages could, in such case, be recovered on the covenant for quiet enjoyment, then, if no valid renewal could have been granted by the executors of John Maxwell, he would, without giving them a positive direction upon the amount of damages, which was a matter entirely for the jury, advise them to give nominal damages only; but the learned judge further told and directed the jury, that a material question for the consideration of said jury upon the said evidence was, whether, at the time of the execution of the said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800, by the said John Maxwell, there was in fact such an estate or interest in the said premises vested in the said John Maxwell as would have enabled him or his executors to grant a valid renewal of the said lease at the expiration thereof, whereupon the said counsel for the said defendant did then and there except to the said opinion and directions to the said jury of the said learned Judge as well because he refused so to inform and direct the said jury as last aforesaid prayed by the said counsel for the defendant, as because he so informed and directed the said jury as last aforesaid, and they were by him informed and directed as to a material question as aforesaid for them upon said evidence. And the said learned Judge further held and so informed the said jury that the said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800, if unexplained and in no way affected by other evidence, would import on the face of it that the said John Maxwell had an estate in said premises co-extensive with that which he professed to grant thereby, and that there was a distinct intimation given by the said lease to the lessee thereof that he, the said John Maxwell, then had a lease under the said College, of the said premises mentioned in the said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800. And the said learned Judge further informed the said jury that if the said John Maxwell was, at the time of the execution of said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800, the owner of a lease of the said premises from the said College, then it was clear from the practice disclosed to the said jury by the said witness, Joshua Nunn, that there might have been an interest in the said John Maxwell or the defendants, his executors, out of which a renewal of the said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800, could have been granted to the present plaintiffs, and that though the legal interest in such lease under the said College, if any, was not vested in the said John Maxwell, yet if any party was interested therein as a trustee for him, an equitable estate might have been granted to the said plaintiffs by an instrument purporting to be a renewal. And the said learned Judge further held and so informed the said jury that in his opinion the statement in the said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800, of a lease to the said John Maxwell from the said College with the other evidence in the case, raised a question for the said jury, whether such an instrument did not exist as would have enabled the defendants in 1820 to execute a renewal to the plaintiff of the said premises. And the said learned judge after calling the attention of the jury to the evidence given by the defendant, tending to procure eviction by title paramount, told the jury there was on the other side evidence for their consideration that John Maxwell might have had such title as aforesaid at the time of the execution of said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800, and the said learned judge called the attention of the jury to the evidence from which it would appear that the said John Maxwell remained in the enjoyment of the said demised premises till shortly before the date of the said ejectment brought by the said Maxwell Closs as aforesaid, and that the said John Maxwell received the rents of the said premises and a triennial fine thereout, and the learned judge told the jury that there was on the record an admission that those rents and fines were paid, and called their attention to the evidence of the finding of the lease of 1800 among the papers of the defendant, and to the fact that the lease under which John Maxwell held was not found among said papers or produced at the trial. And the said learned judge left it to the said jury to consider whether such continuance as aforesaid in the enjoyment of the said demised premises by the said John Maxwell was consistent with the supposition that there was no such title in the said John Maxwell under the said College as aforesaid. But the learned judge told the jury that they should also take into consideration the evidence of the said Maxwell Closs, and the whole of the evidence given by the defendant, that the said John Maxwell was only tenant at will of the said premises to the said Maxwell Closs, and thereupon the counsel for the said defendant did then and there, on the part of the said defendant, except to the said opinion and direction to the said jury of the said learned judge, and to what he so told the said jury; inasmuch as he thereby left matters to the said jury for their consideration and decision not legally arising upon the said issues and evidence aforesaid to consider and decide; but which, if proper to be considered at all upon said issues and evidence, it belonged to the learned judge exclusively to consider and decide, and which he ought to have considered and decided himself upon the legal construction of the said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800, and the legal effect of the other evidence so given as aforesaid as applicable, if applicable at all, to the construction, effect, and legal operation of the said lease, and to have directed the said jury accordingly. And the counsel for the said defendant did then and there insist before the said learned judge that he ought, and they did then and there pray him to inform and direct the said jury that there was no legal evidence of any such estate or interest in the said demised premises being vested in the said John Maxwell at the time he executed the said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800, or at any time afterwards, as could have enabled him, or the defendant as his executors, to grant a valid renewal of the said lands thereby demised, at the expiration of the said lease of the 1st day of November, 1800. But the said learned judge refused so to direct and inform the said jury, and the said counsel for the said defendant did then and there except to the said opinion and ruling of the said learned judge, because he refused to direct and inform the said jury as last aforesaid prayed by the said counsel for the said defendant, but left the question in that behalf to the said jury as aforesaid. And the said counsel for the said defendant did then and there insist before the said learned judge that he ought, and they did then and there pray him to inform and direct the said jury upon the whole of the said evidence given on the part of the said plaintiff and the said defendant as aforesaid, that if the said jury believed the said evidence they should either find a verdict for the said defendant or a verdict for the said plaintiff for nominal damages only; but the said learned judge refused so to inform and direct the said jury, and on the contrary thereof held and affirmed and told the said jury that if they believed the whole of the said evidence they might find a verdict for the said plaintiff for substantial damages, but the amount thereof, and whether the same should be substantial or nominal was a matter entirely for them.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for £1000. The plaintiff elected to take their verdict upon the second count alone.

The postea stated, "that a special jury to try the said issues so joined between the said parties pursuant to the statute, &c. (certain jurors, naming them) came and are duly elected and sworn upon that jury, and because the residue of the jurors of the same jury did not appear, therefore one other person of those standing round in court, by the sheriff of the said county, at the request of said John Kean, &c. and by command of the said justices, is newly set down, and was sworn upon that jury, and the said juror so newly set down, together with said jurors so sworn and impanelled, being duly elected, tried and sworn to declare the truth, find, &c."

Mr. Holmes and Mr. Napier, Q.C., Mr. Ormsby with them.—The only covenant stated in the declaration* is that for renewal; that for quiet enjoyment appeared on the production of the lease at the trial. The construction of the first covenant depends upon that of the latter, which is limited to the acts of J. Maxwell and those claiming under him. There are two classes of exceptions, to the evidence and the charge: the first is to the admission of the receipt for £950, it not being mentioned in the deed, nor material to the issues on the record. The second and third exceptions are to the reception of evidence as to the value of this farm-lease, and go to the construction of the covenant; the fourth is to the charge of the learned judge. [That the whole instrument was to be taken into consideration they cited and commented upon Broughton v. Conway, (Dyer, 240, S. C.; Moore, 58;) Browning v. Wright, (2 B. & P. 13;) Food v. Wilson, (8 Taun. 545, S. C. 2 B.; Moore, 592;) Monds v. Marshall, (1 Brod. & Bing. 319; S. C. 3 B. Moore, 703;) Brown v. Brown, (1 Keb. 234;) Merrill v. Frame, (4 Taun. 329;) Deering

Forbes*, (6 Ad. & El. 572.)] The fifth and sixth exceptions are in effect that where either expressly or impliedly acts were covenanted to be done on both sides, neither can maintain an action for the breach without averring that he has done his part, or his willingness to perform what he has not done. [Pennefather, B.—This argument does not appear to be open to you under the plea of non est factum.] Edmonds v. Groves, (2 M. & W. 642, per Alderson, B.); Smith v. Martin, (9 M. & W. 304.) [Pennefather, B.—In both cases an inference was attempted to be drawn from an admission on the record.] Freeman v. Mayor of Waterford, (1 Sch. & Lef. 451.) The seventh exception is that the learned judge should not have left it to the jury to say whether John Maxwell might not have had some title contrary to that established by the evidence of the defendants, to be in the Close family. The learned judge should not have told the jury that there might be some title or beneficial interest in John Maxwell; if there was we admit the verdict was right. There is no evidence that John Maxwell had any estate out of which he could have given the plaintiffs that which they required, and if not they cannot complain of not getting that which would be valueless. Lastly, there was a mis-trial. It appears from the postea that there not being a sufficient number of special jurors present, a tales-man was taken de circumstantibus; the twelfth juror or tales-man was improperly chosen; this is a statutable jury, and must be chosen pursuant to the statute, [35 H. 8, c. 6; 10 Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 13, s. 8; Peeters v. Opie, (2 Saund. 349, n. 1); 6 Geo. 4, c. 51. By the 28th sect. of the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 91; the tales-man should be taken from the common jury, and the officer should have taken and put them into the ballot-box. [Perrin, J.—He is bound to take them from the circumstantibus; if possible they should have a qualification, if not, whoever is present. Pennefather, B.—Would not a consent cure the defect? if so the averment is, that the plaintiff consenting, the jury was taken de circumstantibus, and the defendant went on to trial.] *Fines v. Mr. T. O'Hagan, Q.C. and Mr. H. H. Joy, Q.C., with them Mr. Tomb, Q. C.—The covenant is absolute and unrestricted, and the court cannot entertain a question as to damages only. Bac. Ab., tit. Damages; Hist v. Goats, (2 Roll. Ab. 703; Lowe v. Piers, (4 Burr. 2229.) These covenants are independent of and unrestricted by the other. There are several intervening covenants, therefore the express covenant is not controlled by the other. The cases cited on the other side are not applicable; Browning v. Wright, (2 B. & P. 13), is in our favour. In Mends v. Marshall, (1 Brod. & Bing. 319), the covenant was immediately connected with the preceding one, and Foord v. Wilson, (2 B. Moore, 592,) was also a case of connected covenants. Line

v. Stephenson, (6 Scott, 447,) and Stannard v. Forbes, (6 Ad. & El. 572,) were cases of an implied covenant being controlled by an express covenant. The same principle will be found laid down in Platt on Cov.; Howell v. Richards, (11 East. 643; Wigg v. Lutterworth, (13 East. 138; 548, 3; Gainsforth v. Griffith, (1 Saund. 60; Smith v. Compton, (3 B. & Ald. 189; Hesse v. Stevenson, (3 Bos. & Pul. 565; Barton v. Fitzgerald, (15 East. 530.) It was not necessary to show any eviction by some one claiming under John Maxwell, nor of loss to the plaintiffs. The receipt was legally in evidence, assuming it to be connected with the lease, and was clearly admissible as an admission of the value by the parties at the time the lease was made. The question to Mr. Prentice was also legitimate on the question of value. The lease was in evidence, and was stated to be derived from the College, and the witness proved that such leases were marketable in Armagh; it was, therefore, a legitimate question as to the value of the clause of a renewal. There was no necessity for tendering a renewal as contended for. Steer v. Shalecroft, (12 Mod. 401; Hicks v. Goats, (Cro. Jac. 391.) Non-direction is not a ground for a bill of exceptions. McAlpine v. Mangnall, (3 Man. & Gr. & Sc. 517.) [Pennefather, B.—If a plaintiff call upon a judge to direct in a particular manner, and he refuses to do so, he may except to the non-direction.] Bolter, N. P. 316; Bridgman v. Holt, (8 How. P. C. 115.) When the judge leaves to the jury the evidence on both sides, and gives them no direction on the law, a bill of exceptions will not lie. Phillips v. Chichester, (Sir T. Jones, 146; (S. C. Sir T. Ray, 404.) A portion of one part of the charge or another is not to be made the matter of exception to the entire charge. Newcastle v. Britton, (4 B. & Al. 280.) We contend that the question of damages is wholly irrespective of the question as to whether John Maxwell had power to renew. [Blackburne, C. J.—I do not understand that the judge's charge is to be objected to word by word and letter by letter.] De Meles v. Norman, (9 M. & W. 820.) As to the mis-trial; the cases cited do not apply to that before the court. All the precedents are general, and it must be now intended that the sheriff did his duty. Cer. adv. vult.

The court being divided in opinion, now delivered their judgments separatim.

May 30.—MOORE, J.—This case comes before us upon a writ of error by the defendant in the court below, where the question came on a bill of exceptions to the ruling of my Lord Chief Baron. The Court of Queen's Bench gave judgment for the plaintiff below, the defendant here. (The learned judge having read the pleadings.) Some of the exceptions in this case, were taken during the progress of the case, and at its conclusion. It was contended that the covenant for renewal was qualified by that for quiet enjoyment; there was no controversy, but that the plaintiffs below were entitled to a verdict on the plea of non est factum, and that of plea administravit. The only question—subject to a question of variance, on the plea of non est factum, to be tried—was that of damages, and of the principle upon which they were to be assessed. The lease and assignment being proved, the receipt of the purchase money was offered in evidence. The bears date after the execution of the lease, signed by John Maxwell the lessor. The deed on the lease states that the consideration of the lease was £950. That memorandum signed by John Maxwell, though the receipt, £918, a portion of this consideration, before the execution of the lease, the receipt. The defendant objected to the admissibility of the receipt; but my Lord Chief Baron in opinion it ought to be received. Now, I am not able to understand the ground on which it was objected to; it was offered only in question of damages, which was the sole point in controversy. Could the jury possibly have a better criterion of value than that which the landlord and lessee had agreed to put upon it at the time of the grant? It is clear, from the receipt, that £950 was given and taken for the interest of the lease. It appears to me that a receipt signed by the lessor was clearly admissible against his estate, to shew the amount of damages. Therefore, I am of opinion that this exception be overruled. The next objection is the one of Mr. H. L. Prentice; where a question of value is one of opinion, it must frequently be put to the jury; nothing is more common than in the case of a warranty of horses, to ask what is the opinion of the witness, would be the value of the horse if sound, and what, if unsound: there are many persons quite incompetent to give an opinion as to the unsoundness, or otherwise quite competent to speak as to the value. If the question is put in that case, it may here also; and if the question were objectionable, it is removed to the subsequent part of the case, which shews the course of renewal on the part of the College. The next objection is, that there was no evidence of an eviction by John Maxwell. I am of opinion that no such evidence was necessary. Suppose the plaintiff not to be disturbed, that would be an answer to an action of covenant, for not granting a renewal. The fourth exception is, that the learned judge refused to direct the jury, that as there was no notice on the part of the lessee requiring the lessor to renew, that they should find for the defendant. It is stated in the declaration, that demand of renewal was made and refused. In the event there was no obligation to tender any money for renewal. The plain meaning of the words are, that renewal should be granted. I do not think any ground for exception. The next exception is, that the learned judge being called upon to direct the jury that the plaintiff was in no event entitled to more than nominal damages, declined to do so as there was nothing to shew any eviction by the defendant, or of loss sustained by the refusal to renew. For anything that appeared, John Maxwell might have had in him a sufficient title; there is no opinion that this objection must fail. It then contended that there was a substantial ground under the issue raised by the plea of non est; and that on this plea the learned judge should have directed the jury to find for the defendant. That though this covenant for renewal was apparently unqualified, yet it was controlled by a qualified covenant for quiet enjoyment, and it has been declared upon as a qualified covenant. It is clear the covenant for renewal may be restricted by the qualified covenant for quiet enjoyment; a large covenant in one instrument, may be restricted by another covenant in the same instrument. Where two covenants are inconsistent, one should give way to the other; the courts have said that a general covenant is to be qualified by a limited covenant, and if a party were to declare as upon a general covenant, that would not be the true construction; but in the case now before the court there is no inconsistency. The covenant to grant a renewal, is to do an act, and the qualified covenant is not inconsistent with it; there is nothing to restrict the act—no qualification of the covenant declared on; the covenant is an absolute one; and there is no variance between the covenant declared on, and the covenant in the lease. I am of opinion that there is nothing to restrict this unqualified covenant—that it is absolute and declared upon according to its true legal construction; and this is therefore no ground of objection; and so far as I have considered, the exception I have referred to, the court fully agree in this view. The plaintiff's case, having closed, the defendant then went into his case, and gave evidence of a lease and renewal from the College to the Maxwell family, from 1754 to 1824; that the defendant, in 1818, paid rent to Maxwell Close, in whom the interest in these College lands became vested. It was also proved that John Maxwell was his tenant at £19 10s. per annum; and a notice to quit served on John Maxwell, signed by Maxwell Close; and further, the defendants gave evidence of an ejectment on the title to recover the possession from John Maxwell of the premises comprised in the lease of 1800, which ejectment was served upon the defendants as executors of John Maxwell. The defendants having closed their case then called upon the learned judge to tell the jury that the plaintiffs were not entitled to more than nominal damages. It then becomes material to ascertain what my Lord Chief Baron told the jury upon the question of damages. There are but two points of view, in which this question could be submitted to the jury: First, that John Maxwell, or his executors, had a power to grant a valid renewal. Secondly, that he had no such power—and the charge shews that the Chief Baron did leave it in both these views. Mr. Napier in the argument, put this question upon its right foundation. The question is not as to the preponderance of evidence, but whether there was any evidence to go to the jury that John Maxwell had such a title as he could renew from. If there were none such, the Lord Chief Baron was wrong; if there was such evidence, he was right, and bound to leave it so to the jury. The question is one entirely on the weight of evidence, and comes before us on the exception to the charge of the learned Chief Baron. The defendants say there was not any evidence from which the jury could infer that John Maxwell had the power to grant a renewal. I think there is such evidence; it is to be collected from the lease stated in the exception, that John Maxwell had a lease from the College. Now supposing that lease was to other members of the Maxwell family, it might have been in trust for John Maxwell, or be assigned to him, and be called his lease from the College; and where a man grants a lease, and states that he has a lease from the College, that is some evidence to shew that the allegation is true. The understanding undoubtedly was, that one was to give a lease, the other to have it. If a man grants a lease and covenants to renew, and executes it, that is some evidence that he covenanted to give; and his covenanting for quiet enjoyment during the term granted, is evidence to the same effect, as is also the covenant to pay renewal fines, and the fact of their being paid to John Maxwell, and to his executors. The executors had no title except upon the assumption of there being a title to renew. I am not able to bring my mind to the conclusion that there was no evidence of a power in John Maxwell to grant a renewal, notwithstanding that Maxwell Close had treated himself as owner by giving a notice to quit. I approve of the verdict as not being against the weight of evidence. The next objection is that it was left to the jury to say whether the title of John Maxwell was legal or equitable—if the latter he could not renew. Suppose the jury came to the conclusion, that at the time of the granting of the lease, the premises were vested in trustees, and that John Maxwell had but an equitable title, that would shew a clear ground for ample damages for having scorned himself behind the outstanding legal title. On these grounds I think the Chief Baron left the question correctly to the jury. With respect to the next question, it does not appear but that there may have been twelve good jurors on the panel; it ought to appear that there was there one person not competent to be drawn. On these grounds I am of opinion this writ of error is not sustained.

JACKSON, J.—The twelfth objection is resolvable into those contained in the first, second, and seventh, and may be summed up in this, that this is a case for nominal damages only, and that the Chief Baron should have so directed the jury. The question of damages is one for the jury, not the judge. The subject for our consideration is whether in an action of covenant the judge can direct a verdict for nominal damages, and give his opinion respecting the effect of the covenant for renewal, that for quiet enjoyment, being qualified, is confined to the lessor's own acts, and of those claiming under him. I am of opinion, that in this case the covenant for renewal is independent of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. The tenant whose representatives the plaintiff's are, gave £950 for the interest in the lease. The lessor refers to his having a lease from the College; taking that, with the evidence of the renewals being uniformly granted by the College, I think the tenant was fully entitled to a renewal. The third exception was that which my brother Moore spoke of first, and is to the reception in evidence of the receipt for £950. It is true that the receipt is not strictly applicable to the issues; but we must recollect that this is an action for damages, and as such, the jury must have some guide as to the amount they should give; the receipt was not contradictory of the lease. I am of opinion that it is evidence to regulate the amount of damages, and was properly admitted. The next objection is to the reception of the evidence of Mr. Prentice. In this also I agree with my brother Moore, as well as there being no necessity for a notice to renew. With respect to the objection that no deed of renewal was tendered for execution, it is clear from the construction of the covenant, "that the said John Maxwell should and would make out a new lease," that the landlord was bound to make out a new lease; therefore I am of opinion my Lord Chief Baron was right in saying that the plaintiffs were on this ground entitled to but nominal damages. On the question of variance I also agree. Further, as to the charge of the Chief Baron, I am of opinion it was perfectly right; all the evidence went to shew that John Maxwell had power to renew. With respect to the question of the talesman, I am of opinion, as far as appears from the record, that it is impossible to say that any thing was wrongly done.

RICHARDS, B.—This is an action for a breach of covenant for renewal of a lease; the lease was for 20 years, and contained covenants for renewal, and for quiet enjoyment. The tenant of John Maxwell, after the expiration of the term of 20 years, was served with notice; the premises were evicted in an adverse suit. If the lessor had such a title as is contended he had, he was guilty of great default in not renewing, and the jury were bound in law to assess the damages; but had the title been evicted before the lease had expired, I am not prepared to say the plaintiffs could maintain any action. This case is plainly distinguishable from Williams v. Burrell (1 C. B. 403), there no eviction had taken place. A renewal, if executed in the present case, would have operated but for two years. I shall confine my observations to the principle upon which damages ought to be assessed. An exception was taken to the line of examination of a witness produced on the part of the plaintiff, (Mr. H. L. Prentice.) Now assuming that the plaintiff was entitled to more than nominal damages, I am at a loss to know what means this witness had, more than any of the jury, of knowing whether the College would renew. I see no reason why he should be considered more competent to form an opinion upon this subject than any of them; a witness may be asked a question upon a matter of science or skill; but in my opinion the objections to this witness were well-founded. Evidence was given on the part of the defendant, which shewed prima facie that there was no title in John Maxwell. Defendant called the solicitor of the College, and he produced a lease to John Maxwell. There is a chain of evidence shewing the existence of the lease from the College in persons other than John Maxwell. I now come to the exceptions to the charge of my Lord Chief Baron. There being some ground of presumption that John Maxwell had some title, it may not have appeared so clearly that John Maxwell had no such title as that the judge was bound to withdraw that question from the jury; but I am not disposed to affirm the manner in which he did leave the question; it was not left in such a way as to satisfy me that the jury were not misled. Possibly I may be wrong, and that no real grounds exist for disputing upon this point. Possibly at the close of the defendant's case there was no reason for suggesting that John Maxwell had no real interest in the premises. The direction of the Lord Chief Baron as to the matter of fact, as to excessive damages, was not as precise or as explicit as they should. I am very decidedly of opinion that no valid renewal could have been granted; and seeing that the jury have given substantial damages, they must have assessed them upon some illegal principle of law. This is not an action of tort; it is founded upon contract. It has not appeared whether any real injury has been sustained in point of law; on the contrary I hold that no real damage resulted from the non-renewal. Regarding that to be the case, I think the learned judge would have been right in directing the jury to give nominal damages. Nominal damage is a phrase very well understood in the law. I think the jury ought to have been directed in this case, if they believed the evidence, to find nominal damages. The judge left it to the jury to say whether there might not have been an equitable title in John Maxwell. This part of the charge is not warranted by the evidence; there was no ground for submitting, as a matter of fact, that John Maxwell had an equitable estate. I do not see in what character this trust estate is to be viewed. I confess I am not aware of any question being raised for the jury. As I understand the case, John Maxwell did not hold under any lease, but was tenant from year to year. This part of the charge appears to me to be objectionable. If the jury believed the whole of the evidence, they might find substantial damages for the plaintiffs. I am at a loss to understand that part of the charge, "Although you believe that John Maxwell had no title to grant a renewal, you may find substantial damages." I think substantial damages cannot be given upon a covenant of that kind, unless there was a power to perform the covenant.

PERRIN, J.—I concur in the opinion of my brother Moore, that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed. I shall confine my opinion to the question of damages. This is a lease for 20 years, with a covenant for renewal, in which he mentions his lease from the College, and for which he received a consideration of £950. The lease to John Maxwell might have been either to himself or a trustee. There was no proof of an actual payment of rent by him to any one during his life; it is plain he had some interest in what he calls his lease, under which he was in possession, and under which he made the lease and received the fines. It is a principle to be preserved against him and his executors, that he told the truth. The eviction by title paramount might have been collusive. It was a serious question for the jury, whether the testator told the truth in 1800; and if he did not keep it in his power, the means of performing the contract, he should pay; and this view is consistent with the facts in evidence. It seems strange that his executors should hold him up as putting his hand and seal to what he knew he could not perform; and notwithstanding the appeal made to them by the conscience and justice of the court, they appear to me to evince a stronger regard for the property, than the character of the testator.

CRAMPTON, J.—I differ from the opinions of my brothers Moore and Perrin; my opinion is wholly founded upon the charge of the Lord Chief Baron. For the defendant it is contended that under the circumstances the plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages only; the jury have given substantial, if not excessive damages; it is peculiarly their province to measure the damages where damages may be given, and the court in general should not interfere; but when the amount becomes the main question, and the judge directs the jury to assess them upon an erroneous principle, the charge may be made the subject of exception. The lease in question is from John Maxwell to John Craig, at a rent of £8, with a triennial fine of £1, and a covenant for perpetual renewal. The lease contained no covenant for title—it was an unqualified covenant to renew at the expiration of the term; the damages were for the breach of this covenant. The second count alleged no title in the lessor, but in whom we are called upon to presume a title. The covenant in the lease was indubitably broken, and had there been a covenant for title, the plaintiff would have been entitled to substantial damages. The third count was founded on the supposition that there was no covenant for title, on this count the plaintiff had a verdict by the concession of the plaintiff. John Maxwell was evicted by title paramount. The plaintiff could not sustain an action for a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. What, then, is the proper measure of damages for the breach of this covenant for renewal? On what principle should they be assessed? The rule is stated in Robinson v. Harman (1 Ex. Rep. 150.) The defendant knew he could not grant a lease. We must then consider what was the value of the thing the plaintiff lost—if the lessor had no title the plaintiff lost nothing. If a renewal had been given in this case, no action could be brought, though all the evidence went to shew it would be valueless. The Lord Chief Baron told the jury, that if, on the whole of the evidence on both sides, they were of opinion that John Maxwell had power to execute a valid lease in 1820, the plaintiff was entitled to substantial damages; if otherwise, he was entitled to nominal damages only. His direction was founded upon the whole evidence; he stated to them the substance of the evidence on both sides. It is contended that, considering all the evidence, there was no ground for the judge to send such a case to the jury, that a title in John Maxwell can be only upheld through the presumption of a fact. The evidence for the defendants removed any presumption created against them. The evidence on the part of the defendant shews that these lands were a portion of the College estate, the leases of which contained no covenant for renewal; that John Maxwell became the owner of the lease as the executor of Henry Maxwell; that he was not the tenant to the College, but that Henry Maxwell alone was so, and paid rent every year, and that John Maxwell never paid. In 1801 Henry Maxwell renewed with the College, and still continued to be the tenant; that after the death of Henry Maxwell the rent was regularly paid by his legatees; but John Maxwell never paid, but was in possession of 40 acres as the tenant of Henry Maxwell, who had the beneficial ownership. Taking the whole evidence, John Maxwell was only tenant from year to year. The material question left to the jury was, whether John Maxwell had not, under some instrument or another, the legal or equitable interest under the College; this was a vague way to leave the question; there was no evidence to warrant such an inference; it is not possible to say that the landlord could be a trustee for a tenant, from year to year, at a rent of £19. Here then is a case of evidence on both sides—for the plaintiff, that John Maxwell had a lease from the College, for the defendant that it was the lease of Henry, and that John was his tenant from year to year. It was said that Henry Maxwell was a trustee for John Maxwell, or that John may have assigned his interest to him—and it was left to the jury to presume that there was a legal or equitable title existing in John Maxwell. There is no inconsistency between the evidence of the plaintiff and defendant; but there is a difficulty in reconciling the interest of John Maxwell with that of Henry. The charge of the judge should not have told the jury that there was evidence on the one side and the other, but that there was no evidence of a title on the one side or the other. It is not easy to account for the payment of the £950, as but £70 was given for the assignment.

TORRENS, J.—I shall confine my opinion to the question of damages, having changed my opinion as to the substantiality of the charge of my Lord Chief Baron, it is right to state it. The question is whether John Maxwell had not such an interest as would enable him to grant a renewal; the question was already decided by the Court of Queen's Bench, (reported 9 Ir. Law Rep. 74.) It is necessary to see what is the evidence by which it is shown that John Maxwell held from the College. The lease had been renewed from 1792, according to the custom of the College. John was appointed executor, and took out probate of the will of Robert Maxwell; and it is important to observe that no estate vested in Henry till the assent of John Maxwell was first had. We have then a legal possession in him springing from the death of Robert. There was undoubted evidence of the title and possession from 1754 to 1800, and it is clear that without the covenant for renewal the £950 was an excessive consideration. There was no evidence of any rent having been paid to Henry Maxwell, or any other person prior to 1818. I do not see anything in the evidence inconsistent with the estate being that of John Maxwell.

PENNEFATHER, B.—I concur in the opinion of my brother Moore as respects the exceptions to the evidence. But as to the exceptions to the charge of my Lord Chief Baron, although there clearly was evidence to go to the jury at the close of the plaintiff's case to entitle him to a verdict for substantial damages, I think at the close of the defendant's case there was conclusive evidence the other way; and that the plaintiff's evidence was entirely displaced. The difficulty on my mind is that the question of damages was left to the jury in a manner calculated to lead them to form a wrong conclusion on the matters referred to them. This bill of exceptions, as far as it relates to the judge's charge, is framed in a manner not to be brought into a precedent; it is taken to different portions of the charge, and is not framed in such a manner as to enable me to say in what way or to what evidence the defendants required the learned judge to direct the jury, or what the learned judge did say. With respect to the authority of the Lord Chief Baron to sign the bill of exceptions, I should not have put my signature to them. These observations are thrown out, not from any doubt on my mind as to what ought to be done, but as to what actually was done. I have read these exceptions with as much care as I could, and have been able to find nothing to show that any exception was presented so as to lead the mind of the Court to what the learned Chief Baron did say in that case. If we take this portion of the learned judge's charge alone, it could not be sustained: "That if the jury believed the whole of the evidence they might find a verdict for the said plaintiffs for substantial damages, but the amount thereof, and whether the same should be substantial or otherwise was entirely a matter for them;" if that portion stood alone it is impossible to say that the jury were properly directed. The defendants say they required the Lord Chief Baron to tell the jury that on the whole evidence they should find for nominal damages; that exception is not properly framed. I cannot come to the conclusion that the real case was properly submitted to the jury. If John Maxwell had an interest either as cestui que trust, or otherwise, the plaintiff would be entitled to substantial damages; if he had no title, the plaintiff should have but nominal damages. Henry Maxwell was the legatee of this property, and the legal estate of John Maxwell was barred by the statute of limitations. The effect of a series of renewals executed to the Maxwell family was not stated to the jury by the Lord Chief Baron; it can only be guessed that it might have been so properly left to them.

PROCT, C. B.—I have been anticipated in a great deal of what I had intended to say. In the absence of any averment to the contrary, I must hold that all the jury were properly elected. Of the remaining exceptions, those to the evidence were taken during the progress of the trial, and the others to the charge. I am of opinion, that whether there was a demand of renewal, or a tender of a deed for execution, those facts not being in issue, could not affect the question of damages, the breach of covenant having been committed. As to exception on the question of variance, I agree in the opinion of my brother Moore; and with that of my brother Pennefather, on the dislocated manner in which the exception to the charge has been framed. I regret I did not scrutinize the manner in which this bill of exceptions was made up. The simple question left to the jury was whether there was such an estate in John Maxwell, as would serve a renewal, and warrant a verdict for substantial damages. First, with a view to the amount of damages upon the admitted breach of the covenant to renew. Secondly, that there was evidence of such an estate in John Maxwell, proper to be submitted to the jury. The first proposition follows from the ruling of this court, and the sole question was whether there was evidence that John Maxwell had or had not a title to renew. There was evidence that John Maxwell had, under his hand and seal, declared that he held these lands by a lease under the College; that he had received rent to 1819, and also of the payment of renewal fines. The question was one of damages. It was for the jury to weigh the evidence. It is contended that the evidence for the defendants showed an estate in the Maxwell family, not in John Maxwell. It was the province of the jury to estimate the weight of that evidence. In my opinion the evidence given by the defendants did not extinguish the evidence of the plaintiff. There might be a sub-lease; Maxwell Close does not say that John Maxwell had no lease. If there was any evidence from which a jury might infer that John Maxwell had an interest out of which a renewal might have been served, the plaintiff was entitled to substantial damages.

DOHERTY, C. J.—I coincide in the judgment of the majority of the court.

BLACKBURN, C. J.—I also concur in the opinion of the majority of the court. The main question which has been argued, namely, whether there was sufficient evidence of any such estate or interest in John Maxwell, at the date of the lease in 1808, as would have enabled him or his executors to execute a renewal, is a question not raised, and independently of that question, I am of opinion that the bill of exceptions is totally deficient in precision, and on that ground alone that these exceptions should be overruled.*

Judgment affirmed.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

MOLONY, PETITIONER, NUGENT, RESPONDENT.
GEALE AND WIFE v. NUGENT.—July, 30, 31.

Practise—Receiver—Solicitor—Judgment Creditor's Petition.

A solicitor may be a receiver. Two or more judgments may be included in one petition under the Judgment Creditor's Acts.

The facts of this case sufficiently appear in the judgment at the Rolls, reported ante p. 319, from which this was an appeal.

Mr. F. Fitzgerald, Q.C. and Mr. Tuthill for the appellant.

Mr. Brewster, Q.C. and Mr. De Molyns contra.
Mr. Gayer, Q.C. for the Incorporated Law Society.

LORD CHANCELLOR.—The question which I have at present to dispose of is, whether, upon the grounds on which this case was argued before me, or on the grounds on which the Master of the Rolls decided to dismiss the receiver, his order ought to be affirmed. This was an order obtained on the motion of the plaintiffs in the cause, who have an interest in the proper management of the property which is subject to their incumbrance; and they are fully justified in coming to the court on every occasion when they think it material to call attention to the conduct of the receiver. They applied to the court to discharge from his office a receiver appointed in 1846, appointed according to the course of the court in regular form, when it was open to every one interested to suggest persons for the appointment, and to call the attention of the court to the objections to any individual nominated if he were an improper person. However, the plaintiffs have a right to move to displace an improper person. I do not understand that the other parties in the cause concur in this application, but they do not dissent from or oppose it. Under these circumstances an order was made by the Master of the Rolls, an officer assisting the Chancellor, to remove the receiver. Although this order did not reflect on the moral character, it did on the competence of Mr. Joly. While, therefore, the plaintiffs had a right to call the attention of the court to the circumstances, I cannot say that Mr. Joly was not entitled to come in here against an order made on affidavits, reflecting on his integrity, competency or care; at all events when an order is made against an officer of the court I cannot think him wrong in coming here to have the order set aside. When I say that none of the parties in the cause oppose this motion I do not mean that it is made on consent, for it was competent to remove him by consent if the parties chose. The matter was discussed on various grounds; but not the least embarrassing part of the case was that those grounds were not the foundation of the order below, for the counsel here did not insist on Mr. Joly's being disqualified by being a solicitor, but on this intelligible ground, that, having regard to the condition of the property, it had been improperly managed. Now, in that point of view, it is important to see what authority there would be for affirming the Rolls' order. In general the grounds for removal are that the receiver has become unfit from some personal calamity, from bankruptcy, or insolvency, or from default. If he has not collected the rents with sufficient diligence he may be charged in his account with the arrears. While, if not satisfied with the decision of the Master, the parties may bring the case before the court, though it has never been the habit of the court to encourage appeals against receivers from the Master's decision, unless a question of principle be involved. By the rule in England, at least, the court will not re-discuss items unless on a question of principle: in the office all parties have the opportunity of scrutinizing every thing. The court has there a machinery by which minute facts can be better ascertained than in court on solemn motion. It is a question what may be the character of this motion? It is not to open or to review the accounts; it is not to complain that any particular charge has been allowed or has been disallowed; that the Master has charged or omitted to charge the receiver with any particular rents; it is not founded on any default of the receiver, or on any attachment against him. It seems to be founded on this, that on the face of the accounts there is something to show the court that a professional gentleman residing in Dublin is not a fit person to have the management of this property, and in that way it was argued at the bar. I confess I should be startled at causing the introduction of such discussion, considering the length it might go, and the number of cases which might occur; for instead of making a specific case, this would call on the court to examine all the dealings of the receiver from his appointment, to see whether too much arrear had been allowed to accumulate; and, in fact, to institute a kind of revision of all his proceedings. There are officers of the court appointed to watch step by step all the proceedings of receivers; these accounts have all received their approval, there has been no default nor attachment for any disregard of any orders of the court, and the only question of detail is as to the propriety of certain proceedings, although those proceedings were sustained by the rental returned by one of the defendants; but on examination of the circumstances of that part of the case I find the receiver perfectly blameless, and free from censure. These few matters were referred to in detail not as showing that more rents might have been received from the tenants, but as showing that the receiver tried to get rents to which he was not entitled, and that costs were thereby accumulated. If costs were improperly incurred, that matter could be disposed of in the office, (the proper place for such investigation,) upon passing the receiver's account. I cannot see where would be the end if the time of the court were to be occupied in reviewing from first to last the acts of receivers, and in considering why a particular portion of the rent was not got, or what was a sufficient quantum of rent; or if it were to be held that because certain rents had not been recovered this or that person was not to be continued as receiver, I do not know how to determine how much rent would entitle the court to say that a receiver was good, how little would make him deserve to be called bad, what quantity would constitute an indifferent receiver; I therefore think that so far as the case rests on any amount not having been collected there is no point of principle; I cannot say that because out of £600 he only collected £400 he is to be discharged. The only principle which I could discover is one open in every case, to enquire whether, having regard to the entire circumstances of the case, the receiver should be resident on or near the property, and whether, having regard to these circumstances, it is expedient that the receiver should be continued. Even that is for reference to the Master's office, where the court is sure that it will receive full investigation. It is only with reference to that part that the plaintiffs seem to have made a case to come before the court, and if they wish to have an enquiry whether it is desirable that a person residing near the property should be appointed receiver I will grant it. As the case was argued before me the only intelligible principle it involves is, whether, having regard to the condition of the property, it was expedient that a particular kind of receiver ought not to have been appointed. The case was not decided on that ground, for, as I find it reported, the judgment of the court below professed to proceed on the abstract principle of the disqualification of the receiver as being a solicitor of the court. I shall only say that when a question is raised as to the law of the court on a particular point the decision ought not to be founded on a speculative notion of what ought or ought not to be the proper practice; every judge is bound to determine according to the course and practice of the court, which are the law of the court, until it be changed by the Legislature or by a general order made by the authorities, to which the power of legislation for such purposes has been delegated; until that is done the law and practice of the court ought not to be changed. Now, what law, practice, or rule of the court exists which prohibits a solicitor from becoming a receiver? No case until this has decided that a solicitor as such is disqualified. The rule of court, framed by Sir Edward Sugden and the late Master of the Rolls, the present Chief Justice, does not contain one word to prohibit them; on the contrary the rule is directed against very inferior classes, the clerks and apprentices of solicitors, persons obviously not in a proper position to be receivers, they being as it were, under tutelage. It was very wise to exclude individuals whose time was not their own from a situation of this nature, but the office of solicitor was not considered a disqualification: eligibility of solicitors seems implied by the exclusion of the others. When the Court of Exchequer framed their rules they examined very particularly the new rules of Chancery, and endeavoured to adapt them to the exigencies of their court; some they modified, some they adopted, and some they rejected in regard to the matter in hand; to others they added a few words, making a specific rule out of an established practice, that solicitors in a cause were not to be receivers, but left untouched the general question. It is in the knowledge of every one that, in point of fact, the appointment of solicitors to be receivers is a common practice in the Master's office. Few cases were mentioned, but I may refer to Reynolds v. Reynolds, where a long discussion took place on a large arrear being brought in against a receiver. It was mentioned that he was a solicitor, and some stress was laid on that as showing that the arrears had accrued on that account, but the question was not raised whether he ought to have been appointed receiver or not. When that case was discussed before me I thought that the Master ought to re-consider his judgment on the grounds that he had not sufficiently weighed certain matters which required to be taken into account, and not being sure whether he had considered these matters I referred it back to him that he might have the whole case before him on principle, he then came to the same conclusion that the receiver was in default, but it was not before me as a matter for any one to decide that a solicitor could not be a receiver. In Lupton v. Stevenson it was mentioned that Mr. Bruce, a solicitor, was appointed a receiver, but it was not discussed on the ground that he was a solicitor, but that by the arrangement on his appointment he was bound to be guided by the advice of another person who was not responsible to the court; I sent it back on that ground. I believe, that he was re-appointed, and that he, as well as the receiver in Reynolds v. Reynolds, are both still receivers. Till this order, it has never been decided in any branch of the court, that a solicitor is a disqualified person; an opinion has been thrown out that they are not competent, but I must decide upon the practice. The practice is, that solicitors are eligible, and it was so decided by Sir William M'Mahon, in a case so far back as 1826. On this ground it seems that if the case rested solely on the objection that Mr. Joly is a solicitor, his removal would not be consistent with the law of the court. Whether the Masters will in any case appoint solicitors, must be left to the discretion of the Masters, who, both in England and this country, are considered the proper judges; and it will require a strong case to entitle a party to call on the court to re-agitate a question which has been disposed of by the Master by whom these matters of detail are to be considered, and the business of this court would be overwhelming if such questions were considered by it. So far as regards that ground, the order cannot be sustained. So far as the particular details, I do not see my way to make any order against Mr. Joly, unless the parties will consent (which they may do) to refer it to the Master to consider whether it would not be better, under the circumstances, to have a receiver resident in the neighbourhood of the property. The Master may then re-consider the question, and appoint another person. The cost of such a course might be matter for further discussion. Many matters were adverted to, which seem not to bear much on the case. It was said that petitions had been presented for the purpose of making costs; but the receiver was not a party to those petitions, and is not responsible for the course taken. With regard to what was stated as an excuse for the oppression practised in this case, by accumulating orders, that a separate petition was required for each judgment, it is a mistake to suppose that any such difficulty exists. I can state that the secretary does not refuse to receive a petition, on the ground that several judgments are included in it; and I have now here two orders, one in Roper v. Whiting, where the petition was founded on three judgments, and another in Bateman v. Piers, also founded on three judgments, and I am informed that such is the constant practice, and no person need be afraid to introduce into the petition several judgments, if vested in the same parties. I might content myself with the case as it at present stands, but I have not been insensible to the great mischief which results from the appointment of a number of receivers, and removing the proprietors from the management of estates, who, it must be admitted, ought to be the best managers; but I feel that there is great difficulty in considering this question. There is no use in speculating on the causes which have led to the increase in the number of receivers; it may have arisen partly from the practice in this country of selling instead of foreclosing in a mortgage suit, and thus estates are kept under the management of the court until accounts are taken. The judgment acts have had great effect, and in fact this court has now become an enormous sheriff's office, carrying out executions by means of receivers. The question of a remedy for the evils of receiverships has much engaged public attention. Shortly after my appointment to my present office, a bill was prepared by my direction, which provides remedies which, in my judgment, would be effectual in removing much of the evil of the present state of receiverships, and I hope that, as the attention of Parliament is now directed to the subject, it will lead to some general reform of the system, which alone can be an adequate remedy. In the meantime, whatever may be the result, I must act on the law of the court as I find it, and on established principle. The Committee of the House of Commons, which has been referred to, was justified in making their report on the evidence before them; but it cannot be an authority for any judge to alter the law, and make a change in the practice, which he would not otherwise be entitled to do. The system of examination in this court, or the law of primogeniture, or marriage, may be the subject of the report of a committee of the Commons, as recommending a change; but in my court I will uphold the law of the land till it shall be changed by statute, and will leave to others the responsibility of altering the law. It may be a question whether it will be wise now to disturb receivers when there is so likely to be a change which may also require further alterations. It may be that the subject will be taken up by the Legislature, when it will be for it to consider whether, as it has prohibited the ordinary officers of the court from acting in any other capacity, receivers should not likewise relinquish all other pursuits. There is, however, this distinction that the other officers having secure and permanent employment may well be required to give up all other professions, while in the case of the temporary and precarious receiver, no such abandonment of former connections could be required. If, however, receiverships should be made permanent this distinction would vanish. Again, it may be necessary to consider whether receivers should be professional men or not, whether such appointments should be exclusively from a class of persons whose recommendation is that they have not anything else to do. Whether a knowledge of legal detail is not necessary, whether some additional guarantee is not obtained by the position of a solicitor, an officer of this court; whether it is necessary to re-consider the orders of the court, and whether a change which could be effected by a general order might not be beneficial. These questions involve most important considerations, and must be matters for further consideration. In the event of it so appearing it will be my duty to submit to the Master of the Rolls such alterations as the nature of the case seems to require, and to receive with the attention due to his experience the suggestions he may offer. It is also the duty of the Chancellor to give all weight to the opinion of those whose duties bring them in constant connection with these cases, and whose experience is therefore most valuable, the Masters of the court. If my opinion had been adverse, it would have been much shaken by the following certificate from Master Hean, the oldest of the Masters, one whose views are entitled to the highest consideration:—"I beg leave to state to your lordship as the result of my experience, derived from a practice for more than 29 years, during which I have, I am confident, passed at least five thousand receivers' accounts, and appointed at least one thousand receivers—that the best receivers I have generally found to be amongst the solicitors, and the worst amongst those called country gentlemen and esquires. There are exceptions, and many exceptions, both ways, but most assuredly so far as my experience goes, the majority of the good ones I have found amongst the solicitors, and the reasons are these—there are scarcely any of the country gentlemen receivers who are men of business, or who were trained or educated to be such. The consequence is, that they are as a class the most slovenly, slobbering and bungling receivers I have to deal with—not one of them ever thinks of framing his own account, few of them are capable of drawing them up in form, and it is even difficult to get from many of them the materials necessary to put them into proper form, and I have scarcely ever a first account from one of that class that I have not been obliged to send back once, twice, and sometimes a third time for amendment or correction; if they are, as they sometimes are, of the class of respectable farmers, they are constantly blundering from ignorance and scarcely ever are kept right, except they have a solicitor at their elbow, who does not give his services for nothing; if they are of higher order of that class called country gentlemen, they frequently leave the greater part, if not the whole, of the business to be done by the bailiff and the solicitor. When I was Taxing Master, I have repeatedly had bills of receivers' costs to tax, whole pages of which consisted of reading letters from and answering letters to the receivers, and of attendance to pay the creditors and head landlords their interests and head-rents, all of which should have been done by the receiver himself, and since the introduction of poor-rates both these classes of receivers are constantly in the habit of either making wrong deductions or, as frequently happens, not making any deductions when paying the head landlord's rent. Now these errors, and blunders, and inaccuracies very rarely occur in those cases in which attorneys or solicitors are receivers. They are all trained in some degree to regular and business-like habits, and they are sufficiently acquainted with what country gentlemen receivers scarcely ever know, the rules and orders of the court in relation to their conduct; and they are both more regular in passing their accounts, and more punctual in the disposition of their balances; and more exact in executing the orders and certificates by which the Masters direct the application of the balances; and when I was a taxing officer, their costs were lighter than those of the country gentlemen, because they did without charging, or if they charged, without being allowed, what they were clearly entitled to when acting as solicitors merely, such as attendances on themselves, and other similar charges; while, as collectors of rents they were, and in my opinion are, quite as efficient and as honest—I speak of them as a class—as any other receivers I have had to deal with. Many of them reside principally in or near country towns, and are quite as well acquainted with country business and farming as any other class in the community with which I am acquainted." This is not a singular opinion among those who have to deal most with these matters. If the plaintiffs choose an inquiry on the principle above suggested, they may have it.

ROLLS COURT.

CULLY, Petitioner, v. LUCAS, Respondent, AND SEVERAL OTHER MATTERS.—May 29, & June 3.

Mortgage Act—Receiver—Conditional order does not attach rents.

Upon an order for a receiver under the mortgage act, 11 & 12 Geo. 3, c. 10, it is the absolute and not the conditional order which attaches the rents.

By indenture of mortgage, bearing date the 8th of June 1838, and made under the 3 & 4 W. 4, to secure to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners of Ireland the sum of £1090 6s. 7d., being the purchase money of the fee and inheritance of certain lands therein mentioned. The lands of Clontibred were limited to the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, subject to redemption upon payment of the said principal sum, with interest at the rate of £5 per cent. A considerable sum for interest having been permitted to grow due on foot of this mortgage, on the 26th of April, 1848, a petition was presented for a receiver under the mortgage act 11 & 12 Geo. 3, c. 10,* and on the 26th of April an order was made, referring it to the Master to appoint a receiver unless cause is shewn within 10 days after service of the order. On the 4th of November 1848 an order was obtained that service of the conditional order on any of the respondents should be deemed good service upon them all. On the 6th of December a certificate of no cause was granted, and on the 26th of January, 1849, the conditional order for the appointment of the receiver was made absolute. On the 24th of June, 1847, a receiver had been appointed by certain judgment creditors of the respondent, over a portion of the lands comprised in the mortgage. This receiver was extended by a Mr. Walsh, a judgment creditor—the sum of £217 8s. having been lodged in court to the credit of the same matters. This was an application on behalf of Martin Morris, petitioner in the 5th matter, for the sum of £107 6s. 5d. being the amount of rent received subsequent to the 6th of May, 1848, when the receiver was extended, and prior to the 26th of January, 1849, being the date of the absolute order for the receiver on foot of the mortgage. There was also a cross notice on behalf of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners that the entire sum in suit might be paid to them, as being rents received subsequent to the 28th of April, 1848, the date of the conditional order.

*Mr. Hughes Q. C. and Mr. P. Blake on behalf of Morris, the judgment creditor, contended that the rents were not attached by the mortgage and the order of January, 1849, and referred to Appl. v. Burke (8 I.E. R. 660); Murragh v. Lane (4 I.E. R. 195); Evans v. Blennerhassett (4 I.E. R. 139); Es parte Wilson, (2 V. & B. 252.)*

*Mr. Martley, Q. C., contra, moved the cross notice for the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and contended that where an order for the appointment of a receiver is made absolute, it relates back to the date of the conditional order, and attaches the rents from that time, and referred to Coleman v. Mann (L. & T. 545); Barry v. Wilkinson, (3 I.E. R. 172.)*

* An Act for rendering securities by mortgage more effectual, "Whereas by default of the punctual payment of the interest payable upon mortgages, and on account of the great delays in bills of foreclosure, securities by mortgage are fallen into disrepute; for remedy whereof be it enacted, &c., that from and after the 1st day of December, 1772, in all cases where one year and a-half's interest shall be due, a Court of Equity, upon application in manner hereinafter mentioned, shall appoint a receiver to receive such part of the rents of the mortgaged premises, as shall be sufficient to pay such arrear of interest, and also the accruing interest of the said mortgage money, from time to time, not half-year when the other shall become due, until the whole of such interest due on the said mortgage shall be discharged, and no longer, together with such fees or salary as shall be appointed by said court for such receiver; as also the necessary costs out of pocket of such application, and the out of the sums so received, such interest, salary, and costs shall be ordered to be paid. Sec. 2. And be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that such order shall be made upon petition and affidavit, after reasonable time given to the cause, and whether any bill has or has not been filed relative to the said mortgage."

121); Bart v. Bernard, (4 I. E. R. 428, S. C. Fl. & K. 414); Moss v. Gallimore, (Dong. 279.)

June 3.—MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In this case Mr. Morris, a judgment creditor, the petitioner in the fifth matter, obtained an order to extend the receiver, which was made absolute. On the 28th of April, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners obtained a conditional order, on foot of a mortgage, which was not made absolute until the 20th of January, 1849, and the greater part of the sum in court is the produce of rents lodged previous to this date. The whole question is, whether the conditional or absolute order for a receiver on foot of the mortgage attaches the rents, and on the construction of the act of Parliament I do not think there is much difficulty. The 10 & 11 Geo. 3, provides that where one and a half year's interest shall be due, a Court of Equity, upon application in manner thereafter mentioned, may appoint a receiver; the mode of proceeding is regulated by the second section, which provides that "such order shall be made upon petition and affidavit, after reasonable time given to shew cause," &c. It appears to me that the conditional order cannot be considered as attaching the rents; the only order mentioned is one made after reasonable time to shew cause, and the conditional order is not made after time to show cause. I apprehend that the judgment creditor is entitled to all the rents received before the 20th of January, 1849. If any authority were wanting, the observations of Sir E. Sugden in Bart v. Bernard, (3 Dr & W.), shew that it is the absolute and not the conditional order which attaches the rents. These observations were made with reference to the Sheriff's act; but I do not think there is one word which is not applicable to the mortgage act. In page 476 he says, "The conditional order is issued for the purpose of bringing the machinery of the act of Parliament into operation in the case. The first order is pronounced that the parties may have notice that unless cause be shewn within 10 days, the order for the receiver will be made. This is merely to carry the intention of the Legislature into effect, and to do justice between the parties. Suppose, instead of the issuing a conditional order, as at present, this court, in the exercise of its judicial consideration, were to fiat the petition thus:—'Let notice be given to the party, that unless he shew cause within ten days an order for the appointment of a receiver will be made.' Will any person argue that this fiat could be considered as an execution executed; or that it amounted to any thing but notice? Suppose, instead of the present chamber practice (which does not take place in the Court of Exchequer), this court should direct all parties to have notice, and to come prepared with the names of the denominations, the value of the property, and sufficient facts, so as to enable the court to make but one order and that a perfect one. Can any one deny that I have power to make such a fiat? and could it be argued that such was anything but notice? Why should the course which the court adopts to give the parties notice, and to save expense, be held to give the judgment creditor so great an advantage which the Legislature never intended to give him? My opinion, therefore, is, that the conditional order is not 'the order' properly so called, but is merely notice to the party that an order will be made, unless he shews cause against it." These observations were made when the practice of the court was different from what it is at present, and it has since been altered in conformity with the suggestions of Sir E. Sugden, by substituting a notice for the conditional order. I think this authority is directly applicable to the case before me; the conditional order was in effect notice to the respondent, to give him an opportunity to shew cause, and the rents were not attached until the absolute order of the 20th of January, 1849. Mr. Morris is therefore entitled to the rents received before that time.

"Be it so on original notice, and be it so for transfer of residue of said sum of £217 8s., Gov. 8 per cent. consols, after said transfer to M. Morris to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for Ireland; and let said Commissioners, and said M. Morris have their costs of said motion, as costs in said fifth and seventh matters."

MARTIN v. O'FLAHERTY.—May 29th & June 3rd.

Motion for receiver—An answer—Affidavit permitted to be used.

Bill filed to raise a charge, stated that a sum was due for interest; but did not interrogate the defendant on that point. The answer did not admit that any sum was due, or at all refer to the statement in the bill. Upon a motion for a receiver, Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to use an affidavit setting forth the sum due, in support of the motion.

The bill in this case was filed on the 18th of January 1849, and stated that Sir John O'Flaherty being seised in fee of certain lands in the county of Galway by articles, bearing date the 18th of June, 1764, and made in contemplation of a marriage then intended between the said Sir John O'Flaherty with Mary Royse, the sum of £1500 was covenanted to be charged on said lands, for the daughters or younger children of the said marriage; that by indenture bearing date the 15th of August, 1772, said lands were conveyed to trustees upon trust, amongst others, to raise said sum of £1500 for said younger children. That said marriage was duly solemnized, and there was issue thereof one son, and one surviving daughter Mary, who was the mother of the plaintiff R. J. Martin. That in October, 1806, said Mary married Robert Martin, and by articles of agreement bearing date the 5th of October, 1806, and reciting that the said Mary was entitled to said sum of £1500, same was vested in trustees, the interest to be paid to the said Robert Martin for his life, and after his decease to the said Mary in case she survived him, then amongst the children of the marriage, share and share alike on default of appointment. That the plaintiff Robert J. Martin was the only issue of said marriage, who upon the death of his mother became entitled to the said sum of £1500, subject to the life interest of his father therein. That said plaintiff married Eliza Leeson, and said sum of £1500 was covenanted to be assigned to trustees upon certain trusts therein mentioned. That said Robert Martin was long since dead, and there was no issue of the marriage between the plaintiffs. The bill then stated that the estates charged were disentailed, and by demise became vested in the defendant George Fortescue O'Flaherty, who was then in possession. That the interest on said sum of £1500 was regularly paid by Sir J. O'Flaherty, and Thomas H. O'Flaherty his son, up to the first day of May 1847; and that interest on said sum from said last mentioned day was then due, and in arrear to plaintiff, except the sum of £10 received on account thereof, and that plaintiffs were desirous of having said sum of £1500, with the interest thereof, paid off and discharged, and for that purpose he made frequent applications to the defendant G. F. O'Flaherty. The bill then prayed an account of the sum due to the plaintiffs on foot of said charges, and that same might be paid, and in default, for a sale and a receiver.

The bill did not interrogate the defendant as to whether there was any sum due for principal or interest, on foot of said charge, or whether any payments had been made; and the defendant, by his answer, stated he believed the several deeds were executed, and referred to them; but did not admit that interest had been paid, or that any sum was due, or refer in any way to these statements in the bill. Some questions were raised by the answer, as to whether said sum was well charged on the lands. On the 29th of May, 1849, an affidavit was filed by the plaintiff, Robert J. Martin, which, after setting out the several matters in the bill mentioned, stated that the interest on said charge or sum of £1500 was duly paid from time to time by the said Sir J. O'Flaherty during his life-time, and up to the time of his decease, in the year 1808, to the parties then entitled thereto, and that from the decease of the said Sir J. O'Flaherty, his son T. H. O'Flaherty, regularly paid said interest unto plaintiff's father, during his life, and since the death of plaintiff's father, on the 20th of May, 1840, said T. H. O'Flaherty, from time to time, duly paid the interest on said charge unto plaintiff, and continued so to do up to May, 1847, and that such interest was, on several occasions, remitted to the plaintiff by the defendant George F. O'Flaherty, acting for and as the agent of the said T. H. O'Flaherty, as by the letters of said defendant in the possession of plaintiff might appear. The affidavit also stated, that the sum of £156 3s. as and for an arrear of said interest, being nearly two years, ending on the 1st of May, 1849, then remained justly due and owing to plaintiff, together with the said principal sum. That plaintiff had made several applications to the defendant, G. F. O'Flaherty, for payment of said interest, without effect. That said defendant, in reply to one of such applications, wrote a letter to plaintiff, bearing date the 29th of August, 1848, in which defendant made the following statement, "I am not unmindful of my promise, and am making the best arrangements I can for the purpose. I am even trying to obtain a loan in case the fair should not turn out well. I am told I shall have no difficulty in case I make it a first charge, which I cannot do without paying you off. I am not disposed to do this, and conceive you could not invest your money in a better way, and I shall not, unless I am by circumstances forced to do so." The affidavit then stated that previous to the filing of the bill, plaintiff's solicitor wrote to said G. F. O'Flaherty, stating that proceedings would be instituted to recover principal and interest, unless the interest was paid; and the said defendant, by his answer, bearing date the 28th of October, 1848, admitted his liability, and excused the non-payment of the interest. The plaintiff believed, unless a receiver was appointed, the arrear of interest would be in danger of being lost, and that the lands were charged with payment debts to a considerable amount, subject to plaintiff's charge.

This was a motion on behalf of the plaintiff, that it might be referred to the Master to appoint a receiver on the answer and affidavit.

Mr. Deasy, Q. C. & Mr. Blake, for defendant, contended that the motion must be refused, as there was not any admission in the answer that interest was due, and the plaintiffs had no right to make use of the affidavit, as the defendant had not been interrogated whether there was any interest due, or whether any payments had been made. The answer must therefore be considered full, for by the rule a defendant need not answer any statement in the bill, unless specially interrogated therein. The motion like the present, an affidavit is permitted to be used only in cases where the answer is not full.

Mr. Hughes and Mr. Henderson for plaintiff.—The bill contains a statement of the facts, and the defendant is at liberty to contradict any statement in the bill, although he may not be interrogated to it. In Bell v. McLoghlin, (11 & 12 Ph. 279), upon motion for a receiver on bill and answer, the plaintiff was permitted to use an affidavit, and it does not appear that there was any interrogatory granted to that particular fact. [Master of the Rolls.—That case was decided before the new general orders of 1843.] There is no case which decides that an affidavit cannot be used to supply the omission of a fact passed over in the answer; an affidavit cannot be used to contradict an answer, but that is not the case here.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—I think this motion would be refused in England, upon the authorities there, and if the defendant in his answer swore that no interest was due, I would not permit an affidavit to be used to contradict the answer. However, I will look into the matter.

June 12.—The MASTER OF THE ROLLS—His Lordship on this day referred to the cases of Ury v. White, (3 Beav. 357,) and Castellan v. Blencowe, (12 Sim. 47,) and said that although these were cases for injunctions, they were applicable to the case before him; also to the case of Edwards v. Jones, (13 Sim. 622,) and the same case on appeal before Lord Lyndhurst, (1 Ph. 501,) where it is laid down that on an interlocutory motion for production of documents founded on the answer, an affidavit cannot be admitted to prove a fact, although the answer neither admitted nor denied it. His Lordship then said, It is perfectly plain that on the authority of the case before Lord Lyndhurst, this motion would be refused in England; however, in the case Hogan v. Bodkin, (1 Hog. 374,) Sir W. M'Mahon held that on a motion for a receiver upon answer, the plaintiff was entitled to use an affidavit ascertaining the amount of the arrears of an annuity due; and Sir M. O'Loughlin followed that authority in Bell v. M'Loughlin, (Fl. & K. 272.) These decisions are productive of considerable embarrassment; but I consider it is better to adhere to the practice in this country. In this case there is an omission in the interrogatory part of the bill, which does not enquire whether any interest is due. Under the general order, the defendant is not bound to answer any part of the bill to which he is not specially interrogated the answer is perfectly silent on that point, and it is insisted that the cases do not apply as the defendant is not called on to answer. You cannot use an affidavit to contradict an answer, or to deny any statement in it; but the cases in this country go to the length that you can use an affidavit to meet an evasive denial, or to supply an omission; and, in the present case, the affidavit is to supply an omission. When a defendant is not interrogated there is some difficulty; but I think it is a fine-drawn distinction, and it is better to follow the case of Bell v. M'Loughlin, and the case before Sir W. M'Mahon, although I admit they are directly opposed to the English authorities. In this case also I find that the defendant, by his answer, states that he believes the several deeds were executed, and refers to them, and that, I think, is sufficient on an interlocutory application, as, although there was an omission to interrogate as to whether interest is due, there is an admission of documents, from which it will appear that the interest is due. On the whole, I think it is better to follow the authorities in this country, as it is for the advantage of the public that the practice should be certain.

"Be it so, and let this order not be acted on for one month from the date hereof."

STAUNTON v. BARRINGTON.—July 6th and 7th.

Pauper—Costs.

Bill filed in January, 1842; 3rd of June plaintiff obtained a conditional order for liberty to sue in formâ pauperis; on the 28th of June defendant answered; on the 3rd of November the conditional order was made absolute; on the 13th of January, 1843, the bill was amended, and no further steps taken by the plaintiff. On the 10th January, 1845, defendant answered the amended bill, and on the 24th of June obtained an order dismissing plaintiff's bill with costs generally. In 1849, the plaintiff was arrested under an attachment for these costs. The order of June, 1845 was set aside, and the plaintiff ordered to be discharged.

A bill by a pauper plaintiff will be dismissed without costs, so far as relates to costs incurred subsequent to the order admitting plaintiff to sue as a pauper.

Quere as to the costs incurred in the interval between the conditional and absolute order.

Quere as to costs before the order giving liberty to sue in formâ pauperis.

The bill in this case was filed on the 12th of Jan. 1842, for an account of the assets of John Staunton, deceased, against the defendant, Mathew Barrington, who was the sole acting executor and trustee, the other executors having renounced. On the 3rd of June, 1842, the plaintiff obtained a conditional order, for liberty to sue in formâ pauperis, and on the 3rd of November following, this order was made absolute. On the 28th of June, 1842, the defendant, Barrington, filed his answer; on the 13th of January, 1843, the bill was amended, and no further proceedings were taken by the plaintiff, who immediately afterwards went to reside out of the jurisdiction. On the 10th of January, 1845, the defendant, Barrington, filed an answer to the amended bill; and on the 24th of June, 1845, obtained an order to dismiss the plaintiff's bill with costs, for want of prosecution. The plaintiff having returned to this country in the present year, on the 20th of June, 1849, he was arrested under an attachment for non-payment of the defendant's costs. This was an application on behalf of the plaintiff, that the attachment should be set aside, and the plaintiff be discharged from custody.

Mr. B. Lloyd, and with him Mr. Semple and Mr. B. Thompson for the plaintiff.—The order to dismiss the bill with costs was irregular, as the plaintiff had obtained liberty to sue in formâ pauperis. A pauper plaintiff might be put in prison for filing an improper bill, Pearson v. Belsher, (4 Ves. 629); or be whipped, (1 Tidd. pr. 94); but a pauper could not be ordered to pay costs. (1 Dan. C. P. 783; 11 Hen. 7, c. 12, 25; Hen. 6, c. 15; 10 ch. 1, st. 1, c. 2, sec. 17, fr.); Gallop v. Ashe, (reported in Beames on Costs, 80); Davenport v. Davenport, (1 Ph. 124); and the case of Higgins v. Vaughan, there cited; Jones v. Peers, (M. Cl. & Young, 282.) The authorities at law are Pratt v. De Larue, (10 M. & W. 509.) [Counsel referred to Church v. Marsh, (2 Hare 652, Beames on Costs, 280); and Paradies v. Sheppard, (Beames on Costs, appendix, 252.)]

Mr. Rogers, contra, for the defendant Barrington, contended that in some cases, paupers are compelled to pay costs, and referred to Wilkinson v. Belsher, (2 Br. C. C. 272,) where a pauper plaintiff was not permitted to amend by leaving out defendants without paying their costs, and to the case of Pearson v. Belsher, (in 3 B. C. C. 87), where it was held that a pauper was not entitled to dismiss his bill against defendants, without payment of costs. [Counsel referred to Harrison, C. Pr. 391; 1 Sim. C. Pr. 710; Made. Pr. 740.]

July 7.—Mr. Lloyd in reply.—The case of Pearson v. Belsher, (3 B. C. C.) is misreported; the order to dismiss, in that case was made without costs. (Vide Br. C. C. by Belt, 87; and see 4 Ves. 629; Beames on Costs, 80); and a defendant cannot, by putting in an answer, be entitled to dismiss a bill with costs, without notice to the plaintiff.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The facts and dates are as follow:—On the 12th January, 1842, the bill was filed; on the 1st of June, 1842, a petition was presented, according to the then practice, for liberty to sue in formâ pauperis, and a conditional order made, which was served on the defendant on the 6th of June; on the 28th, the defendant filed his answer. On the 3rd of November, the conditional order, giving liberty to sue in formâ pauperis was made absolute; on the 13th of January, 1843, the bill was amended; on the 18th of January, 1845, more than two years after, the defendant filed his answer; and on the 24th of June, 1845, he obtained an order that the bill should stand dismissed, with costs, for want of prosecution. At the time that order was made, it appears that the plaintiff was out of jurisdiction, and the attention of the late Master of the Rolls could not have been drawn to the fact that the plaintiff had obtained an order giving liberty to sue in formâ pauperis. That circumstance should not have been suppressed. As has been contended, the last proceeding being in 1843, I am not sure that a question does not arise, how far the defendant was entitled to put in an answer in 1845, merely for the purpose of having the bill dismissed with costs; but I need not now decide that point; the plaintiff having lately returned to this country, was arrested for the costs of these proceedings. The general rule of law on this subject is laid down by Baron Parke in the case in Meeson and Welsby, to which Mr. Lloyd has referred, also in the case of M'Donough v. O'Flaherty, (Beattie, 54.) Sir Anthony Harte there says, "The rule of permitting a man to sue or defend in formâ pauperis, springs out of the benignity of our law, which provides that every man, however low and poor his station, shall be enabled to obtain the same measure of justice as the highest and most opulent; it gives the pauper a right to come into court without expense, otherwise his poverty would preclude him coming there. The same commiseration protects him, if unsuccessful, from payment, because such an order would serve only to imprison him interminably." In that case, Sir A. Harte directed costs to be paid by the plaintiff, because a fund was realized. A pauper may not only carry on proceedings but is free from payment of costs, that is the general rule; no doubt there may be cases which will disentitle a plaintiff to the benefit of the order, and if it is improperly obtained, it is well established that the court has power to dispauper the plaintiff, and compel him to pay costs; but that is not the case here, for there is not any impropriety of conduct suggested, which would authorize the court in making such an order. The question is, whether the dismissal of the bill, or the submitting to the defendant's doing so, amounts to an admission that the plaintiff ought not to have taken any proceedings? In case of non-suit, the court will not compel a pauper plaintiff to pay costs. As to the case of a bill being dismissed, although from a misreport in 3 Browne, C. C., there is some difference of opinion in the text writers; in the case referred to, the decision was the opposite from what it is represented, and the bill was dismissed without costs, although on the application of the pauper himself, which is stronger against him than if the bill was dismissed by a defendant. The case of Wilkinson v. Belsher, (2 B. C. C.) was misunderstood; in that case some costs were incurred previous to the order admitting the party to sue in formâ pauperis, and the observations of the court had reference to these costs. In the case of Gallop v. Ashe, referred to in Beames on Costs, which may be taken as a correct note, it was decided by the Vice Chancellor that if a bill by a pauper be dismissed for want of prosecution it must be without costs; in this country there is the case of Dogherty v. Dogherty, (reported 2 L. Rec. O. S. Ex. 439,) it was an application by a defendant that the plaintiff's bill should be dismissed with costs for want of prosecution, and Baron Pennefather adverted to the distinction where a party dismissed his own bill, which was a voluntary act, and different from a dismissal by a defendant. Counsel in the case having pressed for costs up to the time plaintiff was admitted to sue in formâ pauperis, and referred to a case in this court; Baron Pennefather, in giving judgment, said: "With every deference for the Master of the Rolls I differ from him in opinion; were it meant to apply such a principle the order admitting the party a pauper would so provide, &c. Easter's dismissal without costs, plaintiff having been admitted a pauper." This is an authority that on the application of a defendant the court will not dismiss a pauper's bill with costs. There is this difficulty in the case; the order of June, 1842, giving liberty to sue in formâ pauperis, was not made absolute until November following, and some of these costs were incurred in the interval, and am I to consider the date of the absolute or the conditional order as the time from which the plaintiff was entitled to sue as a pauper? However it is not necessary to decide that now, for after the order, giving liberty to serve as a pauper, was made absolute, the bill was amended, and costs were incurred; on the 6th of June, 1842, the conditional order was served, and on the 26th of June following the answer was filed; it is without doubt that at least £50 costs were incurred subsequent to the absolute order, the attachment was, therefore, grounded on an irregular order, directing all the costs to be paid, and I cannot apportion these costs. In this case considerable costs were incurred after the order was made absolute, and the order dismissing the bill was made on a suppression of facts for which the defendant should suffer.

"Let the order of the 24th day of June, 1845, (the plaintiff by his counsel in open court undertaking not to bring any action at law), made in this cause, be set aside without prejudice to the defendant applying as he may be advised that the bill may stand dismissed with costs, incurred prior to the order admitting the plaintiff to sue in formâ pauperis, and let the attachment which issued in this cause be set aside, and the plaintiff be discharged from the custody of the sheriff of the County of Dublin, and let each party abide his own costs."

* By a consent order in this cause, made on the 23rd of July, the order of the 7th of July was varied, and the bill was directed to stand dismissed without costs.—Reg. Lib. 445, fo. 54.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

In re BELL, A LUNATIC.—April 17, 21.Costs.

A mortgagee's solicitor obtained the carriage of a sale in a lunacy matter, and wrote a letter to the committee's solicitor, promising to do his best to save expense to the lunatic. The sale took place within a very short time after the title had been investigated for the mortgagee by the same solicitor. Held that the solicitor was not entitled to charge part of the costs of preparing the abstract, or for any matters which he appeared to have previously performed when investigating title for the mortgagee. Semble, that even if such letter had not been written, he would not have been entitled to such charge a second time.

This was an application to review the taxing-master's report. In 1841, John Brooke, the petitioner, took a mortgage of the lands of Richard Bell, and employed Mr. Gausson as his solicitor, to investigate title, which was done. On the 13th May, 1843, Mr. Bell was declared a lunatic, and on the 2nd August, 1844, an order was made that his lands should be sold for the payment of the incumbrances upon them, and the carriage of this order was given to the petitioner. On the taxation of the costs of sale, the taxing-master, amongst other items, disallowed—First, a charge for comparison of those title-deeds, which had been, or should have been compared on the occasion of the loan, and, secondly, for reading and noting the abstract. The petition was in part directed against this ruling. The facts of the case so fully appear in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, it is not necessary to state them more fully.

April 21.—LORD CHANCELLOR.—This application regards several classes of costs; on some I have expressed my opinion, on those I have reserved it, the case stands thus—Mr. Brooke, a mortgage creditor of the lunatic, in that character had obtained the carriage of the proceedings, and the entire conduct of the sale, by an arrangement in the office was given to Mr. Gausson, Mr. Brooke's solicitor, and the costs in question have been incurred in that character. In regard to these objections, it seems that Mr. Gausson charged for the preparation of the abstract of title, and for reading and noting it, or,—as in the rule settling costs it is termed,—for reading and abstracting the documents in the abstract, and he has further charged for comparing all the copies of deeds. It was objected to these charges, that in 1843 he was solicitor for Mr. Brooke, and had acted in the negotiation of his mortgage; that in that character he had, in the course of business, obtained from Mr. Babington, the solicitor of Mr. Bell, an abstract of title, and copies of the deeds, and that he then, in the discharge of his duty, investigated the title, or must be taken to have done so; that then he should have tested the copies by comparison with the deeds; and that having obtained payment of his costs in the former character, he cannot in the new character of solicitor for the vendor, and being the same person, charge for performing the same duties. It appears that the arrangement for the carriage of the sale was transferred to Mr. Gausson, (nominally to Mr. Brooke,) to save expense. The title-deeds seem to have been handed to Mr. Brooke, to be used in the progress of the sale. In proof of the import of the arrangement, I may refer to a letter from Mr. Gausson to Mr. Babington, thanking him for his generosity, and holding out the expectation that he would do his best for the lunatic. It was contended that, in the abstract, it was the duty of Mr. Gausson to adopt every thing he had done as solicitor of the mortgagee, and that he could not charge a second time for any thing he had done then; and that it was not necessary for him to have again performed the same business. It struck me that such a case must often have occurred in practice, that a solicitor for a mortgagee must often have been shortly afterwards solicitor for the vendor, in cases of foreclosure. I was anxious to obtain information as to the practice on this point, but I could not obtain much. In principle it seems just that parties should not be allowed to charge twice for the same business; at the same time, no one is entitled to call on a solicitor to undertake business without remuneration. It was contended that the dealing of Mr. Gausson for the mortgagee was not the same, that it did not require so much strictness as when he was employed for the vendor, under the rule of this court. I do not take that view; a solicitor for a mortgagee is as much bound to protect his client, as a solicitor for a purchaser. His business is, not to run any risks, but to obtain a clear title, and he cannot found any claim for remuneration on his own omission to do his duty on the first occasion so fully as he should. It may be said, that after a long interval, after ten or twenty years, he might have forgotten the title, and might require to read it over again; but it would be strange on that account to hold that if only a few weeks or months had elapsed, he should be entitled to charge afresh for the same operation. In this case there is something more than the mere general principle, and it is manifest although the letter may not create an engagement capable of being enforced in a court of law, that he undertook the duty for the purpose of doing every thing as cheaply as possible. How, if Mr. Babington himself had been employed to conduct this sale, could he be entitled to charge again for these abstracts for comparing documents, &c., his object being to save expense? Looking at it in that light, I think the taxing-master has taken a just view of the case; he has allowed Mr. Gausson whatever appears additional to his former work, and has disallowed him all the old, all that he had done before. When I consider the nature of the case, and the letter of Mr. Gausson, I think the taxing-master right; even if that letter had not existed, I should have thought him right, though there may be a discretion on the subject. I have not found from the senior Master any case which was before him, but he sent me a case which seems very like this. Scott v. King (7 I. E. R. 483.) It is not easy to see whether the Master of the Rolls there went on the ground that the Master was right, or on the ground that it was not a case to be brought before the court. The application was on behalf of the plaintiff, that Master Gould might review his taxation of the plaintiff's costs in the cause. It appeared that the plaintiff had, in 1838, lent a sum of money on mortgage on the estate of the defendant. On that occasion the title-deeds had been perused by the plaintiff's solicitor, for the purpose of making out the abstract of title, and the costs of that perusal had been paid. A bill was subsequently filed to foreclose the mortgage, and a decree for a sale obtained; the plaintiff's solicitor furnished a new abstract, being precisely the same as the former, deducting the title to 1843, the time of the proposed sale. In taxing the costs, Master Gould disallowed the solicitor his charges for perusal of the deeds and documents in the second abstract. It was contended for the motion exactly as on the present application, that the general order required the second perusal. But the Master of the Rolls said, "Whatever right the solicitor might have had to those costs is not for me now to consider, the case was fully before the Master, and he has exercised his judgment on the question. Am I now to disturb that taxation? The Master was of opinion that the abstract of title made out in 1838 was abundantly sufficient, and I am of opinion that in so holding he has done his duty; I shall, therefore, not now vary his report. Refuse the motion with costs." Whether he concurred with the Master, or was of opinion that the case did not involve any question of principle, it is a decision of Master Gould's, approved by the then Master of the Rolls. I sent for the costs in that case of Scott v. King, and found that they were exactly as stated. I can therefore by no means go the length of holding that, in ordinary cases, the Master would have been wrong in deciding as he has done; but I now decide chiefly on the letter. On these grounds I think this motion has failed, with regard to these two classes of costs.

CALLAGHAN v. CALLAGHAN.—May 3.

Practice—Costs—Special appearance.

A notice party having entered a special appearance under the nineteenth general order, Held to be entitled to her costs, under the special circumstances.

This case came before the court on report and merits. Esther Howe, a judgment creditor, had been made a notice party, and had entered a special appearance under the nineteenth general order. This party had appeared on a motion at the Rolls, of which notice had been served on her under the special appearance. By the order made thereon, the notice defendant obtained a priority as to certain funds in the cause, which she could not otherwise have obtained, and the order declared that she should have the costs of appearing on that motion as part of her costs in the cause. The judgment creditor afterwards appeared in the Master's office, and by virtue of the notice established such priority. The Master by his report referring to this order, reported the priority of the judgment creditor under it, and allowed her the costs of proving her charge without prejudice to her right to apply for her costs as a defendant at the final hearing of the cause.

Mr. Exham appeared for the judgment creditor and submitted that, under the foregoing circumstances, she was entitled to her costs as a defendant in the cause, properly and necessarily incurred, including the costs of the Roll's motion and of the final hearing.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR considered her to be entitled to them, and decreed accordingly.

C. H. B. 101, fo. 377.

MOLLOY v. FRENCH.—June 22nd.

Assignment of Choses in action.

A legatee assigned his legacy without giving notice to the executor or the person on whose debt the assets of the testator were a charge. The executor died; the legatee obtained administration de bonis non, wasted the assets, and became insolvent. Held, that notice to the debtor was not necessary to complete the assignment; that the assets could not be taken to have purchased from the executor, the assignment being as between the parties complete before administration granted to the legatee; that if having been found that the assets wasted were received as assets it could not be considered as payment.

This case came before the court on report and merits. The Master had found specially that St. George French made his will, dated the 3rd of November 1837, reciting that he was entitled to a sum of £10,000, secured by certain securities affecting the George estates, which "he gave, devised, and bequeathed as follows: viz. he gave and bequeathed to his brother, Patrick French, £3000, together with all his interest in and to his house, No. 1, Angel Place, Rathmines, County of Dublin;" and then proceeded to give other legacies, and appointed Dr. Gregory his residuary legatee, and Dr. Gregory and Captain Caulfield his executors. The Master found that St. George French died, and that Dr. Gregory alone proved the will. The Master found that his property amounted to £10,795. That Dr. Gregory possessed himself as executor of £1024, which he applied in a due course of administration. That Dr. Gregory died in 1840. That Patrick French in August, 1840, obtained administration de bonis non of St. George French, by deed of the 8th of February, 1838, P. French assigned to William Hare Maunsell and Thomas Billing the £3000 legacy, and the residue of the estate on certain trusts. W. H. Maunsell was the solicitor in the cause for P. French. The sum of £3000 came to the hands of P. French as personal representative of St. George French £4478. 3s. 7d. with the assent and knowledge of W. H. Maunsell. The Master found that the payments to P. French were made in ignorance, by the party making of the deed of the 8th of February, 1838, that the first intimation given by the said William Hare Maunsell or P. French to C. St. George was that the person liable to pay the money which formed the assets of the said St. George French, was the said Christopher St. George French, on the 24th of December, 1844, after which no payment was made by the said Christopher St. George French of the assets without an order, and that Christopher St. George had stated on oath that if he had made aware of the deed he would not have made any of the payments. The Master found Patrick French entitled to credit for the sum of £5563. 15s. 3d. properly disbursed by him, that there was a deficient fund, and that P. French was an insolvent debtor, and that it had been submitted to him that the entire loss should be borne by the legacy of £3000, which he refused to do not being authorized by the decree in the cause.

To this report exceptions were taken, raising the question of liability to bear the entire loss.

The Lord Chancellor having felt much doubt on the first argument, it was again argued by Mr. Serjeant O'Brien for the exceptions.

Mr. Martley, Q. C. for the assignees of Patrick French.

June 22nd.—LORD CHANCELLOR, (after stating the case).—It is contended that the assignees of P. French's legacy must abide by the rule which would have obtained if there had been no assignment; that the deficiency must be charged to the account of the legacy. The case in Molloy, Hopkins v. O'Brien, (Moll. 562,) and other cases leave no doubt that a legacy when assigned must be taken subject to the equities which affected it previously, the same rule applying to it as to other choses in action, and that if the executor who assigned the legacy prove a debtor to the estate that affects his assignees. It is contended that the present case is the same in principle. At the hearing there was a direction to inquire in what capacity P. French had received the money, and the Master found that he had received it as administrator de bonis non of St. George French, that he had received it from the general administration of the estate, and that he had distributed it in different proportions to the legatees. The plaintiff's bill was originally framed to restrain Patrick French from meddling with the assets of the testator, which was undoubtedly a course he had a right to take. In 1843 the plaintiff having obtained a payment from Patrick French, made an arrangement with him by which he was left free to deal with the estate as he pleased. So far, therefore, the plaintiff must be considered privy to French's receiving the assets, and disentitled to complain of money getting into his hands as administrator. Maunsell appears to have been French's solicitor, and also privy to the receipt of this money, and it was so found by the Master; but the other legatees do not appear to have been so much involved with French as the plaintiff and Maunsell, but none seem to have interfered to prevent his receiving the money, and he seems to have acted with the assent of all parties, express on the part of the plaintiff, tacit or perhaps more on the part of the others. In the result there proves to be a deficiency of assets, and the question arises whether the assignees are to bear the entire loss, as French would have done if there had been no assignment, the assignees having become so before French received the funds, or became administrator. Now, though the assignee of choses in action takes them subject to all equities which affect them in the hands of the assignor, it is equally certain that those equities must not be collateral equities. On a former occasion I referred to cases at law respecting bills of exchange which struck me as bearing on that question. That being so the question is, what is the nature of this deficiency of French in relation to the assets, and early in the case I thought that unless the receipt of assets by French amounted to payment of so much of the legacy the exceptions could not be sustained. There was much argument upon the doctrine of notice, and it was said that there was not notice to Gregory, the former executor, and that therefore the assignment was not complete. Now it is true that if the question were between Gregory and the assignees, Gregory having made subsequent payments to French or if it were between those assignees and subsequent assignees who had given notice, they could not claim. That was settled by Foster v. Cockerill, (9 Bl. N. S. 332.) It is contended that the assignment is not complete until notice. It is complete between the assignee and assignor between the assignee and trustees. It can only be understood to be incomplete as between conflicting claimants under the same assignor. Besides there is no question as to anything in the life time of Gregory; the controversy has arisen as to events which took place after Patrick French took out administration, as far as that the trustees had notice; for Patrick French, as assignor, had notice when he took out administration, no one could be defrauded by any act done by the administrator in ignorance of the assignment. Why serve a formal notice on French? could that place the case on a different footing? To whom should notice have been given, I cannot say that a person is bound to go beyond the legal owner of a debt, and is bound to give notice to the debtor. It was argued that if notice had been given to some one (whom I know not) French would not have been allowed to take out administration. If notice had been given to Gregory all that could have been done would have been accomplished, and that notice would have died with him. I cannot see how notice to any one would have made any difference. It is then said that the assignment became complete only when administration was granted to Patrick French, and that it must be considered as then commencing. I do not accede to that. It would be forcing on the parties a position which they did not contemplate. To hold it affected with an equity as if then made, would be, as I said, forcing a new contract upon them. I come then to the simple question, is this deficiency to be considered as payment on foot of the legacy; and I must consider the character in which Patrick French received this money as that of administrator. It cannot be contended that when he received this money it would have been payment on foot of the legacy. When did it become so? It is in the result, rather a question of set off which here could not have any weight. For these grounds, I do not think this can be considered as payment of this amount to French on foot of the legacy; but it is to be considered as if the assignees were legatees. He is a trustee for them as well as for the legatees, I cannot decide otherwise without infringing on the principles of assignments of choses in action, and forcing on assignees the result of conditions of affairs which had existence only subsequently to the assignment. It is a case full of doubt and not yet free from it; but, on the whole, this is the best opinion I can form.

ROLLS COURT.

FAWCETT v. BIGGS.—July 17.

Practice—Costs in stayed suits—Plaintiffs personally liable.

Several suits having been instituted, a decree was obtained in Fawcett v. Biggs, upon motion, to stay the plaintiffs from further proceedings in the other causes. On the 14th of February, an order was made to stay those suits, with liberty to the plaintiffs to come in under the decree in the first cause, and prove their demands, together with their costs, and such costs as they were liable to pay the defendants in the stayed suits.

Mr. Sherlock, for Samuel O'Mara, plaintiff in the sixth cause, now moved to vary this order, and that such of the defendants as had charges on the estate might prove their costs in said causes with their demands, and that the plaintiffs might pay the costs of such of the several defendants as had not charges on the estate, and could not prove.

[Counsel relied upon Levinge v. De Montmorency, (1 Ir. Jur. 251), and the manuscript note of Lofstie v. Forbes, then cited, from which it appeared that where several suits are instituted in the Court of Chancery, the plaintiff in a stayed suit is not personally liable to the costs of all the plaintiffs, but only such of them as cannot prove in the cause.]

Mr. Drury, contra, relied on the case of Lofstie v. Forbes, (as reported in 2 I.E. Rep. 443,) and contended that the practice thereby established should not be disturbed, as such a practice tended to prevent the institution of unnecessary suits.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—In the case of Levinge v. De Montmorency, a manuscript was produced to the Court of Exchequer, stated to be a note by Sir M. O'Loughlen of the case of Lofstie v. Forbes. This manuscript was never heard of before, and I will not act on it without knowing something more precise concerning it. The case of Lofstie v. Forbes was very well considered, and having called for the affidavits, I think the report is correct, although not very full, and that case has also been followed by the Lord Chancellor on appeal. Nothing is so injurious as to change the practice of the court, and my great anxiety has been to keep it as well settled as possible. I am not prepared to dissent from Sir M. O'Loughlen, and I think that the reasons given for his decision in Lofstie v. Forbes are stronger than those given by the Court of Exchequer in the case which has been cited, the practice of filing a number of bills is to be discouraged when parties can prove their demands in other suits.

"Refuse this motion with costs."

Lib. 288, fo. 387.

[The following report of the case of Lofstie v. Forbes, cited by V. Scully, Esq., one of Her Majesty's counsel, in Levinge v. Montmorency—and to whom we are indebted for it—is taken from a note-book in the hand-writing of the late Sir Michael O'Loughlen, M. R., and is transcribed therefrom verbatim.]

HARE v. LORD FORBES.—Feb. 10, May 4, 1840.

Mr. O'Hara moved for the defendant, O'Key, that the plaintiff may be obliged to pay him £24, his taxed costs. He was made a defendant in this suit, the further prosecution whereof is stayed by an order in Lofstie v. Lord Forbes, and the plaintiff is ordered to prove his demand, and costs of his suit, and of the defendant, to whom he is liable to pay costs under the decree in that case; he is bound to pay the costs of the defendant, and prove them with his own demand; if he should die, the defendant would lose them.

Mr. Rolleston, contra.—O'Key here is the personal representative of Lord Granard; he must wait for the final decree in Lofstie v. Forbes, and get costs out of the fund. (2 Molloy, 463, 466, 469.)

SIR M. O'LOUGHLEN, M.R.—I ordered the motion to stand until next term, and to be then moved in both causes, in order that I may see whether there were any funds in Lofstie v. Lord Forbes to pay these costs.

May 4, (Easter Term).—Mr. O'Hara, for defendant, O'Key, moved that defendant should be paid by plaintiff his costs in this cause. On the 18th of June, 1838, on the motion of the plaintiff in Lofstie v. Lord Forbes, who had obtained a decree to account, the proceedings in this cause were stayed, and the plaintiff ordered to be at liberty to prove his demand, and his costs, and the costs of such of the defendants in this cause as he (as plaintiff in this cause) was liable to pay. Order v. Copley, (2 Molloy, 469.) The 7th of June, 1839, is the date of the decree in Lofstie v. Lord Forbes. On the 25th May, 1839, O'Key moved to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, which motion was refused with costs. O'Key is personal representative of the late Lord Granard, for whose debts the suits were instituted, and unless the court now orders payment of the costs, the defendant O'Key cannot get them. Plaintiff called upon us to tax those costs.

Mr. Rolleston contra.—There is a question here, whether defendant would, even if the suit were prosecuted, be entitled to costs against the plaintiff. The words of the order here are only to costs which the plaintiff may be liable to pay, and the case in Molloy does not decide the case in favour of the application; it is an authority for me. Jackson v. Curtis, (2 Mol. 463.) In that cause the suit in the Exchequer had terminated. The practice appears from the cases, Jackson v. Leaf, (1 Jac. & W. 230, S. C. 2 Mer. 481; Packwood v. Maddison, (1 S. & St. 232), shews that if there be a decree to account, a party should move to stay proceedings, and not answer a bill filed by another creditor. Paxton v. Douglas, (8 Ves. 520); Talbot v. Spinner, (24th January, 1831, in this court.) On the 8th of May, 1837, bill in Lofstie v. Forbes was filed, but Hare, the plaintiff in this suit, was not a defendant; in November, 1837, bill in this cause was filed. In what priority is the plaintiff to have these costs? Is it according to the priority of his mand, or the demand of the defendant seek costs?

Darley (for Lord Granard, the inheritor,) that the inheritor may, in this manner, be d with costs to which he would not be uld-liable.

O'Hara in reply.

M. O'LOUGHLIN, M.R.—In the case of Loftie v. Lord Forbes, a bill was filed on the 8th of May, by a judgment creditor of the late Earl of rd, for a sale of his property, for payment of intiff's debts, and the debts of all other cre- of the Earl; and on the 7th of June, 1838, a was pronounced in that cause for an ac- of the real and personal estate of the Earl, 'his debts. In November, 1837, Hare, the ff in this suit, who was not a defendant tie's cause, filed his bill as a creditor of rl, praying similar accounts; and after seve- sers had been filed, namely, on the 13th e, 1838, an order was obtained in both , on the motion of Loftie, the plaintiff first suit—the person representing the estate an infant, and the trustees in the will of Lord s not objecting to staying the proceedings in uit, and giving the plaintiff liberty to prove mand under the decree in the first cause, to- r with such costs as he might be liable to pay, ling also his costs on the motion. On the May, 1839, defendant, O'Key, who is the per- representative of the Earl of Granard, moved mis this bill for want of prosecution, and as proceedings were stayed by an order of the , his motion was refused with costs. He now s for an order on the plaintiff to pay these and the question is, is the plaintiff to pay now, or must the defendant wait until the in the cause of Loftie v. Lord Forbes are ctive? There are difficulties at both sides of action; on the one hand it is perhaps a severe to compel the plaintiff, whose proceedings ayed, to pay costs now, which, at all events, old not be liable to pay until the termination : suit, and which, perhaps, even then he might e bound to pay; on the other hand, the de- nt has a right to say he should not be obliged ut until the second suit shall be determined yment of his costs; there may not be funds at cause to pay him; he may not be a defend- herein, or entitled to make any claim as a cre- under the decree in that cause; the remedy is costs may be lost by the death of the plain- or his own death. These, and many other ns might be urged on his behalf. It appears e, on the whole, to be the better course, to hold the plaintiff is bound to pay their costs to the dants, when the proceedings have been stayed n order like the present, than to hold that they o have no remedy for them, until the proceed- in the second suit are terminated. Every suitor ; a bill in this court, institutes his suit subject ch liability as the rules and practice of the t impose; one of these rules is, that if before uit is brought to a hearing, there is a decree r which he can have effectual relief, the court stay his proceedings, and oblige him to come in under the decree; and according to the case of Croker v. Copley, (2 Mol. 469,) the suitor whose proceedings are so stayed, must pay the costs of the defendants in his suit, if there is not an avail- able fund for payment of these costs. The case of Talbot v. Spinner, in this court, in January, 1831, which has been cited, is not an authority to the contrary. I have been furnished with the papers in that cause, and from them it appears that it was stated in an affidavit used on the motion, that the cause in the Exchequer would be finally heard in the next term, and a fund produced to pay the costs, and that the defendant who moved for his costs would be paid sooner than if the suit was prosecuted. The order allows the defendant to renew the application, clearly shewing that the court did not consider the motion untenable, and only decided that it was not brought forward at the proper time. In considering the rule to be followed, regard should, I think, be had to the effect that an order for the payment of costs may have in preventing creditors from putting the owners of embarrassed estates to unnecessary and ruinous costs, by instituting several suits when there is one pending, in which the rights of all the credi- tors may be adjusted and enforced; a creditor, if he is to be exposed to a liability to pay costs when his proceedings are stayed, will consider well be- fore he files a bill, as in the present case, six months after the institution of a suit for the sale of the estates, for the purpose of paying all creditors. I give no opinion as to the right of the plaintiff in the present case to have the costs to which I consider him liable, paid out of the fund in Loftie v. Lord Forbes; he may show he may be so entitled. It may be necessary hereafter, in making orders to stay proceedings in creditor suits, to state specially in each case by whom, or in what manner, or out of what fund the costs of defendants are to be paid. In the present case the plaintiff must, in my opi- nion, pay the costs of the defendant O'Key.

HARE V. FORBES, LOFTIE V. FORBES.

May 15.—Mr. Rolleston for Hare.—Plaintiff in one of the causes, moves that he may be paid out of the funds in Loftie v. Forbes. The costs which he is liable to pay to the defendant in this cause, and also his own costs in that cause, he has been ordered to pay the defendant's costs though his proceedings have been stayed by an order. On the 4th November, 1837, Hare's bill was filed as ex- ecutor of J. Atkinson to recover a judgment to the amount of £13,000, due by the late Earl of Granard. The bill in Loftie's cause was filed by a judgment creditor of Lord Forbes, and was filed in the life time of the Earl of Granard, who died in July, 1837; O'Key, the executor of Lord Granard, was not made a party in Loftie's suit until 1838, six months after Hare's bill was filed, no answer was filed in Loftie's cause when Hare filed his bill; we, suing as executors, for so large a sum as £13,000, cannot be said to have instituted an un- necessary or vexatious suit, we were not parties to the first cause, no answer was put in for a long time, the first answer was filed the 17th of January, two months after we filed our bill; in June, 1838, after the decree in Loflie's case our proceedings were stayed. Two principles in our favour until a decree is pronounced. Every creditor has a right to institute a suit. Anonymous, (1 Hogan, 69,) puisne creditors, not parties, may, if there be any delay in the prosecution of the suit, file a bill. Robinson v. Grady, (1 Hogan, 147); Thachaberry v. Christian, (1 Hogan, 109); Panton v. Douglas, 8 Ves. 520; Gilpin v. Lady Southampton, (18 Ves. 469); Croker v. Copley, (2 Mol. 469); Anonymous (2 S. & S. 424); as to the costs up to the time of notice of the decree, Brook v. Shinner, (2 Mer. 481.)

Mr. Blackburne, contra.—The restraining order is the 13th June, 1838, in our cause a receiver had been appointed and an order made for a reference to the Master to ascertain how the rent should be applied; the plaintiff in Hare's cause should have waited for the result of our proceedings and not have instituted a suit, the prayer of our bill included an account of all encumbrances affecting the estate. Lord Forbes, who was the eldest son of Lord Granard, had a conveyance of the estate from his father, besides the plaintiff Hare has proved all the costs, as well the defendant's as his own, under the decree in our cause in pursuance of the order of the 13th June, 1838.

SIR M. O'LOGHLEN, M.R.—I was of opinion that I ought to order the receiver in the cause of Loflie v. Lord Forbes, to pay the costs of the defendant in Hare's cause, which costs I had, on the former motion, decided to be payable by Hare when taxed, though his proceedings were stayed by the order of the 13th of June, 1838. Loflie's cause was one instituted with the concurrence of the trustees in the will of Lord Forbes, for the purpose of having the estate of the late Lord Forbes under the control of the court, in order to have the rents applied to pay all creditors according to their priority, and to prevent the institution of several suits. I could not say that Hare's suit was one vexatiously or unnecessarily instituted, there was a sum of £13,000 due to him as executor of another—a large sum—which he, as executor, was bound to call in. The proceedings in Loflie's cause had not been carried on very vigorously. No answer had been enforced, though the bill was filed nearly six months before Hare's was filed, and Hare was not a defendant in that suit. The restraining order was obtained nominally on the part of Loflie; but, really and substantially, for the benefit of the estate. Loflie being a person whose name is used by the trustees of Lord Forbes' will. If then, the estate was to be benefitted and protected by the restraining order, it appears to be but reasonable that it should now pay those costs to which it would be ultimately liable; for Hare was allowed by the restraining order to add them to his demand, and prove the amount in Loflie's cause. It would, I thought, be hard to stay his proceedings for the benefit of the estate and make him pay the costs of the defendants in his suit: in the first instance, leaving him to wait until the termination of the suit in Loflie v. Forbes for repayment. The proper order appeared to me to be that suggested by the late Master of the Rolls in Croker v. Copley, and accordingly I ordered the receiver in Loflie v. Forbes, to pay the costs of the defendants in Hare's cause as taxed, and the costs which he had paid to one of them under my former order in Hare v. Forbes.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—EASTER TERM.

AGRICULTURAL CATTLE INSURANCE COMPANY
v. COFFIN.—April 24th.

Demurrer—Guarantee—Principal and Surety—Matters of Evidence need not be set forth in Declaration—What shall be deemed a sufficient Request.

Declaration in assumpsit charged that in consideration that the plaintiffs would appoint J. B. to be one of their agents, the defendant undertook and promised the plaintiffs that J. B. would account from time to time for all sums of money he should receive for the plaintiffs, according to the terms and regulations contained in the instructions which he might from time to time receive from them. Averment, that J. B. received £500, and did not account for the same according to the instructions received by him. Breach, that the defendant did not pay the £500, or indemnify the plaintiffs against the loss they sustained by the default of J. B. On demurrer to the declaration, Held, that the instructions given to J. B. formed part of the plaintiffs' evidence, and that the counts omitting them were properly framed. Held, also, that the words in the declaration, "Although then and there requested so to do," constituted a sufficient averment—a request being made, and of the time and place at which the request was made.

Assumpsit.—For that whereas heretofore, to wit, on the 31st July, 1845, at, &c., in consideration that the plaintiffs at the special instance and request of the defendant, would appoint one John Brinsden, to be one of the agents of the plaintiffs for transacting the business of the plaintiffs, in and about the district of Newcastle, and other places in that vicinity, he the defendant undertook, and then and there faithfully promised the plaintiffs, that the said John Brinsden should and would from time to time account to the plaintiffs for all sums of money which he, the said John Brinsden should receive for or on account, or on behalf of the plaintiffs, according to the terms and regulations contained in the instructions, which he might receive from the plaintiffs or from any agent or attorney duly authorized by the plaintiffs, to furnish such instructions as aforesaid. And that the said John Brinsden should and would pay to the plaintiffs, or in such manner as directed by such instructions as aforesaid, all such sums of money at the times mentioned in such terms. And that if the said John Brinsden should not duly pay to the plaintiffs any sum or sums so received by him as their agent, the defendant would within one calendar month after notice thereof given to him, pay the whole amount to the plaintiffs; and that the defendant would indemnify the plaintiffs against all loss or damage which might accrue or be occasioned to them by the default or misconduct of the said J. Brinsden as such agent. That the plaintiffs considing in the said promise and undertaking of the defendant, on the 1st of August, 1845, at, &c., did appoint the said John Brinsden to be one of their agents for transacting their business in and about the district of Newcastle and other places in that vicinity. And that on the day last aforesaid the said John Brinsden received from the plaintiffs instructions containing the terms and regulations according to which, and the times at which he should account to the plaintiffs for the moneys which he should receive for them, or on their account or behalf as such agent. And that while the said John Brinsden was so in the employment of the plaintiffs, he received as such agent sums amounting to £500; and that although the time for his accounting for and paying the same to the plaintiffs, according to the terms and regulations contained in the said instructions so received by him from the plaintiffs has long since elapsed, &c. That the said J. Brinsden hath not accounted for or paid to the plaintiffs, or in such manner as directed by the said instructions, or at all the said sum of £500, or any part thereof, and has made default in so doing, although often requested by the plaintiffs so to do. Of all which on the 1st of July, 1847, due notice was given to the defendant by the plaintiffs; and although one calendar month and upwards has elapsed since the said notice was given to the defendant, yet the defendant hath not paid the sum of £500, or any part thereof to the plaintiffs, nor in any manner indemnified the plaintiffs against the loss or damage which has accrued or been occasioned to them by the said default of the said John Brinsden as such agent, although requested by the plaintiffs, but has hitherto neglected and refused, and still neglects and refuses so to do; and the said sum of £500 remains unpaid to the plaintiffs. The second count was substantially the same. The third count stated that on &c. in consideration that the plaintiffs, at the request of the defendant, would appoint J. Brinsden to be one of their agents for &c., the defendant undertook and promised the plaintiffs to indemnify them against any loss or damage which might accrue or be occasioned to them by the default or misconduct of the said J. Brinsden as such agent. And the plaintiffs confiding &c. on &c. at &c. did appoint the said J. Brinsden to be one of their agents for &c. And while the said J. Brinsden was so in their employment he received for the plaintiffs sums of money amounting to £500, but did not pay the said sum or any part thereof to the plaintiffs, although the time for paying the same to the plaintiffs has long since elapsed, but has made default in paying the same, although often requested so to do, of all which premises the defendant had due notice, but he did not nor would pay the said monies or any part thereof to the plaintiffs, or indemnify them from the loss or damage which has so accrued to, or been occasioned to them by the said default of the said J. Brinsden as such agent, although then and there requested so to do; and the said sum of £500 still remains due to the plaintiffs. The declaration also contained the money counts. Demurrer to the first and second counts, assigning for causes (inter alia) that the terms and regulations contained in the instructions in said counts are not stated therein. That it does not appear with sufficient certainty, or at all, from said counts that the time for accounting for and payment of the money mentioned therein hath elapsed, according to the terms and regulations therein stated, nor what time was thereby appointed for that purpose. That the entire contract is not stated in said counts, and that the breach as stated on the part of J. B. is uncertain, and is in the alternative. That consistently with the breach, J. B. may have paid, though not according to the terms and regulations contained in the instructions. That it does not appear in what respect J. B. departed from or omitted to observe the instructions. The causes of demurrer to the third count were, that it did not state at what time J. B. was to pay the sums in that count mentioned; that it did not appear that J. B. was guilty of any default; that it did not appear with sufficient certainty or at all that J. B. was requested to pay the sums in that count mentioned; that no special request is stated therein by the plaintiff to the defendant to pay; that no breach on the part of J. B. appears or that the defendant had notice thereof. Joinder in demurrer.

Sir C. O'Loghlen, (with him Mr. D. R. Kane, Q.C.) for the demurrer. We will deal with the third count first, and we submit that it should have averred a special request. A count against a surety cannot be maintained unless a special request is expressly alleged. (Vin. Abr. tit. Action of Assumpsit, A. A. 8; Cro. Jac. 500.) The plaintiffs ought to have shewn that the principal had failed, and a demand on the defendant. The action is grounded upon collateral matter, namely, the default of a third party; and the mere general request is not sufficient where a special request is necessary to be alleged. The first two counts are bad for uncertainty; the default of the principal is not stated with sufficient certainty. The declaration should shew with certainty that the principal was in default. So much of the instructions ought to be set forth as to shew the time had really elapsed within which the principal was bound to account. [Blackburne, C. J.—The question is, whether the declaration contains sufficient averments to proceed against the principal himself.] It is a special contract to pay at the time mentioned in the instructions. It must appear that the plaintiffs have a cause of action; the mere averment of it by them is not sufficient. (Com. Dig. Pleader, 76;) Clarke v. Gray and others, (6 East. 567, 568.) Here the plaintiffs have set forth the breach, but have not set forth the time within which the contract ought to have been performed. Lord Arlington v. Merricks, (3 Saund. 408; Stephens on Pleading, 384.) We admit that where setting forth a document would lead to long pleading, then it need not be set forth, but the plaintiffs should have set forth sufficient to shew the nature of the instructions, and the time within which the principal was bound to account. Andrews v. Whitehead, (13 East. 102;) Higgins v. Highfield, (1b. 407.) If we had gone to trial, they might have given in evidence any form of instructions; they were not tied up to any one in particular. Beard v. Foran, (1 L. Rec. 2 S. 164.)

Mr. Ormsby, and Mr. Napier, Q.C. contra—A special request was not necessary, and even if it were, we have made one, the words "then and there" make it a special request. Dennison v. Richardson, (16 East. 291.) In Atkinson v. Carter, (2 Chit. 404,) Lord Tentenden says "no notice or demand was necessary, for that a surety was bound to enquire and inform himself whether or not the principal had paid." Lilley v. Hewit, (11 Price, 444.) Where the count is on an agreement to indemnify, no notice to the surety is necessary; he is bound to look after his principal. Cutler v. Southern, (1 Saund. 115.) The contract is not to pay on request. Parget v. Lloyd, (2 Ventr. 278.) The first and second counts can be maintained on two principles. First, because it is not necessary to state in pleading what must be proved in evidence; the plea of the general issue would have put us upon proof of the facts stated: and secondly, because if we set out these instructions the declaration would be prolix. Cryps v. Baynton, (3 Bulstr. 31;) Parsons v. Cottrell, (Sir Thomas Raym. 399.) The proof of all these affirmative propositions would be upon us at the trial. Lord Arlington v. Merricks, (2 Saund. 403,) cited at the other side is conclusive against the defendant. The principal or his surety is bound to have these documents, or if they had them not, they could have got a copy of the guarantee or the instructions by an order of the court. It is said we have not set out the time within which the principal was to account, but he was to account from time to time with the plaintiffs, according to the instructions which he might from time to time receive. In Simpson v. Manley, (2 Cr. & Jr. 12;) Apothecaries Hall v. Calvert, (6 I. L. Rep. 186;) Craig v. Byrne, (7 I. L. Rep. 500,) the general rule is to lay the breach in the terms of the contract, and all that was necessary to aver, was that he received a sum of money and did not account. Shum v. Farrington, (1 Bos. & Pul. 643.)

Mr. D. R. Kane in reply.—No time is stated in the third count within which the principal was bound to account, and there is no averment that a reasonable time had elapsed. Sansom v. Rhodes, (6 Bing. N.C. 261.) Nor is there any averment as to the time when he was to pay the money, whether within a reasonable time or at a precise time. They aver that the principal received the money, but they do not show a request. [Perrin J.—Why should there be a request? the obligation is to pay immediately. Cramp-ton J.—The contract is silent as to time.] Upon the question of special request we submit, the defendant should have been requested by the plaintiffs, and they should have averred the time and place, and the person by whom the request was made; the word requested is the material part, and the special request must be shown to have been made by the plaintiffs in proceeding against the surety. The averment in the first and second counts is that the principal received certain instructions containing the terms which he was to follow, and they should have set out the precise regulations which he violated. The terms and regulations might be such as he could not carry into effect. The instructions are not put in issue; there is nothing to identify them. They allege that the time limited has expired; the principal was to account according to the instructions, and these are facts peculiarly within the knowledge of the plaintiffs. Lawes v. Shaw, (5 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 322;) Warren v. Bickford (7 Price 550;) Hill v. Montagus, (2 M. & Sel. 377;) Parkinson v. Whitehead, (2 Man. & Gr. 329;) Fannin v. Anderson, (7 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 811.) It ought to have been alleged by whom and to whom the special request was made.

BLACKBURN, C. J.—So far as the demurrer applies to the third count, it plainly must be overruled, for that count contains a distinct averment, that the plaintiffs then and there requested the defendant to pay the monies or to indemnify them. There was therefore a demand made upon the defendant, and made by the proper persons. With respect to the demurrer to the two first counts it is to be observed that the declaration states the contract, and assigns the breach in the terms of that contract. The contract was that John Brinsden would pay to the plaintiffs all moneys which he should receive on their behalf, at the times mentioned in the instructions which he was to receive from them. The terms and regulations contained in those instructions were to govern his conduct and his liability. The declaration then avers that John Brinsden received sums of money, and that he neither accounted for or paid them to the plaintiffs, as directed by the instructions. It is said that these instructions should have been set forth; we are not told to what extent. Counsel for the defendant says so much of them should be set forth as would avoid prolixity, but the principle to be collected from other actions such as actions of covenant, applies to the present one and it is plain that these instructions would properly form part of the plaintiffs' evidence at the trial. Upon their production it would then appear whether the general allegations in the declaration could be sustained, nor can I see that the defendant would in any way be prejudiced by such a course of proceeding. For these reasons I am of opinion that the demurrer to the first two counts of the declaration must also be overruled.

CRAMPTON, PERRIN, and MOORE, J. J., concurred.

Demurrer overruled.

ROLLS COURT.

GUINNESS & FITZSIMONS.—April 22nd.

Bankers' Acts.

A creditor who appears in court to oppose the confirmation of the certificate of a banker under 33 Geo. 2, c. 14 and 40 Geo. 3, c. 22, will be restrained by injunction from proceeding at law for recovery of his debt pending the proceedings for the allowance of the certificate.

The bill was filed on the 19th of April, 1849, and stated that for several years prior to the year 1848, and until the 3rd of July in that year the plaintiff had carried on the trade or business of a banker, and kept a public shop for his banking business, and for several years paid the regular banker's license, and was known and recognized as a banker of the city of Dublin, and after stating various instances of banking, and the mode of carrying on business, submitted that the plaintiff was a banker within the meaning of the bankers acts, (33 Geo. 2, c. 14, Ir. and 40 Geo. 3, c. 22, Ir.) and stated that he stopped payment on the 3rd of July, 1848, and in pursuance of the said acts had vested his whole, real, and personal estate in Samuel Vignoles, and Edward Berwick as trustees for the payment of his debts, and defraying the expenses of executing the trust, that he had in all things conformed to the provisions of the acts, that the trustees had given a certificate of his conformity, which was signed by more than the number of creditors required by the acts; that on the 20th of December he had presented his petition to the Chancellor to allow and confirm his certificate, which petition was heard on the 3d of February, 1849, when but two creditors, representing not a fiftieth part of the debts, appeared to oppose, namely Patrick E. Reilly and the defendant. A reference was directed by the Chancellor to Master Litton to inquire whether plaintiff was a banker within the meaning of the Acts, and whether he had in all respects conformed to them. Under the order of reference the plaintiff had filed his charge, and the defendant a discharge, which stated that the defendant, who was an attorney, was a creditor to the amount of about £200, balance of a bill of costs. After the plaintiff's stoppage the defendant was sent notice of the trust arrangement, and called on to prove; he, however, declined doing so, and brought his action in the Court of Queen's Bench, to which the defendant being unable to plead the certificate, put in a plea of the general issue, accompanied by a notice of the proceedings taken to obtain the certificate, and cautioning the defendant from proceeding further at law; the same course was pursued at every subsequent stage of the action, and a trial was ultimately had at the sittings after Hilary Term, when there was a verdict for Fitzsimons. On the first day of term he entered a rule for judgment on the postea, and would be entitled to issue execution on the 21st. The bill stated the various proceedings in the Master's office, the plaintiff pressing on the case, and the defendant retarding it, as the bill alleged, for the purpose of delay, to enable him to issue execution, and prayed that the defendant might be restrained from proceeding to mark judgment on the postea, or, if the same were marked, from issuing execution or taking further proceeding until the order of the Court should be pronounced on the plaintiff's petition.

Mr. Butt, Q.C. moved for the injunction.—In the first place we contend that on the true construction of the 40 Geo. 3, the plaintiff is entitled to complete protection from the moment of the vesting of his property in trustees. [Master of the Rolls—On that construction of the act, you could have pleaded the certificate at law and you have no ground for coming into a Court of Equity.] It was not possible to defend the action at law; and secondly, we contend that the defendant having made himself a party to the proceeding in the petition matter should not be allowed to proceed at law. This is an application of the first impression, but interpleader cases and cases in which a Court of Equity grants an injunction to prohibit pirating with copyrights and patents pending the adjudication of the right before another tribunal are analogous; [Master of the Rolls—Lord Cottenham states that he is slow to interfere where the question depends on restraining the exercise of a legal right. What position do I place the creditor in if not allowed to issue his execution? the plaintiff may leave the country.] Undoubtedly there are cases in which a Court of Equity interferes to restrain the exercise of a legal right, here the court takes the case out of the plaintiff's control, and it should not allow the defendant to oppose the adjudication in this court to enable him to gain an unjust advantage at law. In Bankruptcy a creditor will not be allowed to oppose the certificate and proceed at law, ex parte Bozannet (1 Rose.)

Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C. and Mr. Berkeley, contra.—We are at a loss to ascertain the equity to prevent the creditor pursuing his legal remedy; the first ground put forward by the other side is clearly unsustainable, the defence would have been good at law, and when the trustees had signed the certificate there could have been a plea puis darreign continuance. [Master of the Rolls—The whole equity turns upon the defendant being a party in the petition matter.] Their remedy is misconceived, they should have applied by motion to the Chancellor. There is a distinction between this case and one in Bankruptcy; we are altogether opposing the proceeding, not coming in under it, when a creditor in Bankruptcy opposes the certificate he has previously made his election, there is an important question raised here which the Court of Exchequer have decided in Stafford v. Henry, (ante p. 134,) and it is against the plaintiff. In analogy to a creditor's suit, the court has no right to restrain before decree, so here not until the right that the plaintiff claims (but which we altogether dispute) to have the benefit of these acts, has been decided. Besides, they come too late, and are in the same position as if, under the old practice, they were to come for a special injunction, not having applied for the common one. O'Donnell v. O'Donnell, (1 Hog. 176); Franklin v. Squire; Thomas v. Densey, (3 Mer. 225.) They should have applied before judgment was marked. Taylor v. Christy, (8 Price,) Moses v. Lewis. See ex parte Joseph, (18 Ves.)

Mr. Hickey in reply.—There is no common injunction now; but, in fact, we could not have come earlier. It appears by the bill that it was agreed at the last meeting before the Master that the defendant should be communicated with, whether he would undertake not to issue execution, and his answer was not given until the 17th. The circumstances of this case require this injunction which is "a writ framed according to the circumstances of the case, commanding an act which this court regards as essential to justice, or restraining an act which it esteems contrary to equity and good conscience." Applying the latter part of this definition, would it not be an unconscientious advantage to allow the defendant to proceed at law and oppose in equity? and unjust for the court to take the administration of Mr. Guinness' affairs out of his hands, and hand him over, divested of every shred of property, to a hostile and perseveringly litigious creditor? If the decision be against the plaintiff, and he is declared not to be a banker, no doubt the defendant may be delayed; but that inconvenience is not comparable to the injury Mr. Guinness would sustain, if, pending the inquiry, and it were to terminate in his favour, he were thrown into prison; in the one case there would be a loss of liberty, in the other but a short delay, (for the court can require security for Mr. Guinness' appearance,) and we have laid at all events a prima facie case of the plaintiff being a banker, which would entitle us to an injunction until answer. The case put by the other side, that the court does not interfere in creditors' suits until decree, only applies to distinct proceedings by separate creditors, but if a creditor were in any way to make himself a party in any suit by opposition or otherwise so as to accelerate a proceeding of his own, would it be arguable that the court would not have jurisdiction over him? The early cases in Bankruptcy are not applicable, the bankrupt code being at first framed in a spirit of harshness to the debtor; but that has been relaxed, and it is now settled that a creditor cannot oppose under the bankruptcy and arrest at law, and the bankrupt court can order an ad interim protection. The bankers' acts were remedial statutes; the plaintiff has complied with them strictly, his protection is delayed by the act of the court and of the defendant.

May 23rd.—The MASTER OF THE ROLLS having adverted to the statements in the bill, the appearance of the defendant before the Chancellor, his name being taken down in the order as opposing, the terms of that order of reference of the 3rd of February, the charge of plaintiff, and the discharge of the defendant, in which he not only denied that the plaintiff was a banker within the meaning of the acts, but also that he had conformed to their provisions, and that, pending the reference, the defendant insisted he was entitled to issue execution, and having read the second section of the 40th Geo. 3, cap. 14, stated that it had been argued at great length by counsel for the plaintiff that the certificate of the trustees entitled the plaintiff to protection, although it had not been allowed by the Lord Chancellor, but that it appeared to him that there was no foundation for that argument, that the provisions of the statute nearly corresponded with those in the Irish Bankrupt

Act, (11 & 12 Geo. 3, c. 8,) which was passed in the interval between the two bankers' acts, and having referred to the 43rd, 46th, and 49th sects. of the 11 & 12 Geo. 3, c. 8, (folio edition,) said that the decisions on the English Bankrupt Act were express. Webb v. Marsh, (7 T. R. 227,) where Lord Kenyon said, "As to the certificate being signed, but not allowed, it operates nothing." Tudway v. Bourne, (Bur. C. C. 19,) and Stapleton v. Muebar, (7 T. R. 589.) Upon the second branch of the case a question arises whether the defendant, having appeared on the motion before the Lord Chancellor, and rendered the reference necessary, should not be bound to await the result, or can be allowed to proceed at law pending this reference. There are two courses in bankruptcy open to a creditor: having proved under the commission he may oppose the confirmation of the certificate; or he may proceed adversely to supersede the commission; a third course a creditor cannot be allowed to resort to; not having proved, oppose the allowance of the certificate, and take the bankrupt in execution. His Honor then referred to Ex parte Bostock, (1 D. & Ch. 383); Ex parte Lord, in re Stephens, (2 Rose, 421); Ex parte Joseph, (1 Rose, 189; S. C. 18 Ves. 340,) and said he considered it would be unreasonable to allow the defendant to oppose the certificate, and at the same time to proceed at law, and take the plaintiff in execution. In Ex parte Hardenburgh, (1 Rose, 204,) the bankrupt had obtained his certificate, but whilst it was before the Lord Chancellor for allowance, a creditor who had obtained a judgment for £200, and had not gone in under the commission, presented a petition impeaching the commission, and praying that it might be superseded; upon this petition an inquiry was directed, there was also a sum due for costs to the same creditor, who having issued an attachment for them, arrested the bankrupt, and the latter petitioned for his discharge; the Lord Chancellor, in giving judgment, said, "There is not in this case the difficulty which has been urged on the point of jurisdiction, whether if a creditor comes here merely to remove the commission or certificate out of the way of his proceeding at law, I should consider him as coming in under the commission, and restrain him from proceeding at law, for in this case the creditor goes farther, he prays an inquiry into circumstances impeaching the validity of the commission with a view to supersede it, or in case that the commission should not be superseded that there may be a new choice of assignees, and that he may be permitted to prove; now it seems exceedingly clear that pending this inquiry, he himself proposing it, he must abide by the alternative, and stop till the result is ascertained." In the present case the defendant goes farther by his discharge than the opposition to the certificate, for he requires proof of the execution of the deeds vesting the estate in the trustees; he also insists that even if the plaintiff is a banker he has not complied with the requisitions of the statutes, and renders it necessary for the plaintiff to go into evidence to prove this alternative inquiry. If the defendant had not appeared before the Chancellor I might have no jurisdiction, but, having done so, I will grant this injunction.

Lit. 285, fo. 331.

MASTER'S OFFICE.

IN THE MATTER OF R. S. GUINNESS, PETITIONER.

A party trading openly as a banker found to be a banker within the meaning of the Acts, 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, and 40 Geo. 3, c. 22, notwithstanding that he carried on another more ostensible business than that of banker.

Held that the 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, and 40 Geo. 3, c. 22, extend to all bankers, as well those whose banks are not of issue, as those which are so.

The reference was proceeded with before Master Litton, the charge of the petitioner stating nearly the same facts as to banking as those charged in the bill, and averring that he assumed openly, notoriously, and manifestly the character of a banker, kept open shop or place of business, was known by common repute as a banker, received lodgments on accountable unstamped receipts, paid drafts or cheques of persons having banking accounts with his firm, that his drafts were taken in lodgment by other bankers, that he issued letters of credit on bankers in England, and on the continent of Europe, charged the usual banker's commission in his dealings with foreign bankers, discounted bills, paid banking license until the year 1843, when he was informed it was not necessary to pay license except he issued notes, that his name appeared as a banker for several years in the public Directories, and sheet almanacks, that his books were kept strictly as banking accounts, and distinct from his business as Land Agent, that his transactions were very large, exceeding in some years a million sterling, that for some time he acted as agent to the Agricultural Bank, and that his house was the only house in Dublin where their notes could be retired until a change in the law removed the restrictions imposed on Joint Stock Banks. That his house of business was open every day, except Sundays and the usual bank holidays, from 10 to 3. The discharge traversed some of these statements, and stated that the petitioner drew cheques on Messrs. La Touche as a private person and not as a banker, that his house of business had not the appearance of a banking establishment, that he held himself out as a land agent and not as a banker, that he was not at the time of his stoppage duly licensed, that any banking business which he carried on was merely incidental to his business as a land agent, and for the convenience of the parties with whom he was so connected, that after diligent inquiry the defendant could discover no instance of the plaintiff having acted as a banker, and that he never issued notes.

The petitioner examined more than twenty witnesses and the defendant six; several of the former proved that they kept Banking and no other accounts with the petitioner, and that they, in fact and truth, believed him to be their banker. It was also proved by a number of witnesses that his house had the appearance of a banking establishment; that he received lodgments on accountable unstamped receipts, paid drafts or cheques; issued letters of credit; discounted bills in the same way as other bankers; that the forms of dockets, cheques, pass-books were the same as those used by bankers; that his house was open from ten until three for regular business, and from three to four for the payment of bills; that a cashier was always ready to receive and make payments; and 18 witnesses, including Mr. Alexander Boyle and Mr. Wm. Digges Latouche, swore, that he was known by common repute as a banker. It was also proved that his cheques were taken in payment by other bankers and other bankers cheques by him; his books were produced, and there were distinct ledgers for the land agency and banking accounts. Various almanacks, directories, bankers licenses, forms of drafts, receipts, dockets and cheques, which passed through other banks, were also given in evidence. The defendant's witnesses proved that the defendant's firm kept an account with the Bank of Ireland, and that when he opened the account he designated himself as Land Agent and Barrister-at-Law. The secretary to that bank stated that he never directly had any communication with the petitioner or his copartners in the capacity of bankers; that he always understood him to be a Land Agent, and believed that he discounted bills to accommodate some of his friends, and did not think he was known by the public as a banker, and did not believe that the petitioner came under the denomination of a banker. On cross-examination, after examining the various documents used by the petitioner in his business, he stated that if documents similar in form represented bona fide transactions, he would say that the firm of R. S. Guinness and Co., were conducting the business of bankers, and that it was customary for bankers in the city of Dublin to keep accounts with the Bank of Ireland. Two other gentlemen connected with the Bank of Ireland, and Mr. Richard Williams, gave nearly similar evidence in their direct examination, and qualified it on cross-examination. Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Wm. D. Latouche, who were both examined by the defendant swore, both on direct and cross-examination, that they believed the petitioner to have followed the business of a banker, and that he was reputed to be such in the course of business in the city of Dublin. The defendant also gave in evidence the answer of the petitioner to a cross bill, filed by the widow and minor children of his deceased partner, for discovery of the accounts of the partnership, and also the deed of partnership executed in 1838, in which the firm became partners as Land Agents, and the dissolution of that partnership in the Dublin Gazette as Land Agents. It appeared by the answer that it had general reference to partnership transactions, and the petitioner in one passage spoke of his present business as "banker and land agent," and in another of charging interest "according to established mercantile custom, and to the usage of bankers."

Mr. Hickey for the petitioner.—It will be necessary to prove two points, first, that the bankers' acts apply to banks of deposit as well as banks of issue, and, secondly, that the petitioner was a banker within their meaning, and that his trading was not incidental to his other business, but a distinct, substantial and known occupation. There are three statutes that it will be necessary to refer to: the 8th Geo. 1, c. 14; 33rd Geo. 2, c. 14; 40th Geo. 3, c. 22. In none of them is the word "banker" defined, nor can any reason be deduced why it should be used in a restricted and not the ordinary acceptation of the word. Banks of deposit existed long before banks of issue were known; the first application of the word "bank" was confined to banks of deposit, and of "banker" to those who kept such banks. Doctor Johnson defines a bank "to be a place where money is laid up to be called for occasionally," and banker "one that trafficks in money, one that keeps or manages a bank," and Toulmin, "The monied goldsmiths first got the name of bankers in the reign of King Charles, II., but bankers now are those private persons in whose hands monies are deposited and lodged for safety, to be drawn out again as the owners have occasion for it." The Lombard Jews were the first bankers, and the term "bank" is derived from the benches on which they sat to transact business. This being the true derivation of the word, it must be assumed, apart from legislative glossary, that the word "banker" has been used in its known, legal, and ordinary signification. There might be more difficulty in arguing that it included a banker of issue, (a banker of issue being the novelty,) but none that the word bears the meaning it always bore. The 8th of Geo. 1, is more comprehensive than its title, "An Act for the better securing the Payment of Bankers' Notes," and exactly defines what a banker is, "that where any person or persons doth or shall follow or exercise the trade or calling of a banker, by keeping a public house or office for the receipt of the money of such persons as are willing to deposit the same in his or their custody." There is no part of this definition to issue notes, and the fourth section applies to all creditors and all bankers, not merely to those who were holders of notes; and this construction was given to those sections and the 8th section of the 33 Geo. 2, c. 14 in Hayden v. Carroll, (3 Ridg. judgment, p. 593-597.) If the words "all creditors" were held to apply to those of every class, not merely holders of notes, who were ostensibly the object of legislative interference, the words "all bankers" in the same act should apply to every class of bankers. That act was repealed by the 33 Geo. 2, the title of which is larger, "for the Security and Payment of Debts due by Bankers." Throughout, the words everywhere are "all bankers, any banker, no banker;" it speaks of their stopping payment, but never ceasing to issue notes. It was designed to be of universal application, and called in the subsequent statute, "the Bankers' Act." The 15th section is conclusive that the Legislature were aware a man might be a banker and yet not issue a note; it imposes a penalty on persons in certain public employments who shall "follow the trade or business of a banker, or by himself, or by any person authorized by him, issue or give any note or accountable receipt as a banker, or in partnership with any banker, or for profit or reward discount any promissory note or accountable receipt." There were three separate things prohibited: to act as a banker, to issue a note, to discount a bill. If the three were necessarily involved in the calling of a banker it would be sufficient to impose the penalty on a public officer acting as a banker. Whatever doubt there could be raised on the two first statutes there can be none on the 40th of Geo. 3. It is "An Act for the Protection of Bankers who shall stop Payment," emphatically a remedial statute, to be construed liberally and not narrowly. That this reading of the statute is correct is much strengthened by the fact that when the 33rd of Geo. 2 was passed there was no bankrupt code in Ireland, the first Irish bankrupt act being the 11 & 12 Geo. 3, c. 8, and, therefore, no means of administering the estates of bankers for the benefit of their creditors. It cannot be supposed that the Legislature confined the Bankers' Act, which is in itself a bankrupt code, to a section and not to the whole body of bankers; and it is very important to bear in mind also that between the passing of the 33rd Geo. 2 and the 40th Geo. 3, not only a bankrupt act was passed, but the Bank of Ireland was incorporated, the 11th section of which was designed to give to it a practical monopoly in the issue of notes. Therefore, by this intermediate legislation, the property of bankers could be administered for the benefit of their creditors, and banks of issue were restricted; and yet it is contended that the 40th Geo. 3 can only apply to bankers of issue, a class whose extinction was rapidly taking place. It is impossible to hold so absurd a construction. On the second branch that Mr. Guinness was a banker, it is only necessary to refer to the evidence given by men of all ranks, classes and professions: barristers, attorneys, tradesmen, men in public offices, merchants, bankers, stockbrokers, bank-directors. He did everything that any private banker ever did as a banker, no land agent ever kept books as he kept them, issued letters of credit, paid duty to the Government, had his name put in almanacks and directories, and did everything in his power to hold himself out as a banker. The transactions in evidence cannot be considered as incidental to the business of a land agent; incidental means either necessarily connected with, or casual, fortuitous, accidental; the evidence is entirely the other way: first, that the banking business was separate from the land agency, next, was constant, systematic, and extensive. The quantum of trading is of no consequence in a case of bankruptcy; Vaughan v. Patman, (1 T. R.) Ex parte General Wyndham, (1 M. D. & De Gez. 146.) Why should there be greater strictness here? The army agent's case, so much relied on in Stafford v. Henry, is in fact a decision in our favour; the opinion of the Chancellor in directing the issue as to what may constitute a banker is clearly so. In Richardson v. Bradshaw, (1 Atk. 128,) the books were not kept as banker's books, the jury found the first part of the issue, "that he was a trader within the meaning of the bankrupt laws," and it was unnecessary to find the disjunctive that he was a banker. In Hankey v. Jones, (Cowp. 747,) in allusion to Richardson v. Bradshaw, Lord Mansfield observes, "I was counsel in that case; I do not remember there was any motion for a new trial, but a very material circumstance there was, that Wilson kept other people's money," in other words, that he was a banker. The facts in this case are as dissimilar as possible from those in Stafford v. Henry; there, to make a forfeiture it was attempted to invest Labertouche with a character which he swore he never assumed, the money paid out on checks was overmarked as the proceeds of stock; in his case his acting as a banker would have subjected him to a penalty; if he did so act his trade was furtive, clandestine, illegal; here open, avowed, legal; there the attempt was made to despoil a creditor of a bonâ fide security, here to upset an arrangement in which the great body of the creditors have acquiesced, and deprive a gentleman, who has divested himself of every shilling he possessed on earth, of that protection to which the laws of his country have entitled him.

Mr. Berkeley, (Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q.C., was with him but did not address the Master through unavoidable absence.)—These acts only apply to banks of issue, it is clear the first act could only have been intended for banks of issue and, in fact, none other existed in this country. It is a curious fact, mentioned by Baron Pennefather during the argument in Stafford v. Henry, that at the time of the Union there was no bank in Dublin except banks of issue. The business of this country was carried on through the medium of banker's promissory notes and accountable receipts, which were, in fact, notes and very different from the accountable receipts of the present day. In consequence of the failure of Mr. Malone's Bank, the Legislature repealed the 8 Geo. 1, and passed the 33 Geo. 2, which was more comprehensive and carefully prepared, and by its preamble recites "that the trade and manufactures of this kingdom are, in a great measure, carried on and supported by the means of promissory notes and accountable receipts given by bankers, and the credit of such bankers and the currency of their notes will be promoted by giving a more effectual security to the creditors of such bankers than they have at present;" that is the key to the intention of the Legislature, to provide security to holders of bank notes. Many of the provisions are highly favourable to creditors, especially at a time when there was no bankrupt code, and others to which we object are not so; for example, the banker may select his own nominees to be trustees, and the conformity of the banker and the certificate is an effectual protection against the world. Minds are so differently constituted that the 15th section relied on by the other side, appears to me conclusive to shew that banks of issue only are intended; for the tripartite division alluded to, is merged at the end of the section and but two penalties are imposed, the one for issuing notes, the other for discounting bills. All the business of a banker is included in one penalty, that which might be exercised without being a banker in the other. The 5th and 19th sections apply solely to banker's notes. Assuming, secondly, that the acts comprise all classes of bankers; to come within their meaning the primary occupation must be that of a banker, occasionally doing some acts like a banker which are ancillary to and referrible to other business, will not bring the petitioner within their scope. His primary business unquestionably was that of a Land Agent. The fact of a few persons drawing cheques upon him and dealing with him as a banker will not bring him within the meaning of these acts, and the decision in Stafford v. Henry is to that effect. If the petitioner were a banker it is incredible to believe that the secretary to the Bank of Ireland would not have known it. Then the partnership deed and the dissolution in the Gazette are decisive upon the view which the petitioner took of his own business, there is no allusion whatever in them to that of a banker.

Mr. O'Neill, for Patrick E. Reilly, an opposing creditor—relied on the same points, that the primary business was that of a Land Agent; that the collection of bills and other acts alleged as acts of banking were merely incidental to the agency business, and that there were various entries in the books which showed that the banking and land agency accounts were intermixed.

Mr. Hickey in reply.—As to there being no bank in Dublin in 1800, except a bank of issue, that may have been the case, though it is extremely unlikely, and in the contemporaneous almanacks there are certainly the names of many country bankers who never issued a note; the banking licences authorized the petitioner to issue notes, he paid for the privilege, but there was no use in issuing them if the public would not take them. Whatever may have been the exact state of the business of bankers in 1800 it is certain that there have since been bankers of deposit, that the laws regulating them have undergone frequent changes, that as they now stand it is impossible for a private banker to issue notes, and amid these various alterations these acts for the protection of bankers have remained unrepealed; the construction put on them by the other side would make them practically a dead letter. The accounts were kept perfectly separate, where a banking and land-agency account were opened with the same person, there may appear to be entries which belong rather to the one class than the other, but even these are of rare occurrence, and the evidence of the cashier and accountant shews that they were certainly intended to be kept separately.

MASTER LITTON.—I have heard this case very ably argued by counsel on both sides, and I have arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Guinness, the petitioner in this matter, was a banker within the meaning of the Acts of Parliament which have been referred to in the Chancellor's order, and that it was not necessary that he should have kept a bank of issue to bring him within the scope of their provisions. This last question was not adjudicated upon in the leading case decided in the Court of Exchequer, which has been so much referred to in the argument of this case—the case of Stafford v. Henry. In the case of Stafford v. Henry, which is almost the only decision we have upon the subject, Mr. Labertouche was considered not to have been a banker, chiefly upon the ground that the banking business transacted by him was but incidental to his principal or primary trade of a stock-broker. Mr. Labertouche did not hold himself out to the public as a banker, having traded as a merchant it would have been illegal for him to have done so, and this naturally induced both himself and his clerks to give to his transactions the character of the trade of stock-broking and not of banking. It does not appear that either he or his creditors ever considered him as anything more than a stock-broker, or that he ever held himself out as a banker. But Mr. Guinness did hold himself out to the world as a banker, and proclaimed himself to be such, and although he did some acts which, taken separately, may have appeared inconsistent with his character as a banker, yet, on the whole of the case, there can be no doubt, unless we discard the whole body of evidence which has been laid before me, that he did carry on the trade and business of a banker. I entered upon the consideration of this case with an impression the other way, from my never having heard in the course of any proceeding before me or otherwise that Mr. Guinness had been a banker, and from my having had judicial knowledge that he had long carried on the business of a land-agent. It appears also that his counting-house externally had not the same appearance which the leading private banks in the city of Dublin present. But it appears in evidence that the house was open for business during the usual banking hours, and that a person was always in attendance to pay cheques and receive lodgments of money, and that at three o'clock, when the other departments of the house had closed, the banking department remained open for payment of bills, according to recognized banking usage. With this evidence before me the question arises, whether a man, to bring himself within the provisions of these acts of Parliament, is bound to present himself to the public with all the array which distinguishes the transactions and the place of business of a great and eminent banker. In my opinion this is not necessary. The difficulty in this case has arisen from the fact that Mr. Guinness was most extensively engaged as a land-agent, and that the business of land-agency was his principal occupation. But I find that his books contain series of accounts solely conversant about banking transactions; that he not only received money on lodgment and repaid it on cheques, but that he transacted foreign bills of exchange; that he discounted bills; that the forms and documents made use of in his business are proved to have been such as are in general use amongst bankers; that he was registered as a banker; paid money to the Crown; was described as a banker in almost all the almanacks and directories (though not in all), and in some not only in the portion set apart for merchants and traders, but also in that in which are enumerated the private banks. A vast number of witnesses, some of them merchants, have deposed to his being a banker, and it appears that many of them kept banking accounts with him, and no accounts with him as land agent. I was peculiarly struck with the great weight of the evidence on this part of the case, from the fact that some of the witnesses examined by the opposing creditor, swore that they believed him to be a banker, and others who deposed that they did not know him to be such, on cross-examination, when the forms and documents to which I have adverted were put into their hands, stated that if these documents represented bona fide transactions (which there can be no doubt they did) they would consider the petitioner a banker. With this great mass of evidence, I cannot come to any other conclusion than that the petitioner traded as a banker, and held himself out to the public as such. For the purpose of shewing that this case does not come within the authority of the Exchequer decision, I will read a few passages from the judgments of the learned Barons by whom that case was decided. The Chief Baron says—"It appeared in evidence that Labertouche was a stock-broker and notary public, and that he collected and occasionally discounted bills—the collection of bills, of course, must have been part of his business of a notary." The collection of bills by Mr. Guinness constituted no part of his business of land-agent. Baron Pennefather says—"If any person assumes openly, notoriously, and avowedly the character of a banker, I should be very reluctant to hold that he was not within the meaning of that act..... In the present case the bankrupt, Labertouche, was not only a stock-broker and notary public, but also an extensive merchant, in which latter capacity he would have been liable to heavy penalties if he were also a banker..... In this case Labertouche himself positively swears he never was a banker, while on the other side it is only shewn that he occasionally acted like a banker, and not that he ever held himself out to the public as being one." It appears, no doubt, in evidence, that many persons did not know that Mr. Guinness was a banker, but this was not attributable to any act or to any omission of his, for he took all reasonable means to make his character of banker public; and the evidence is abundant to shew that the portion of the public who dealt with him knew him as a banker. In my opinion a sufficient number of persons knew his trade to be that of banker, to represent "the public" in the eye of the law. On the whole of this branch of the case I am of opinion that no jury could, upon their oaths find otherwise than that the petitioner was a banker. Having thus given my judgment upon the principal question, it now becomes necessary for me to express my opinion upon that which the Court of Exchequer was not called upon to decide, namely, whether bankers not keeping banks of issue come within the scope of these acts of Parliament. Upon this part of the case I am of opinion that they do so, and that the law in this respect also is in favour of the petitioner. The 8 Geo. I. undoubtedly applied only to banks of issue; but this act was repealed, and there is a series of subsequent legislation, and in it no distinction is made between banks of issue and banks of deposit. The various acts of a banker, enumerated in 33 Geo. 2, do not and cannot be considered to apply exclusively to banks of issue. The characteristics of a banker's business are not so much the issue of notes, as the discounting and collection of bills, receiving deposits, paying cheques, issuing letters of credit, and the various other branches of business in which bankers engage. Can we suppose the Legislature to have been so thoughtless as to have meant only banks of issue, and yet to have used the words "all and every banker and bankers," without a single word to qualify or modify these expressions, which I believe to have been deliberately introduced, inasmuch as the Legislature cannot be supposed to have forgotten the 8 Geo. I. Nothing could have been more easy than to have introduced the expressions "banks of issue," if the intention had been that these acts should have had so limited an operation; but the policy of the Legislature was obviously to include both classes of banks; nor is there one word to shew why the one should have been included and the other excluded. I am of opinion that discounting bills, paying cheques, and issuing letters of credit, are acts fully as indicative of the banking character as issuing notes. The last statute on the subject was a remedial act, and ought to be construed liberally, and I am of opinion that the Legislature intended that its provisions should extend to all bankers, as well to those whose banks were not of issue, as to those whose banks were of issue. Upon the whole case, and upon the grounds I have stated, I am of opinion that the petitioner was a banker within the meaning of these acts of Parliament, and I rule accordingly.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—EASTER TERM.

LESSOR PEACOCK v. O'GRADY.—May 2, 5.

Ejectment—Stamp on lease—Grant of trees—Relation of landlord and tenant within the meaning of the ejectment statutes—Effect of the lessor of the plaintiff ceasing to have a reversion as to a part of the premises.

Premises were demised for three lives, renewable for ever, at a yearly rent and a fine. In a subsequent part of the lease, the timber trees growing upon the premises were conveyed to the lessee. The stamp upon the lease was admitted to be sufficient for the rent and fine. Held, that the grant of the trees, which had been already demised, did not change the character of the lease, so as thereby to render it a conveyance, and, consequently, that no additional stamp was required.

At the time of bringing the ejectment, the title of the lessor of the plaintiff to a portion of the premises, sought to be evicted, was for the same lives as were contained in the defendant's lease. Held, that as to so much of the rent as issued out of that portion of the premises, the plaintiff ceased to have a reversion, and that a verdict which passed for the entire of the premises, and for the whole of the rent, could not be maintained.

Ejectment for non-payment of rent.—At the trial before Richards, B., at the last Spring Assizes for the county of Limerick, the lessor of the plaintiff gave in evidence the lease under which the defendant derived. The lease bore date the 28th June, 1832, and was made for the lives of Thomas J. Peacock, the lessor, the lessee, and George Peacock. It contained a covenant for perpetual renewal, and conveyed to the lessee the timber trees upon the premises. The yearly rent was £361, and £2,000 was paid as a fine. The lease was impressed with a stamp of £12 10s. Counsel for the defendant objected to the reception of this deed in evidence, as being insufficiently stamped, and contended that it should have contained a further stamp to cover the conveyance of the trees. The learned Baron, however, admitted the evidence, and saved the point for the defendant. The defendant then gave in evidence the lease under which the lessor of the plaintiff derived. This lease was dated the 20th December, 1798, and was made for the lives of Thomas J. Peacock, the lessor, William Peacock and George Peacock. Evidence was then given to shew that William Peacock, one of the cestui que vie, died after the execution of the lease of 1832, but before his brother, Thomas J. Peacock, the lessor; and the defendant then submitted that the present lessor of the plaintiff had no reversion, inasmuch as the surviving lives in the leases of 1798 and 1832 were the same, and insisted that the plaintiff was not entitled to bring an ejectment for non-payment of rent on the lease of 1832. It further appeared from the evidence, that the lands comprised in the lease of 1798 formed but a part of the premises comprised in the lease of 1832. The learned Baron directed a verdict for the plaintiff, with liberty to the defendant to move the court above to have the verdict for the plaintiff turned into a verdict for the defendant. A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter one for the defendant, or for a non-suit, or that a new trial be had, grounded on objections taken at the trial on the part of the defendant, and the points saved.

Mr. Latouche (with him Mr. Henn, Q. C.) now shewed cause. The stamp impressed upon the lease is sufficient, the leading character of the instrument is, that it is a lease, and it is conceded that, as a lease, it is properly stamped for the fine and rent. Upon enquiry at the stamp office, the stamp was considered sufficient. In the next place, we submit that the lessor of the plaintiff had a sufficient reversion to maintain this ejectment. Lessee Jackson v. Jackson, (Hayes & J. 442); Lessee Delacour v. McCarthy, (ibid. 474); Doe & Hills v. Morris, (6 Jur. 326; referred to in Fur. L. & Ten. 1128); the note to the case of Hughes v. Bowlin, (1 Fox. & Sm. 24.)

Mr. Molesworth and Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Q. C. contra.—The stamp is only adequate for a lease, and the conveyance of the timber comes under the head of a conveyance not otherwise charged. The stamp for £12 10s. is exhausted by the rent and fine. [Perrin, J.—If the £2,000 was given for the trees, you do not want a further stamp.] If £1,500 was given for the land, and £500 for the trees, there should be an ad valorem stamp. Lessee Murphy v. Connolly, (6 Ir. L. Rep. 116); Corder v. Drakeford, (8 Taunt. 382); Lessee Boothe v. McGowan, (4 Ir. L. Rep. 188; Lant v. Poace, (8 Ad. & Ell. 248.) [Perrin, J.—Here is a lease of trees for lives renewable for ever, and then it has a clause enabling him to cut down trees.] Lessee White v. White, (7 Ir. L. Rep. 50), may be relied on at the other side, but that was a case under the recent statute, (5 & 6 Vic. c. 82.) The lease is perfect, with all the appropriate covenants, and then comes another conveyance, a conveyance of the trees. [Blackburne, C. J.—The timber is part of the soil and freshhold.] With respect to the second point, if a man makes a lease for a longer term than he has himself, it is a conveyance; the relation of landlord and tenant can only subsist where there is a reversion. Pluck v. Digges, (5 Bligh's P. C. 31); Lessee Fawcett v. Hall, (11 & Nap. 248); Lessee Porter v. French (9 Ir. L. Rep. 514.) A landlord in the ejectment statutes means a landlord having a reversion. The lease having a covenant for renewal makes no difference, and as to the reversion, being in a part of the premises, in an ejectment for non-payment of rent, the entire of the premises must be evicted. Lessee Swift v. Allanson, (Batty, 326, note); Lessee Jackson v. Jackson, (2 Law Rep. N.S. 36,) is distinguishable from the present case; per Crampton, J., in Lessee Delap v. Leonard, (5 Ir. L. Rep. 298.) The condition for re-entry cannot be apportioned. Lessee Warrington v. Hodgins, (Batty, 315); Lessee Purcell v. Kirby, cited in (2 Fur. L. & Ten. 1129.) The landlord must have his relation not to a portion, but to the entire of the premises. Hughes v. Howlin, (1 Fox & Sm. 7,) is not in point, for that was an action of covenant, and the question turned upon a point of pleading. The extinguishment of part of the reversion would defeat the legal relation of landlord and tenant.

Mr. Henn, Q.C., in reply.—With respect to the stamp, the consideration must be expressed in the instrument, and no part of the consideration in this lease is applicable to the sale of the timber. The fine and rent were the consideration for the lease, and it is properly stamped for them. There can be no ad valorem duty, except where the consideration is expressed. Murphy v. Connolly, (6 Ir. L. Rep. 116,) does not apply; for that was a mortgage, and contained other matters not incident to a mortgage. It is merely the extension of a grant already made. Upon the second question, up to the time of the decision in Pluck v. Digges, the general opinion was, that an ejectment would lie under circumstances like the present. Lord Tenterden puts it upon the ground that it was only a rent-charge. Lessee Fawcett v. Hall, (Al. & Nap. 248,) is decided upon the authority of Pluck v. Digges. All these cases are materially different from the present one, for in none of them did the relation of landlord and tenant exist in any other part of the lands sought to be evicted. There was no rent service. Secondly, there was no controversy but that the party had granted for the same lives that he held himself. It becomes an important question whether there is not in this case an estoppel. Lessee Fawcett v. Hall, (Al. & Nap. 254, note); Gilman v. Hoare, (1 Salk. 275.) If a landlord takes upon himself to grant a lease for a greater interest than he has himself, is not the tenant estopped? Where there is a covenant for perpetual renewal, would not that support an ejectment for non-payment of rent? The rent reserved was a rent service. Suppose the landlord had distrained upon any part of the lands that was not held under the demise of 1798, then the doctrine laid down in Pluck v. Digges would not apply. It is said that a condition of re-entry cannot be apportioned; that is a mistake. — v. —, (4 Leon. 27, 28.) There is no authority to show that there should be a reversion to enter at common law for condition broken. (Com. Dig., title Condition.) I do not see why, at common law, the lessor might not have entered for condition broken into the lands demised by the lease of 1798; he had different reversions, and the rent was one entire rent issuing out of every part of the premises. The rent was issuing out of both in point of render, though only issuing in part as respects the remedy. It is not shown that the landlord has ceased to have an interest, but only a reversion. It is an entire rent, a rent-service as to the part in which the landlord has a reversion, and a rent-charge as to the part in which he has not a reversion. Lessee Purcell v. Kirby, (referred to in 2 Fur. L. & Ten. 1129) is not in point, for there, by reason of the settlement, the reversion was divided by act of the parties, and the rent would have to be divided, whereas here no other person claims the rent; we are entitled to the whole. I have a right to re-enter for condition broken into a part, and therefore avoid the entire instrument, although as to a part, I have ceased to have a reversion. If all the lives were gone, we would have a reversion as tenant from year to year. (2 Fur. L. & Ten. 1142.)

Cur. vult. adv.

May 5.—BLACKBURNE, C. J., now delivered the judgment of the court. In this case two objections have been relied on by counsel for the defendant. The first applies to the insufficiency of the stamp impressed upon the lease, and we are of opinion, for the reasons we have suggested in the course of the argument, that that objection is not well founded. The trees had been already demised, and the subsequent conveyance of them could not change the character of the lease, so as to render it a conveyance within the meaning of the statute. My brother Crampton properly likened it to the case of a demise of a bog, with liberty to cut turf. We think, however, the second objection must be allowed. The lessor of the plaintiff has declared for all the premises comprised in the lease of 1832, and for the whole of the rent. Now as to a portion of these premises, he ceased to have a reversion on the death of William Peacock, one of the cestui que vies, on and from which event the title of the lessor of the plaintiff and lessee were for the same lives, and from that period the relation of landlord and tenant was at an end. An entire rent was reserved, and so far as that rent issued from that part of the lands which was held under the lease of 1798, no reversion existed. The verdict, therefore, which passed for the entire of the premises, and for the whole of the rent, upon the authorities of Pluck v. Digges and Porter v. French, cannot be maintained.

Rule absolute to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter one for the defendant. No costs of the motion.

Of petitions—Neither the costs of a petition to charge a fund in court, nor of a cross motion to draw money so charged under the 23rd section of 3 and 4 Vic. c. 105, will be granted in a case where the respondent does not appear.—King v. Brownrigg, 81.

Of a petition for a receiver by a notice party pending a suit—See RECEIVER.

Of continuing proceedings in a petition matter—When the original proceedings in a receiver matter have been by a trustee, and an assignment has thus been rendered necessary, the court will not give the costs of a motion to continue. Weir v. Ormby, 263.

Of purchaser—Where several objections to the title have been taken by a purchaser, some of which are allowed, and others overruled, on motion to discharge the purchaser, and that he be paid his costs, the costs of the objections which have been overruled will be set off against those which have been allowed. Rusell v. Church, 259.

Of retainer of solicitor—The case of in re Bracy (16 L. J., C. 299), where it was held that under a common order directing the reference of a solicitor's bill for taxation, the taxing master has jurisdiction to decide a question of retainer, will not be followed. Belas v. Norris, 267.

Of stayed suits—Where there are several suits, and a decree having been obtained in one, proceedings in the others are stayed. The plaintiffs in the stayed suits are personally liable in the first instance to pay the costs of the several defendants, who are not obliged to wait till the funds are realized under the decree. O'Keefe v. Holmes, 78.

Confirmed on appeal, 125.

Where a creditor's suit has been stayed by reason of a prior decree having been obtained in a similar suit, and the plaintiff ordered to pay the costs in the stayed cause, he will be entitled to be repaid them only in the same priority as his own demand. Tanquer v. Holmes, 162.

Semble, except those of prior encumbrancers, as to which he may make out a case to entitle him to be paid in the same priority as the incumbrancers themselves. Ibid.

When a creditor's suit, instituted in the Court of Chancery, has been stayed by reason of a prior decree to account in the Exchequer in a cause of a similar frame, and between the same parties and the plaintiff in the stayed suit had paid the costs of one of the defendants, the court will not order the receiver in the first cause to pay the plaintiff in the stayed suit the amount of the costs so paid to the prejudice of prior incumbrancers. Levinge v. De Montmorency, 251 Eq. Ex.

In such a case the plaintiff in the stayed cause is personally liable to the costs of prior incumbrancers if the fund proves deficient, and puisne creditors are only entitled to their costs in the same priority as their demands, but this court will restrain the defendant from proceeding against the plaintiffs in the stayed suits for their costs therein until the fund is realized. Ibid.

The Courts of Chancery and Exchequer exercise concurrent jurisdiction, and the rule as to the enforcement of costs under staying orders is the same, whether the suits are instituted in the same or different Courts of Equity. Ibid.

In stayed suits, plaintiffs personally liable. Forrest v. Biggs, 352; and see Lofie v. Forbes, 352.

self, the court will not direct him to deliver up to his former client documents on which he claims a lien, unless a case of pressing necessity or danger of loss be made out. Limerick and W. Railway v. O'Ferrall, 193.

Where a solicitor has a general lien upon papers of his client, which are required for the purposes of a suit, the court has the power of forcing him to bring in the deeds, and of preserving his rights as they existed on the papers. Levinge v. Montmorency, 285, Eq. Ex.

Security for—A mortgagee resident out of the jurisdiction, presented a petition for a receiver, and a conditional order was obtained. Upon a petition to show cause, the respondent objected to the petitioner being heard without giving security for costs. The petitioner was allowed to proceed, his solicitor personally undertaking to pay any costs which the court might direct. Prater v. Portarlington, 259.

PLEADING (Demurrer). A bill against an executor to carry into execution the trusts of a will, and for payment of annuity thereby granted, stated that an agreement had been entered into by the defendant with one E. R., by which he was to pay the annuity, and that certain premises had been assigned to secure same; that after the death of E. R., S. M. R. procured from defendant an assignment of said premises. The defendant by his answer stated that the annuity had been assigned to him by the plaintiff. The bill was amended, and prayed that the assignment should be declared fraudulent and void. Held on demurrer that the case made by the amended bill was no misjoinder, nor was there any departure from the case made by the original bill. Tombeson v. Cox, 17.

Bill by A., B., and C., to foreclose a mortgage against X., tenant for life, and Y. tenant in tail remainder. Y. files a bill against A., B. and C., also against D. solicitor for the plaintiffs in the first cause, praying that the bill may be taken as a cross bill against A., B., and C., and that the mortgage and other deeds executed to give effect to same might be declared fraudulent and void, and that A., B., and C. might be directed to account as mortgagees in possession, and that an account might be taken of the sums due on foot of a judgment obtained by D., subsequent to the mortgage, and that certain bills of costs which formed part of the sum secured by the judgment might be taxed. Demurrer by A., B., and C. for multifariousness. Another demurrer by D. Both demurrers allowed. Crofts v. Almon, 113.

Bill by an uncertificated bankrupt to raise the arrears of an annuity, making the assignee a defendant, and charging that the arrears due amounted to £446; that of the creditors who proved under the commission, all had signed a composition deed save one, to whom £130 was due, and also charging specific collusion between the assignee and the debtor. Demurrer by the assignee allowed, without costs. Wye v. Waters, 130.

Plea—Bill stated that, in 1838, J. W. made a will; that in 1845 he made another will, by which the former one was revoked; that in 1846 the second will was destroyed by the direction of J. W., and in 1848 J. W. died intestate, and plaintiff, as heir at law, entered into possession of all his real estate, and prayed that the evidence of the witnesses to the will of 1845, and of the person who destroyed same, might be perpetuated. Plea, that there were tenants in possession of some of the real estate who had not paid rent to or acknowledged plaintiff, and the matters in dispute could be immediately tried by action at law against same. Plea allowed. Lindsay v. Lindsay, 218.

POOR-RATE. A judgment was obtained by the guardians of a poor-law union for rate due by the defendant as immediate lessor after the proceedings at law; a receiver was appointed over the defendant's interest in the lands, out of which the rate became due, upon application by the guardians that the receiver might pay this rate. Held that the judgment against the immediate lessor did not prevent the guardians from proceeding against the occupier, under the 6 and 7 Vic., cap. 92, s. 3. and that the receiver was bound to pay the amount. Montgomery v. Pratt, 315.

Continuing proceedings under sheriff's cot—Where a notice pursuant to the first order under the 154th general order has been served, and before the second order has been made, the court cannot continue proceedings, under the 5 and 6 Wm. 4, c. 55. Lawlor v. Lowry, 251.

The court has authority to permit the assignee of a judgment to continue the proceedings in his own name, but where the original proceedings have been taken by a trustee, and an assignment has thus been rendered necessary, the court will not give the costs of the motion to continue. Weir v. Ormsby, 263.

Depositions—Where by mistake of the examiner a witness was not examined to two interrogatories, a re-examination was allowed after publication had passed, and the cause was set down for hearing. Molony v. O'Brien, 20.

A defendant against whom a bill has been taken pro con, may be examined for the plaintiff. Kelly v. Fox, 21.

Proof of documents by affidavit. See EVIDENCE.

Deaf witness permitted to read depositions. See WITNESSES.

The court will not make an order to suppress depositions on the ground that some of the interrogatories were leading, unless it is shown what part of the deposition is an answer to the leading interrogatory, and then only so much will be suppressed. Kirkwood v. Lloyd, 225.

That a deposition is not evidence is an objection for the hearing, and is not to be taken by motion to suppress depositions. Ibid.

The court is not bound to suppress depositions in all cases of irregularity, and where by accident the defendant's solicitor gave but two days' notice of examining a witness, instead of four, as required by the 87th general order, the court permitted the deposition to stand, with liberty to the plaintiff to cross-examine the witness. Gurey v. Loughnane, 283.

Elect, rule to—If a plaintiff proceeds at law and in Equity, a defendant cannot, immediately after a short or evasive answer, enter a side-bar rule to elect. Such a rule is entered at the peril of the defendant, and if upon exception the answer is found not to be full, the rule will not be effectual. Read v. Dublin and D. R. Co., 19.

A. B. devised property to his wife for life, and after charging with legacies, and amongst others to T. V., he directed the residue, after his wife's decease, to be divided among the legatees in the same proportion as the legacies. The testator also authorized his wife to appoint trustees to carry the will into execution. By her will the widow appointed trustees for that purpose. After her death a suit was instituted to carry the will of A. B. into execution, and a decree for a sale pronounced. Held that the trustees did not sufficiently represent T. V. to bring the case within the 34th general order, and in his absence a good title could not be made to a purchaser. Rushall v. Church, 185.

Injunctions—Where a railway company, having agreed to purchase lands, entered and carried on their works without the leave of the vendor, or having paid or lodged the money in bank, the court granted an injunction until the money was paid. *Anderson v. The court will not in general interfere with the discretion given by the 115th General Order to the remembrancer, as to the examination of parties by interrogatories in the office. Putland v. Egan, 66, Eq. Ex.

Where two suits are instituted to raise charges upon an estate, and a decree pronounced in one, if important questions are raised by the defendant in the second suit, the court will not stay proceedings in it, and deprive the plaintiff of the benefit of the Lord Chancellor's opinion at the hearing. *Hamilton v. RAILWAY COMPANY, (Continued.)

When R., the occupier of premises, agreed to give them up to a company for a certain sum, but afterwards refused, stating that another person had also an interest, the company lodged the money in court to his separate credit. Upon petition by R., Held that the money having been lodged to his separate credit, was an admission of his title, and that he was entitled to be paid without a reference; that the tender being insufficient and warrant defective, the company was not entitled to the costs, nor was the petitioner entitled to costs, as his proceedings were tainted with mala fides. *In re Irish S. Co. ex parte Kelly, 155, Eq. Ex.

RECEIVER, notices to pay rent.

Where the order to pay rent has been served by a receiver on all the tenants of lands, and A. subsequently entered into possession of part of the lands, to obtain an attachment for non payment of rent against A. it is not necessary that he should have been served with the order to pay rent. Rocks v. Collins, 282.

Purchase by—A receiver, during the life time of the father, purchased a younger child's portion, not payable until the father's death, but charged on the lands over which the receiver had been appointed. There was no evidence of undervalue, on bill filed after 13 years by the inheritor, who during the interval had been principally out of the jurisdiction, against the personal representatives of the receiver. The court set aside the purchase. Kelly v. Bonyng, 3, Eq. Ex.

Replevin—When a tenant under the court, relying on a technical legal irregularity, has replevied goods distrained by a receiver, the court will restrain the replevin suit, even though the receiver has voluntarily taken steps in it, and will direct an account of the rent due to be taken by its own officer. Whitelaw v. Sandys, 150 Eq. Ex.

Where tenants have admitted that rent is due, and paid sums on account, the court will make an order restraining them from proceedings in replevin. Morrissey v. Fitzpatrick, 225.

Seemingly, if the tenant plead non tenuit, the court will not interfere. Ibid.

The court will not make an order to stay proceedings by a tenant in a replevin suit, unless there has been some irregularity therein, and the receiver is likely to be defeated on technical grounds. O'Brien v. Bernard, 266.

Security by—Where the rental is considerable, a receiver will be permitted to divide his security among several, and the entire sum in which the sureties qualify need not exceed double the rental. O'Connor v. Malone, 177.

See also Scott v. Harman, 267.

The court will not make an order permitting a receiver to give security by a guarantee society. Campbell v. Brown, 267.

Generally—Receiver granted on answer where a person of weak mind, not an idiot or lunatic, files a bill by his son and next friend, without a commission of lunacy having issued, the property being small. Carr v. Osborne, 2.

If a receiver be appointed in a plenary suit in Chancery, the Court of Exchequer will restrain a receiver appointed in a petition matter in the latter court from interfering with the land over which he is appointed till the Chancery suit be concluded. Cochrane v. Fitzpatrick, 10 Eq. Ex.

Pending a creditor's suit, a petition was presented by a judgment creditor, defendant in the suit, for a receiver over the lands in the pleadings mentioned. Held that the pendency of the suit was not sufficient cause against the appointment of the receiver, and the petitioner was entitled to his costs. Townshend v. Barry, 19.

A bill to raise a judgment debt was taken pro con. A motion for a receiver was granted, although the bill did not pray for a receiver. Richardson v. Austen, 20.

RECEIVER, (Continued.)

A receiver will not be appointed under 5 and 6 Wm. 4, c. 55, pending a writ of error on a judgment at law, although the petition be presented before the issuing of the writ of error, and security for costs has not been entered into, the plaintiff in error being plaintiff in the court below. Nugent v. Waters, 35.

Where a receiver has been appointed in a suit, if a judgment creditor who is a notice party, and might obtain full relief in the suit, present a petition to extend the receiver, he shall not have the costs of the petition, although there may be suspicion of collusion between the plaintiff and defendant in the suit. Honan v. Galway, 36 Eq. Ex.

Where an ejectment is brought against lands over which a receiver has been appointed without leave of the court, the proceedings will be stayed. If the receiver had funds applicable to the payment of the rent, he may be liable to the costs. Callaghan v. Callaghan, 42.

Where bill to recover fee farm rent. See FREE FARM RENT.

Where a receiver has been appointed, an attachment will be granted against a third party, who, before service of the order on the tenants, interferes with the rents, when he has had notice of the appointment of the receiver. McAlpine v. St. George, 129.

If a receiver does not account within the period limited by the general orders, although the court may grant his poundage, the costs of accounting will not be allowed. Bessonet v. Waller, 150. Lawson v. Griffin, 225.

The court will not make an order permitting a receiver to account but once in every five years, although the property over which he is appointed produces but £10 per annum. Darley v. Hunter, 194.

The court refused to appoint a receiver on the petition of a judgment creditor over an allowance directed by the court to be paid to the inheritor for maintenance. Gardiner v. Blesington, 250.

As to continuing proceedings under 5 and 6 Wm. 4, c. 55. See PRACTICE.

Although in general a motion to set lands in the occupation of a defendant should not be made by a receiver, yet where a receiver, having advanced a sum to pay head rent, and save the lands from eviction, obtained an order to set lands in possession of the defendant, the court refused to set the order aside, on the ground of its having been obtained on motion of the receiver. Phibbs v. Farrell, 265.

Upon consent, a defendant in a cause was appointed receiver. Balcher v. Balcher, 266.

The court having on the hearing expressed a strong opinion in favour of the plaintiff, had, however, at the request of the defendant, left the plaintiff to bring an ejectment, in which the defendant obtained a verdict. This verdict was set aside as against evidence. The Lord Chancellor subsequently made an order for a receiver, unless the defendant secured the rents to be received by him. Scott v. Scott, 297.

On the 5th of February, 1848, an order was made in the Court of Exchequer referring it to the remembrancer to appoint a receiver over certain lands. On the 30th of June an order was made in Chancery for a receiver over same lands. This order was set aside, it not having been stated to the court that the order in the Exchequer had been made. Bryan v. Richardson, 298.

A receiver will not be permitted to become tenant under the court, of the lands over which he is appointed, even upon consent of the parties in the cause. Stanislaus v. French, 299.

An attorney or solicitor ought not to be appointed a receiver, and the court will remove a receiver on that ground. Geale v. Nugent, 319.

To the general indebitatus counts, the defendant pleaded that the promises were made jointly with one T. P. H. and the defendant, and that the plaintiff sued the said T. P. H. for not performing the identical promises in the declaration mentioned; and the jury then assessed the damages of the plaintiff for the non-performance of the said promises, which were the same identical promises in this declaration mentioned, at £350, and the said T. P. H. said and satisfied the said sum so assessed, and the said plaintiff then accepted the same in satisfaction and discharge of the said damages. The plaintiff replied that he did not accept and take the said monies in the said last mentioned plea in that behalf alleged, in satisfaction and discharge of the said causes of action in the said declaration mentioned. Held, on special demurrer, that the replication was bad, not being a direct traverse of the plea, but that the plea was bad, not being an answer to the declaration. Small v. Drummond, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 92.

Where it lies.—Where A. holding B.'s bill which had been dishonoured, agreed to take one half in cash, and a renewal for the remainder, upon the terms of C., who was a party to the arrangement, guaranteeing the payment of the renewal, and having been paid the half in cash, gave up the bill; C. having afterwards refused to guarantee payment of the renewal. Held, that an action on the case for deceit lay against C., and that it was not necessary his promises should be in writing. Barrett v. Hyndman, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 109.

The declaration stated that B. (the defendant) wrongfully, maliciously, and without any probable cause, procured A. (the plaintiff) to be arrested and imprisoned, under pretence of a decree in the Assistant Barrister's court, for the sum of £10 debt, and 6s. costs, by the procurement of the defendant in the name of one C., but without the authority, consent, or knowledge of said C.; and to be kept and detained in prison for the space of six months. At the trial it appeared that B. had caused A. to be served in the name of C. as the plaintiff therein, with a civil bill for "£20 due for timber and plates, sold and delivered by C. to A., which A. promised to pay, and other £20 due on foot of an account stated and settled by and between C. and A. which sum A. promised to pay." A decree was obtained thereon "in the sum of £10 for timber and slates, sold and delivered by C. to A." under which decree B. procured A. to be arrested. For the defendant it was contended that the civil bill was void, as it included two demands, which together exceeded the jurisdiction of the Civil Bill Court; that the decree founded thereon was also void, and that the action should therefore have been trespass and not case. Held, that without deciding whether trespass would or would not lie, an action on the case could be sustained irrespectively of the question as to the validity of the civil bill process, inasmuch as the decree obtained thereon was for a sum within the jurisdiction of the Civil Bill Court, and as it was not competent for B. to avoid his own acts by setting up the nullity of the civil proceedings. Ryan v. Shee, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 536, Ex.

Quære, if it had appeared that the decree had been obtained against a third person, might it not have been so used against the plaintiff as to enable him to maintain the present action against the defendant. Id.

An Act of Parliament empowered vestries to present sums for certain purposes to be raised off the inhabitants, and to appoint proper persons to applot and levy, and to allow them poundage on the sums so applotted and levied. Held, that the persons so appointed could maintain debt for the sums applotted. Brady v. Bellow, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 348, C. P.

Affidavit sworn before a foreign authority.—On a motion for liberty to issue a scire facias to revive a judgment, the affidavit was sworn before President of the Civil Tribunal, and the signature of the plaintiff, attested by the Mayor and Sous Prefet of Verdun in France; and the French Consul resident here by affidavit stated that there was no British Consul or Notary Public resident in Verdun, and that the Civil Tribunal was a recognized Court of Justice, and he also verified the seals attached to the affidavit; the order was made. *Hawrell v. The court will not grant an application for the appointment of a commissioner for taking affidavits unless there be an attorney in attendance who will vouch for the petitioner. In re Hinton, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 79, Ex.

AMENDMENT.

- I. PROCEEDINGS IN GENERAL.
- II. PROCEEDINGS IN EJECTMENT.

I. PROCEEDINGS IN GENERAL.

Amendment of Process.]—A plaintiff having sued out writs of capias ad respondendum against a defendant, and having duly filed and continued them, pursuant to the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 7, in order to defeat the bar of the statute of Limitations, will be permitted, on payment of costs, to amend formal errors in the indorsement, return, and form of the said writs, even after the plea of the statute pleaded by the defendant, provided he have substantially complied with the provisions of the statute. Clanmorris v. Lambert, 1 Ir. Jur. 267, Q. B.

The court will amend a writ of capias ad respondendum by changing the name of Margaret to Martha where the refusal would cause the claim to be barred by the statute of Limitations. Ryan v. Sheehy, Bl. D. & O. 212, Ex.

Declarations and Pleas.]—The court will permit a count for interest to be added to a declaration after the expiration of the second term from the bringing of an action for money lent. Reynolds v. Brady, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 27, Ex.

A declaration may be amended without prejudice to the rule to plead, by adding the name of either counsel or attorney, although a motion be made to take it off the file of the court for irregularity. Lindsay v. Vaughan, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 159, Q.B.; Keene v. Graham, Id.

A defendant in replevin will be allowed to amend by adding additional avowries, where it appears that the necessity for the amendment is recently discovered, and the delay which occurred is owing to a compromise which had been pending between the parties. O'Connor v. Bentley, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 79, Q. B.

On motion to amend a declaration, by averring notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange to the personal representative of A. instead of to A. It appeared that the declaration was filed as of Michaelmas Term, 1837, that the defendant pleaded, and issue was joined, that no further proceedings having been taken by the plaintiff the defendant applied for judgment as in case of a non-suit, which the plaintiff answered by a peremptory undertaking to go to trial; that in advising proofs for trial the mistake was discovered which it was now sought to remedy. The application was held to be too late. Hughes v. Parker, (2 Ir. L. Rep. 282, Q. B.)

The court allowed a plea to be amended after argument and judgment upon the demurrer, the question being doubtful, though there was no positive affidavit of merits. Boyle v. Hogan, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 331, Q. B.

Where a scire facias did not issue until after the expiration of 20 years from the entry of the judgment, although a conditional order for liberty to issue it had been obtained before the expiration of that period, and the defendant pleaded two pleas under which he could avail himself of the 8 Geo. 1, cap. 4, and also two other pleas for the purpose of relying on the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, and a special demurrer was taken to the latter pleas. The court refused to permit them to be amended upon any terms, there being no affidavit of merits, and it appearing that the effect of the proposed amendment would be to enable the defendant to contend that the plaintiff must not only apply for and obtain liberty to issue the scire facias within 20 years, but that it must issue within that time, or the judgment will be barred by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27. Graham v. Shaw, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 373, Ex.

Where the defendant pleaded the general issue, and gave notice of set-off they were permitted to amend by adding a plea of set-off upon terms of amending the plaintiff's copy of the pleas, and withdrawing the notice of set-off. Darley v. Murphy, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 388, Ex.

Where an amendment of the declaration will deprive the defendant of a defence he could have set up under his plea, he is entitled to have the rules to plead served anew. Reynolds v. Kelly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 186, C. P.

If a party served with notice tenders a consent to do that which the court on motion will order, he will be entitled to the costs. Id.

Where a special demurrer is allowed to a declaration the plaintiff is entitled to amend generally, and he need not confine his amendments to the points demurred to, or specify the amendment he seeks to make in his notice of motion. Anonymous, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 216, Q. B.

The court will allow a second amendment to be made in pleas to a scire facias after demurrer filed where no trial has been lost by the defendant's default, and although he does not swear that the judgment was ever paid. O'Callaghan v. Creagh, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 270, C. P.

In an action of scire facias the attorney of a purchaser pleaded jointly for three tenants, one of whom having given him no authority to do so, now disclaimed, and the remaining two were anxious to withdraw their defence, the court refused an application by the plaintiff to take their pleas off the file, but allowed them to be amended by striking out the name of the disclaiming party. Lytleton v. Ivie, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 364, C. P.

In an action of replevin when the defendant was a pauper residing in England the court refused him permission to file an additional avowry on the usual terms, unless the costs were paid, and all proceedings were stayed until then. Mann v. Edwards, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 378, C. P.

To an action of debt upon an English judgment the defendant pleaded, first, nil debet; secondly, that the judgment in the original action had been recovered on a bond conditioned for the payment of an annuity, and that no memorial of such bond had been enrolled pursuant to the 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, s. 2, Eng., whereby the bond was void; third plea same as second. A motion to amend was refused, the pleas not being such as to be entitled to the favour of the court. Sims v. Thomas, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 415, Ex.

A cross motion to rescind the rule to plead several matters was also refused, the court being unwilling, except in extreme cases, to exercise a summary jurisdiction by ordering objectionable pleas to be expunged upon motion. Ib.

A motion to amend pleas is not ex debito justitiæ, although made before demurrer to replication, and if the proposed amendment be not conducive to the justice of the case the application will be refused. Ib.

The court will, in some instances, permit the amendment of a declaration in a matter that does not open a new defence, without requiring the rule to plead to be entered de novo. Carroll v. Maher, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 470, C. P.

Where a special demurrer was overruled, the defendant applied for leave to plead, but the court refused the application, holding that it should be the subject of a distinct motion after an argument upon demurrer. Kenny v. Simpson, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 42, Q. B.

A declaration in debt on an annuity deed, contained two counts: the first for four years' arrears, due May, 1840; the second for five years, due May, 1841. The declaration having been entitled of a term different from that in which the defendant had appeared, the court granted liberty to amend on payment of costs, and required the rules to plead to be served de novo, the defendant having a claim for untaxed costs against the plaintiff, which, when taxed, he intended to plead as a set-off. Carroll v. Farrelly, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 137, C. P.

Where the declaration is entitled of a term different from that in which the writ was returnable, the defendant ought to give the plaintiff notice of the irregularity before he serves him with notice to set it aside, or he should call on him in the alternative either to amend, or that the declaration should be set aside. Page v. Murphy, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 417, C. P.

A plaintiff will be allowed to amend a declaration, without prejudice to the rules to plead, when the error sought to be amended was a mere clerical one. Smith v. Blair, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 397, Q. B.Ch.

The court will give a defendant leave to amend a plea of the statute of limitations before argument, and will not allow the plaintiff to open affidavits detailing the special circumstances of the case, for the purpose of shewing that the defendant had not a meritorious defence. If a party allow a special demurrer, he need not specify in his notice of mothe amendments he seeks. Brennan v. Monahan, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 415, C. P.

Where there is a bond fide cause of action, and the error has occurred through a mistake of the pleader, the amendment must be allowed. Per Crampton, J. Baggot v. Malone, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 460, Q. B.

In an action by the assignees of a bankrupt firm, the court allowed the plaintiffs to amend the declaration, by striking out and adding to the names of the partners of the firm, and to make the writ conformable thereto, though more than two terms had elapsed since the declaration had been filed. The plaintiffs were ordered to pay the costs of the amendments and of the motion, and to serve the rules to plead anew. Wright v. Gould, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 98, C. P.

To a declaration in quare impedit, a demurrer was, on the last day of Trinity Term, 1846, allowed, at which time an application on behalf of the plaintiffs, to restrain the defendant from entering up judgment until the ensuing Michaelmas Term, was refused. In Michaelmas Term the plaintiffs obtained a conditional order for leave to amend, against which—the case having stood over in the meantime for the convenience of the court—came was not shewn until Trinity, 1847. Held, under these circumstances, that the court had jurisdiction to allow the plaintiffs to amend in Trinity, 1847, though judgment had been pronounced as of a previous term. The Executors of the Marquis of Winchester v. the Bishop of Killaloe, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 428, C. P.

The court, upon special grounds, refused to allow an amendment of two pleas of the statute of limitations, even before argument of the special demurrer taken to these pleas. Marquis of Ormonde v. The Lord Bishop of Cashel, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 428, C. P.

Where the defendant appeared as of the preceding Trinity Term, to a writ issued in the vacation, and the plaintiff entitled his declaration as of the term of the appearance, the defendant was allowed to amend the declaration, by entitling it as of Michaelmas Term, and by altering the statement of the appearance accordingly. Newin v. Hughes, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 504, Ex.

An application to amend a pleading demurred to must be upon notice. Cannon v. Nelson, Bl. D. & O. 96, Ex.

Upon a motion to set aside a trial, on the ground that the venue in the margin of the declaration was wrong, being county of Cork, instead of county of the city of Cork, the record was amended, the plaintiff paying such costs as if the amendment was made at Nisi Prius. Potter v. Davis, Bl. D. & O. 255, Q. B.

A change of venue is not such an amendment as can be made under a general liberty to amend upon the allowance of a demurrer with costs, and will not be permitted without special grounds being assigned. Evans v. Figgis, 1 Ir. Jur. 109, C. P.

II. PROCEEDINGS IN EJECTMENT.

In an ejectment for non-payment of rent, which went down for trial, but became a remanet by reason of a successful challenge to the array, the court would not allow the declaration to be amended, by adding a demise in the name of the assignee of an insolvent lessor of the plaintiff. Lewin v. Jennings, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 418, C. P.

At Nisi Prius.—Where an application has been made to the judge at Nisi Prius to amend the record under the 48th section of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, and it did not appear that the judge had refused, or that the amendment had been made. In an ejectment for the lands of B. brought on the South Riding of the County of T. They were described in the declaration as situate "in the parish of H. and county of T." It appeared on the trial that the part of the lands of B. within the parish of H. was in the North and not in the South Riding of the County of T. The judge having amended the record, by striking out the words "parish of H." Held, that the amendment was authorized by the statute. Murphy v. Connolly, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 116, C. P.

In an action on a guarantee, the declaration averred, that the defendant, "in consideration of the plaintiff's granting a special warrant to A. and B., undertook to indemnify him." At the trial it appeared by the guarantee, that the consideration was to grant "a warrant to A. or B., or either of them, or their assistants. Held, that the omission of the words or either of them might be amended under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 48, or the 9 Geo. 4, c. 15. Cambie v. Barry, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 319, Q. B.

After writ of error brought on account of the alleged defects in the assignment, the court refused to allow the record to be amended by setting out the assignment of the judgment verbatim. *Fulton v. Record—after writ of error.—Where the verdict was given upon the substantial issues, and so finding appeared on the record as to two formal issues, the court, after judgment pronounced, and before the return of the transcript, amended the record by entering a verdict in conformity with the evidence in the bill of exceptions. Quinn v. National Insurance Company, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 37, Ex.

The judgment having been affirmed in Trinity Term, 1845, and the transcript subsequently remitted to this court, and the costs taxed, the court, in Hilary Term, 1847, ordered the record and transcript to be amended by the insertion therein of the amount of costs, and of the consolidated sum of damages, expenses, and costs in the blanks left for that purpose. *Ryan v. ANNUITY—See DEED.

By annuity deeds executed in the years 1829 and 1831 respectively after reciting a devise in 1844 of an annuity of £50 to C. C. charged upon lands in Ireland, and payable half-yearly on the 1st of Nov. and 1st of May, and also the marriage of C. C. to J. L. in 1827, and the settlement thereupon of the said annuities in trustees for the separate use of C. C., and an agreement by the said J. L. and his said wife for the sale of two annuities of the value of £28 1s. 6d. each, to be secured by these covenants, by assignments of the said annuity of £50 by the wife, and by warrants of attorney to confess judgment in the King's Bench in Ireland for £500 respectively—it was witnessed in one of the deeds that in consideration of £200 lawful money of Great Britain—and in the other deed that in consideration of £200 of lawful money of Great Britain current in England, the said J. L. and his wife respectively covenanted to pay to the grantee the said annuities by yearly payments on the 1st of November, and the 1st of May respectively, including the respective proportional parts between the last day of payment, or the day of the date of the deed, and the death of the wife; and also to assign policies of insurance for her life in some English office to the grantee; and by the same deeds the wife appointed the grantee to be her attorney to recover the said annuity. These deeds were prepared in Ireland, and upon Irish stamps, and transmitted to England, where they were executed by the grantors who resided there, and where also the consideration-money was paid; but they were executed by the grantee in Dublin, of which place he was described in both deeds.

Warrants of attorney in the usual English form to enter judgments in the King's Bench in Ireland were also prepared in Ireland, and executed by the respective parties at the same times, and the same places as the deeds respectively. Held, that these contracts were English, and void for want of registry, under the provisions of the English Annuity Act, 53, Geo. 3, c. 141, s. 2. Ferguson v. Lomas, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 81, C. P.

Submission.]—Where a witness to a deed of submission refused to verify the deed by affidavit, the court held the rule requiring the affidavit not to be inflexible, and the deed was made a rule of court without it. Shortall v. Moran, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 87, C. P.

It is good cause against making an award a rule of court, that the submission to refer is not in writing, and it lies upon the party applying to shew it was in writing. Goulding v. Goulding, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 164, Q. B.

Either party may revoke his submission before it be made a rule of court. Ib.

By submission it was referred to arbitrators "to declare what amount might be the profits to be derived by defendant from the expenditure of plaintiff, with allowance for ditching and draining, as well as all buildings and manure, so as to extend its benefits to any future crop." The arbitrators awarded "that the defendant should give plaintiff £107 7s. on account of profits calculated to accrue to defendant from plaintiff's improvements; that defendant give plaintiff the use of the dwelling house and offices to the 1st of May next; that on that day plaintiff give up to defendant possession of said premises, leaving them in the same repair as at present. Held, that the portion of the award relating to the possession of the premises was bad, not being warranted by the submission, but that it was separable from the residue, and that the award for the amount of the improvements was good. Murphy v. Bellew, 4 Ir. L. Rep., 313, Ex.

A subscribing witness to the execution of a deed of submission to arbitration, under the 10 Wm. 3, c. 14, although there is no cause in court, will, upon refusal to verify his attestation by affidavit, be ordered to do so on pain of attachment, and to pay the costs of the motion to compel the execution. Nugent v. Lowe, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 3, C. P., S. C. Bl. D. & O. 220.

It is not open to such a witness declining to verify his attestation to justify his refusal, on the ground that the time has elapsed within which the submission should have been entered as a rule of court. Ib.

Quere, whether upon such refusal, there being no cause before the court, it has jurisdiction to dispense with the production of the affidavit to verify, and to enter the submission as a rule of court. Ib.

Where a matter is referred to arbitration, and complicated matters of law and equity are involved therein, fees to counsel for perusing and settling the deed of submission will be allowed on the taxation of the costs, between party and party. In re Booth, 1 Ir. Jur. 68. C. P.

Reference to.—On an application to confirm the Master's report on a reference respecting the amendment on the record of revivor of a judgment, the court has jurisdiction to refer the whole matter to an arbitrator, if that course be more likely to do justice than if left to a jury. Cruise v. Davies, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 363, C. P.

Award.—Where arbitrators assessed certain damages, being the amount of several bills of costs due to the attorney by his client, subject to be reduced by taxation, the award was held good. Gower v. Donovan, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 40, Q. B.

By an order of Nisi Prius, a case was referred to arbitration, it having been consented that a verdict should be taken for the plaintiff for the sum claimed by him, "with costs, subject to be reduced or turned into a verdict for the defendant, with costs, according to the finding or award of the arbitrators." The award reduced the amount so entered for the plaintiff, but was silent on the subject of costs. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the reference, and of the award, in addition to the costs of the action. Fairbrother v. Earl of Kingston, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 263, Ex.

If a cause at Nisi Prius have been referred to arbitration, and, in consequence of any default, the proceedings on the arbitration are nugatory, the party ultimately successful cannot recover the costs of the arbitration proceedings, unless such have been expressly provided for by the deed of submission. O'Driscoll v. McCarthey, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 570, Ex.

Entering Judgment upon.—Though a motion to confirm an award, on an order of reference to arbitration made in a cause, is unnecessary. Yet, when the terms of the deed of submission are, that the decision of the arbitrators should be made the judgment of the court, a motion for an order to enter up judgment is necessary. Williams v. Drum, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 344, Q. B.

Where the parties to an action referred the matter in dispute to arbitration, and agreed that judgment should be entered for the sum awarded, and the defendant after the award would not sign a plea of confession for the amount awarded, the court ordered judgment to be entered up for the sum awarded, and directed that he should pay the costs of the motion. French v. Farwell, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 151, Ex.

Enlarging time for making Award.—The court has jurisdiction, under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 68, to enlarge the time for arbitrators, making their award after the term has expired, even though the deed of submission contain a clause empowering the arbitrators to extend the time from time to time. Macneil v. Macneil, 1 Ir. Jur. 16, Ex.

Enforcing.—To obtain executions under the 3 & 4 Vic. cap. 105, sec. 27, for a sum of money awarded, the party seeking it must move for an order Nisi on the opposite party to pay, which being made absolute, gives the court jurisdiction. Kelly v. St. George, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 420, C. P.

Witnesses at.—The application for a rule to compel the attendance of witnesses before an arbitrator, under 3 & 4 Vic. c. 100, who had been appointed by an order of Nisi Prius, should be made to a single judge. O'Connor v. Balf, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 66, C. P.

Costs.—A cause in the Court of Common Pleas, and cross cause in the Court of Exchequer, in the latter the matter was referred at Nisi Prius by a consent which was made a rule of court, the parties delivered blank pleas of confession to the arbitrator, who filled up the blank plea of confession signed by the defendant, on which judgment had been entered up in the Common Pleas; this court ordered the officer to tax the costs of the cause and of the reference, although the consent had never been made a rule of the court. Morris v. Troy, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 468, C. P.

By consent between plaintiff and defendant, all matters in dispute were referred to arbitration; the consent was afterwards made a rule of court, and a sum awarded to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff, together with the costs of the award and of the reference; the award and order to confirm same having been registered, pursuant to the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 28; the court ordered the defendant to pay the sum awarded, together with the taxed costs, but doubted whether the plaintiff was entitled to issue execution under the 27th sec. for the sum awarded. Ferry v. Dillon, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 503, Ex.

ARREST—See EXECUTION, BAIL, AFFIDAVIT, BANKRUPT.

Privileged Persons.—A salaried clerk, in one of ices of the courts, is privileged from arrest on his way to court to attend his office. Ex parte Egan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 87, Q. B. on an application to be discharged, under Statute Act, it must be clearly and explicitly stated that the party applying was a soldier, duly paid at the time of the arrest, and that such was contrary to the intent of the Act. The provisions of which are to be strictly construed. Jer v. Booth, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 34, Ex.

Defendant arrested under a writ out of one of the superior courts, was discharged on entering a plea on appearance, upon the ground that his name had been seized under an attachment from the Lord Mayor and Sheriff's Court, for the same cause of action, and that the proceedings in that case were for the same cause of action. Daniel v. Daniel, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 374, Ex.

Where a person by his proceedings in one court has obtained a security for his demand, he shall not be arrested for the same cause of action. Id.

A party to an Equity suit is not privileged from arrest while attending a commission to examine witnesses in the cause. McCarthy v. Lowry, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 776.

A party who attended at the Master's office to take his depositions, on leaving was arrested under a writ. Held that he was entitled to be discharged upon the ground of privilege, although he remained in town for a fortnight after his arrest, without making any application. Wheeler v. Fox, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 302, note.

A party who resides in the country, but who is summoned to Dublin as a witness in the Prerogative Court, is protected from arrest during the time he remains in town, bona fide, for the purpose of being examined. McDonnell v. Gray, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 509, Ex.

Where an attorney applied to be discharged from arrest on an affidavit, stating that he had been attending professionally on the 5 and 6th of January at the Quarter Sessions Court, when, upon other matters, he was engaged for the purpose of appearing in a crown case; that the trial stood over to the 7th of January, on the morning of which "immediately before the sitting of the court, the deponent was going in the direction thereof," and was arrested on a ca. sa. Held that the affidavit was defective in not stating that the defendant was engaged to court, on his professional business, at the time of the arrest. Scott v. Frayne, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 11, Ex.

A party summoned before a magistrate, on a criminal charge, is not privileged from arrest on returning home from attendance on the summons. Don v. McDonnell, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 594, Q. B. A coroner, when engaged in the discharge of his official duty, is privileged from arrest; and the defendant, having notice of his being so engaged, and detaining him notwithstanding, was obliged to pay costs of his discharge. Callaghan v. Twiss, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 422, C. P.

A barrister, an assistant barrister is privileged from arrest, as well during the exercise of his civil, as of his criminal jurisdiction; and the privilege will not be lost, though he should arrive in the county on the day preceding that appointed for holding the sessions. Molloy v. —, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 14, C. P.

The officers of the Queen's Bench have no general privilege of exemption from arrest on final process; their privilege only extends to the periods during which they are going to, returning from, or engaged in their official duties. Magrath v. Cooper, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 332, Q. B., S. C. B. D. & O. 141.

A person summoned from a distant part of the country, to attend before a Master in Chancery, is privileged from arrest upon civil process; not merely while attending at the Master's chambers, and going and returning therefrom, but alone during his stay in town, in pursuance of the summons. Rooney v. Cooke, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 469, Ex.

Where a party was in custody on a criminal charge which was abandoned, but immediately on being liberated from the dock he was taken in execution by the sheriff, upon a writ issued at the suit of the plaintiff, who had no connection with the prosecutor in the criminal case. Held that he was not privileged from arrest. Buckmaster v. Cox, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 101, Ex.

Secus, if there had been collusion between the plaintiff and prosecutor. Id.

Where a person is in custody of the sheriff, upon a criminal charge, it is not necessary to obtain an order of the court for the sheriff to detain him in a civil suit. Id.

Where an officer of the court has been arrested upon a ca. sa. and seeks to be discharged upon the ground of privilege, he must satisfy the court that his application is made bona fide, and if any circumstances are disclosed to lead the court to think it otherwise, it will refuse his application. In re —, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 301, Q. B.

Such an application must be made without delay, therefore where it appeared that the defendant was arrested upon the 11th of January, and did not apply until the 28th, held that the laches was decisive against the motion. Id.

Affidavit.—An affidavit to hold to bail, stating that defendant was indebted to the plaintiff "in the sum of £20, besides interest, being the amount of a bill of exchange, dated and drawn by F. H. on —, accepted by the defendant, payable at 91 days after date, which bill was passed to the plaintiff for valuable consideration, is insufficient. McCarthy v. Birney, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 39, Q. B.

An affidavit to hold to bail for goods sold and delivered to the defendant, or for his use, and by his order, is sufficient. "For money paid, laid out, and expended to and for the defendant, and for his use," without adding "at his request," is defective. Hughes v. Dowd, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 24, Ex.

An affidavit to hold to bail, by an administrator, for rent "due upon, and by virtue of a lease, bearing date, &c., and made between the deceased of the one part, and J. M. (the defendant) of the other;" without stating that J. M. held and enjoyed under the lease, was held to be sufficient. Galvin v. Milligan, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 23, Ex.

An affidavit to hold to bail by one of two plaintiffs, stating that one, W. P., (the defendant,) "was indebted to H. G., deponent's late partner, in the sum of £158 for goods sold and delivered by the said H. G., and the deponent, during their late partnership, to and for W. P., and, at his request, was held to be sufficient. Horwood v. Power, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 208, Ex.

An affidavit to hold to bail, in an action by the indorsee, against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, must state the indorsement to the plaintiff. Tut-hill v. Bridgeman, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 62, Ex.

An affidavit to hold to bail, giving only the initials of the defendant's Christian name, is insufficient. Chaffers v. Bingham, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 242, Q.B.

An affidavit to hold to bail stating that W. R., the defendant, was indebted to the deponent in £21 11s. as the bearer of a certain check drawn by W. R. on R. R., which said check was given unto this deponent for value received by the said R. R. in diet, washing, &c. provided by deponent for the said R. R. at his request, and made payable to bearer, the payment of which had been refused by the said R. R. Held to be insufficient. Cleary v. Ramsey, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 243, Ex.

Affidavits on behalf of the defendant under the 6th section of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, should negative any intention of leaving the country. Knipe v. McCabe, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 24, C. P.

A party will not be discharged from custody who has been arrested under a fiat when he qualifies his swearing as to his having no intention of quitting the country, and there are circumstances in the case which sustain the belief that he has an intention of leaving the country. Hughes v. Ryan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 107, Q.B.

Where an affidavit on which a fiat is sought states on belief that the defendant is about to quit the country, the grounds of belief should be accurately stated, and where the fiat was obtained on such an affidavit, and the defendant arrested, the court on an affidavit stating that he did not intend to leave the country, discharged him. Hughes v. Cresswell, (3 Ir. L. Rep. 108 Q. B.)

Held also that an application to set aside the fiat, and not the order upon which it issued, was sufficiently formal. Ib.

An affidavit that the defendant was about to leave Ireland, unless, &c. was held to be sufficient to obtain a judge's fiat to arrest him. Ryan v. Ryan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 200, Q. B.

Repeated declarations by the defendant that he would leave the country to avoid payment of his debt, though made in moments of irritation, were held to be sufficient probable cause to hold the defendant to bail.—Perrin, J. dissentiente. Ib.

Semble, the plaintiff in shewing cause against a conditional order for the discharge of the defendant must rely on his affidavit to hold to bail, and cannot use additional affidavits. Ib.

Where the defendant relies on a counter affidavit, in support of an application to set aside a judge's order under which he has been arrested, the plaintiff may make an affidavit in reply. Farrall v. McGuire, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 349, Ex.

The affidavit to ground an application for a discharge must deny positively the averments in the plaintiff's affidavit on which the fiat was granted. Innes v. Waters, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 311, C. P.

Where the affidavit upon which a fiat had been obtained for the arrest of a party was filed without having any stamp upon it, no cause being then pending between the parties, the court set aside the fiat, and ordered that the bail bond, executed by the defendant and his sureties, should be delivered up to be cancelled, upon his entering a common appearance. Plunket v. Plunket, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 368, Q. B.

Quære, must an action be commenced before a fiat can be obtained? Ib.

The affidavit to hold to bail cannot be amended when the interests of third parties are involved, and between the original parties no amendment will be allowed unless there be something to amend by. Johnston v. Pathonier, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 25, Q. B.

Semble, a mistake in the name of the defendant in an affidavit to hold to bail is a substantial defect, and cannot be treated as an irregularity. Ib.

A fiat for an arrest was set aside, the affidavit upon which it was grounded stating that the defendant was about to leave the county instead of the country. Bailey v. Bailey, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 137, Ex.

The plaintiff's affidavit to obtain a fiat need not state a positive belief as to the truth of the defendant's being about to leave the country, provided the facts be such as would lead the mind of the judge to that conclusion. Ib.

As to the practice in obtaining a fiat for the arrest of the defendant. Ib.

An affidavit to hold the defendant to bail should be precise as to the sum due. Ruttle v. Downes, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 364, Q. B.

When the affidavit stated that the deponent was informed that the defendant was about to leave the country, the person from whom the information was obtained should be stated, and an affidavit made by him, or an excuse for its non-production. Ib.

A plaintiff on a motion to set aside a fiat will not be allowed to read an affidavit in explanation of, or to supply the deficiencies in the affidavit upon which the fiat has been granted. Ib.

An affidavit for the arrest or detention of a defendant under the 2nd section of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, must state the belief that the defendant is about to quit Ireland, unless he be forthwith apprehended, and must also state the facts upon which such belief is founded. Hooker v. Duhe de Rovigo, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 51, Ex.

An allegation by the plaintiff that the defendant admitted himself to have been guilty of the crime of forgery, and that he believes if released he will abscond, is sufficient cause against a conditional order to be discharged from custody under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 6, though the defendant swears he had no intention to leave the country. Knipe v. McCabe, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 66, C. P.

An affidavit for a judge's fiat to arrest need not be made according to the strict rules of legal evidence, and statements made on hearsay and belief will be sufficient. Hickey v. Moore, (4 Ir. L. Rep. 468, Q. B.—Perrin, J. dissentiente.)

The affidavit on which a judge's order for the defendant's arrest was obtained, stated, "that there were probable causes for believing that defendant was about to leave the country." Held to be insufficient. Solomon v. Digby, Bl. D. & O. 188.

Without probable cause.—An arrest, without holding a defendant to special bail, though the arrest be without probable cause, does not entitle the defendant to his costs under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46. Joel v. Peard, (10 Ir. L. Rep. 550, Q. B.; S. C. Bl. D. & O. 179.

Quere, if a party be arrested and kept in gaol, not being able to procure bail, or if he lodge the sum claimed, he is in such case entitled to his costs, the arrest being without probable cause. Id.

The defendant and his brother being respectively indebted to the plaintiff for goods sold, the former in £39 14s. 6d., and the latter to the amount of £10, it was agreed that in consideration that plaintiff would take the defendant's bill, payable at twelve months, for the amount of his own and his brother's debts, his brother's debt should be placed to defendant's account; defendant accordingly accepted a bill for the entire, payable at twelve months, but plaintiff not being able to get it discounted returned it cancelled, and defendant then accepted a second bill, payable at six months. The affidavit to hold to bail, which was made by plaintiff's son, stated that the defendant had represented himself as a man of property, but that discovering shortly after the defendant had accepted the second bill that this was untrue, he returned that bill also cancelled, and commenced the present action, the defendant having been arrested for £43. Held that he was entitled to his costs pursuant to the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46. Collen v. O'Brien, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 255, C. P.

To entitle a defendant to costs under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 3, there must have been an actual arrest. Cash v. Trevor, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 433, Ex.

But it is not necessary for the defendant to show that the plaintiff was actuated by malicious motives in procuring him to be arrested for too large a sum. Id.

In an action for the non-delivery of goods the plaintiff, under the circumstances, was held to be justified in holding the defendant to bail for the value of the goods. Smith v. Ritchie, 1 Ir. Jur. 253, Q. B.

Discharge.—When a defendant was arrested under a capias quo minus, in which he was described by the initial of one of his Christian names, he was discharged on entering a common appearance, although he had signed the promissory note on which he was sued, by the same initial, it appearing that due diligence had not been used to obtain a knowledge of the real name. Symes v. Batt, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 23, Ex.

Upon a motion to discharge a defendant from custody, upon the ground that she is a married woman, notice of the motion must be served upon the opposite party even to obtain a conditional order. King v. Keenan, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 66, Q. B.

Where a party was in custody on a criminal charge, which was abandoned, but immediately on being liberated was taken in execution upon a writ of ca. sa. Held, the application for the prisoner's discharge might properly be made to the court from which the process issued, but the criminal court might also take cognizance of it. Buckmaster v. Coe, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 101, Ex.

A bail bond given by the defendant on his arrest was cancelled, and proceeding thereon stayed, on terms of the defendant paying the costs of such proceedings, and entering a common appearance.—3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 6. Mitchell v. Ferns, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 49, Ex.

A defendant having been arrested, and having given bail to the sheriff, the court ordered the bail-bond to be cancelled on defendant entering a common appearance.—3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 6. Hookes v. Duke of Rovigo, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 51, Ex.

A defendant who had been arrested, and given bail to the coroner, previously to the passing of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, was held to be in custody within the 6th section, and the bail-bond was cancelled on his entering a common appearance. Arbouin v. Rogers, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 53, Ex.

The court will not grant a conditional order to discharge a party out of custody on mesne process, where he is also in custody on an execution. O'Loughlin v. Hughes, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 63, C. P.

The court will not discharge a defendant from arrest under mesne process where he has presented a petition under the insolvent act to be discharged from the same debt, although that petition was dismissed at his own instance before the application was made. Cohen v. O'Donovan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 88, Q. B.

Upon a motion to make absolute a conditional order for the defendant's discharge, under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 6, the court, under the circumstances of the case, granted the defendant his costs of the application. Brennan v. Isaac, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 101, Q. B.

To preclude a party from the benefit of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 6, he must not only have presented a petition in the insolvent court, but the petition must be pending at the time of the application. Fitzpatrick v. Dunne, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 158, Ex.

Quere, if his petition had been dismissed by fraud, would that preclude him from the benefit of the statute. Id.

It is not necessary to move, under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 5, for a conditional order that a party who had been arrested on a judge's fiat, should be discharged from custody; such a motion should be made upon notice, and met in the first instance. Mills v. Magennis, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 271, C. P.

Where the defendant was arrested under a judge's fiat, the court discharged him from custody on his own affidavit, corroborated by others negating the inference drawn by the plaintiff from his acts and conversations, and denying any intention of leaving the country. Gabriel v. Lysaght, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 272, C. P.

The court refused to discharge a defendant out of custody, though the plaintiff omitted to leave with the sheriff, at the time of lodging the execution, a certificate of the sum due, according to the provisions of the 6 Anne, c. 7, but put the plaintiff, who was out of the jurisdiction, under terms to appear to an action for an illegal arrest. Irwin v. Staunton, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 270, Q. B.

A party having been arrested on a writ which was not endorsed, as required by the 43rd general rule, and having, while in custody, filed his petition under the insolvent act, which he afterwards abandoned, but on which one of his creditors was seeking to have an assignee appointed, the court refused to discharge him. White v. Kidd, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 406, C. P.

On a motion to discharge a party out of custody, the court will take the affidavits made on both sides into consideration, and if, upon the whole, there appear to be probable cause for believing the defendant to be about to quit Ireland, the motion will be refused. Hickey v. Moors, 4 Ir. L. R. 468.

Where an order had been issued by the Insolvent Court, under the 5 & 6 Vic. c. 95, for the discharge of a pauper prisoner, the marshal must obey that order, though detainers be then lodged with the sheriff against the prisoner. Ex parte Staunton, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 581, Q. B.

Where a married woman, who was sued as the drawer of certain bills of exchange, suffered judgment to go by default, and was taken in execution, the court ordered her to be discharged upon motion, she having practised no deception, and the plaintiff being aware of her coverture. Pepper v. Kelly, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 580, Ex.

A plaintiff cannot act upon two concurrent writs of ca. sa. and fi. fa. at the same time. Where a ca. sa. and fi. fa. having issued together, a small sum only was levied under the former, and before returning the fi. fa. the defendant was taken in execution under the ca. sa. the court discharged her out of custody. Fennell v. Dempsey, 1 Ir. Jur. 64, Q. B.

The court will restrain a defendant who declines to be put under terms not to bring an action, from so doing. Id.

Assumpsit generally.—The plaintiff, a trader, being embarrassed in his circumstances, proposed to his creditors to compound their debts for 6s. and 8d. in the pound. The defendant, one of the creditors, refused to accede to the composition, unless, prior to his signing the composition deed, he received, in addition, goods to the value of 3s. and 4d. in the pound. The plaintiff gave the defendant goods to that amount, and, in consideration thereof, the latter signed the composition deed. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the amount for which the goods, so sold and delivered, were sold by the defendant. Holy v. Hicks, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 92, Ex.

When trustees of a road entered into an agreement for the toll of a gate upon the road with A. for a certain sum by the year. And A. took possession of the gate and received the tolls. Held that they were entitled to recover in an action of assumpsit, on the agreement, although they could demise only by deed. Minhear v. O'Leary, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 78, Q. B.

Consideration to support.—In an action against A. and B., (his wife,) on the joint and several promissory note of B., and a former husband. It appeared at the trial that B. was possessed of separate property at the time she signed the note, and that on application for payment of the note, during her widowhood, she admitted the debt and promised to pay it. The fact of her having separate property did not appear upon the declaration, which after stating the making of the note by B. and her first husband, and the death of the latter, averred that B., whilst a widow, and sole, "in consideration of the premises" promised to pay the note. Held on motion in arrest of judgment, that the declaration was bad, as not disclosing a sufficient consideration for the promise of B. Farrar v. Costelloe, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 425, Ex.

For money paid to the Defendant's use.—A. being seized of an estate for life, agreed to convey the same to B. his son, in consideration of a certain annuity, and also that the son should pay his debts, which were enumerated on a schedule annexed to the deed of conveyance. When the parties were about to execute the deed, it was discovered that a debt due by bond from A. to C. was omitted, and A. refused to execute the deed, until B. wrote a letter stating, that A. "having, at the time of the execution of the deed, conveying his estate to me, stated that there was a debt due by him to C. which is not included in the schedule, at foot of said deed of conveyance, I agree to secure, and pay the same, and that A. may be released and discharged from payment thereof;" C. accepted of this letter shortly after it was written; recovered two sums, on account of interest upon the bond debt, from B., and had not after looked to A. for payment; but B. had at one time offered to pay the whole of the principal sum to C. An action of assumpsit was brought for the recovery of this debt, by C. against B. Held that it could not be maintained; first, because if the contract by B. was considered as a collateral agreement, the latter did not shew a sufficient consideration to sustain the action; secondly, to charge the debt of the defendant upon it as an original undertaking; a release to C. or A., or an offer to execute such release, ought to have been relied upon and established. Cooper v. Foster, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 259, Q. B.

The defendant, by a written agreement, took a house from the plaintiff, at a certain yearly rent, "above taxes," the succeeding tenant having been obliged for to pay an arrear of taxes, which had accrued due during the period of the defendant's occupancy, was allowed by the plaintiff to take credit in his rent for the sum so paid. Held that the plaintiff might recover the amount, in an action of indebitatus assumpsit, for money paid to the defendant's use. Thorp v. Heron, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 319, Ex.

When a statute, creating a corporation, directs that the council of the corporation shall take an account of the expenses incurred in carrying into effect the provisions of the Act, and then that the council should order the town clerk to pay the same. Semble, such an order to the town clerk does not raise an implied assumpsit, by the corporation, to pay such expenses. Humphreys v. Lord Mayor, &c., of Dublin, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 159, Q. B.

Quere, is the town clerk liable for these expenses. Id.

Where, on the death of a lessee for lives, his heir-at-law took possession of premises demised to the lessee, and the rent thereof having become due after the death of the lessee, and during the possession of the heir-at-law, the executor of the lessee was compelled to pay it to the lessor. Held that the heir-at-law was liable in an action for money paid. Kirkwood v. Burke, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 387, Q. B.

Held, also, that the executor was not bound to sue in his representative capacity. Id.

By a decree of the Court of Chancery, a demise of six twenty-one parts, of certain lands, for nine hundred years from the year 1811, was executed in 1840 by the plaintiff to the defendant, and two others as tenants in common, pursuant to articles of agreement of 1786, and which lease contained the following recital, "and whereas it is the true intent and meaning of these presents, and of the parties hereto, and the said W. Fitton, (the defendant,) P. B. Fitton, and R. Fitton, do hereby admit and acknowledge, that they the said W. F., P. B. F., and R. F., their executors, administrators, and assigns, and their estate and interest, under these presents, in the premises hereinafter demised are, and shall be liable to the payment of rent charge, in lieu of tithes or tithe composition, which now is, or hereafter shall be, chargeable upon, or payable out of the premises hereinafter demised, in addition to the yearly rent hereinafter reserved; and that the lessors in these presents, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, shall be wholly exempted therefrom." And in the reddendum the rent was expressed to be payable "over and above all taxes, charges, rates, assessments, rent-charge, in lieu of tithes, and other impositions whatever, imposed, or to be imposed by Act of Parliament, or otherwise, quit and crown rent only excepted." The plaintiff having in five twenty-one undivided parts of the same parcel of land, also demised by him to the same lessees, an estate liable to the tithe rent-charge, under threat of legal proceedings, paid the tithe rent-charge, due out of the eleven twenty-one parts, and sued the defendant in assumpsit for contribution, in respect of the six-twenty-one undivided parts, held under the lease of 1840. Held, first, that under the above state of facts, the defendant was entitled to pay the rent-charge in question, and sue the defendant for contribution; secondly, that covenant for the amount was not maintainable upon the lease of 1840; and that the action was well brought in assumpsit, for money paid to the defendant's use. Davis v. Fitton, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 81, Ex.

Where a party gives one promissory note in substitution for another, which is accepted by the holder of the first in discharge of it, an action for money paid, for the use of the defendant, is maintainable. McKenna v. Hartnett, 1 Ir. Jur. 232, Ex.

A special verdict stated, that "the defendant did receive, as salary and fees, for executing the duties of the office, the sum of £3,011 9s. 4d." Held, that the salary and fees, so found to have been received, were legal fees, as such, and recoverable in an action for money had and received. Darley v. Smyth, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 376, Ex. Ch.

Moral Obligations.—A father is not under any legal obligation to provide for the support of his child; and to make him liable for necessities supplied for the maintenance of the child, there must be a contract expressed or implied; nor will the fact, that the father has permitted the child to live with the mother, while she lived apart from him, be any evidence that she is an agent of the father, or that she has any authority from him to contract debts for the maintenance of the child, when he disputes the legitimacy of such child. Day v. Spread, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 247, Q. B.

For Deposits paid upon Undertakings abandoned or abortive.—The defendant being the proprietor of certain shares in a projected joint stock company, for which he paid a deposit of £50, sold the same to the plaintiff for £250, through a third person who negotiated the entire sale. In about a fortnight after the project was set on foot it was entirely abandoned; and, before any deed or written agreement was executed by the parties, the plaintiff received back the £50, the amount of the original deposit on the shares he purchased, and then brought the present action for money had and received for his use, by the defendant, in order to recover the residue of the £250. Held, that he was entitled to recover that sum. Maguire v. Goddard, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 306, Q. B.

Use and Occupation.—Where A. was tenant from year to year to B. and C., the holding being in each case from November to November. B. served notice to quit upon A. and C., requiring them to deliver up possession on the 1st of November, 1840; and brought his ejectment in January following. In February following C. gave up possession of the premises; and in 1842, B. having obtained judgment in the ejectment against A. he executed his habere, and turned A. out of possession. It also appeared that C. had paid all rent due by him to November, 1840. Held, that, under these circumstances, A. could not maintain an action for use and occupation against C. for any rent to accrue after November, 1840. Harman v. Henderson, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 477, Q. B.

In assumpsit for use and occupation, if it appear on the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses that the agreement on which the action is brought, though originally made and entered into by parol, was afterwards reduced into writing, and signed by the plaintiff, that agreement must be produced, or proper ground laid to admit of secondary evidence. Thunder v. Warren, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 181, Ex.

In an action for use and occupation, the plaintiff proved by a witness the fact of the occupation by the defendant, and on his cross-examination admitted there was a written agreement in existence which the plaintiff did not produce. Held, that such instrument ought to have been given in evidence; and a declaration, by the defendant, of his holding at a particular rent, was not admissible. Lawless v. Qucale, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 382, Q. B.

A. being in possession of certain premises, at a yearly rent, proposed by letter to B. to become lessee of the same, and additional premises, for the same term that B. held, at a specified rent payable half yearly, to commence on the 1st of May then next—reserving power to pay the ground rent to the landlord, and deduct the same from the stipulated rent; and, also, reserving liberty to purchase the right of B., in said premises, at any time after the date thereof; A. having remained in possession for two years subsequent to this proposal, and no lease having been executed—Held, that an action for use and occupation was properly maintainable for the rent in arrear. Henry v. Vance, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 205, Q. B.

When a corporation purchased houses, pursuant to power given them by certain town improvement Acts of Parliament, which did not directly authorise a letting by will from year to year, and which houses, at the time of the purchase, were in possession of yearly tenants, whose interests had not been purchased, nor had they been remunerated for damages done by the works of the corporation—Held, that the corporation might sue them in use and occupation, for rent accruing after the purchase. The Corporation of Belfast v. Tisdall, 1 Ir. Jur. 206, Cir. C. [Per Pigot, C. B.]

The defendant was declared tenant under the court in a mortgage matter. In the month of December, 1846, on the receiver being discharged, the plaintiff, (the mortgagor,) distrained the defendant for the rent, which the latter paid under pressure of the distress. In the month of March following the plaintiff put the defendant out of possession by an injunction, and brought an action for use and occupation, for the period intervening, between the preceding November, and the time of executing the injunction. Held, that such an action was maintainable. Mitchell v. Bulfin, 1 Ir. Jur. 143, Ex.

At the period of the setting, the following memorandum was entered—"Declare Edward Bulfin tenant to the lands, at £66 per annum, he paying the inheritor for his seed and labour, and getting in return compensation for the grass which has been consumed." Held, to be conclusive of the nature of the agreement, and that plaintiff could not sustain a count for the price and value of crops bargained and sold. Id.

Seemle, that an action for use and occupation of an incorporeal hereditament does not lie, except it be incident to the reality. Minthear v. O'Leary, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 73, Q. B.

A tenant sued in an action for use and occupation, and who obtains a verdict which is bad, by reason of the misdirection of the judge who tried the case—cannot, as cause against a motion for a new trial, rely upon the wrongful eviction by his landlord, during the term, as suspending the rent altogether unless the fact of eviction has been found by a jury. Smyth v. Kellett, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 43, Q. B.

Action for Money had and received.—A. being seized of government stock, standing in his name died intestate; and B. obtained administration of it; B. died intestate, and C. obtained administration, de bonis non, to A.; C. executed power of attorney, authorising E. to sell out the stock, and receive the amount for her, which E. did; C. afterwards died without having received the proceeds of the sale, and appointed D. his executor; D. may recover the amount of the proceeds, in an action for money had and received by G., to the use of C. Curbois v. Bereton, 2 Ir. Jur.

Pleadings in indebitatus Assumpsit.—The declaration stated, that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff, in a certain sum, for the use and occupation of certain premises, without string promise to pay it. It also contained the money counts, which were introduced under a "what also," and concluded with an averment, that the defendant, in consideration of the premises respectively, promised to pay the said last mentioned several monies respectively on request. Held, on demurrer, that there were two counts in the declaration, and that the first was bad, for want of promise; the word "last mentioned;" in the second count not extending to the first. Wilson v. Biddell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 538, Ex.

A count for use and occupation, reading "that the defendant held, and occupied a house, at the request, and by the permission of the plaintiff," Held, on special demurrer, to be bad. Osborne v. Fox, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 369, Q. B.

The declaration stated, that the defendant was indebted to J. C. deceased, in a certain sum for work and labour; and in another sum for goods sold by the said J. C.; and in another sum for agist divers cattle, without averring any promise to pay. It also contained the money counts, which commenced thus—"And, also, the said defendant, on the same day and year, and at the place aforesaid, was indebted," &c.; and concluded—"And, therefore, the defendant afterwards, to wit on the day and year last aforesaid, and at the place aforesaid, in consideration of the premises, then there promised to pay the said last mentioned several monies respectively, to the said J. C. in his life time, on request; yet he hath disregarded the promises, and hath not paid any of the said monies or any part thereof." Held, on special demurrer, the first set of counts were bad for want of promise. Condon v. Hydes, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 339, Q. B.

Pleadings in special Assumpsit.—The declaration in the first count averred, that certain premises had been commenced by one B., as trustee of the plaintiff, against C. and S., for certain sums by them to B.; that judgment was recovered against them, and C. and S. taken in execution thereon; that in consideration thereof, and that the plaintiff at the request of the defendant, would consent to the discharge of the said C. and S. out of execution on their paying the sums respectively due by them, and half the costs, the defendant the plaintiff the other half of the costs; it averred the consent of the plaintiff to their urge, on paying the amount of said sums, and the costs; that the other half of the said costs to be paid by the defendant on request, and stated the breach. The third count was averring, that the defendant promised to be answerable to the plaintiff for half the costs, in consideration that the plaintiff would consent to let the sheriff to discharge them. Held, on demurrer, that these counts were bad, there being no averment that the costs remained due and unpaid by the defendant not being previously liable.

Held, also, that the consent stated in the first count should be a consent from the plaintiff in the declaration, and that it should be averred that such consent continued to the bringing of the action. The second count stated, that the defendant promised to pay half the costs, without stating to whom. Held to be bad for want of that averment. May v. Ware, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 246, Q. B.

A statement that one person is trustee for another is not sufficient; the nature of the trust must be shewn. Ib. [Per Burton, J.]

A declaration in assumpsit there were three counts on bills of exchange. The first stated the defendant as acceptor; the second and third as drawer of two other bills; and the common-law counts. The first count contained the promise to pay, according to the tenor, &c.; the second was stated in either the second or third; the third was a general conclusion contained the words "as mentioned." Held, on special demurrer, to the second and third counts, that the general promise in the conclusion, extended to these counts, notwithstanding the words last mentioned. Mills v. Gold, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 323, Q. B. [See Lomas v. Mearns, 3 C. B. 763.]

An action by the holder, against the indorser, need not necessarily aver a promise, in each count, the promise in the conclusion, given by the Statute of 1834, extending to all. Roche v. Roche, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 178, C. P.

Held, also, that the averment, "promised to pay said several monies to the plaintiff," was tantamount to a "promise to the plaintiff to pay him," Ib.

A declaration stated, that one H. A. was indebted to the plaintiff in £100 as his salary, for services done by the plaintiff for the said H. A., in the trade of corn-factor; and that H. A. assigned to the plaintiff his business, and the good will of the same, and all debts due to him; and that defendant, in consideration of plaintiff agreeing to assist him in carrying on said business, and collecting said debts, promised to hold himself accountable for the payment of plaintiff's salary, due by H. A. to the plaintiff; and in consideration of the promises, defendant undertook, and promised to pay, the last-mentioned sum of money, to the plaintiff, on request. The common-law counts were added, averring a general breach, but without averring a specific request. Ubi capius requisitur. Held upon writ of Error, that the verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, that the declaration was bad; it appearing that the defendant's promise was a promise to pay the debt to another person, H. A., upon request; yet that no default was alleged on the part of H. A., and no request averred on the part of the plaintiff.

Held, also, that the defect was not cured by the verdict, a previous request being necessary to give title to the plaintiff, such request being laid in the declaration as part of the defendant's promise. Maher v. O'Shea, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 516, Ex. Ch.

In an action of assumpsit the plaintiff declared that he was seized under an indenture of release, of certain premises by which he covenanted to pay the rent thereby reserved, and also to keep the premises in repair; and being so seized, and having in his possession such indenture, the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff would deliver him the indenture, and put him in possession of the premises, promised to pay the rent, and keep the premises in repair. Plea, that this promise was parcel of a contract, respecting an interest in land, was within the Statute of Frauds, and required a note in writing. Held, upon general demurrer to this plea, that it appeared sufficiently on the pleading, that the agreement concerned an interest in land, to bring it within the Statute of Frauds. Bentham v. Hardy, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 179, Q. B.

A declaration stated, that in consideration that the plaintiff, and one E. B., now deceased, at the special instance and request of the defendant, had given and made to the defendant a proposal of £15 a year, with a fine for certain lands, undertook, and promised the plaintiff, and the said E. B., to complete a purchase of the estate, and to execute a lease of the premises; and averred, as a breach, that the defendant did not effect and complete the purchase of the estate, nor execute a lease of the premises. Special demurrer, that there was no averment of a performance of precedent matter by the plaintiff, or of a special request by the plaintiff to the defendant to execute the lease; and that there was no averment of a reasonable time having elapsed, or that a conveyance had been tendered by the plaintiff to be executed. Held that the declaration was bad. Dolan v. M'Ternan, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 175, Q. B.

A declaration stated, that in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, had then and there bought a horse of him, he then and there promised that the horse was sound. Held, on special demurrer, to be good; for that the sale and warranty were contemporaneous, and that the statement in the declaration was not an averment of a sale being bad before the promise was made. Smyth v. Morrison, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 213, Q. B.

The declaration contained a count in assumpsit by payee against the defendant, as one of three joint and several makers of a promissory note for £24, and the money counts. Pleas, the general issue to the whole declaration, and to the second count, actio non; because before the making of the note in the first count mentioned, the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in £20, and thereupon, in consideration that the defendant, at the special instance and request of the plaintiff, could procure one P. R. and J. M., to join the defendant in making the said note, the plaintiff promised and undertook not to take any proceedings by city attachment, or otherwise, for the recovery of said sum of £20, until default should be made in the payment of the said note; and that the defendant did procure the said P. R. and J. M. to join in making the said note; and the same was made upon the terms and the consideration aforesaid, and upon no other; and that afterwards, and before the note became due, the plaintiff, in violation of said agreement, and of the terms and consideration upon which the note was made, sued out of the Court of Record, of the borough of Dublin, a certain writ, called a city attachment, and procured the defendant's goods and chattels to be seized and attached; and afterwards prosecuted an action in said court, against the defendant, for the said sum of £20, in violation of the agreement and the terms, and consideration upon which said note was made. On the first plea the plaintiff joined issue, and to the special plea replied—that the promissory note, in the said plea mentioned, was not made upon the terms and consideration in said plea alleged. The jury found for the defendant upon the special plea, and, by the direction of the court, for the plaintiff upon the general issue, on the first count, and for the defendant on the issue on the indebitatus counts, which were not sustained by the evidence. Held that the special plea was a valid one, and that the finding of the jury thereupon having shewn a total failure of consideration, the defendant was entitled to a general verdict upon the record. Pepper v. Maguire, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 461, Ex.

A declaration in assumpsit by the indorsee against the acceptor, which contained a special count, with the usual promise to pay in it; and the common money counts concluded with an averment, that the defendant afterwards, &c., in consideration of the promises respectively, then and there promised the plaintiff to pay the last mentioned monies respectively, on request; yet he hath disregarded his promise, and hath not paid any of the said monies, or any part thereof, to the plaintiff's damage, &c. Held, to be a sufficient averment of a breach of the promise contained in the special count. Bourke v. Cooney, 6 Ir. L. Rep., C. P.

Evidence.—On a sale by auction of certain property of a bankrupt, the conditions of sale referred to public advertisements, which professed to contain a description of the property to be sold. Held, in an action of assumpsit, by the vendee against the assignee of the bankrupt, to recover back the deposit on the purchase money, that these advertisements were admissible to show that the conditions of sale misdescribed the premises. Thompson v. Guy, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 6, Q. B. [Pennefather, C. J., dissentiente.]

ASSURANCE, (POLICY OF.)

Policies on Life.—A policy of assurance effected on the life of E. F., commenced with a recital that E. F. had proposed to effect an assurance on his own life with the C. J. company, and had deposited in the office of the said company a declaration signed by him, dated &c., which being set forth as the strict statement of the facts, was received as the basis and condition of the contract of assurance between the said E. F. and the company, setting forth, &c. (setting forth and qualifying certain of the items contained in the declaration, with respect to his age, health, habits, and his accessions to the articles of agreement, and constitution of the company, and omitting the others,) and the policy concluded with a proviso "that in case any untrue or fraudulent allegation be contained in said declaration deposited in the office as aforesaid, or that any information respecting the past health or habits of the person assured, or any other circumstance important to the directors to know shall have been withheld from them, or in case payment of the said premium shall not be regularly made as aforesaid, or if the time on the part of the assured in the life shall be determined, or in case any of the conditions set forth in the conditions hereunto annexed, as well as the original proposal, then and in every such case the policy shall be null and void, and all monies therefor shall be forfeited to the company." The plaintiffs averred in their pleadings that the declaration of the said E. F. so referred to in the policy, and so made by him, was in all respects true. Held that all the matters contained in the proposal and declaration referred to in the policy, besides the specially set forth, were to be taken as matters of warranty and not of mere representation, and that therefore the suppression by E. F. of the fact of having been attended by another medical man besides the one named in the declaration, although one of those matters specially set forth in the policy, had vitiated the policy, though the jury found that the fact suppressed was neither fraudulently withheld, nor a circumstance important for the directors of the company to know. Scotles v. Seaming, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 367, Ex. Ch.

Assumpsit on three several policies of assurance, each contained a provision that it should be void "if anything stated by the assured, either in the declaration thereinbefore mentioned to have been made by him should not be true." The proposal for assurance contained the following particulars: "Has the party's life been accepted or refused by any other office, and, if accepted, was it at the usual premium, or with what addition?" The answer returned by the assured was, "Anytime and National Office, at the usual premium." The following agreement appeared at the foot of the proposal, and was signed by the assured: "I hereby agree that the proposal mentioned in the above policy shall form the basis of the contract between the assured and the company; and if there be any fraudulent concealment or untrue allegation contained therein, all money which shall have been paid on account of this insurance shall become forfeited, and the policy void." The defendant proved at the trial that the assured had proposed the same party's life for insurance at two other offices, previous to effecting the assurance with the defendants, and his proposal was rejected. The judge, in summing up, stated to the jury that it was for them to say whether there had been a concealment by the assured of any circumstance which it was material for the company to know. Held, that this was a misdirection, for the the assured had contracted with the company that the several matters contained in the proposal should be answered truly, and, consequently, that the question, whether an answer given was more or less material, was not open to him. Bennett v. Anderson, 1 Ir. Jur. 245, Q. B.

Policies on Vessels.—A policy of assurance effected on a vessel contained the words "lost or not lost at Cardiff to Ballyshannon, beginning the adventure from loading thereof at Cardiff," and in a subsequent part of the policy were the words, "that the said vessel was warranted safe in port." Held that the words "safe in port" meant the port of departure, and that the vessel being at the time of effecting the policy safe in another port, did not satisfy the terms of the policy, Kernahan v. The National Assurance Company, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 319, Q. B.

ATTACHMENT.

Against Sheriff.—See SHERIFF.

For contempt of process of Court.—To obtain an attachment for not obeying a writ of habeas corpus if the writ be not personally served, the affidavit must state that a servant or agent of the party to whom the writ is directed was served at the house where the person was detained. In re Wilbridge, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 1, Q. B.

Where an attorney had been subpoenaed to give evidence and excused his absence, on the ground that he was attending a motion in the Rolls Court, and denied the contempt, the Court refused an attachment at the instance of the plaintiff against whom there had been a verdict. Collins v Green, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 17, Q. B.

Where a witness came from the country to Dublin, pursuant to a subpoena ad testificandum, and attended court during the first day of the sittings, but did not attend on the next day until after the case had been called on, and the plaintiff nonsuited, the court refused to grant an attachment against the witness, it appearing that he had been induced to suppose from the state of the Nisi Prius list at the close of the first day, that the case could not come on at an early hour on the second; and the witness deposing that he had been unable to leave his bed until a later hour than usual on the latter day, in consequence of indisposition. McCormack v. Magrath, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 519, Ex.

The court refused to attach a witness for not attending a trial in obedience to a subpoena, where his non-attendance originated in a misconception of the meaning of an arrangement entered into between him and the plaintiff's attorney, whereby he was to be sent for. Ib.

A material witness who was served with a subpoena ad testificandum on a certain day, and attended accordingly, but on finding that the trial was adjourned until the following day, expressed an intention of absenting, and did absent himself, was attached until he paid the costs of the non-suit occasioned thereby, though the subpoena did not require him to attend "from day to day" until the cause was disposed of, and though he was not served with a further notice to attend. Swaine v. Taaffe, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 101, C. P.

It is not necessary that a subpoena should be entitled in the name of more than one of the lessors of the plaintiff. Ib.

Where a question was left to the jury whether a particular witness was not collusively kept out of the way, Held, that the subpoena being to attend on a particular day only, was no defence, though it might be cause against an attachment. Keating v. Smith, Bl. D. & O. 159, N. P. [Per Pigot, C. B.]

For non-payment of Costs.—Where a motion to take a frivolous demurrer off the file was granted, and the parties filing it ordered to pay costs, Held, that an attachment might issue for them, as they could not be included in the execution, not being costs in the cause. Anonymous, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 66, Q. B.

Privilege.—In transitory actions, an attorney has the privilege of suing in his own court, and laying and retaining the venue in the county in which it is situated. Montgomery v. Cheyne, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 163, Q. B.

In an action, by an attorney, for the recovery of a bill of costs, the venue was changed before plea pleaded to the adjoining county, upon an affidavit, that from the peculiar influence of the plaintiff in the county, where the venue was laid, a fair and impartial trial could not be had. Boyse v. Smyth, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 366, Ex.

License-Certificate.—The defendant, who was an attorney, but had not taken out his license for several years, having been served with process, appeared by attorney, and pleaded in abatement his privilege to be sued by bill without process. An English solicitor suing, in this country a defendant resident here, for costs incurred in England, is not bound to serve his bill of costs, pursuant to the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73,* (Eng.) prior to bringing his action. Whyte v. Chichester, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 409, Q. B.

An Irish solicitor suing in England for business done in Ireland, is not bound to serve his bill of costs one month before bringing the action. Guinness, v. Allen, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 412, Q. B.

Taxable items.—When a bill of costs was for conveyancing, with the exception of one item, for drawing a bond and warrant of attorney. Held, that the warrant being a taxable item subjected the whole bill to taxation, and no action could be brought on such a bill if not served pursuant to the statute. Dunne v. Tierney, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 321, Ex.

Taxation of.—Where an attorney delivered his bill a month before action brought, and after action brought, the client obtained an order to have the bill taxed, and more than one-sixth was struck off. The court refused to give the client the costs of taxation, no settled practice to the contrary being shewn. Hamilton v. Gould, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 285, Q. B.

Held to be irregular, and that the respondent was entitled to the costs of the application. Roddy v. Conroy, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 135, C. P.

Where an action is brought by an attorney for the recovery of his bill of costs, and it appears that there is but one taxable item; though it be for business done in some other court of law, the court will stay the proceedings, and refer the bill for taxation—upon an undertaking by the defendant's attorney, to pay same when taxed and ascertained—Independently of the 7 Geo. 2, c. 14, from the inherent jurisdiction which the court exercises over its own officers. Bastable v. Randon, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 167, Q. B.

Where an action was brought upon two bills of costs, as to one of which the defendant admitted his liability. The court, upon his application, referred the undisputed bill for taxation, upon terms of his lodging with the officer a blank plea of confession, to be filled for the amount to which the said bill should tax, if the plaintiff should fail as to the disputed bill, but if he recovered the amount of it, that also, should be included in the plea of confession. Kelly v. Antisell, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 492, Ex.

Ryan*, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 323, Q. B.

After declaration filed, an arrangement was entered into between the parties, with the privity of plaintiff's attorney, that securities should be given for the debt, and that the defendant should pay a sum of £6 to the plaintiff's attorney for his costs, it being understood, that the proceedings in the suit should not terminate until the costs were paid. Securities were duly paid, and repeated applications made, for the costs. Held that the plaintiff's attorney was irregular in proceeding in the suit, without the leave of the court. Farrell v. Elly, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 147, [Doherty, C. J. dissentiente.] The defendant's acceptance being dishonoured, plaintiff's attorney paid the amount to the holder (banking company), who promised to send him a bill which they had sent to their attorney. By the same post application for payment was made by the attorney both of the plaintiff and of the bank, the latter of whom stated that the bill was in his hands. The defendant, after declaration at the plaintiff's suit, paid the attorney of the bank, got the bill, and pleaded the general issue. The court refused to allow the attorney of the plaintiff to proceed with the action for his costs, and directed a stet processus. Murphy v. Kelly, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 472, Ex.

Where a party collusively, and without the privity of his attorney, consented to a compromise of the cause of action, the consent was set aside, and the attorney held to be entitled to his lien for costs, though he had served no cautionary notice. Nugent v. O'Brien, Bl. D. & O. 208, Q. B.

If after action brought the demand is settled without the knowledge of the attorney, it is not sufficient that he should serve notice of his intention to proceed for his costs; he should apply to the court for such leave. Kirwan v. Hampton, Bl. D. & O. 227, Q. B.

Reference to Tax.—After plea pleaded, the defendant will be allowed to have a bill of costs referred for taxation, without an undertaking to pay the amount when ascertained and without prejudice to his right to dispute the retainer. Dolphin v. Bird, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 216, C. P.

Recovery after Taxation.—Where the plaintiff, on changing his attorney, signed a consent, which was made a rule of court, that it should be referred to the taxing officer to tax and ascertain the amount of the costs of the former attorney, the usual undertaking to pay was omitted. The costs having been taxed, certified, and demanded, the court refused to grant an attachment against the plaintiff for non-payment; and the cause having been referred to arbitration, by a rule of Nisi Prius, the court further declined to stay the proceedings in the cause, or to make an order for payment within a specified time. Blake v. Blake, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 211, C. P.

AUCTIONEER—See SALE.

The defendant having been previously in treaty with two persons for the sale of a farm, gave notice to them to come to his house at a particular time, when the property should be set up and sold. They attended at the appointed time, a few of the defendant's friends and neighbours being also present, one of whom put down in writing the names of the bidders, and the conditions of the sale; after several biddings by both the persons who had been negotiating for the purchase of the farm, one of them having outbid the other, was declared by the defendant to be the purchaser. Held that this was not such a sale by auction as subjected the seller to the penalty imposed by the 54 Geo. 3, c. 82, on a person acting as an auctioneer without being licensed, or as rendered the sale liable to the auction duty. Attorney-General v. Cathew, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 149, Ex.

Quere.—If a person selling his own goods by auction, subjects himself to the penalty imposed by the 54 Geo. 3, c. 82, on an unlicensed auctioneer. Ibid.

In construing the terms of a penal act, the court is bound to see that the transaction sought to be effected by it is within the plain and ordinary meaning of those terms. Ib.

It is not necessary for the special bailiff of a sheriff to take out a license as an auctioneer, or to employ a licensed auctioneer to entitle him to sell, by public auction in the usual way, goods taken by him in execution under a civil bill decree, he not being thereby a person carrying on the trade and business of an auctioneer within the meaning of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 81, s. 26. Reg. v. Martin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 153, Q. B.

Quere, is the 46th sec. of the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 75, repealed by the 1 Vic. c. 43, s. 3.

A special bailiff, nominated by the plaintiff, and appointed by the sheriff, is not enabled to sell by way of auction, goods taken in execution under a civil bill decree, without being licensed, or procuring the assistance of a licensed auctioneer. *Attorney-General v. Notice of.—A notice of, describing the bail as of "S. A. Street, Druggist," where it appeared that he resided in S. A. Street, but carried on business in a different place, held to be sufficient. Williams v. Ansell, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 277, Ex.

There is no distinction, in a notice of bail, between the word "householder" and "housekeeper." Coughlan v. Devine, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 375, Ex. [Per Richards, B.]

A notice of bail, in which the bail are described as householders, is sufficient. Anonymous, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 229, Ex. [Per Pennafather, B.]

A notice of bail, which describes the bail as householders instead of housekeepers, is bad. Fou-drinier v. Pike, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 2, Q. B.

Commissioners for taking bail.—Commissioners for taking bail in the country have no authority to take a recognizance of security for costs. Loveland v. Daly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 537, Ex.

Surrender.—When a ca. sa. had issued against a trader, who had entered into a bond with sureties under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 8, and a return of non est inventus was filed on the 9th of February, and a writ issued against the sureties returnable the 15th of April, and an appearance was had on the 23rd. Held, that the sureties were too late in offering to surrender their principal on the 25th of April. Leavings v. Marshall, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 454, Q. B.

Sureties with a trader on a bond under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 8, conditioned to pay the amount of debt and costs which might be recovered against the principal, or to render himself, were after judgment allowed to render their principal in discharge of the condition of the bond. Baile v. Coyne, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 214, Ex.

Bail bond.—Where the names in the bail bond were different from those in the defendant's order, and notice of bail, and it was not stated where it was taken, though it appeared to have been acknowledged before a commissioner, it was held to be informal, and was ordered to be taken off the file of the court. Anonymous, 2 Ir. Lodging money in lieu of bail bond.—A party arrested on an affidavit to hold to bail, and the money for which the fiat issued was lodged by his attorney out of his own money, Held, that a party making such lodgment is to be regarded with the same favour as bail, and is entitled to all the advantages which he would have had in showing error or irregularity in the plaintiff's proceeding, in case he had actually joined in a bail bond. Johnston v. De Pothonier, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 25, Q. B.

The practice as to lodging money in lieu of bail is not altered by the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 3. Ruskell v. Clifford, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 3, Q. B.

Sufficiency of.—A person, tendered in bail swore he was worth double what he owed, but admitted his having bills of his protested without being able to account satisfactorily for his having done so, was refused. Williams v. Ansell, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 277.

Action on.—In an action on a bail-piece, the judgment against the principal is but collateral, and an indorsement to the action and not the foundation of it. The declaration alleged that the plaintiff recovered a judgment against the principal on the 17th of June, 1840; on the production of the record it appeared from the entry on the roll, to have been recovered on the 27th of May, 1840—the 17th being marked in the margin of the roll as the day on which it was actually entered. Pls. nul tiel record. Held, that there was no variance, the allegation of the recovery of the judgment being an allegation of substance and not of description. O'Loughlin v. Fogarty, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 54, Ex.

Semble, that if the judgment against the principal were matter of description, there would be no variance, as the day marked, pursuant to the statute, on the margin of the roll, is the true date of the judgment. Ib.

Staying proceedings.—Where in an action against bail, the bail bond was executed the 18th Nov. 1837, the bail offered to render the principal on the 21st, but subsequently requested the plaintiff to stay proceedings on the bond, the principal in the meanwhile became insolvent, and the action on the bond was not commenced till the 21st Sep. 1839. A motion by the defendant to stay proceedings was refused with costs. Norris v. Callan, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 180, Q. B.

Affidavit on which to ground a motion to stay proceedings, must deny collusion with the principal. Ib.

BANK—(JOINT STOCK.)

Pleading.—The defendant was sued as the public officer of a banking company established under the provisions of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 42, and was described in the commencement of the declaration as “the nominal defendant for and on behalf of a certain society or co-partnership, called the Southern Bank of Ireland,” and was stated to be sued as one of the public officers “pursuant to the statute in that case made and provided;” but in the body of the declaration the contract was stated as made with the defendant without saying as public officer. The proof at the trial was of a contract with the society or co-partnership. Held, that it sufficiently appeared in the pleadings that the defendant was sued in his official, and not in his individual capacity. Keily v. Whitaker, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 28, Ex.

The privilege given by the 6 Geo. 4, cap. 42, to banking companies established under the provisions of that act of suing in the name of any one of their public officers, does not authorize the institution of a suit in the name of more than one. A declaration so framed is bad on demurrer. Thompson v. Birnie, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 234, Ex.

The 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, Eng. (analogous to the 6 Geo. 4, c. 42, Ir.) is a public act, and the 10th section applies to actions brought in Ireland as well as in England. The public officer of an English company established under that statute may bring actions in Ireland for debts due to the company without specially setting out the statute in the declaration. Wright v. Murphy, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 258, Q. B.

The declaration described the defendant as “one of the public officers of certain persons united in co-partnership for the purpose of carrying on the business of bankers in Ireland, according to the statutory enactments in that case, made and provided.” Held, on special demurrer, to be bad, for not stating that the co-partnership was then carrying on, or had carried on the trade and business of bankers. May v. Hodges, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 584, Q. B.

The declaration stated, that, “I. F., one of the public officers of the society, or co-partnership, called the Belfast Banking Company, who sues on behalf of the said society, according to the statute, in such case made and provided;” and the causes of action were averred to have accrued, and the promises to have been made “to the plaintiff,” and the breach to the plaintiff’s damage, as such public officer. Held to be bad, upon special demurrer, for not shewing that the company were so constituted as to enable the plaintiff to sue on their behalf, pursuant to the 6 Geo. 4, c. 42. Thompson v. Kelly, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 32, Ex.

Held, also, that the words, “as such public officer,” could not be rejected as surplusage, so as to admit of the plaintiff’s recovering in his own right. Id.

Held that it was not necessary expressly to name the statute under which the plaintiff sued, it being a public general statute of which the court would take judicial notice. Id.

A declaration stated, that J. H., “the plaintiff in this suit, one of the public officers of certain persons carrying on the business of bankers in England, in co-partnership, under the name, &c., of the Yorkshire Banking Company, according to the form of the statute, in such case, made and provided, and who has been, and is registered at the Stamp Office London, pursuant to the said statute, to sue, and be sued, on behalf of the said co-partnership, and, also, as such public officer, duly registered as aforesaid, sues as nominal plaintiff, on behalf of said co-partnership,” &c.; and concluded, “and thereupon the said plaintiff, as such public officer, for, and on behalf of the said co-partnership, the said Y. B. C., by virtue of the said statute, brings his suit,” &c. Held, that there was no necessity to aver that the public officer had been nominated by the company; registration, under the statute, is proof both of nomination and of appointment. Howard v. Love, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 505.

Held, also, that the mode of pleading is not altered by the provisions of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, that statute not subjecting to any disability or condition companies that existed at the time of its passing. Id.

An allottee of shares in a railway company provisionally registered, paid a deposit of £2 2s. per share, and signed the subscribers agreement, which gave the provisional directors power to carry on the undertaking, or any part of it, or to abandon the whole, or any part of it; and out of the money which should come to their hands, by way of deposit or otherwise, to make such deposits or investments as might be required by the standing orders of Parliament, and, also, to pay salaries, &c., and generally to apply such monies in paying and satisfying all other costs, expenses, or liabilities, which they might incur in relation to the undertaking. The project proved abortive, and in an action of assumpsit to recover back the deposit, Held, that the plaintiff could not, in such action, impeach the validity of the subscribers’ agreement, and that by executing that deed, he had authorized the directors to dispose of the money, and, therefore, could not recover back any part of the deposit. Daly v. Rooney, 1 Ir. Jur. 196, Q. B.

Proceedings by Scire Facias against Members.—When a judgment has been obtained against the public officer of a joint stock banking company, established under the provisions of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 42, s. 18, and it is sought to recover the amount of the judgment from any of the members of the company, the proper mode is by scire facias. May v. Hodges, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 245, Q. B.

When the persons proceeded against were members of such company, when judgment was obtained, and were still so, the order for leave to issue the scire facias is absolute. Ib.

BANKER.

A., being a stockbroker and notary public, received money on deposit, and paid it out on cheques, like a banker; and in some other respects acted as a banker; he did not, however, hold himself out to the public as a banker, nor did it appear he was generally believed to be one, and in his books the alleged banking accounts were mixed with others as a stockbroker and trader. Held he was not a banker, within the provisions of the 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, requiring the enrolling and registry of bankers deeds. Stafford v. Henry, 1 Ir. Jur. 133, Ex. [See Fitzsimons v. Guinness, 1 Ir. Jur. 357.]

Actions by.—The 104th section of the 6 Wm. 4, c. 14, enacts, "That in actions by, or against any person acting by, or under a commission of bankruptcy, no proof of the petitioning creditor's debt, trading, or act of bankruptcy, shall be required at the trial, unless notice be given that the party intends to dispute some of such matters." Held, that this enactment applied to ejectments. O'Brien v. Bernard, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 6, Q. B.

Held, that where there are several lessors of the plaintiff, they are not bound to give evidence of those distinct matters, without notice, although but one be assignee. Ib.

Held, also, that such lessor need not appear on the record to be assignee, if, at the time of taking defence, the defendant knew of the proceedings in bankruptcy. Ib.

Held, also, that depositions by the defendant, in the bankruptcy cause, were admissible evidence of that fact.

The policy of the bankrupt code is to prevent the relation of a secret act of bankruptcy, so as to avoid all intermediate bond fide dealings. When, prior to an act of bankruptcy, a trader had executed a mortgage of a house and furniture to A., with liberty to enter and take possession, in case B. should make default in payment of the interest, at a certain time after it became due; B. made default in the payment, at the time specified, and, subsequently thereto, committed an act of bankruptcy, of which A. had no notice. Held, that this was a conveyance, contract, dealing, and transaction by, and with the bankrupt; and having been entered into more than two months before the issuing of the commission was protected by the 95th section of the Bankrupt Act, 6 Wm. 4, c. 14. O'Connor v. Harris, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 217, Q. B.

In an action of replevin, the declaration stated the taking to have been on the 27th of September, 1841. Pleas non caput, and two others, one laying the property in C. W. and G. B., and the other in their assignees. The plaintiffs joined issue on the first plea, and replied to the second and third, that the goods were the property of the plaintiffs and not the property of the persons named in those pleas. On these replications issue was joined. At the trial a deed of the 16th of June, 1840, was given in evidence, which was a mortgage for £10,000, with a proviso, that as long as the interest should be regularly paid within thirty days from the 16th of December, and 16th of June, half-yearly, plaintiffs would not require payment, without giving six months' notice; but if default should be made as aforesaid, that the plaintiffs might enter and sell the hotel and furniture; and it was proved that on the 27th of September, 1841, an arrear of interest being then due more than forty days, the plaintiffs under the said powers took possession of the mortgaged premises, and all the property therein; that on the same day the defendant in replevin issued a city attachment, and seized under it a portion of the said property, and it was for these the replevin was brought. It was further in evidence, that prior to the 27th of September, 1841, C. W. and G. B. had committed an act of bankruptcy, of which it did not appear the plaintiffs had notice. On the 29th September, 1841, a commission of bankruptcy issued against C. W. and G. B. which was not prosecuted, but on the 1st of April, 1842, a second commission issued, under which they were declared bankrupts. Held, that on the foregoing state of facts, the jury were properly directed to find for the defendants. Harris in replevin v. Anderson, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 232 note, Q. B.

Operation of Executions.—Where the goods of a trader were seized under an execution issued upon a judgment obtained by confession on a warrant of attorney, and after the seizure, but before the sale, the trader committed an act of bankruptcy, held that an action of trover lay at the suit of the assignee against the execution creditor for the recovery of the value of the goods to whom the sheriff had paid over the proceeds of the sale, without notice of the bankruptcy. Hudson v. Allen, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 438, Ex.

Seemingly, the 126th section of the 6 W. 4, c. 16, which provides, "that no creditor who shall sue out execution upon any judgment by default, he shall avail himself of such execution to the prejudices of other fair creditors," applies only to creditors who shall sue out execution within two months before the issuing of a commission of bankruptcy. Lessee O'Brien v. Bernard, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 6, Q. B.

Where an elegit issued on a judgment, and an inquisition and return had been made thereon, two months prior to the issuing of a commission of bankruptcy, but the return had not been filed till after the bankruptcy, held, that the return on the inquisition having been made more than two months prior to the bankruptcy, there was at that time an execution executed within the provisions of the 95th section of the 6 W. 4, c. 14, though no actual possession was thereby given. Id.

A party had been declared a bankrupt, and the assignee appointed on the 2nd September, 1842. In April, 1843, the usual consent to enable him to obtain his certificate, had been signed by the assignee and the majority of the creditors in number and value. But the other necessary steps to obtain the certificate had not been taken, and the bankrupt had continued to trade in his own name, without any attempt on the part of the assignee to take possession of his goods, until August, 1844, when they were seized and sold by the sheriff, under a writ of fi. fa. at the suit of a judgment creditor, the sum levied having been lodged in court by the sheriff. The court refused to pay it over to the assignee. Coleman v. Lynch, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 208, C. P.

An act of bankruptcy concerted by the bankrupt and a creditor, or one acting for him, is void against all not privy to it. Bourke v. Crosthwaite, Bl. D. & O. 74, N. P. [Per Brady, C. B.]

If two writs of execution issue, the first of which is invalid, the seizure under the second is good, as against a commission issued before the first was satisfied. Id.

In an action by a creditor of the bankrupt, against the sheriff, for the value of the goods seized, and given up by the sheriff to the assignee, it is competent to examine the attorney of the bankrupt, concerning a conversation relative to concerting the act of bankruptcy. Id.

Statements of the bankrupt to his attorney; of matter under which the sheriff does not justify, is not evidence. Id.

Practice.—In an action by the assignees of a bankrupt against a sheriff, for selling the goods of a bankrupt, the defendant was allowed to withdraw his plea, for the purpose of serving a notice, to dispute the Act of Bankruptcy. Thompson v. Waller, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 185, Q. B., S. C., Bl. D. & O. 27.

Protected transactions.—Assumpsit by the assignee of a bankrupt, to recover a sum of money levied on a sale of the bankrupt's goods, under a fi. fa. in a judgment entered at the suit of the defendant on a bond and warrant of attorney, the bond and warrant which were collateral with a settlement executed on the marriage of the bankrupt, had been executed to the defendant as a trustee in the settlement for the purpose of securing a provision for the wife of the bankrupt. By the terms of the settlement, judgment could not be entered on the bond without the consent of the bankrupt. The question raised was, whether the bankrupt had procured his goods to be taken in execution, "with intent to defeat or delay his creditors." The only evidence of this intent, was his having on the eve of his bankruptcy given his consent to entering judgment on the bond. It did not appear whether he consented spontaneously, or yielded to the importunities of the wife and trustee. Held, the bankrupt being under a moral obligation to provide for his wife, was not bound to withhold his consent, in case he had been pressed by his wife and her trustee for permission to enter judgment on the bond, and the court refused to disturb the verdict, though the conclusion which the jury arrived at, was not that which the members of the court individually would have come to. Rooney v. White, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 153, Ex.

Examination.—If upon his examination before the Commissioners of bankrupt, the bankrupt swear to a disposition of his property, which no reasonable man can believe, the Commissioner is authorized in committing him under the 52nd section of the 6 W. 4, c. 14. In re Caulfield, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 358, Q. B.

On an application to the Queen's Bench to discharge the bankrupt from custody, an affidavit containing additional statements of the bankrupt is not admissible, the party must be bound by the warrant. Id.

Questions put to a bankrupt in reference to the preparation of his schedule, are legal questions within the meaning of the 6 W. 4, c. 14, s. 49, and evasive answers thereto, justify the commissioners in issuing a warrant for his committal. In re Downing, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 494, Q. B.

A warrant authorising the committal of a bankrupt, for not giving satisfactory answers on his examination, ought to shew on the face of it, that he had been declared and adjudged a bankrupt. Id.

Semble, where the warrant states that the bankrupt surrendered himself, and in some of his answers his assignees were spoken of, the defect is cured, such being a formal matter and within the terms of the 52nd section. Id.

The warrant need not specify the precise answers with which the commissioner was dissatisfied. Id.

Actions by.—Nothing can be more distinct than the difference between the law of bankruptcy and insolvency, in respect of the right of an insolvent to sue on his contract; and for this reason that the bankrupt acts do not contain any provision about the dismissal of the petition. Moulds v. Power, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 165, Q. B. [Per Pennefather, C. J.]

There is one exception to the general rule, which is, that where the bankrupt becomes entitled to anything for his own services, there, he may recover; and that rule is founded upon this principle, that in such a case the assignee is not entitled to hire out the bankrupt, for the benefit of his creditors, but the bankrupt himself is entitled to what he earns. Id. [Per Pennefather, C. J.]

Form of.—The following memorandum—"My dear sir—You have given me this day £280, which I undertake to return to you next week. This money you have given me on behalf of Sir G. G., out of the trust money of Miss G., which you hold for her. (Signed) H. J. H." "To Sir G. G." Held, not to be a promissory note. Hamilton v. Gould, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 171, Q. B.

Consideration for.—In an action to recover the amount of a bill of exchange, for the price of a horse, and drawn by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff. Held, that the warranty and unsoundness were no defence to the action, and that the jury were properly directed to find for the plaintiff, except they were of opinion he acted fraudulently. Cripps v. Smith, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 277, C. P.

Action against A. and B., his wife, on the joint and several promissory note of B., and a former husband. It appeared, that B. was possessed of separate property at the time she signed the note, and that on application for payment of the note, during her widowhood, she admitted the debt to be a fair one, and promised to pay it. The fact of her having separate property did not appear upon the declaration; which, after stating the making of the note by B., and her first husband, and the death of the latter, averred that B., whilst a widow, and sole, "in consideration of the premises," promised to pay the note. Held, on motion in arrest of judgment, that the declaration was bad, as not disclosing a sufficient consideration for the promise of B. Ferrar v. Costello, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 425, Ex.

In assumpsit, by the indorsee, against one of the makers of two joint and several promissory notes, which notes were given to the payee in settlement of a demand, consisting of the purchase money agreed to be paid for certain mining property, for which the payee was suing at law certain trustees of a joint stock company, of which the defendant was one of the directors; the payee, (the vendor,) having waived his lien upon the property, and accepted as his security the personal covenant of the trustees. Held, that in such action the defendant could not deny or impeach the validity of the partnership deed, which he had executed. Howard v. Shaw, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 335, Q. B.

Held, that in an action by the payee of those notes, general evidence of fraud and imposition having been practised on the public, in the formation of the company, and the sale of the mining property, to which the payee was privy, having been used to induce the defendant to become a partner, and execute the partnership deed, or to become a party to the notes, was inadmissible, such fraud being only examinable by a Court of Equity. Id.

Held, that if the defendant had all the plans of information requisite to enable him to become acquainted with the state of the company's affairs, and the relative rights of the company and the trustees, it was no defence in such action, that he acted in ignorance, or that deceit had been practised on him in obtaining these securities by a representation. That the company were liable to the payee for the amount of the purchase money claimed, there being no evidence to connect the latter with such representations, and the representation being itself substantially true, the company being bound by the partnership deed to pay the trustees for the mining property. Id.

Held, that proof of the liability, in a court of law, of the company, for the purchase money, no matter what the value of the mines, and proof of the notes being given as a compromise of the actions pending against the trustees, was, under such circumstances, sufficient evidence of consideration given by the payee of the notes. Id.

Held, that even supposing evidence of fraud had been given in inducing the defendant to make and deliver these securities, or that he had given them without consideration, yet, that the onus of proving consideration, was not thereby thrown upon the plaintiff; unless, that evidence, affected him with notice of a participation in the fraud; or, that it was shewn he took the note after it became due; or, without any consideration. Id.

Marriage is a good consideration for a bill of exchange. McKee v. McKee, 1 Bl. D. & O. 80, N. P. [Per Brady, C. B.]

In an action by an indorsee, against the acceptor of a bill, the defendant gave evidence that the bill was fraudulently drawn for a larger sum than had been agreed upon between the drawer, and a person who was no party to the bill, but to whom the drawer had sent the stamp, signed in blank. Held, that such evidence was sufficient to throw upon the plaintiff the burthen of proving consideration. Delany v. Newland, 1 Ir. Jur. 238, Q. B.

Howard v. Shaw, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 335, commented and disapproved of, upon the question of fraud throwing the onus on the indorsee of proving consideration. Id.

In an action by the payee, against the maker of a promissory note, payable twelve months after date, a witness was examined, who stated, that the plaintiff had given £50 as a portion to the defendant's wife at her marriage, and on that occasion the note was given, by defendant, on the understanding, that if the defendant's wife survived the marriage for twelve months, the gift of the £50 should be absolute, and the note should not be put in suit. Held, on a motion for a new trial, that such evidence was admissible, as not varying the written contract, but shewing a failure of consideration. Murray v. Skinners, 1 Ir. Jur. 39, Q. B.

The only tri- of notice of dishonour was the notice of the t at a house to which the plaintiff was in the of sending paper parcels from his warehouse defendant, and which the witness swore e lodging of the defendant, but admitted the eason he had for calling them was that the lant had directed the parcels to be sent there. that this was not sufficient evidence of serf the notice of dishonour to warrant the judge ecting the jury, if they believed the evidence, d for the plaintiff. *Cumming v. an action by the indorsee against the indorser promissory note protested for non-payment, e of the protest is sufficient notice of dis- r. Hamilton v. Smith, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 409, Ex. an action by indorsee against indorser, upon of exchange drawn by one B., and due April 345, the plaintiff gave in evidence a letter from eadant to the plaintiff in the handwriting of rmer, in the following terms—"Dear Sir, eed not give me any notice of the non-pay- of Mr. O'C.'s or Mr. B.'s bill, which I end- to you, and which I am sure were not paid ay demanded. Yours, &c. Due this day, O'C. 20, B. £130." The date of the letter was so d, as to render it uncertain whether it was the or 22nd of April, 1845. Held, that this was nce from which the jury might infer a due nd of payment, and notice to the defendant of the dishonour of the bill. Pepper v. Queely, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 274, Q. B.

Notice of dishonour may be proved partly by written and partly by parol evidence. — v. Hearne, Bl. D. & O. 64, N. P. [Brady, C. B.]

On the trial of an action against the drawer of a bill of exchange, a witness proved that he had served the defendant with an account of the plain- tiff's demand, amongst the items of which was the amount of the bill in question, and that the defend- ant had objected to several of the charges made, but had passed over in silence the item relating to the bill. No direct evidence of presentment and notice of dishonour was adduced. Held that there was a prima facie case to go to the jury, that the defend- ant had due notice of the dishonour. MacEvers v. Berkeley, 1 Ir. Jur. 299, Ex.

The son of the testator, whose executors the plaintiffs were, was examined as a witness and ob- jected to on the ground that he was directly inter- ested in the result of the trial. Held that his evidence was admissible. Id.

Waiver of Notice of Dishonour.]—Where the defendant (the drawer) after the bill was dishon- oured by the acceptor, spoke of the bill and the sum secured thereby, as among the losses likely to accrue by the insolvency and default of the accep- tor, this was held to be evidence to go the jury that the defendant had received due notice of the dishonour of the bill. Ledlie v. Lockhart, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 89, Ex.

In an action against the indorser of a bill, the plaintiff gave in evidence this notice of dishonour—"Take notice, that J. B.'s draft on M. O'B., due yesterday, amount £138 1s. 2d. on which you are an indorser, has not been paid." It was proved that the defendant, after he had been arrested at the plaintiff's suit, voluntarily wrote a letter to the plaintiff's attorney, in which this passage occurred, "I propose out of my industry to pay your client £20 a-year, until the principal be fully discharged. I have no money to pay any costs." He subsequ- ently offered securities for the debt, stating that if acceded to, they would give him his liberty. These offers were entertained by the plaintiff, but the negotiation was subsequently broken off, in conse- quence of the defendant's non-performance of some of the conditions agreed upon. Held, that this evidence was admissible, though a compromise was pending, and the defendant in custody. Secondly, that the acts of the defendant, subsequent to his arrest, amounted to evidence of a waiver of the want of notice of dishonour.

Semble, that the notice was insufficient, it not containing any statement from which it necessarily appeared that the bill had been dishonoured. Brush v. Hayes, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 327, Q. B.

Pleading.]—In a declaration by indorsee, against indorser of a bill of exchange, accepted, payable at a particular place, it is not necessary to notice the special acceptance, or to aver presentment at such place. It is sufficient to state a general pre- sentment to the drawee, without stating any accep- tance, and to prove the presentment at the particu- lar place pointed out by the acceptance. Ledlie v. Lockhart, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 89, Ex.

Where a bill of exchange is by the drawer made payable in the body of it, at a particular place, and accepted generally. Held, in an action against the acceptor, that a presentment at that place need not be averred or proved. Davis v. O'Hara, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 337, Q. B.

Where the pleading contains an averment of some act which it was not necessary to aver, in order to sustain the action, proof of such averment is unnecessary. Ib.

In an action on a bill of exchange by the indorsee against the acceptor, the declaration described the drawers and indorsees as "certain persons using the name, style, and title of Charters, Holland, and Newsome." Held, on special demurrer, to be sufficient. Southey v. Magan, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 250, C. P.

A signature to a bill of exchange will be implied from the word "made." Ib.

In an action against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, made payable in the body at a particular place, and accepted generally, it is not necessary to aver, or prove presentment at the place where it is so made payable. Elliott v. Fisly, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 485, Ex. [Overruling, Roache v. Johnson, 1 Law Rec., N. S. 100, S. C. Hayes & Jones, 246.]

Assumpsit, by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the acceptor. The first count averred, "for that whereas Hugh F., carrying on business under the name, style, and firm of F. and Co., made his bill of exchange writing, and directed the same to the defendant, and thereby required the defendant to pay to the drawers, or their order, £—, two months after the date thereof;" and then averred, that H. F. indorsed to the plaintiff. Held, on special demurrer, to be sufficient. Reilly v. Jessop, 1 Ir. Jur. 7, Ex.

Assumpsit, on a bill of exchange. The averment of indorsement stated, that "the said defendant indorsed to the plaintiff," omitting "then and there." Held, on special demurrer, that time, being a material traversable fact, the omission of it vitiated the declaration. Jones v. Pope, 1 Ir. Jur. 7, Ex.

The declaration alleged, that A. B. directed his bill of exchange to certain persons trading under the name, style, and firm of F. and Co., &c., and that the said certain persons, trading under the name, style, and firm of F. and Co., accepted the same. Held, on special demurrer, to be a sufficient description of F. and Co., as acceptors. Barker v. Figgis, 1 Ir. Jur. 22, Ex.

To a declaration upon two bills of exchange, the defendant pleaded, "That before, and at the time when he first became, and was the indorser and holder, and interested in the bills of exchange, the plaintiff knew they were given for an illegal consideration." The plaintiff replied, "That he did not before, or at the time when he first became, and was the indorsee, and interested in the said bills, know they were given for an illegal consideration." Held, on demurrer to the replication, that, as the statement in the plea meant a single allegation, that the plaintiff became indorsee, and interested at the same moment, or in other words, had notice of the illegality, that the traverse was good. Cole v. Batcock, 1 Ir. Jur. 331, Ex. Ch., S. C. 11, Ir. L. Rep. 306, Q. B.

The plea, also, alleged, that the money was lost at a certain game called "Hazard," and that the plaintiff well knew that was the consideration for the bills. The replication alleged, that the plaintiff did not know that the bills were given for the consideration, in the plea mentioned. Held, that the traverse was good; the replication being in the words of the plea, must be taken to be co-extensive with it.

Held, that the traverse did not throw the onus upon the defendant, of proving a knowledge in the plaintiff, of the illegality before, and at the time of his becoming holder, as if he proved a notice of it before he became so, it would follow he had it at the time.

In assumpsit, by the indorser against the maker of a bill of exchange, the second count stated, that the defendant thereby required the acceptor to pay "at three months date, which period had then elapsed." Held, that averment was sufficiently certain, and was not ground of special demurrer. Maxwell v. Chambers, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 267, Ex.

Evidence.—In an action by indorsee against indorser, of a promissory note protested for non-payment, service of the protest is sufficient evidence of notice of dishonour. Hamilton v. Smith, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 409, Ex.

Quere, can parol evidence of a payment, by means of a bill of exchange, be given, without producing the bill, or proving the loss of it, or notice on the opposite party to produce it. Daly v. Kelly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 174, C. P.

In an action on a bill of exchange, by the indorsee against the acceptor, it was proved, that the bill had been due for three years, without any demand having been made for the payment, and the plaintiff's witness and attorney stated, that he had forborne to sue on it at the request of the indorser, who, it appeared, had lately become bankrupt, and left the country, and that the plaintiff had been appointed his provisional assignee. It was, also, proved by the defendant, that, about the time of the bill in question becoming due, the defendant had accepted another, for nearly the same sum, drawn by the same person, and indorsed by him to the plaintiff, and which was duly paid. The jury were directed to find for the defendant, if they believed that the second bill had been given in discharge of the first; and that there was a community of interest and privity between the indorser and indorsee, and the jury having found for the defendant, Held, that the declarations of the indorser were properly admissible in evidence against the plaintiff, and the court refused to set aside the verdict, on the ground of the admission of illegal evidence. Hunter v. Simpson, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 275.

Assumpsit, by the payee against the maker of a promissory note. Plea, the Statute of Limitations. The production of a note, corresponding with that stated in the declaration, in parties names, sum, and the time it had to run, will not support the plaintiff's case, he must connect the note pro-used with that stated in the declaration. O'Brien v. Roche, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 388, Ex.

A promise, after a note is due, to pay the amount of it, is evidence of the debt, under the money counts, and dispenses with the omission of a special count, averring presentment in the particular place at which the note was made payable in the body, and in the proof of presentment there. Carnegie v. Gibby, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 392, Q. B.

Declarations by the drawer of a bill of exchange, who has indorsed after maturity, are admissible in evidence against the holder, to prove illegality of consideration. Lyons v. Bolingbroke, Bl. D. & N. P. 19, N. P. [per Ball, J.]

Unury, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 102.]—A. applied to B., the proprietor of a loan office, for a loan of £5, which B. agreed to advance upon A. giving his joint and several promissory note, with two sureties, payable to the order of B. twenty-one days after date; B. to deduct from loan 1s. per £1, as discount, and 1s. for expenses of inquiring after the solvency of the sureties. The £5 to be repaid by weekly instalments of 5s. each; the first payment to be made in seven days from the giving of the note; but in the event of A. allowing three weeks to be in arrear, the twenty-one days specified having expired, the note was to be put in suit. Held, that was within the protection of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37. Fitzgerald, app., Lacy, resp., 1 Ir. Jur. 110. [Per Pigot, C. B.]

BILL OF LADING.

A. being the holder of a bill of lading of a certain cargo of coals, therein expressed to be deliverable to him as well as his assigns, brought assumpsit against B., the captain of the vessel, for the non-delivery of the same. The goods were stated in the instrument to have been shipped by C. Held, that A. was entitled to sue in his own name in the present form of action. Smith v. Ritchie, 1 Ir. Jur. 58, Q. B.

It appeared at the trial, on the cross-examination of one of the plaintiff's witnesses, that there was a charter party in existence, relating to the cargo in question, which the plaintiff omitted to produce. Held, that the bill of lading constituted in itself a complete contract; and that it lay with the defendant, if he sought to vary the terms of the same, to produce the charter party. Id.

Collector's (County Cess,) Bond.]—The court will not, without a suggestion of breaches, allow execution to issue on a judgment entered on a collector's bond, conditioned to pay over to the treasurer of a county, the county cess to be levied by the high constable off a barony, before the next assizes. Montgomery v. Blackwood, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 428, Q. B.

A judgment entered on a bond, with warrant of attorney, containing a release of errors, which bond was conditioned to levy and collect all such sums as should be presented by the grand jury of a county, comes within the provisions of the 9 Wm. 3, c. 10, s. 8; and it is necessary that a suggestion of breaches be entered before execution issues. Stratton v. Codd, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 1, Q. B., [Perrin, J., dissentients.]

A warrant of attorney contained the following clause—"It shall be lawful to, and for the said R. D., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to issue one, or more execution, or executions, upon the judgment, or judgments, to be entered upon these presents, for so much money as shall remain uncollected, or unpaid, to the said R. D., by the said defendant, without filing a suggestion of breaches, or taking any other or further legal proceedings, to obtain such execution, or executions, further than the judgment, or the judgments, to be entered aforesaid." The court refused to give effect to this stipulation, and set aside an execution, issued on this judgment, without a suggestion of breaches, as required by the 3 Wm. 3, c. 9, s. 8. De Lacour v. Murphy, 1 Ir. Jur. 46, Ex.

A verdict obtained upon a bond, conditioned for the discharge of the duties of poor-law clerk, will not be set aside upon the ground, that no breaches were assigned before the trial. Guardian of the poor of Castlereagh Union v. Dillon, 1 Ir. Jur. 229, C. P.

Deceazance.]—P. and J. M. executed a bond to the plaintiff, in the penal sum of £600, with warrant of attorney to confess judgment, the plaintiff writing them the following letter—"Gentlemen, you have this day executed to me your bond, with warrant of attorney, for confessing judgment in the penal sum of £600; now, I hereby declare, that such bond, and any judgment to be entered thereupon, has been passed to me as a collateral security for any overdue bills which I may hereafter discount for you, and for no other object—" separate judgments were entered upon this bond, within twenty-one days of its execution; but the warrant was not filed, nor was the letter to the defendants written upon the same paper as the warrant; the defendant having become bankrupt. Held, that such judgment was good against their assignees, and came within the saving clause of the 13th section of the statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105. Conlan v. McAnaspie, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 295.

Pleadings.]—Debt on bond against the heir of the obligor. Plea, that the plaintiff recovered a judgment on the same bond, against the administratrix of the obligor, and sued out execution, under which the administratrix was arrested, and was in custody. Replication, that she was discharged under the Insolvent Act, and that the judgment, debt, and damages, remained unpaid. Rejoinder, that at the time of the commencement of this action, the administratrix was still in custody, under the execution. Held, on demurrer, that the rejoinder and plea were bad; the judgment and execution against the personal representative not being a satisfaction of the debt, as against the heir, who was liable in respect of the real assets descended on him. Hewitt v. M'Gown, 11r. L. Rep. 84, Ex.

A declaration in debt on a bond, stating, that the bond had been lost. Held bad, on special demurrer, for not stating that the loss was occasioned by time or accident, or some other casualty. Barry v. M'Dowell, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 348, Q. B.

Maliciously issuing a Search Warrant.—In an action for maliciously, and without probable cause, issuing a search warrant, to search the plaintiff's house for goods alleged to have been stolen from the defendant. The judge told the jury that there would be sufficient to constitute probable cause, if they believed the facts in evidence; and left it to them, on the whole case, to find whether there had been probable cause or not; and, also, directed them to find for the plaintiff, if they believed there was any malice on the part of the defendant. Held, that this direction was right, and that the jury having found for the defendant, the court could not interfere in granting a new trial. Power v. Harrison, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 122, C. P.

Libel.—In an action for libel, it is not necessary to set out in the declaration a document referred to in the libel, which does not contain matter material to the sense, or does not alter the meaning of the libellous paragraph. Walsh v. Henderson, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 34, Q. B.

A libel, which by the innuendo at the heading was alleged to be conversant about a false charge of felony, made through feelings of religious bigotry by the plaintiff, against one D. S., went on to allege, that the plaintiff was aided in making the said charge by one C. R., who was stated to "have been for some time back, employing every means to win the confidence of this young gentleman, their intended victim, (meaning thereby that the said plaintiff, and the said C. R., had been contriving some plan to assail the character, and destroy the reputation of the said D. S.) as taking him on country visits, and inviting him to the Continent, with the hope, it is alleged, of getting him altogether to themselves, and destroying his prospects the more easily, by some foul charge, which he could not find means of contradicting, there being no one else of the company. They had met with a direct refusal, it seems, to their invitation to the Continent, and, therefore, rather prematurely opened their present plot, (meaning the said charge of felony.) Affidavits are, we understand, shortly to be laid before the law officers of the crown, charging the above facts, together with certain conversations between the pair of Romanists, who have trained this ingenious manœuvre, (meaning the charge of felony aforesaid.) Held, that this libel did not amount to a charge of conspiracy, though in the introductory part of the allegation, the plaintiff alleged, that the object of the defendant was to injure him, &c., by causing it "to be suspected, and believed, that he, the said plaintiff, was guilty of conspiracy, calumny, and fabrication of false charges;" and, therefore, it was not necessary that the defendant should have justified such a charge. O'Connell v. Mansfield, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 179, Ex. Ch. [Jackson, J., Richards, B., and Crampton, J., dissentientibus.]

In an action for a libel, the defendant having pleaded the general issue, and the special plea of an apology, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 2, the court refused to allow him to withdraw the latter plea, the plaintiff having sworn that he would be prejudiced thereby at the trial. Sullivan v. Lenihan, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 418, C. P.

In an action of libel, against the editor of a newspaper, the defendant pleaded the general issue, and the special plea, given by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 2. Held, that libels published in the same newspaper, and during the same editorship, more than six years before the publication of the libel complained of, were properly received in evidence on the part of the plaintiff. The judge having directed the jury not to take the said prior publications into consideration, in estimating the damages, but only for the purpose of ascertaining the animus of the defendant. Long v. Barrett, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 439, C. P.; S. C. 8 Ir. L. Rep. 331, Ex. Ch.

Several persons joined as plaintiffs in an action on the case for a libel, which contained imputations against the said persons, affecting them not only separately and individually, but as owners of a certain manufactory, by imputing malpractices in the conduct and management of it; and at the commencement of the declaration described themselves as trading under the name, style, and firm, of M. brothers, and then in the inducement, contrivances, and colloquia, made some averments which contained no allusion to any joint interest, and such as would have been adopted, if the plaintiff had been suing separately; and, also, other averments, which described them as having a joint interest, and charging an intention to injure them both personally, and in their trade and calling, and claimed damages for injuries of a personal and individual character, as well as for injuries in respect of their trade. Held, that the declaration was sufficient to sustain the judgment after verdict, and that the court would presume, that the jury had, under the direction of the judge, found joint damages for the joint injury, and for that only. Lefanu v. Malcolmson, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 481, Ex. Ch.

When one of the counts of the declaration contained matters defamatory of the plaintiffs, as co-partners in trade, even though it contained other matter defamatory of them as individuals, and though part of the innuendo ascribed the latter meaning to the libel, yet, after verdict, the court will presume, that the damages were awarded for the injury jointly sustained, and none other. Ib.

Where a libel contains various matters actionable in themselves, and to which the innuendo does not apply, it may be regarded as surplusage. Ib.

The Libel Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, does not apply to seditious libels. A justification under that Act, cannot, therefore, be pleaded to such indictment. Reg. v. Duffy, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 329, Q. B.

Evidence.—In an action of libel against the editor of a newspaper, the defendant pleaded the general issue, and the special plea given by the 6th & 7th Vict. c. 96, s. 2. Held, that libels published in the same newspaper, and during the same editorship, more than six years before the publication of the libel complained of, were properly received in evidence, on the part of the plaintiff; the judge having directed the jury not to take the said prior publications into consideration in estimating damages, but for the purpose alone of ascertaining the animus of the defendant. Long v. Barrett, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 439, Ex. Ch.

Slander.—A count in a declaration alleging, that the defendant falsely, wickedly, and deceitfully, represented, and affirmed, to one P., that the plaintiff was a person of bad character, and had been guilty of immoral conduct, and was not fit to be associated with; and so depraved, and of such a character, that the said P. ought not to permit, or suffer, him to reside, or dwell, in the house with the said P's. wife, and that the plaintiff was in other respects disreputable, and disgraceful, in his conduct. Held, to be a count for slander, and bad, on general demurrer, for not setting out the words verbatim. Sullivan v. White, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 40, Ex.

In an action in the case against a Roman Catholic clergyman, for publicly pronouncing the plaintiff, who was owner of a mill, to be an excommunicated person; the plaintiff examined witnesses to prove that, after his excommunication, he was avoided by his neighbours, and that his mill was deserted. The declaration did not specify the names of the persons who so avoided him, or deserted his mill. Held, that the general evidence of these two facts were properly received, on the ground that such evidence was not to be considered as evidence of special damage, but as evidence to shew that the consequence, which the defendant intended to arise from his act, actually happened. M'Loughlin v. Welsh, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 19, Q. B.

A declaration for slander, stated, in one count, that the plaintiff was guilty of most abominable conversation, and public exposure of his naked person; and in another, that he was guilty of publicly, and indecently, exposing and uncovering those parts of his person which ought to be kept concealed. Held, to be an imputation of an offence punishable as a misdemeanour. Torbitt v. Clave, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 86, Q. B.

Maliciously abusing the Process of the Court.]

—Form of a declaration, for maliciously abusing the process of the court, for the purpose of affecting the arrest of the plaintiff. Weaver v. Byrne, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 439, Q. B.

Malicious Arrest.]—See ACTION.

In an action for a malicious arrest, the absence of probable cause must be shewn by the plaintiff, and where such a question is a mixed one of law and facts, and the inference of the fact doubtful, the judge is right in submitting it to a jury. Clarke v. Sawyer, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 530, Q. B.

In an action in the nature of an action for malicious arrest, but which in form was an action for maliciously abusing the process of the court, for the purpose of effecting the plaintiff's arrest, the judge left two questions to the jury. First, whether the plaintiff, in point of fact, had been arrested; and, secondly, if so, whether such arrest had been malicious; and told them that as the writ issued regularly, and for a debt admitted to be due, no execution of that writ, however oppressive in point of fact, could in point of law be malicious. Held, that supposing there was evidence to go to the jury, that this direction was erroneous. Weaver v. Byrne, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 439, Q. B.

In case for maliciously and injuriously over-marking a writ of ca. sa., and causing the plaintiff to be arrested thereon, the judge having stated that, in his opinion, proof of actual malice in fact was not necessary, but that malice might be inferred from gross neglect, told the jury that, if in their opinion, the injury done to the plaintiff was occasioned by the gross neglect of the defendants, they were at liberty to infer malice. Held, a misdirection. Carmichael v. Waterford, and Limerick, R. C., 1 Ir. Jur. 186, Q. B.

In an action, on the case for maliciously and injuriously over-marking a writ of ca. sa., and causing the plaintiff to be arrested thereon, it is not sufficient, in order to prove malice in the defendant, to show that his attorney or agent was actuated by malicious motives. Carmichael v. Waterford, and Limerick, R. C., 1 Ir. Jur. 285, Q. B.

Held, that a mere mistake, on the part of the attorney, was no proof of malice in him, and that the facts relied on by the plaintiff, in the present case, amounted to nothing more. Ib.

Semble, that the same rule would apply equally to the cases of an individual, and a corporate body. Ib.

An action against a public company, in the name of their public officer, for having falsely, maliciously, and, without probable cause, procured the arrest and imprisonment of the plaintiff, cannot be sustained by proof that one of the directors, who was also general manager of the bank, had acted wilfully and maliciously in the proceedings which formed the subject matter of the arrest, without establishing the concurrence in, or adoption of, his acts by the company. Reid v. Mitchell, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 322, C. P.

The 6 Geo. 4, c. 42, has made no change in the general law, as affecting such an action, beyond allowing the company to be sued in the name of their public officer. Ib.

CERTIORARI.—See CONVICTION.

Where it lies.—The court will issue a writ of certiorari, to bring up the record of the Assistant Barristers' Court. Fitzsimons v. Lyons, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 222, C. P.

Return.—The Court of Quarter Sessions, on appeal, under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, having reversed the judgment of conviction by the magistrates at Petty Sessions, in an information exhibited before them, for an alleged breach of the Excise Laws, the proceedings were removed into this court by certiorari. The return by the clerk of the peace, which purported to be a full return of all the proceedings and documents in the case, did not mention any of the preliminaries required by the 83rd section of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, to be performed by the appellant, except a notice of appeal, directed to the Chairman of the Petty Sessions, which was set out, but which did not state that the parties appeared, nor that the court of appeal decided upon the same evidence as that given below, nor upon any evidence, the court, though this return, was held to be imperfect, refused to quash the judgment of the quarter session, so as to set up the original conviction, or to send back the case to the quarter sessions, it being admitted by the Crown that the parties appeared, and that evidence was given. Reg. v. Lundy, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 29, Ex.

In a return to a certiorari, removing a conviction, under the Excise Laws, the evidence upon which that conviction was founded need not be stated; but if set forth on the face of the return, and the court consider it insufficient to sustain the conviction, the conviction will be quashed. Reg. v. M'Naghten, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 93, Ex.

Where, upon the return of a conviction under the Excise Laws to the quarter session, the magistrate before whom the information was exhibited, was described the Honourable H. W., and in the conviction, as H. W., Esq. Held, not to be a fatal variance. Reg. v. Harte, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 112.

Practice.—Where a party prosecuting for a misdemeanour, applies for a certiorari to remove the indictment into court, an absolute order will be granted in the first instance. Regina v. Byrne, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 473, Q. B.

Where a certiorari issued after joinder in demurrer in the inferior court, it will be set aside in a cause within the jurisdiction of that court, with costs, and a writ of procedendo will be awarded. Worte v. Dowling, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 482, Q. B.

A party removing a cause by certiorari, will be compelled to put in special bail, if by such a proceeding, the bail in the superior court were discharged. Tiger v. M'Anaspie, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 70, Q. B.

On an application for a certiorari, to remove a presentment, the court will not go behind the presentment to see if it be properly obtained. In re Quin, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 160, Q. B.

An action commenced in a Borough Court, by writ of attachment, is not removeable by certiorari. Sullivan v. Burke, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 204, Q. B.

Where a writ of certiorari has been sued out, after issue joined in an inferior court, it will be set aside with costs, though the judge of the inferior court may not have refused obedience to the writ. Elliott v. Swift, Bl. D. & O. 254.

CHARGING ORDER.—See COSTS.

Money lodged in a savings bank will not be charged under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 23. Macalister v. Murray, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 92, C. P.

If stock be standing to the credit of a cause to which a judgment debtor is a party, the court will not under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 23, make an order, charging by anticipation so much of the stock as the debtor may thereafter be declared entitled to. The precise sum to which he is entitled must first be ascertained. White v. Heron, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 167, n.

A testator bequeathed money in the funds to trustees, in trust to pay the dividends to the wife of the defendant, and at her decease, to and among her children, as she should appoint, or, in default of appointment, share and share alike, with remainder over to the trustees, in default of issue. A conditional order was obtained by the plaintiff to charge this stock, under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 23; before this order was made absolute, the defendant became insolvent, and filed a petition in the Insolvent Court. Held, that the conditional order could not be made absolute, the assignee of the insolvent not being before the court. Mills v. Horner, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 210, C. P.

Semble, that on the construction of this will the court had no jurisdiction to charge the stock. Ib.

Where an order had been obtained, under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 23, to make a judgment a charge upon government stock, personal service of that order on the consor of the judgment, who was resident out of the jurisdiction, and entitled to the stock, was held to be sufficient. Whetthouse v. Sharpe, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 154, Q. B.

A testator directed his executors to set apart so much of his old £3½ per cent stock as would produce £8,000, and pay the interest thereof to his wife during her life-time, and then divide it among his four children, of whom the defendant was one. Upon an affidavit, that the executors had sold out all testator's said stock, except a sum of £8,000, and had left that sum still standing in testator's name for the above purposes, and had applied the interest thereof as by his will directed, the court granted an order under the 23rd section of the statute, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, charging one fourth of stock in execution. Errington v. Prior, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 79, Ex.; S. C. nomine Cavanagh v. Prior, Bl. D. & O. 148.

Grand Canal debentures, certifying, that A. B. having paid £100, is entitled to interest on the same, at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, to be paid to him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, in yearly payments, until the said principal sum shall be repaid at one entire payment, the company reserving a liberty, at any time after seven years, from the date thereof, giving six months notice to repay the same. Held, that proof of a custom that the debentures had been dealt with, and taken as assignable securities, would not give the assignee a right to recover. Norman v. Reid, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 207, Q. B.

Held, that an instrument, evidencing a chose in action, payable to bearer, or holder, or assigns, will not make it assignable. Ib.

Appeal.—In an appeal from the civil bill jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court, it is sufficient to lodge the costs of the dismiss only. Costello v. Bartlett, Bl. D. & O. 12. [Per Brady, C. B.]

Jurisdiction of.—Quære, whether a civil bill decree can be maintained, which includes several demands, separately within the jurisdiction of the Assistant-Barrister's Court, but in the aggregate beyond it. Ryan v. Shee, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 536, Ex.

Semble, that any objection arising from the excess of demand apparent on the face of the civil bill, in such cases may be obviated, by varying the grounds of the demand, and including all in one sum, not exceeding the limit of the jurisdiction of the Assistant-Barrister's Court. Ib.

Upon a motion in arrest of judgment, it having been objected that the above declaration was defective—first, because it contained no averment of a warrant having been granted by the sheriff, and under which the arrest took place; and, secondly, because the decree was not alleged to have been obtained against the plaintiff in the present action. Held, first, that the sheriff was not bound to grant a warrant, and non constat, but that he may have executed the decree in person; secondly, that after verdict the court was bound to intend that the decree proved at the trial was the one obtained against the plaintiff in this action. Ib.

A civil bill cannot include two demands which together exceed the jurisdiction, though the second is stated to be the "said sum." Costello v. Bartlett, Bl. D. & O., 12. [Per Brady, C. B.]

The assignee of a civil bill replevin bond assigned to him by virtue of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 75, s. 13, cannot sue on it in the Sessions Courts. Bentley v. Hastings, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 170; S. C. 8 Ir. L. Rep. 166, Ex. Ch. [Brady, C.B., dissentiente.]

Replevin.—The extent of the jurisdiction given in replevin cases to these courts by the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 75, is to be governed by the amount of the reserved rent, and not by the amount of the rent distrained for; and therefore a plea of the non-delivery of the particulars of distress required by the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 75, s. 6, to an avowry of distress for £120, due for one and a half years' rent, was held to be a bad plea. *Daniel v. CONSPIRACY—See CRIMINAL LAW. LIBEL.

If two persons do acts of the same tendency, the doing of the acts is evidence of the acting in concert, but not conclusive evidence, for each may have had a separate and distinct plot; and in this case the plaintiff has not alleged that there was a joint concert between the plaintiff and Rooney. O'Connell v. Mansfield, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 212, Ex. Ch. [Per Pennefather, B.]

The objection, however, assumes another, and a more technical shape, which is, that the declaration and libel import the specific charge of conspiracy, which the plea does not justify. I admit they state facts which would be evidence to support such a charge; but when the plaintiff does not, as he might, ascribe to them this meaning, I think that the court cannot be required to do so—the more especially because if he had done so, that meaning would have been reasonable, and might possibly have been negatived. In this point of view, it is material to remark the plain distinction between the case of libel, which is only defamatory because it imputes the crime of conspiracy, and that before us, in which the libel, whether it imputes conspiracy or not, is per se highly defamatory. In the one case the calumny would consist solely in the charge of conspiracy; but in the other—the libel being defamatory, whether it imputed conspiracy or not—the fair way to treat the declaration is, that it complains of the libel as generally defamatory of the plaintiff, and that the guilt of the action is not the specific crime of conspiracy, though it complains of joint acts and joint designs, which are but evidence of a conspiracy, Id. 215, 216. Construction.—In an action of special assumpsit upon the following contract, "I propose to superintend the execution and building of the B. Workhouse, and to devote my entire attention to it, for the sum of £2 per week. Signed, A.B." Held, that this not appearing to be a contract exceeding £20 in value, did not require a stamp. Secondly, that it was a continuing contract, and could not be put an end to without notice. Hickey v. Browne, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 277, Q.B.

"Where a document is so obscurely worded as to leave a doubt as to the intention of the parties, it may be open to the court to inquire into and speculate upon that intention; but when the language of the instrument is clear, and the intention manifest, I am not aware of any case which decides that the court can hold anything immaterial that either party, and more especially a party under no original liability, thinks fit to stipulate for in his contract: such a party is not bound to involve himself in the transaction at all, except upon his own terms, and on the exact fulfilment of which he has a full right to insist." Barry v. Cambie, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 68, Ex. (Per Richards, B.)

Where certain Commissioners proposed to the Corporation of Dublin, "That they and their successors should pay to the said corporation the sum of £150 per annum, the better to enable the said corporation to extend their mains and works for the supply of water to the fountains or conduits which were to be erected by the said Commissioners, or their successors, in such places as they shall think fit, provided they should be empowered by Act of Parliament so to do," which proposal the said corporation agreed to accept, and said agreement was in every part ratified and confirmed by statute. Held, that the corporation were only bound to extend their mains into the streets in which such fountains were erected, and were not bound to supply pipes for the purpose of connecting these mains with the fountains. The Commissioners of Paving v. The Lord Mayor, &c., of Dublin, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 193, Q. B.

The plaintiff, in an action for breach of contract, declared that M. H. was indebted to the defendant in £5000, and that in consideration, that the plaintiff would, for the securing thereof, execute to the defendant a bond conditioned for payment of £500; and a warrant of attorney for entering judgment on it; the defendant undertook and promised the plaintiff to give him six months' notice in writing of her intention of calling in the principal of said sum so to be secured; the declaration then averred the execution of the said bond and warrant, and alleged in the breach, the issuing of a fi. fa. by the defendant on a judgment entered on said bond and warrant, and a seizure and sale of the plaintiff's goods without the said notice, the defendant having pleaded the general issue, the plaintiff at the trial called a witness, who produced and proved the following agreement: "Gentlemen, I hereby promise to give you six months' previous notice in writing, on the occasion of my calling in the sum of £500, lent by me to you, and am, gentlemen, your obedient servant, M. R. (defendant.) To Messrs. M. H., J. K., M. D., and T. H." (plaintiffs). The witness also stated that the £500 mentioned in the agreement was the amount of a bond passed by the parties to it to the defendant; and that M. H. was the principal debtor, and the agreement was drawn up in consequence of an apprehension of the money being called suddenly in. The attested copy of the judgment was also given in evidence, which appeared to be on confession, and recited the bond as the bond of the defendant alone; but neither the bond itself nor the warrant of attorney were produced, the jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff. Held by the court, on a motion for liberty to set aside the verdict, and to enter up a non-suit, that the action was properly brought by the plaintiff alone, without joining the parties to the agreement as co-plaintiffs. Honan v. Ryan, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 112, C. P.

But then comes the important question, whether this action was rightly brought, or could be maintained, by the plaintiff individually; or whether it ought not to have been brought in the names of the four persons, or the survivors of them, to whom the undertaking of the defendant was addressed. The rule on that subject has been clearly and distinctly laid down by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, where all the authorities were recently under review, in the case of Barry v. Cambie, and the rule is this—that whatever may be the language used by the parties to the contract, the nature of the contract is to decide whether it is joint or several; and, therefore, though the language may be joint, yet, if the transaction be in its nature several, each of the parties can maintain a separate action for the breach, and vice versa; and whether the action be in covenant or assumpsit, the rule is the same. Ib. [Per Doherty, C. J.]

Conditions Precedent.—A charter party stated an agreement, that the vessel was to proceed to H., take in a cargo, and proceed therewith to D., and there discharge part of her cargo, and should take on board a full complement of passengers—say three to every five registered tons, and being so loaded, should proceed to Q., and deliver the same, on being paid freight, at the gross sum of £300, and that this freight should be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff, in cash, previous to clearing at D. The declaration after the usual averments of mutual promises, and that the vessel was tight and staunch, &c., alleged that she did proceed to H., and did arrive at D., and that the plaintiff was willing to receive, and did afterwards receive, on board the ship, such passengers as the defendant tendered to be taken on board. Held, the taking the passengers on board was an independent condition, and not a condition precedent. Garrick v. Bradshaw, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 129, Q. B.

A declaration on a charter party, set forth a stipulation that the ship should proceed to Dublin, or as near thereto as she should safely get, and deliver the cargo, on being paid the freight as therein mentioned, and that one-third of the freight should be paid, in cash, on the unloading and right delivery of the cargo, and the rest by approved bills, payable in London at four months following, &c. The declaration contained an averment that the said ship did therewith proceed to Dublin, and did then and there deliver her cargo, &c. Special demurrer, on the ground that the unloading and right delivery was a condition precedent, and that there was no averment of the unloading. Held, that the declaration was bad, in not averring an unloading, as well as a delivery of the cargo. 1 Ir. Jur. 288, Ex.

Statute of Frauds.—Plaintiff furnished G. with a sample of oatmeal for sale, and G. sold the oatmeal to the defendant. G. did not enter any memorandum of the sale at the time, or deliver a bought and sold note, but in a day or two after, he made the following memorandum: "Sold Mr. J. R. (the defendant), for Mr. R. G. (the plaintiff), one hundred loads of oatmeal, to be delivered here immediately, and to be full weight, and to be fully equal to sample, at 28s. per load, cash." Held, that in the absence of a bought and sold note, this memorandum was evidence of the contract, and that as it stated all the terms of the contract, and was made while the authority of the agent continued, it was a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the statute of frauds. Richey v. Garvey, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 544, Q. B.

Usurious.—Quære, whether the following clause of the 2 & 3 Vic. c. 37: "Any contract for the loan or forbearance of money, above the sum of £10 sterling," is to be construed as a general clause extending to any contract for the loan or forbearance of money above the sum of £10, or whether it is to be restricted to contracts for the loan or forbearance of money upon the faith or security of bills or notes. Swayer v. Maguire, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 373, Ex.

[As to whether bills or notes under £10 are within the 2 & 3 Vic. c. 37, &c. Fitzgerald v. Lacy, 1 Ir. Jur. 110.]

Stamps.—In an action for the plaintiff's salary as clerk to the defendants, the plaintiff produced and gave in evidence a letter to A., signed by him, at foot of which was the following memorandum: "J. D. (the plaintiff) commenced this day at £70, to be paid £80 if he remains twelve months, to be increased £10 per annum, and give a three months' notice of leaving. (Signed.) T. M. (the defendant). Held, that it required a stamp. Dunn v. Mahon, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 83, Ex.

A memorandum. "My dear sir,—You have given me this day £280, which I undertake to return you next week. This money, given me on behalf of Sir G. G., out of the trust-money of Miss G., which you hold for her. H. J. H. (plaintiff). To Sir G. G. (the defendant). Held, that this memorandum should not be interpreted as a promissory note, and was, therefore, admissible in evidence, without being stamped as such. Hamilton v. Gould, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 171, Q. B.

At the trial of an ejectment, the following document, signed by several tenants: "Sir,—Allow us back into the possession of the land lately held by us under Mr. Cooper, and we will consider ourselves monthly tenants, and will yield up possession of the aforesaid land on getting one month's notice, and that without litigation or trouble. March 20, 1835." Held, that no evidence having been offered to prove that this was not a joint agreement, the foregoing document, signed by the several defendants, did not require more than a single stamp. Cooper v. Flynn, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 472, Ex.

In an action of replevin for a piano-forte, the plaintiff claimed the special property as a bailee, and one of his witnesses produced the following letter, which he stated contained the terms of the bailment to the plaintiff: "Sir,—You have handed me cash for my two separate acceptances for the sum of £65 each, bearing date, respectively, three months after date, on an understanding that the same are to be renewed for three months longer, from the 24th of August next; and as I have deposited with you a grand piano-forte, and a debenture for £125 on the Theatre Royal, Hawkins-street, I hereby authorize and desire you will sell or dispose of, to the best advantage, such piano-forte and debenture, if I do not, on or before the first day of November next, place in your hands sufficient funds to meet said acceptances, and apply the produce of said sale to the payment of the said acceptances. Dated this June 12, 1839. Henry Baker." "And, Sir,—A certain acceptance of mine, bearing date the 23rd of May, 1839, payable in six months, for the sum of £125, now in your possession, as a collateral security for the performance of the within, as understood by and between us both, to be cancelled or returned on the due fulfilment of the said within, my undertaking. 12th June, 1839. Henry Baker." Held, to require an agreement stamp. Butler v. Bridge, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 464, C.P.

"I agree to superintend the execution and building of the B. Workhouse, and to devote my entire attention to it, for the sum of £2 per week. Signed, A. B." Held, that as it did not appear that this was a contract exceeding £20 in value, it did not require a stamp. Hickey v. Brown, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 277, Q. B.

An agreement containing matters, one of which would not want a stamp in any case, and the other only requiring it, if exceeding £20, need not be stamped, although both matters would jointly exceed that sum. Haig v. Byrnes, Bl. D. & O. 57, N. P. [Per Brady, C. B.]

A document, having but one stamp, and containing several proposals, each requiring a stamp, is admissible in evidence to prove the agreement to which the stamp, by juxta position, is affixed, and no other. Headly v. Walsh, 1 Leg. Rep. 238.

A., the agent of B., to charter a vessel, entered into a contract with C. for that purpose, and executed a charter party for B., and directed the vessel to sail to the port at which B. desired to load her. Upon her arrival, B. refused to load her, and C. brought an action for the breach of the charter party. At the trial, the plaintiff produced a copy of the charter party properly stamped, but which, it appeared, was executed after the defendants refused to perform the contract, and the original charter party being produced, the defendants being called upon by notice to do so, was not stamped. Held, that neither copies could be received, the original charter party not being stamped, and the latter being executed after the authority of the agent had expired. Nichol v. Hickson, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 73, Q. B.

In an action of trespass for mesne profits, an instrument amounting to an agreement was offered in evidence, not for the purpose of enforcing its provisions, but for the collateral one of proving the defendant in possession of the premises. Semble, that for this purpose it was admissible without a stamp. Earl of Listowel v. Greene, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 205, Ex.

A. had been allotted shares in a railway, which he had sold as scrip, but which had, nevertheless, been registered in his name in the books of the company. The real holder subsequently sold them to B., who sold them to C., by deed according to the provisions of the Act. A. executed a deed of transfer, which he delivered to B., receiving the following written undertaking: "I have received the deed, on condition of having it executed by C., and registered." At this time calls amounting to more than £20 had been made on the shares, which, by the provisions of the 8 Vic., c. 16. s. 16, should be paid before registering the deed. An action having been brought for a breach of the undertaking. Held, that it did not require a stamp. Jeffreys v. Evans, 1 Ir. Jur. 151, Ex.

Form of.—Where the act under which the defendant was convicted required that a notice in writing should be served upon him, within a week after the information was exhibited, and the conviction stated that due notice in writing was served upon him, and also that the notice was produced and proved before the magistrates, held, that this statement was sufficient. Reg. v. Harte, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 112, Q. B.

Where an information charged that a party did knowingly harbour and conceal, and did also knowingly permit and suffer to be harboured and concealed, certain contraband articles, and the conviction thereon adjudged him to be guilty of the offence so charged, held, that this information did not charge two offences, and that there was no duplicity in the conviction. Reg. v. McNaghten, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 93, Q. B.

A conviction under the Burning Act, 40, Geo. 3, c. 24, Ir., described the offender as convicted in a penalty of £10 an acre, for having burned seven acres and two roods of land. D. & O. 89.

CORPORATION—See MINISTER'S MONEY.

Generally.—Rating under the Act for the Relief of the Poor in Ireland, must have been in existence for twelve months, prior to the 31st of August, in the year in which the Municipal Corporation Act, (3 & 4 Vict. c. 108,) comes into operation in any borough in Ireland. Therefore, as the poor rate was first struck in Limerick, in September, 1840, Held, that the Corporation Act could not come into operation in that borough until the year 1842, as a twelve months rating to the poor, prior to the 31st of August, would not be completed until August in that year. The matters required to be done by the 38th section of that statute are essential, and the act is in regard to them imperative, and not merely directory. Regina v. Versker, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 382, [Perrin, J., dissentients.]

Where a statute, creating a corporation, directs that the council of the corporation shall take an account of the expenses incurred in carrying into effect the provisions of the act, and then that the council should order the town clerk to pay the same.

Semble, such an order to the town clerk does not raise an implied assumpsit by the corporation to pay such expenses. Humphreys v. Lord Mayor, &c., of Dublin, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 159, Q. B.; S. C. 7 Ir. L. Rep. 44.

Quære, is the town clerk liable for suit expenses. Id.

By a former order the costs of proceedings had upon process, with which the defendant swore he had never been served, were to abide the event of a prosecution for perjury. Hyndman*, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 109, Q. B.

The court will not give costs to a plaintiff against whom there is a verdict, though he succeeds upon a motion to change the verdict on liberty reserved, as the plaintiff derives a benefit from that course, by not being obliged to take exceptions to the charge, and go to trial again, and the question being left to the determination of the court, the costs are in their discretion. *Daly v. Thirdly, that the adversary is not chargeable for the costs of procuring from the journals of the House of Commons a compared copy of evidence given before a committee of the house. The costs incurred in obtaining an order of the Court of Chancery, for liberty to bring an ejectment, in the name of a receiver, in a cause, are necessary costs in the ejectment suit, and the landlord is entitled thereto. Hitchingham v. Hawkes, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 158, Q. B.

Operation of 2 Geo. 1, c. 11, s. 14, 15.—If the verdict be for the plaintiff, the defendant is not entitled to his costs, whatever may have been the amount of damages. Wynne v. Shaw, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 221, C. P.

In trespass, for driving a coach against one in which the defendant was, per quod he was injured. The jury found 6d. damages, and 6d. costs, the judges having refused to certify that the trespass was malicious. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to his full costs of suit. The 2 Geo. 1, c. 11, s. 15, comprising but two species of action—assault, and battery, and trespass, quod cl. freg. Chapman v. Spear, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 278; S. C. affirmed, Id. 461, Ex. Ch.

Operation of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 23, 24.—The taxing master is bound to tax the costs of applications, under the 23rd and 24th section of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, in order to have a judgment charged upon stock, in the books of the Bank of Ireland. Guinness v. Armit, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 359.

Quære, can the court give the costs of such application, against the fund charged, together with the payment of the judgment debt. Id.

The court will not direct a fi. fa. to issue under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 27, for the recovery of costs, which the defendant had become liable to pay, by not having appeared at the trial to confess lease, entry, and ouster. McDonald v. Loxley, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 329, C. P.

Where stock or funds, belonging to a judgment debtor, have been charged with the judgment debt, by an order of court, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 23, the court has no power, under the 24th section, in the absence of the debtor, to award the costs of the charging order, out of the stock or fund so charged. White v. Heron, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 165, Ex.

Means of Recovering.—Where a frivolous demurrer was filed, a motion to take it off the file was granted, and the party who filed it ordered to pay costs. Held, that an attachment might issue for these costs, as they could not be included in the execution, not being costs in the cause. Anonymous, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 66, Q. B.

Since the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 28, the plaintiff may issue a capias ad satisfaciendum for the costs of an ejectment, where they exceed £10, and though nominal damages only are included in the judgment. Carroll v. Develin, 1 Ir. Jur. 22.

Every one is entitled to assert his right in a court of justice, by the statement of every fact that can, according to the rules of law, conduce to this end. This right may be delegated to counsel, and is subject to the same limitation and control as if the party were pleading his own cause. Instructions to counsel are not the test by which to try whether, or not, the line of duty has been passed. Therefore, observations by counsel are not justifiable, unless they be warranted by facts proved, or which may be legally proved. Butt v. Jackson, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 120, Q. B.

Construction.—In the granting part of a lease the following clause was inserted, immediately after the demise of all that, and those, &c.—“And, also, saving, and reserving, to the said lessor, liberty to resume the whole, or any part of that portion, of the hereby demised premises, called the nine acres, being, &c.; allowing to the said lessee, his heirs, &c., the rent of £30 per acre, per annum, for so much as shall be resumed of the same, for, and during the remaining term that shall exist, of the demised premises.” Held, that this clause was a covenant, and not a condition, and, therefore, that an ejectment could not be brought upon it, even after a demand and refusal, to deliver up possession of the said nine acres. Archbishop of Dublin v. Eaton, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 168, C. P.

In 1724 a lease of lands was made for a term of 900 years, reserving a rent of “£100 sterling, currency and lawful money of Great Britain,” the money of Great Britain and Ireland being then the same. Held, that, notwithstanding the 6 Geo. 4, c. 79, the rent was not payable in British currency. Neville v. Ponsonby, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 204, Ex.

In covenant for rent by lessor against lessee, the declaration stated, that the lessor demised to the lessee certain premises, to hold from the first of May, 1846, for seven years “yielding during the said term, the yearly rent of £80, to be paid on every first of November, and first of May, in each, and every year.” It then stated, that the lessee covenanted that he would, “from time to time, during the term, pay the said rent, on the said days, and times, aforesaid.” The lessee set out the lease on oyer, and from the reddendum; it appeared that the first half year's rent was not to be payable until the 1st of November, 1847, “the lessee having already paid the year's rent to accrue due on the 1st of May, 1847.” Held, on demurrer, that the lease was set out according to its legal construction and operation, and that there was no variance. Wrixon v. Walker, 1 Ir. Jur. 223, Q. B. [Perrin, J., dissentiente.]

Covenant to pay a rent charge, does not run with the rent to the assignee of the rent charge. Brewster v. Kidgill, 12 Mod., 166, overruled; Kennedy v. Stewart, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 421, (n.) Q. B.

By deed—reciting that A. B., by his will, had devised to C. D. the sum of £10,000, to be paid out of testator's C. estates, which he thereby charged, with the payment thereof, and which estates he devised to the defendant—it was witnessed that C. D. had granted to the plaintiff an annuity of £200, to be payable out of the interest of said sum of £10,000; and the deed contained a covenant by the defendant, that he would pay the said annuity during the life of the grantor, and that it should remain a charge on said C. estates, and there also was a covenant for further assurance by C. D. and the defendant. Held, that the covenant to pay this annuity was not contingent, upon the solvency of the fund. Bruce v. Lord Ponsonby, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 414, Q. B.

Held, also, that the defendant was estopped from shewing that the said C. estate was discharged from the payment of the annuity. Ib.

Covenant by lessor against lessee, the lease, besides the usual reservation of an annual rent of £528 14s. 7½d., and a covenant against assigning, or subletting, contained a covenant, whereby it was agreed that the lessor should not, during the term, plough, turn up, or convert into tillage, any part of the lands, except a field therein mentioned; nor cut, or saw, or take away from the demised lands, any part of the grass, meadowing, or hay, which might be growing upon the upland parts of the said premises, called the Bullock Park, nor any part of said premises, except on, &c.; and in case the lessee should assign, or let, or should plough, turn up, or convert into tillage any part of said premises, save as therein-before-mentioned; or should cut, saw, or take away, any part of the hay, or meadowing, which might be growing on said premises, called the Bullock Park, nor any other part of said premises, than the place previously excepted, save, by the permission of the lessor; “then, in any of those cases, the lessee, &c., should thenceforth, during the remainder of the term, pay, and yield up, to the lessor, &c., the yearly rent, or sum, of £1,057 9s. 3d., for the said demised premises, in the room, and stead, of the yearly rent, first thereby reserved, and made payable; such last-mentioned yearly rent to be recovered, and recoverable by distress, and by all the means whereby the rent therein firstly received, was, or might be recovered, and to be paid, and payable, at the time, and in the manner, as the said firstly reserved rent.” Held, that the sum so covenanted to be paid, was in the nature of an increased rent, or liquidated damages, and not of a penalty; and that, on the breach of a covenant, by conversion of a portion of the land into tillage, the jury were bound to find the increased rent, and were not at liberty to award arbitrary damages. Smith v. Ryan, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 205, Ex.

The declaration contained four counts on a lease; the third stated, that the deed contained a covenant for renewal, and, also, a covenant for title to make such renewal, and in the breach averred, that the defendant had not title to renew. Plea non est factum to all the counts. Held, that the third count could not be supported, by proof of a deed not containing a covenant for title to make such renewal, and, therefore, that a general verdict for substantial damages, upon all the counts, was bad. Kean v. Strong, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 74.

Held, that an unqualified covenant to renew, did not imply a covenant for title to renew. Ib.

Held, that the unqualified covenant to renew was not qualified by a covenant for quiet enjoyment, the covenants not being connected with each other. Ib.

A lease for years containing a covenant to renew, which was declared upon as absolute and unqualified, and the value of the interest under such lease, with the covenant for renewal, being proved, and no evidence of the eviction of the covenantor by title paramount, but mere evidence of an eviction, and a notice served by the defendant, stating, that he had no title to renew. Held, on exceptions, that the judge was right in refusing to direct the jury to find for nominal damages, as there was no evidence that the title to the term, if granted, would have been invalid. Ib.

A lease contained a covenant by the lessee, not to break up the land without the previous consent of the lessor in writing. The lessee agreed, if he broke up the land without such consent, to pay a penal rent of £10 for every acre so broken up. The lessee having applied for leave to break up the land, the lessor addressed to him two letters, which were in substance a statement, that if the lessee broke up the lands, in that year, with certain seeds, and pursued a specified system of culture during the two following years, the lessor would not seek to enforce the penalty in the lease. The lessee having broken up the lands, but not having carried out the required mode of husbandry, the lessor distrained for the penal rent, for the first year, the lessee replevied. Held, first, that the letters amounted to a permission to break up the lands upon certain conditions. Secondly, that the lessor could not distrain for the penal rent, though those conditions were not fulfilled; and, thirdly, that his remedy was by action, against the lessee, for the non-performance of these conditions. Whitmore v. Segrave, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 609, C. P.

Where, by indenture between A. and B., it was agreed that A., his heirs, &c., should not, during the continuance of the demise, "turn up, burn, or convert into tillage," any of the demised premises, known by the name of the lawn; and, by a further covenant, it was agreed, that "B. should be at liberty in each, and every year, during the continuance thereof, to burn, or till, eight acres of any other part, save the lawn; and that he should be at liberty to take four crops thereof, and then lay down the same in a husband-like manner; and that he should not take more than four crops off any part to be broken up, under penalty; but it was thereby understood, that the eight acres, so to be broken up, were always to be exclusive of the head garden." Held, that, upon the true construction of this covenant, B. was at liberty to till eight new acres in each year, and take four crops thereout, and that he was not prohibited from having more than eight acres in tillage in any one year. Kelly v. Cullinan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 68, Q. B.

R., assignee of a lease for lives, devised the lands to trustees, in trust for his wife for life: remainder over for the whole of his interest. Held, that the wife was assignee of the testator's entire interest for her life, Mannell v. Russell, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 205, Ex. (note.)

Where in a lease there are covenants for renewal and quiet enjoyment, (with intervening covenants,) the first unlimited the latter qualified, and the covenants are not inconsistent with each other, the general covenant is independent, and uncontrolled, by the qualified covenant, and was held to be rightly set forth in the declaration as an unqualified covenant. Keon v. Strong, 1 Ir. Jur. 333, Ex. Ch.

Held, that evidence of the value of a lease was admissible, though not strictly applicable to the issue raised, for the purpose of guiding the jury in their estimate, the question being wholly one of damages. Ib.

Pleadings.—A., being the lessee by indenture of certain premises, assigned his interest therein to B., subject to the payment of the rent, and performance of the covenants in the original lease. This indenture contained a covenant by B. to keep A. harmless; and indemnified against all actions, suits, costs, and damages, on account of the rent and covenants in the original lease. B. never executed the assignment, but went into possession under it. Held, on demurrer, that B. was not liable, in an action of covenant, for not having saved, harmless, and indemnified A. Brown v. M'Farra, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 212, Q. B.

Upon the execution of a lease of mines, the lessor misrepresented his title, to demise the premises, by stating, that he had the consent of parties interested in the premises demised, and that they would not interfere or disturb the possession of the lessee. In an action of covenant, for not working the mines thereby demised, to which the defendant pleaded, that the deed was obtained by the plaintiff from the defendant, by the fraud and crime of the plaintiff in making these untrue misrepresentations. Held, that these misrepresentations did not amount to such fraud or covin as would avoid the deed at law, and that this plea, though sustained in evidence, was not an answer to the action. Hosenden v. Tilly, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 462, Q. B.

Covenant, by the administratrix of the assignee of the lessee, against the executors of the lessor, for a breach of the covenant to renew, at the expiration of a lease, the declaration omitted to state, that the plaintiff sued as administratrix, and in the first and second counts set out a covenant by the lessor for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to renew the lease at the expiration thereof; and, in the third count, set forth a covenant by the lessor, that he had full title to renew, and, averred as a breach, that he had no such title; and the fourth count averred generally, that he had no such title to renew. The defendant pleaded, to the entire declaration, that he was willing, and offered to renew, but that the plaintiff refused to accept a renewal, and to the first, second, and fourth counts, an eviction by title paramount. Held, on demurrer, that the first plea was bad, as to the third count, being no answer to it, and, therefore, bad to the whole declaration; and that the second plea was bad, it being no answer to an unqualified covenant, to state an eviction by title paramount. Kean v. Strong, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 540.

Semble, the omission in the declaration of the plaintiff's title as administratrix, was immaterial, as claiming through her administration she was assignee of the lease, and, as such, was entitled to maintain the action. Ib.

Quære, is such an objection ground of general demurrer. Ib.

Semble, that the covenant being to renew at the expiration of the term, the true meaning of the covenant was to renew before its expiration; and the privity of contract, therefore, still subsisting, the action was maintainable. Ib.

Semble, the omission to state in the breaches to the several counts, that the defendants had any estate out of which they could renew, or that they had any power to renew, or to aver, a previous request, was immaterial, the covenant being an unqualified covenant, that the lessor, his executors, and administrators, would renew. Ib.

Semble, that the admissions in the pleas supplied the deficiencies, if any, of the averments in the declaration. Ib.

Covenant for non-payment of rent, on a lease for lives, by the devisee of the original lessor against the lessee, the declaration alleged, that the original lessor was seized in fee at the time of making the demise, and had devised the reversion to the plaintiff. Held, that a plea traversing the seizin, in fee of the lessor, at the time of making the demise, modo et formâ, was a good plea. Lennon v. Palmer, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 100, C. P.

Held, also, that a plea which traversed the seizin, in fee of the plaintiff, modo et formâ, was as traversing an inference at law. Ib.

A lease contained two distinct covenants, with distinct penalties; one of the covenants was, that the lessee should not build, &c., any house, &c., on the ground at the rear of the premises demised, whereby the value of the said premises would be deteriorated, or whereby such building might be considered a nuisance. The other covenant was, not to open any road or passage, whereby the same might be made a public thoroughfare, &c. In covenant on this lease, the plaintiff assigned as a breach, "that the defendant built, &c., certain houses upon the ground, in the rear of said premises, and did then, and there, open a certain public thoroughfare, whereby the said premises were considerably lessened, and deteriorated, in value." Held, that this was no breach of the covenant in the lease. Ryan v. McMaster, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 106, Q. B.

Plea, to this breach, "that true it is, that, since the making, the defendant did build, &c., two houses upon the said ground, &c.; nevertheless, &c., the value of the said demised plot of ground was not deteriorated, &c.; nor can, or may, the said buildings be considered thereby as a nuisance, or nuisances, to the said plot of ground, &c.," with a verification. Semble, this plea is bad, as argumentative, and as involving too large an issue, and should have concluded to the country. Ib.

Covenant for £32, two years rent ending the 29th of September, 1841, on a covenant to pay the rent half-yearly, on the 25th of March, and 29th of September. Plea, that on the 29th of September, 1841, he paid the said sum of £32, of the original rent aforesaid. Held, that the plea was bad, not averring that it was accepted in accord and satisfaction. Ib.

Covenant for rent in arrear, the declaration averred, that the defendant covenanted to pay the yearly rent of £156, over and above all taxes, and impositions whatsoever; quit-rent, and crown-rent; excepted. Breach, that two years rent were in arrear, stating no exception or reference to the quit and crown rent. Held, on special demurrer, that this was a sufficient breach. Allen v. Lennahan, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 291, Ex.

A special traverse to a declaration in covenant, averring, certain things to have been the understanding of the parties to the deed, adding matter of agreement between them, without setting out the deed on oyer. Held bad, on special demurrer. Kelly v. Cullinan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 68, Q. B.

In an action of covenant, a party is not bound to set out more of the covenant than is necessary for the purpose of the suit; therefore, when a lessee covenanted for himself, his "heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns," it was held sufficient, in an action against the assignee of the lessee, to describe the covenant, as entered into by the lessee for himself, his heirs, and assigns. Hosier v. Powell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 395, Ex.

A conveyance need not be pleaded according to its legal operation and effect, when it is stated merely as the foundation of an action of covenant; and it is sufficient to set forth the words of the deed, without an allegation, that it is thereby witnessed. Ib.

In an action of covenant by the devisees of the lessor against the executrix of the lessee, the declaration stated, that heretofore, to wit, on the 21st of February, 1834, A. was seized to her and her heirs of a freehold in the premises pur autre vie, and that heretofore, to wit, on the 21st of February, 1834, she demised for a year to R. D., who "thereby then and there became possessed of the said premises for the said term, the reversion therein and expectant thereon belonging to the said A., and thereupon afterwards, to wit, upon the 22nd February, 1834," A., by indenture, re-leased for three lives to R. D., with a covenant for perpetual renewal, and at a fixed rent. And thereupon the said A., after the said R. D. became and was so seized of the premises, &c., "and after the said A. became and was seized of the reversion thereof, expectant on the said estate so re-leased as aforesaid, and during the continuance of said demise, and of the said last-mentioned reversion, to wit, on," &c., devised to the plaintiffs. The declaration further stated the deaths of A. and R. D., probate of his will to the defendant, and breach of covenant by non-payment of rent. Plea, that A., "at the time of the making" of the re-lease, was seized only for her life, and so continued until her death, and that after the making of the re-lease, and before the expiration of the said term, she died, whereupon the term created by the indenture ceased, absque hoc, "that before the making of the said indenture," A. was seized to her and her heirs, modo et formâ, &c. Held, upon general demurrer, first, that a devisable reversion was sufficiently disclosed by the declaration: secondly, that the plea was bad, as tendering an immaterial issue. Church v. Dalton, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 355, C. P.

Covenant for rent by the devisee of the reversion against the lessee. The declaration stated, that by indenture made between P. B. of the one part, and the defendant of the other, P. B. did demise, grant, set, and to farm let, unto the defendant a farm of land, to hold for the life of M. F., and from and after his death, for the term of nineteen years. Held, on demurrer, that the demise was well pleaded, notwithstanding the want of an express averment of livery of seisin, that being implied in the statement of the demise. Aldworth v. Riordan, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 559, Ex.

In covenant, the declaration stated that P. B. being seized of the reversion in certain lands, duly made and published his last will and testament in writing, signed by him, and attested and subscribed in the presence of him, the said P. B., by two credible witnesses, according to the form of the statute, in such case made and provided. Held to be a sufficient statement of the execution of the will. Ib.

Quære, if this statement be objectionable even upon special demurrer. Ib.

Covenant for rent. The declaration stated that B., in his life-time, by indenture made between him of the one part, and D. of the other, did "demise, grant, set, and to farm, let, re-lease and confirm unto D., his heirs, &c., certain lands to hold," for and during the natural lives and life therein mentioned, and the survivor of them, at a certain rent, which D. covenanted to pay, "by virtue of which demise, and by force of the statute for transferring uses into possession, D. afterwards entered into the demised premises, with the appurtenances, and became and was seized thereof, for the said term so to him granted as aforesaid." Held, on demurrer, that notwithstanding the reference to the statute of uses, the deed could only operate at common law, and that the term demise imported livery of seisin. O'Shea v. Dooley, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 564, Ex.

Semble, that although no estate passed by the indenture, yet the grantee having entered under it, and covenanted for payment of the rent, he was liable to the grantor upon his covenant. Ib.

Where the deed is merely inducement to the action, and title is not deduced, it is not necessary in the declaration to plead the instrument according to its legal effect. Ib.

Covenant by executor of lessor against lessee for rent reserved on a lease for lives. The lives named in the lease need not be stated in the declaration, nor the continuance of them averred. Ib.

In covenant by the assignee of a rent-charge against one of the grantors, the declaration stated, that J. C. and J. S., H. S. and R. S., and each of them, granted to E. R. an annuity of £16 10s., charged on certain lands. The deed being set out on Oyer, contained a grant by H. S., with her husband's consent, and by J. C. and J. S., jointly and severally, according to their several estates and interests. Held, on demurrer, that the declaration was bad, the grant being pleaded as a grant by four persons, two of whom were strangers. Vincent v. Scully, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 28, Q. B.

A declaration alleging that J. C. and J. S. were seized in fee, stated the grant as an absolute one, charging the lands for the use of H. S.; the deed shewed the grant to be for the life of H. S., provided R. S. so long live. Held, that an averment of the continuance of the estate in the rent-charge was necessary; and there being no allegation that R. S. was living, was a fatal omission. Ib.

Such averment is not implied in the statement that the rent-charge was continuing when the arrears became due; and there not being shewn any continuing rent-charge affecting the lands, the plaintiff, as assignee, cannot sue on the covenant. Ib.

An assignee is liable, on a covenant, for non-payment of rent, though at the time of the rent accruing due he was an infant, if he continue in the enjoyment of the land after attaining age. A declaration averring that the defendant continued in possession until the action was brought, and to which declaration infancy was pleaded, sufficiently implies that the assignee entered after assignment. Mahon v. O'Farrell, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 527, Q. B.

In a lease bearing date the 1st of November, 1800, the lessor, who held, under the Provost and Fellows of Trinity College, Dublin, demised the premises to the lessee for a term of 20 years, at a certain rent, and a small triennial fine, and covenanted that at the expiration of the said term he, his executors, administrators, and assigns, would renew the then present lease, or any future lease, which should be granted of the premises, by adding thereto such number of years as in that present demise, viz., for twenty years, and so on at the end or expiration of any term, he, the lessor, &c. should and would make out a new lease, or renew the present lease for twenty years. The said lease also contained a covenant on the part of the lessor for quiet enjoyment, as against his own acts, and the acts of those claiming under him. In an action for the breach of the said covenant for renewal, brought by the personal representative of the assignee of the lessee against the personal representatives of the lessor, the first count of the declaration, after stating the covenants, averred the entry by the lessee, the assignment on the 17th of April, 1820, and the death of the assignee in the same month, and that the plaintiffs had taken out administration to him, and entered and became possessed. It then averred the death of the lessor, in January, 1820, and the expiration of the term on the first of November, 1820; and then after averring performance of the covenants by the lessee, the assignee, and the plaintiffs, respectively, the breach was laid in the terms of the covenant. The second count was the same as the first, with the exception of a statement of a covenant to pay the triennial fines, and an averment of the payment of the same by the lessee, his assignee, and the plaintiffs, respectively, to the lessor during his life, and to the defendants since his death. The defendants pleaded two pleas of non est factum. The plaintiffs proved the lease, the payment of rent, and triennial fines, their title as assignees, and that the farm, with such a covenant, for renewal, was worth £1000. The defendants proved their eviction by ejectment on the title, and the execution of the habere by M. C., and that an application had been made for a renewal, whereupon a notice was served, bearing date the first of November, 1821, endorsed on the back of a draft renewal on the plaintiffs, to the effect that the defendants were ready to grant a renewal in pursuance of the said draft, upon being satisfied with respect to certain marginal suggestions, and that M. C., under whom (as the notice stated) the lessor derived his interest in the lands, had served notice to quit, and an ejectment on the title on the defendants, and calling on the plaintiffs to take defence at their own risk, and to state whether they required such renewal. It also appeared that the defendants had offered the plaintiffs £500, as compensation for the breach of covenant. Held, that the second count of the declaration at least was sufficient, though there were no averments of notice of the assignment, or of the preparation and tender of a renewal and request of the plaintiffs to the defendants to execute it during the term. Strong v. Kean, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 137, Ex. Ch.

Where in a lease there are covenants for renewal and quiet enjoyment (with intervening covenants), the first unlimited, the latter qualified, and the covenants are not inconsistent with each other, the general covenant is independent and uncontrolled by the qualified covenant, and was held to be rightly set forth in the declaration as an unqualified covenant. Held, that evidence of the value of a lease was admissible, though not strictly applicable to the issue raised, for the purpose of guiding the jury in their estimate, the question being wholly one of damages. [Richards, B., dissentiente.] Held, that where the renewal, if granted, would be valueless, the grantor having no interest from which to renew, that the judge should have directed the jury to find for nominal damages. Held, that exceptions to different expressions in the judge's charge seriatim, without stating clearly what the judge did tell the jury, or what the defendant required him to tell them, was not a proper mode of framing a bill of exceptions, and that on this ground alone the exceptions should be overruled. [Per Blackburne, C. J.]

Held, that there having been a privity of estate existing at the time of the breach of covenant being committed, the action was maintainable. Ib.

Held, that the judge was right in refusing to direct the jury to find for the plaintiffs, with nominal damages only, the defendants not having proved an eviction by title paramount. Ib.

Held, that the notice of the 1st of November, 1821, should not have been withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, and that, therefore, a venire de novo should issue. Ib. [Dissentientibus, Perrin, J., Burton, J., and Blackburne, C. J.]

The declaration stated that J. K. covenanted with G. A., not to assign certain premises without his consent in writing, and in case of such assignment, that it should be lawful for G. A. to re-enter, "or to charge J. K. double the reserved yearly rent." Held, on special demurrer, that the assignee of J. K. was not liable upon the covenant as set forth in the declaration. Aylmer v. Conlan, 1 Ir. Jur. 21, Q. B.

Covenant for rent by administratrix of lessor against assignee of lessee. Plea, that the lessor had nothing in the premises, except through M. K. deceased; that M. K. was possessed of the premises for the residue of the term until his death; that administration was granted to the lessor, whereby she, as administratrix, and not otherwise, became possessed of the premises for the said term; that the lessor died, "whereby all her estate in the premises ceased and determined." Replication, that the lessor was not, at the time of making said lease, possessed of the premises for the said time, as administratrix of M. K., as in the said plea alleged. Held, upon special demurrer, first, that the plea was bad, as it alleged that there was a total cessation of the estate in the premises; secondly, that the personal representative of the lessor was entitled to sue for the rent. Kelly v. Shaw, 1 Ir. Jur. 292, Q. B.

Damages.—In covenant for suffering premises to be out of repair during the continuance of the term, it is no objection to a verdict that it gives full damages for the injury which the property suffered, the defendant being lessee in a lease of lives containing a covenant for perpetual renewal on the part of the lessor. Nixon v. Denham, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 100, Q. B.

Held, that evidence of the value of a lease was admissible, though not strictly applicable to the issue raised, for the purpose of guiding the jury in their estimate, the question being wholly one of damages. Kean v. Strong, 1 Ir. Jur. 333, Ex. Ch. [Richards, B., dissentiente.]

Held, that where the renewal, if granted, would be valueless, the grantor having no interest from which to renew, that the judge should have directed the jury to find for nominal damages. Ib.

CRIMINAL LAW—See ARREST CERTIORARI.

Practice generally.—On a motion to discharge a prisoner from custody, there being no offence charged in the information upon which he has been committed, notice must be given to the Attorney-General. Reg. v. Carroll, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 372. [Overruling Reg. v. Stewart, Batt. 139.]

To an indictment for misdemeanour, the prisoner demurred, and the judge of assize allowed the demurrer. The Crown brought a writ of error, and the judgment of the court below was reversed in Trinity Term. In the following term the Attorney-General moved that the prisoner should be brought up to receive sentence. Held, that the court had fully exercised its jurisdiction in reversing the erroneous judgment of the court below, and that it was not authorized to go further, and pass sentence upon the prisoner. Reg. v. Houston, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 174, Q. B.

In a prosecution for misdemeanour, if the defendant demur to the indictment, and the demurrer is overruled, he has no right to answer over to the offence charged against him, but sentence may be pronounced at once upon him. It is otherwise in cases of felony. Ib.

The court will not suspend judgment in a criminal case, pending a writ of error. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 338, Q. B.

The 6th of Anne, c. 10, s. 11, which requires all dilatory pleas to be verified by affidavit, applies to criminal cases. Reg. v. Duffy, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 163, Q. B.

The rule requiring a party to apply for a new trial within the four first days of term, applies equally to criminal, as civil cases; but if the court, upon looking into the notes of the trial, think there is a question to be raised, they will direct it to be argued. Reg. v. Birch, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 157, Q. B.

In cases of felony, when the indictment is of great length, the prisoner will be allowed to take out copies in payment of the usual fees. Reg. v. Grace, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 375, Q. B.

On a writ of error, by the prisoners, the court, in reversing the judgment, will vacate the verdict, and remand the prisoners. Reg. v. Meehan, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 153, Q. B.

Prisoners, under sentence for a felonious charge, are bound to assign error when brought up, without any rule being entered for the purpose. Reg. v. Shea, Bl. D. & O. 247.

An application for an order to have informations returned, for the purpose of grounding a motion, for admitting prisoners to bail, is not a motion of course. Reg. v. Corbett, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 265, Q. B.

After issue joined on an indictment, for a misdemeanour, a venue was awarded, returnable in Hil. T., and a trial at bar was fixed for a certain day in that term, and it was ordered, that, in case the trial so fixed, should not terminate before the last day of that term, then, that every succeeding day, if necessary, until the following term should be appointed for the continuation of the trial, and that the days so fixed, should, for the purpose of such trial, be taken to be part of such term. Held, that this order was within the scope of the statute, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 31, and that the trial was properly continued in vacation. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 261, Q. B.

Pendency of former Indictment.—Indictments for sedition; after the bills were found, a nolle prosequi was entered by the Attorney-General, and information for the same offence filed. Plea, in abatement to the first information, that the indictment was still pending. Demurrer. Held, that the pendency of the indictment was no answer to the information.

Like plea, to second information. Replication, that there was no indictment pending. Held, the plea being bad, an informality in the information could not be taken advantage of. The demurrer by the Crown, to the plea, concluded, praying conviction, and the replication prayed final judgment. Held, there was no discontinuance.

Semble, there can be no discontinuance by the crown. Reg. v. Mitchell, 1 Ir. Jur. 4.

9 Geo. 4, c. 51.]—On a motion to quash an indictment. Held, that at Common Law, the pendency of a former indictment did not prevent the crown from calling on the prisoner to plead to a subsequent one, for the same offence, and that the 9th section of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 51, has not altered the law, except where notices of the prosecutor's intention to prefer a bill of indictment, in the adjoining county, have been duly served, pursuant to the 7th, 8th, and 9th sections of that Act. Reg. v. Duffy, 1 Ir. Jur. 81, C. C.

Therefore, where a bill of indictment was preferred to the grand jury of the adjoining county, for an offence committed in a county of a city, under the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 51, and found there, but no notices were served, nor the informations removed from the custody of the clerk of the peace for the city. Held, that a new indictment might be preferred in the city. Ib.

Semble, two or more pleas in abatement can be pleaded together in a criminal case. Ib.

When separate indictments have been found, the court has no jurisdiction to restrain proceedings on one, until the other be disposed of, unless there be some allegation of illegality, or injustice, or violation of duty, on the part of the prosecutor. Reg. v. Duffy, 1 Ir. Jur. 188, C. C. [Per Ball, J., and Lefroy, B.]

Held, that the boundaries of the borough of Dublin, as defined by the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 106, are extended for the purposes, as well of criminal, as of civil jurisdiction. Ib.

Committal.—A committal by magistrate, not shewing a sufficient cause for committal, and being uncertain as to the time and place of his committal, is bad. In re Gregg, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 316, Q. B.

Caution, on examination of Prisoner.—A prisoner, having been brought before a magistrate, and being about to make a confession of guilt, was cautioned by the magistrate, in the following words—"Take care what you say, for whatever you say will be written down, and used for, or against you." Held, that such a caution was insufficient, and that the examination of the prisoner was not admissible in evidence. Reg. v. Simpson, 1 Ir. Jur. 200. [Per Pigot, C. B.]

High Treason.—Held, that the 10 Hen. 7, c. 2, extended the provisions of the 25 Ed. 3, to Ireland, and made it treason to levy war there. O'Brien v. Reg. in Error, 1 Ir. Jur. 169, Q. B.; S. C. Dom. Proc. Ib. 249.

Held, that the 1st and 4th sections of the 7 Geo. 3, do not extend to Ireland, and that, as the prisoners were not indicted, under the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, they were not entitled to the benefit of that act. Ib.

Held, that the word "treason," without any other word, or qualification attached to it, meant high treason, and the prisoner, therefore, was entitled to but twenty peremptory challenges. (9 Geo. 4, c. 54.) Ib.

Treason Felony Act, 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12.]—An indictment, under the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 12, charged, that the prisoner did compass, imagine, &c., and did express, and declare, by publishing a certain printing, containing in one part thereof, amongst other things, according to the tenor following, setting out a portion only of the printing. Held, on demurrer to the indictment, that this mode of laying the felonious publishing was sufficient, and that it was not necessary either to set out the whole printing, or to aver that the intention was expressed by the printing set out. Reg. v. Duffy, 1 Ir. Jur. 81. [Per Perrin, J., and Richards, B.]

Held, that the several printings were not distinct felonies, and, therefore, the counts of the indictment were not open to the objection of duplicity. That, as the intention was sufficiently expressed by the articles themselves, there was no necessity for any innuendo. Ib.

Held, that the 2d, 4th, 5th, and 6th counts in the indictment, which alleged the compassing to have taken place on a certain day, and to have been then, and there, expressed by divers overt acts, thereafter mentioned, and which then proceeded to set out overt acts committed on that day, and on several days subsequent, were, so far as related to all overt acts subsequent to the day of the compassing, bad, as being repugnant and insensible. Ib.

Held, that the publications were properly laid as overt acts. Ib.

On demurrer to the indictment. Held, that publications were overt acts, and that the word "publication," as laid in the indictment, might be taken to mean a compassing on one day, and the expression of it on subsequent days. Reg. v. Duffy, 1 Ir. Jur. 188. [Per Ball, J., and Lefroy, B.]

Held, that parting with the control of printings or writings, so that they might be read, was a publication. Ib.

Held, that speeches delivered prior to the commission of the offence charged, might be given in evidence, for the purpose of explaining the meaning of the publications alleged to be felonious. Ib.

Abduction.—Held, that where the fraudulent abduction was effected by menaces of personal injury; that it is an offence within the 23rd section of, and not the 22d section of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 34. Reg. v. Yore, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 301, Q. B.

Upon the trial of an indictment, under the 10 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 23, for fraudulently alluring away a girl under 18 years of age, and contracting matrimony with her. Held, that she was not an incompetent witness for the prosecution, either on the ground that she was the wife of the defendant, or that she has a direct interest in the event, in consequence of the provision, that, upon conviction of the offender, her property shall vest in trustees, for her sole and separate use. Ib.

Man Slaughter.—On application to admit to bail persons charged by a coroner's jury with manslaughter, the court will exercise a discretion, and, if it be satisfied that the offender will be made amenable to justice, the application will be granted. Reg. v. Woods, and another, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 71, Q. B.

Bigamy.—A marriage, without the degrees of consanguinity, forbidden by the 33 Hen. 8, c. 6, celebrated between Roman Catholics, by a Roman Catholic priest, is valid, and sufficient to make a second marriage a felony, within the Statute of Bigamy. Reg. v. Burke, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 549, Q. B.

A declaration made by parties, in order to the celebration of a marriage, and to the person who was to celebrate it, and by which he was induced to celebrate it, that they were competent to contract a valid marriage, would, on indictment for bigamy, against the party making the representation, conclude that person from denying the truth of it, for the purpose of invalidating the first marriage. Ib.

Semble, a voidable marriage is sufficient to constitute a second marriage bigamy, until annulled by a court of competent jurisdiction. Ib.

Illegal Combinations.—By the 4 Geo. 4, c. 87, certain societies, therein described, were declared unlawful combinations, and the members declared to be guilty of unlawful combination, and liable to certain penalties, therein specified. The 2 & 3 Vic. c. 74, recited, that it was expedient to extend, and render more effectual the provisions of the 4 Geo. 4, and declared certain other societies to be unlawful combinations, and that persons doing certain things should be guilty of unlawful combination, and be liable to such, and the like penalties, proceedings, and punishment, as if he were guilty of an unlawful combination, under the provisions of the 4 Geo. 4, and be proceeded against, and punished, in the manner, and according to the provisions of that act. And it was thereby further enacted, that "all the provisions of the said Act shall, and may, be put in force, and applied accordingly, for the punishment of any such offenders, and for the mitigation of such punishment, and for the application of penalties, limitation of actions, and other purposes therein specified, as if the same were repeated, and re-enacted, in this act, with reference to such offenders and persons respectively." In an indictment, charging certain offences, created by the 2 & 3 Vic. c. 74, the several counts concluded, "contra formam statuti." Held, upon writ of error, that this conclusion was sufficient, and, therefore, that the judgment of the court below, which allowed the demurrer, holding that the counts should have concluded, "contra formam statutorum," was erroneous, and should be reversed. Regina v. Houston, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 445, Q. B.

The 2 & 3 Vic. c. 74, declared, that from, and after the first of September, 1839, any, and every society established at the passing of the Act, or thereafter to be established, of the nature thereafter described, "shall be, and be deemed, and taken to be an unlawful combination, and confederacy; and then proceeded, "that is to say, any, and every society so constituted, that the members thereof may, or shall communicate with, or be known to each other by, or may use for the purpose of being known as such, any secret sign, or signs, or password, or passwords," &c.; the statute then gave a specification of the several other matters which bring a society within the meaning of the Act, and declared that the persons so offending, "shall be guilty of unlawful combination and confederacy." An indictment, under this statute, stated, "That on the 24th of August, and thence continually hath been, and still is established in Ireland, a society so constituted, that the members thereof might, and did, communicate with, and were known to each other by certain secret signs, and certain passwords; and that said James Brady, after the 1st of September, 1839, to wit on the 5th of October, &c., being then, and there, such member of the said society as aforesaid, unlawfully did act, as a member thereof, against the peace," &c.

Held, upon writ of error, brought to reverse the judgment after verdict, that this count was sufficient, without any averment, to the effect, that the defendant was thereby guilty of unlawful combination and confederacy. Brady in Error v. Reg., 4 Ir. L. Rep. 21, Q. B.

Semble, that this count would be bad upon demurrer. Ib. [Per Perrin, J.]

Semble, that a count, under this statute, charging the defendant with having, "in his possession, a certain written copy of certain passwords, made use of in the said society," without setting them out, is bad. Ib.

An indictment, under the 2 & 3 Vic. c. 74, stated, "That, before the 24th of August, 1839, there was established in Ireland, to wit, &c., a society, so constituted, that the members thereof did communicate with, and were known to each other by secret signs, and passwords; and that the said society, so established, previous to the 24th of August, and from thence, until and at the time of the commission of the said offence, hereinafter, &c.; and the said society has not yet been dissolved, or put an end to, and that Richard Jones, before the 24th of August, was a member of the said society, and being such member, of the said society, did, after the 1st of September, 1839, act as a member of the said society; and did then, and there, commit the offence of unlawful combination and confederacy, against the peace, and statute, and contrary to the form of the statutes," &c. Held, to be sufficient after verdict. Jones in Error v. Reg., 4 Ir. L. Rep. 264, Q. B.

The test—That an indictment is bad, if the facts stated in it may be true, and yet the prisoner innocent, is not invariably true. Ib.

Treason-Felony.—An indictment need not state the printings, and publications, therein stated to be felonious, they being merely evidences of the felonious intent, and requiring no innuendo. Martin in Error v. Reg., 1 Ir. Jur. 50, Q. B.

Where a corporation were entitled by grant to the chattels of felons convicted within their boundaries. Held, that it was not a good ground of challenge, that the juror was a burgess of the city, and interested in the goods of the felon, the goods being vested entirely in the council in trust for the citizens.

Held, that it was not a good ground of challenge, that the juror being a rate payer, and liable to be rated to the borough rate, was interested in the goods of the felon, inasmuch as this interest, depending on several contingencies, was too remote.

A sentence directing the prisoner to be transported beyond the seas, without specifying any place, Held, to be good. The 50 Geo. 3, c. 32, vesting in the Lord Lieutenant the power of fixing the place of transportation. Ib.

Unlawful Drilling. 60 Geo. 3, 1 Geo. 4, c. 1.—In an indictment, under the provisions of the 60 Geo. 3, and 1 Geo. 4, c. 1, the first count stated, that the prisoner "unlawfully was present, and did attend a certain meeting, dangerous to the peace, &c., for the purpose of training, and drilling, and without lawful authority." The second count charged the prisoner with "assisting to train, and drill;" and the third count charged him with unlawfully training, and drilling, certain persons," then, and there, unlawfully assembled, and without lawful authority. Held, that the indictment was bad; first, for not stating, that "the meeting was assembled for the purpose of training themselves, and drilling, or being trained, or drilled, or for the purpose of practising military exercises without lawful authority; and, secondly, because it was not averred, that the meeting, in the indictment mentioned, was a meeting for the purposes therein mentioned, without lawful authority. Gogarty v. Reg. in Error, 1 Ir. Jur. 203.

Conspiracy.—Indictment for a conspiracy charging two offences of the same nature, and growing out of the same transaction is not bad for duplicity. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 338, Q. B.

To make a combination a conspiracy it is not necessary that the act agreed to be done to effect the common object be indictable. Ib.

The mere agreement to commit an offence is a conspiracy, though no act be done in execution of the scheme. Ib.

Indictment charging a conspiracy to cause the Queen's subjects to meet in unlawful and seditious assemblies, and thereby to intimidate the Government, and one of the overt acts laid in the indictment was a meeting at M. Held, that a ballad publicly hawked about, and sold at such meeting, was evidence against the parties charged with the conspiracy as part of the res gestæ, and showing the character of the meeting, though the traversers may individually be ignorant of its contents. Regina v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 261, Q. B.

The statutable proof of the publication of a newspaper is sufficient evidence not only against the proprietor but also against any person affected by his acts. Ib.

The act of one conspirator done in pursuance of the common object is evidence against his co-conspirators; therefore proof of the publication of newspapers by one of the conspirators in furtherance of the common object is admissible evidence against the rest. Ib.

But, per Perrin, J., are not evidence to establish the fact of the conspiracy. Ib. 356.

Injuries to Property.—Indictment under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 24, charging three persons with pulling down and demolishing part of a dwelling-house, Held bad against two of those persons it not having been stated they were in possession of the premises. Held, secondly, that it was bad against all, it not having charged them with demolishing the whole house, or with beginning to demolish the whole, or with demolishing part with an intent to demolish the whole. Reg. v. Hawthorne, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 373, Q. B.

Murder.—Indictment for murder. A plea of autre fois acquit stated that the prisoner had been indicted for the murder of B., and that the murder of B. and the firing at A. were perpetrated at one and the same time and place, and upon one and the same occasion, and with one and the same felonious purpose and object, and by one and the same person, and thereby became and constituted one and entire transaction and felonious crime. Held, on demurrer, that this plea was bad. Reg. v. Gray, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 524, Q. B.

The statement that this act constituted but one felony is a conclusion of law, and cannot be traversed. Ib.

An indictment for murder charged in one count that A. feloniously, &c. in and upon one B. did make an assault, &c. and did cast, throw and push her into the sea, by means of which said casting, throwing and pushing the said B. was then and there choked, suffocated and drowned, by means of which she then and there instantly died. The second count charged that he, the said A., on the same day did make an assault upon the said B., and with a certain stone which he then held in his right hand in and upon the right side of the head of the said B. did strike, giving unto her a mortal wound of which she then and there instantly died. The third count charged that he, the said A., on the same day did assault the said B., and with both his hands and feet did cast and throw her on the ground, and whilst there and then lying, with his hands and feet did kick her, and beat her about the breast, and giving to her by the casting and throwing, as also by the striking, kicking and beating, several mortal wounds of which she then and there instantly died. Held, that the means stated in the indictment by which the death was caused were not inconsistent. O'Brien in error v. Reg. 10 Ir. L. Rep. 337, Q. B.

Held, that the extinction of life being produced by the natural consequence of any of the acts proved, it is no objection to the indictment that it alleged different modes by which the death was caused. Ib.

In an indictment against A. B. for the murder of C. D. by having administered to her a potion containing poison: E. F. who had tasted a portion of the same draught as the deceased was called as a witness to describe her symptoms; G. H., a medical witness, who had attended the witness E. F. and the deceased, was asked as to the symptoms of E. F. Held that such evidence was admissible. Held, also, that the medical witness having heard the witness E. F. give her evidence as to her symptoms, might be asked whether, in his opinion as a medical man, such symptoms were those of a person under the influence of poison. Reg. v. Thompson, 1 Ir. Jur. 207, C. C. [per Crampton, J.]

Nuisance.—The erection of weirs in a tidal river is a nuisance to the navigation, and is an indictable offence at common law. Reg. v. Ryan, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 119, Q. B.

It is also indictable as a nuisance at common law to the public right of fishery, and is indictable also under the 5 & 6 Vic. c. 106, s. 22.

Per Crampton, J., that section does not create an indictable offence. Ib.

On the trial of an indictment at common law for a nuisance in a public, navigable river by erecting weirs, a finding by the jury that such weirs obstructed but to a very trifling degree, Held to amount to a verdict of guilty. Reg. v. Haynes, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 2, Q. B.

Perjury.—One witness was held to be sufficient to prove the perjury, the evidence being corroborated by a document under the hand of the prisoner.

Reg. v. Corcoran, Bl. D. & O 202, Com. C. [Coram Burton, J. and Richards, B.]

Intoxication.—As the prisoner, by the act of drinking immoderately, had helped to deprive himself of the power of recognizing his friend he should be held responsible for the consequence that had ensued, he was of opinion that a case of manslaughter had been made against the prisoner. Reg. v. Darcy, 1 Ir. Jur. 207, C. C. [per Crampton, J.]

Shooting with intent to kill.—An indictment charging a felonious assault, and a wilful and felonious shooting at a person, and wounding him, with intent to commit murder, is a sufficient charge of a capital felony within the 7 W. 4. and 1 Vic. c. 85, s. 2. Hayes in Error v. Reg. 10 Ir. L. Rep. 53, Q. B.

Semble, the non-averment that the wound inflicted caused a bodily injury dangerous to life is not a fatal objection to such indictment. Ib.

Criminal Information.—A conditional order for liberty to file a criminal information will be granted, although the prosecutor does not swear that he believes the defendant's language was used with an intention to provoke him to fight a duel, if a third party who was present on the occasion, out of which the prosecution arose make an affidavit to that effect. Peard v. Maunsell, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 257, Q. B.

An order upon magistrates to take informations will not be granted unless it appear that the informations of the party applying were tendered to the magistrates in writing, and the informations so tendered must be brought before the court where the application is made. Ex parte Hughes, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 292, Q. B.

In motions for leave to file criminal informations the parties applying are bound to disclose all the circumstances connected with the transaction out of which the complaint had arisen, as the suppression of any will be ground of cause against making the rule nisi absolute. Reg. v. Anderson, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 262, Q. B.

When the affidavits are contradictory the court, on motion for that purpose, will allow the complainant to file supplemental affidavits, but if he do not so apply it will discharge the rule. Ib.

An information to authorise a conviction for any offence created by statute must negative every exception contained in the clause or statute creating the offence. Reg. v. Nugent, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 474, Q. B.

The omission of such a statement is a substantial defect in the information, and is not cured by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 73, which provides that the justices may give judgment notwithstanding any defect of form in the information. Ib.

Supplemental affidavits may be filed by a prosecutor in a criminal information in reply to those of the defendant, if such refer exclusively to new matter introduced in the defendant's affidavit. Reg. v. Birch, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 386, Q. B.

The court will not change the venue for the trial of a criminal information because the witnesses to be examined reside at a distance. Lord Lucan v. Cavendish, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 538, Q. B.

On an application for a criminal information the conduct of the applicant is open to the scrutiny of the court, and it will inquire into the provocation he may have given. The refusal of such an application is not an opinion of the court that the law has not been violated. When, therefore, the prosecutor insisted that what had been done was done in the exercise of a right essential to the discharge of his duty, which allegation was denied by the defendant, the court cannot decide such issue as preliminary to the exercise of its authority to grant a criminal information. Butt v. Jackson, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 120, Q. B.

A rule for a criminal information against the proprietor of a newspaper was discharged because it did not appear on the order that the paper had been read. Reg. v. Lencham, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 215, Q. B.

Challenges.—Peremptory challenges are admissible in felonies, not capital. Gray in Error v. Queen, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 482. Dom. Proc. [overruling, Reg. v. Gray, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 259, Q. B.]

Where a person indicted for felony challenged a juror peremptorily, which challenge was overruled on demurrer, and the challenge, demurrer, and judgment thereon were entered on the postea. Held, notwithstanding such judgment, that the prisoner was entitled to move the court in arrest of judgment, and was not compelled to bring a writ of error. Reg. v. Gray, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 259, Q. B.

It appeared on the record, that every person whose name was on the panel at the time of the trial was present, and no objection made to their qualification. Held, that the only ground of challenge to the array in such a case was the undifference or default of the sheriff. Hayes in Error v. Reg., 10 Ir. L. Rep. 53, Q. B.

The 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91, s. 18, does not refer to jurors in attendance on criminal cases; the 18th and 34th sections of that statute are directory, and not mandatory. Ib.

It is no ground of challenge to the array that certain jurors were on the panel who did not appear upon the jurors' book. Ib.

A challenge to the poll that the juror was not summoned, as by law he ought. Held to be insufficient, the summons being merely to secure his attendance. Ib.

Semble, that the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91, s. 18, applies to grand jurors, at commissions of oyer and terminer, and jail delivery. Reg. v. Duffy, 1 Ir. Jur. 81, Com. C. [Per Perrin, J.]

Held, on challenge to the array, that the disproportions of members of different religious persuasions was not admissible in evidence to the triers. Reg. v. Duffy, 1 Ir. Jur. 188, Com. C. [Per Ball, J., and Lefroy, B.]

Jury.—See GRAND JURY.

A jury charged with the trial of persons indicted for a capital offence, having remained enclosed for a considerable time to consider their verdict, returned into court and intimated to the judge that there was no likelihood of their agreeing, who, thereupon, discharged them without consent, and without objection, on the part of the prisoners, or of the crown, and without any fatality having occurred, and remanded the prisoners. The prisoners being again indicted for the same offence, at the following assizes, pleaded pleas, in the nature of puis darrein continuance. The crown replied, and the prisoners demurred to the replication. Held, that the demurrer should have been allowed, and that the judge had no discretion to discharge the jury, unless a case of evident necessity had existed. Conway v. Reg., 7 Ir. L. Rep. 149, Q. B.

On a motion for a trial it appeared, that the name of one of the jurors was J. J. R., but on the jurors' book; and on the jury panel the name was J. R., and by that name answered, and was sworn, no objection being made by the traversers counsel. Held to be no mistrial. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 261, Q. B.

In cases of misdemeanour, the jury will be allowed to separate at the adjournment of the court each day during the continuance of the trial. Ib.

New Trial.—A motion for a new trial will be entertained in a misdemeanour case after a trial at bar. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 261, Q. B.

Under the provisions of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91, it is the duty of the Recorder of Dublin annually to revise the lists of the jurors, and to cause a list to be made out, and delivered to the clerk of the peace of the said city, for the purposes of the ensuing year. On motion for a new trial, on the ground that these general jury lists, from which were framed the jurors' book, and the special jury list, were fraudulently dealt with, for the purpose of prejudicing the traversers in their defence. Held, that this was not a proper ground for a motion for a new trial. Ib.

The rule requiring a party to apply within the first four days of term for a new trial, applies equally to criminal, as civil cases; but if the court, upon looking into the notes of the trial think there is a question to be raised, they will direct it to be argued. Reg. v. Birch, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 157, Q. B.

Caption.—It is no objection to the form of the caption of an indictment for conspiracy, that it does not state which of the jurors, who found the indictments were sworn, and which affirmed; or, that those who so affirmed, had a right to do so. The objection is met by the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 85, s. 2. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 338, Q. B.

Where the caption stated, that "by virtue of a commission, under letters patent, bearing date, &c., and directed to A. B., C. D., and E. F., and others, in said letters named," &c. Held, that the commission was not a joint one, and that the three persons named had full power to act without the others. O'Brien v. Reg. in Error, 1 Ir. Jur. 169, Q. B.

Where the caption of the indictment stated, that "It was presented on the oaths of good and lawful men of the county of the city," &c., omitting the words "sworn, and charged." Held, the caption being a pleading, this pleading was sufficiently certain. Martin in Error v. Reg. 1 Ir. Jur. 50, Q. B.

Held, that it being stated in the caption that it was presented by "good, and lawful men," naming twenty-three, was a sufficiently certain averment, that the indictment was found by twelve good, &c. Ib.

Judgment and Sentence.—A. was indicted at the Assizes of M. for bigamy, and, a verdict of guilty recorded, subject to certain objections taken to the evidence by the defendant's counsel, and which were reserved for the consideration of the twelve judges. No sentence was then pronounced. The majority of the judges having subsequently decided against the objection, at the following assizes the crown counsel called upon the judge, then presiding in the Criminal Court, to pronounce judgment upon the prisoner, which he declined to do, upon the ground that the judgment being discretionary, he had not jurisdiction. The proceedings were then removed by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench, when it was held, first, that the next going judge of assize has jurisdiction to pronounce judgment in such cases; and, secondly, that this court has an inherent jurisdiction to do so, in all cases, in which, in the exercise of its discretion, it may think fit to do so. Regina v. Charlton, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 50, Q. B.

Where two persons, (man and wife,) were found guilty of an aggravated assault, and the sentence of the judge was, that they should be imprisoned for the space of nine calendar months, to be kept in solitary confinement one week in every six, during that period, and to pay a fine of £500. Held, on writ of error, that the part of the sentence awarding solitary confinement, was bad, as having been unknown as a punishment in the common law; and, as to the particular offence of which they had been convicted, unauthorized by any statute. Holland and Wife v. Reg. in Error, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 335, Q. B.

Held, that where a sentence is bad in part, it is bad in the whole, and must be reversed. Ib.

In a prosecution for a misdemeanour, if the defendant demurs to the indictment, and the demurrer is overruled, he has no right to answer over to the offence charged against him; but sentence may be pronounced at once upon him. It is otherwise in cases of felony. Reg. v. Houston, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 174, Q. B.

The judgment cannot be arrested for the vice of the indictment if any one count be good. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 338, Q. B.

The judgment is not vitiated by a finding of the jury against the traverser on a portion of a count for a conspiracy. Ib.

On an indictment, containing two counts, each charging a capital felony, separate judgments of execution were awarded. Held good. Hayes in Error v. Reg., 10 Ir. L. Rep. 53, Q. B.

In an indictment for murder, containing several counts, charging different means of accomplishing the death, not inconsistent with each other. Held, that a general finding and judgment was good. O'Brien in Error v. Reg. 10 Ir. L. Rep. 337, Q. B.

Semble, the more convenient course would be to take the verdict of guilty upon the count, to which alone the facts in evidence were applicable. Ib.

The court will not pronounce final judgment on an indictment for a felony not capital, a demurrer thereto being disallowed. Ib. Reg. v. Duffy, 1 Ir. Jur. 167. Com. C. [Per Perrin, J., Richards, B.]

Held, that the allocutus was sufficient, where the prisoner was asked, why the said, &c., "should not proceed to judgment. O'Brien v. Reg. in Error, 1 Ir. Jur. 169, Q. B.

Motion in Arrest of Judgment.—Duplicity is not such an objection as can be taken advantage of on a motion in arrest of judgment. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 338, Q. B.

Venue.—But slight evidence of the place, in which the transactions were alleged to take place, will be sufficient in criminal cases. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 261, Q. B.

CROWN.

Escheat.—Semble, that leases for lives do not escheat to the crown. Tisdale v. Tisdale, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 41, Q. B.

Costs.—The crown having failed on a demurrer to the inquisition and return of the sheriff to a writ of extent, the crown applied for liberty to quash the former proceedings, and issue a new extent. Held, that the court might make it part of the terms, upon which they would grant the application, that the crown should pay to the defendant the costs of the former proceedings. Reg. v. Perrin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 429, Rev. Ex.

Rights.—The right to appoint a clerk of the peace, for the city and county of Londonderry, is vested in the crown, not in the custos rotulorum. Kennedy v. Gregg, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 225, Q. B.

Buildings in the possession or occupation of the crown, or in the possession or occupation of public servants of the crown, in trust for the crown, and for public purposes, are not liable to be rated for grand jury cess, even though comprised in the police valuation; and the General Post Office, being such a building, is exempt. Earl of Londale v. Wilson, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 412, C. P.; S. C. nomine Graydon v. The Marquis of Clanricarde, 1 Ir. Jur. 301, Ex. Ch.

The property of the crown can be made liable by express enactment only, and not by implication. Ib.

No subpoena shall in future issue for the production of any record in the custody of the paymaster of civil services, or of any other officer of her Majesty, distinct from those under the control of the several courts, without the order of the courts, or one of the judges thereof, upon special application, in the cause wherein the same shall be deemed necessary, and notice of such application must be given to the crown solicitor of the district wherein the record is deposited, and the order served on the officer, in whose custody it is, with the writ of subpoena duces tecum. In re Attorney General, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 185, C. P.

Where a question arose, in whom the right of appointment was vested under a particular statute, Held, that the office being a new one, and the crown not having interfered in the first instance, the right devolved at common law upon the head of the court. Reg. v. Sugden, 1 Ir. Jur. 58, Ex. Ch.

Grants.—The grant of a ferry by the crown is a valid grant, though given after Magna Charta. Hemphill v. McKenna, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 43, Q. B.

The right of lessees deriving under such grant is not limited, as by a direct mathematical line, from one point to another, but extends to any part of the river within the specific limits, and such lessees may change the localities of transit to any point within these limits. Ib.

In an action of trespass, in a several fishery a fiant for a lease of the fishery granted by Queen Elizabeth, with proof of payment of rent under the lease. Held to be sufficient evidence, to presume a seizin in the crown, without proof of enrolment of this lease. The want of enrolment is an objection to the validity of the lease, not its admissibility as evidence. Gabbett v. Clancy, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 299, Q. B.

DAMAGES.

In Particular Actions.]—See TITLES.

DEBT—See BOND. DEED. JUDGMENT.

An Act of Parliament empowered vestries to present certain sums, for certain purposes, to be raised off the inhabitants, and to appoint proper persons to applot and levy the sums so presented. Held, that the persons appointed could recover the sums applotted by them in an action of debt. Brady v. Bellew, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 348, C. P.

Debt on bond, against the heir of the obligor. Plea, that the plaintiff recovered a judgment, on the same bond, against the administratrix of the obligor, and sued out a ca. sa., under which the administratrix was arrested, and was in custody. Replication, that she was discharged under the Insolvent Act, and that the judgment, debt, and damages, remained unpaid. Rejoinder, that, at the time of the commencement of this action, the administratrix was still in custody, under the ca. sa. Held, on demurrer, that the rejoinder and plea were bad; the judgment and execution, against the personal representative, not being a satisfaction of the debt, against the heir, who was liable in respect of the real assets descended to him. Hewitt v. McGeown, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 84, Ex.

Debt by the assignee of the bond, executed in pursuance of a writ of replevin, issuing out of Chancery, the declaration stated, that the condition was to prosecute the suit "with effect, and without delay." Plea, that the defendant did prosecute the suit, without delay. Upon demurrer to the plea, it was admitted the pleas were bad; but it was objected, the declaration was also bad, for not stating, that the bond was executed upon a distress for rent. Held, that the defect in the declaration was cured by the implied admissions, in the defendant's pleas, of the plaintiff's right to sue. Igoe v. O'Hara, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 155, Q. B.

Debt on an English judgment. Plea, that the judgment, in the original action, had been recovered on a bond conditioned for the payment of an annuity, and that no memorial of such bond had been enrolled, pursuant to the 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, s. 2, Eng., whereby the bond was void. Semble, that this plea would be bad upon demurrer. Sims v. Thomas, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 415, Ex.

In a declaration in debt, for rent reserved on a demise, an averment of entry, with time and place, is not necessary. Potter v. Dolphin, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 110, C. P.

Debt, the plaintiff in the third count declared, on a parol demise, in the common form; the defendant pleaded to that count, that the plaintiff, at the time of the making of the nil habuit in tenementis, replication, that at the time of making the demise, he had a sufficient estate. Held, on special demurrer, that this replication was ill. Maher v. Figgis, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 292, Ex.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR—See ASSURANCE.

Compositions.]—The plaintiff, a trader, having become embarrassed in his circumstances, proposed to his creditors to compound their debts for 6s. 8d. in the pound. The defendant, one of the creditors, refused to accede to the composition, unless, prior to his signing the deed, he received goods to the value of 3s. 4d. in the pound. The plaintiff gave to the defendant goods to the amount required, and the defendant, in consideration, signed the composition deed. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the amount for which the goods so delivered were sold by the defendant. Hely v. Hicks, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 92, Ex.

In an action against the defendant, as drawer of a bill of exchange, it appeared, that the bill in question, with others, had been drawn by defendant upon, and accepted by D., to secure a debt due by D. to the plaintiffs. D., having become embarrassed in his circumstances, and a commission of bankruptcy having issued against him, called a meeting of his creditors, who signed an agreement to accept a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound, to be secured by the drafts of D. on the defendant. The plaintiffs, and other creditors of D., who signed the composition agreement, annexed to their respective signatures a reservation in the following terms—"Without prejudice to any additional security we may hold." It further appeared, that the arrangement, with respect to the composition, was entered into with the knowledge, and concurrence of the defendant, and that the plaintiffs, at the time of signing the agreement, held no other security for the debt so due by D., than his said acceptances of the defendant's drafts. Held, that, notwithstanding the reservation annexed to their signature, the plaintiffs, by signing the agreement for a composition, had discharged the defendant from his original liability, as surety upon the bills, so drawn by him, and accepted by D., to secure the debt of the latter. Grundy v. Maighan, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 519, Ex.

A., being indebted to B. in a large amount, and greatly embarrassed, called a meeting of his creditors, at which B. refused to attend, or to sign any composition deed, unless a part of his debt was secured to him. A. accordingly drew a bill on C. for £150, which C. accepted, and at the same time wrote a letter to B., authorising him to sign the composition deed, without prejudice to the security of C., which B. then held, namely, the bill for £150, immediately after B. signed the composition deed, annexing to his signature the words, "Without prejudices to C.'s securities be held." Held, that these words were not sufficient to put the general creditors on inquiry, as to what such securities were; and that the bill being given by C. to B. as a consideration for his signature to the composition deed, B. could not recover on this bill against C. Lindsay v. Rogerson, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 179, Ex.

DEEDS—See ARBITRATION. COVENANT. DEBT. LANDLORD AND TENANT. (LEASES.)

Generally.—A lease by a tenant for life, under a leasing power, reserving rent to the lessor, his "heirs and assigns," with whom, also, the covenants were made, instead of the persons entitled in remainder. Held, to be good. Hosier v. Powell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 395, Ex.

A., being possessed of certain premises for two terms of years, under separate leases, at the yearly rent of £12, and £16, respectively assigned the said premises "to B., subject to the payment of the yearly rent of £44, and to the performance of the covenants," in the original leases. A., subsequently by deed reciting, that he was entitled to a profit rent of £16 per annum, out of the premises in question, sold, and conveyed his interest therein to C. Held, that there was a sufficient reservation of rent on the assignment from A. to B., and that C., as the assignee of the former, was entitled to maintain an action of debt, against the latter, for the recovery of the arrears of the rent. Clarke v. Coughlan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 427, Ex.

Rent may be conveyed, severed from the reversion, so as to give the grantor an action of debt for the arrears. Ib.

Where lands were demised for years, habendum, "from the expiration of the present leases, made by the lessor to the aforesaid, each, and several parties," the "first payment of the rent to be made on the 29th of September, next ensuing, the possession thereof." Held, that the lease was not to commence in possession, until all the existing leases had expired. Stoddart v. Neylan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 118 note, Ex.

Where A., by an indenture, reciting that he was indebted in a certain sum to B., for payment of which, he proposed to assign to C. certain premises, assigned and released those premises to C., during his interest therein, subject to the payment of rent, &c., upon trust, that the assignment thereby made to C., was for the sole use and benefit of B. Held, that the legal estate, in those premises, were thereby vested in B. Lord Kingston v. Ready, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 367.

[Construction.]—A lease on which £170 5s. 2d. yearly rent was reserved, provided, "That, as long as the said H. H., his heirs, &c., shall continue to occupy the lands, and premises, &c., without permitting the erection of any other house than that, and the offices thereto belonging, in which the said H. H., his heirs, &c., shall, himself, or themselves, bonâ fide reside, without letting, setting, alienating, assigning, or, otherwise, disposing of all, or any part of the lands, and premises, &c., unless by consent in writing, under the seal, &c., of G., Earl of W., his heirs, &c., for alienation in any manner, as aforesaid, that then the said H. H., his heirs, &c., shall only to pay to G., Earl of W., his heirs, &c., the sum of £85 2s. 7d. yearly, in time and manner aforesaid. Held, that a letting in con-acre, was not a letting within the contemplation of the said proviso. Lord Westmeath v. Hogg, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 27, C. P.

Semble, that the rent reserved in the lease was substantially a penal rent, so as to induce the court to construe any ambiguity in the proviso, against the lessor. Ib.

Quære, is a letting in con-acre generally a breach of covenant against sub-letting. Ib.

By lease, of 1719, the grantor demised, "All that part of the town-land of B., containing 509 acres, arable meadow and pasture, for their lives, renewable for ever; bounded on the South by Derry-goree, on the North and East by Lough Neagh, and on the West with John Tough's and James Wallwood's lands, situate, &c., with all, and singular, the rights members privileges, advantages, easements, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, excepting all mines, minerals, and quarries of stone and coal, escheats, warfes, estrays, deodanda, courts leet, and courts baron, seneschalships, and all other royalties, privileges, immunities, and franchises, whatsoever;" with liberty of hunting, hawking, fishing, and fowling, over the same. Held, that 400 acres of bog, which lay within the limit of the boundaries of this demise, passed thereunder, in addition to the 509 acres of arable meadow and pasture land. Dawson v. Bell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 140, Q. B.; S. C., affirmed, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 229, Ex. Ch. S. C., nomine Jack v. McIntyre, affirmed on appeal, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 552, Dom. Proc.

By lease of 1803, A. demised to B. the house, offices, and lands of Griston, (except the bog,) containing 67 acres, for lives, renewable for ever, at a rent of £2 5s. 6d. per acre, with liberty of the commonage of the bog, in as large and ample a manner as theretofore enjoyed by Frederick Massey. Held, first, that the soil of the bog did not pass under this demise, but a mere right of commonage. Held, secondly, that, upon the trial of an ejectment, for non-payment of rent, brought to evict this lease, evidence of the way in which B. theretofore used the bog cannot be received, to shew that the intention of the parties was, that a right to the soil of the bog was to pass. Held, thirdly, that the rent issued only out of the land, and that no part of it was charged upon or issued out of the bog. Gubbins v. Massey, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 239, Q. B.

Articles of agreement, executed by A. and B., whereby A. granted, bargained, sold, and leased unto B., all that and those, the lands of, &c., for some time actually in the possession and tenancy of B., to have, and to hold, unto B., his heirs, executors, &c. and from the 25th of March, next ensuing, for, and during the term of the following lives, and the survivors, and survivor of them, or for the term of 31 years concurrent therewith, or for which ever of them as shall longest last or subsist; that is to say, "&c., naming the lives," at the yearly lump rent of £40 clear, &c., said rent to be paid by two equal even and half-yearly payments, that is to say, on every 29th of September, and 25th of March next, leases to be perfected at the request of either party, with the usual clauses, and covenants, between landlord and tenant. Held, that instrument amounted to a present actual demise, for the term of 31 years, and was not so far, as respected said term, a mere executory agreement. Lander v. Duggan, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 86, Q. B.

The legal operation of a lease for three lives, or thirty-one years, when properly expressed, is a freehold lease for three lives, with a contingent remainder for 31 years; the years not to have a legal existence until the determination of the lives. Ib. [Per Burton, J.]

The words "Sterling lawful money of Great Britain," in a lease executed before the Currency Act came into operation, may import British cur-execution of a lease, three days before the Act came into operation, and the reservation of the rent in two fractional sums, "sterling money of Great Britain," which were equivalent to the decimal sums of £10, and £120, Irish money, were sufficient indications of the intention of the parties, that the rent was to be payable in Irish currency. Id.

if such appears on the face of the deed, to ascertain the intention of the parties. Whelan v. Ey, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 334, C. P.

827 A. demised certain lands to B., habendum for one life, and twenty-one years. The deed contained a proviso, that if B., his heirs, &c., assign, or sublet, without consent, under seal and seal of A., his heirs, or assigns, the lease should, at the election of A., be utterly void. In 1829, by indenture, in consideration of a marriage between C. and E., and £30 as a marriage portion, conveyed said lands in these words: "I, the said A., have granted, bargained, sold, and confirmed, with full power of grant, bargain, and confirm, unto C., his beloved son, the full one-half of said lands—the other half of said lands to be held and enjoyed by the life of B., and M., his wife—but when please God to call the said B. and M., then, or death, the whole farm to devolve to C., his heirs, &c." This indenture was executed in the presence of the two sub-letting acts, and with the consent of the lessor, but it was subsequently ratified by his heir. The heir was a minor at the time he ratified. Held, first, that the deed was, as a covenant, to stand seized. Held, secondly, that the assignment was void, under the provisions of the subletting act, unless confirmed by the landlord, his heirs, &c. Held, thirdly, that the provisions of the 7 Geo. 4, c. 29, the Statute in relation by the heir, although a minor at the time of the ratification, was sufficient. Davis v. Davis, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 353, Q. B.

A deed executed 1752, P. D. conveyed his estate to trustees, to the use of himself for remainder to his three daughters, H. L. K., A. L. K., and A. L. K., for their respective lives, and share alike, remainder to trustees for the use of the said daughters, in tail male, in fee; and it was provided, that, in case any one or two, of the said daughters should happen to die without issue male, of her or their bodies, then, as to such part, or parts, of the said lands, of her or them so dying, to the survivors, or survivor, of the said daughters, as tenants in common, in case of the death of the survivors, during the respective lives, or life, of the survivors, or survivor; and after the determination of the respective estates of such survivors, or survivor, to trustees, to preserve, with power, under, to the first, and others sons of such survivors, or survivor, in tail male; and in case of the death of the said daughters dying without issue, then as to their respective shares, to the use of their respective daughters in tail general, and in the event of the death of one or two of the said daughters dying without issue, then as to her or their share, or shares, to the use of the daughters of such survivors, or survivor, share and share alike, as tenants in common of the respective shares of such survivors—in case of two survivors, to the daughters of such survivor, in case there be but one in tail general—and in the event of all dying without issue, remainder over, with ultimate remainder, to the right heirs of P. D. P. D. died shortly after the execution of the said deed, without having made any disposition of the reversion of in fee; H. L. R. died in 1784, without issue; M. L. L. died in 1793, leaving three daughters; (a fourth having died in infancy, in 1778,) of whom L. E. S. was one; and A. L. L. died in 1799 without issue. Held, that in 1779 L. E. was entitled, under the foregoing settlement, besides a vested remainder in tail, in one fourth of her mother's, one third of the D. estate, expectant upon the death of her mother, and aunt's, without issue male, to a contingent remainder in tail, in one-fourth of each of the respective one-third of her aunt's, (H. L. K., and A. L. K.,) of the said D. estate, expectant upon the demise respectively without issue. Cole v. Sewell, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 190, C. P.

In 1772 the said L. E. S. executed a post-nuptial settlement in which was recited the foregoing deed of 1752, and another settlement of 1794, under which she was entitled to a vested estate tail in the B. estate on the death of her father, and that L. E. S. was entitled to divers shares in remainder or reversion expectant upon, and to take effect in possession after the determination of certain prior estates in several parts of the lands thereafter mentioned. It also recited another post-nuptial settlement of 1776, in which was recited the title of L. E. S. to certain shares in remainder or reversion expectant, and her intention to limit and assure the same, and witnessed that an order to bar the estates in remainder or reversion expectant, and to take effect as aforesaid, then vested in her without prejudice to precedent estates—she and her husband covenanted to levy fines of the said undivided parts, &c. to enure to the following uses, viz. that the trustees should, out of the hereditaments comprised in the said deeds of 1749 and 1752 first falling into possession, take an annuity of £300, and out of those next falling into possession take a similar annuity for her separate use, and subject thereto to the use of her husband for life, remainder to herself in fee. The deed of 1779 then went on to recite that no fines had been levied under the said deed of 1776, and that L. E. S. was desirous of securing payment of certain debts, and, subject thereto, to settle the said remainders and reversions expectant, and to take effect as aforesaid for the benefit of her two children (a son and a daughter), and had agreed to settle the same, and all her right and interest in the premises to the uses thereafter mentioned, and it was witnessed, that in order to bar the estate tail in remainder or reversion expectant upon and to take effect as aforesaid, then vested in L. E. S. without prejudice to the estates prior to said remainders, &c. then vested, the said L. E. S. and her husband covenanted to levy fines of all her undivided shares, &c. in remainder or reversion expectant, and to take effect as aforesaid in the B. and D. estates to enure to trustees for 1000 years to raise the amount of the aforesaid debts with remainder to other trustees for 1500 years to raise £5000 for L. E. S. remainder to trustees for 2000 years to raise an annuity of £100 out of the estate first falling into possession, and a similar annuity out of that next falling into possession for the maintenance of her said son, remainder to trustees for L. E. S. for life remainder to the trustees for 3000 years to raise £3000 for the said daughter, remainder to the use of the said son and his issue in strict settlement, remainder to the use of the said daughter, and to all other daughters in tail general, and no remainder after. There was also a covenant on the part of the husband to pay the said debts in the event of the death of L. E. S. and all her issue before the death of her father, and before the death of the survivors of the three daughters of P. D., so that the terms of 1000 years would not vest. Fines were levied in 1779, in pursuance of the covenant in the foregoing deed. Held, that all the estates and interests (contingent as well as vested) in said D. estate to which L. E. S. was entitled under the limitations of the settlement of 1752 passed, and were bound by the said settlement of 1779, and the fines levied in pursuance thereof. Cole v. Sewell, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 190, C. P.

A partition having been made in 1809 of the said D. estate one-third of the same was allotted to L. E. S., and in 1814 a bill was filed by the trustee of the term of 1000 years in the deed of 1779, claiming the whole of the lands allotted to L. E. S. as comprised in the term, and L. E. S. insisting by her answer that one-fourth only was affected by the settlement of 1779, on a reference it was reported by the Master that the whole was subject thereto, and a final decree was accordingly pronounced for a sale of the whole of the said one-third of the D. estate. Afterwards by a deed executed in 1825, it was witnessed that for the barring all estates tail thereafter mentioned, L. E. S. and her then husband conveyed all the D. estate allotted in severalty to L. E. S., and an undivided one-third of the said B. estate (which had come into possession) to a trustee that two recoveries might be suffered of said lands; and it was covenanted that they should enure as to such of the said undivided parts as were comprised in the said deed of 1779 to the uses in the said deed mentioned, and in the confirmation of it, and in particular of the term of 1000 years; and after reciting that three specified denominations of the land were not comprised in the deed of 1779, or the fines levied thereof, and the said equity suit, and the decree for the sale of the lands therein, and in the deed of 1779 recited; and that L. E. S. had agreed to make the said denominations subject to the said term, and the trusts thereof, it was agreed and directed that the said recoveries should enure to confirm the sale of the said three denominations for the term of 1000 years, and to give effect and validity to the said decree, and subject to the said term to such uses as L. E. S. should appoint; and as concerning the land comprised in the indenture of 1779 to such further and other uses as had not been thereby declared of and concerning the same as L. E. S. should by deed or will appoint. Held, that the whole of the D. estate, which was allotted in severalty to L. E. S. by the partition, save only the three omitted townlands, was limited and made subject to the uses of the said settlement of 1779 by the deed of 1825, and the recoveries suffered in pursuance thereof. Id.

A lease for lives renewable for ever contained an agreement that it should be lawful for the landlord, his heirs and assigns, to enter and search for mines, &c., and carry away the ore, and further "to have, hold, and enjoy 200 or 300 acres, at their election, of the land most contiguous to the mines, making an abatement to the tenant for the same." Held, that this was a covenant and not a condition. Croker v. Orpen, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 351, Q. B. [Barton, J. dissentiente.]

A. in 1781 by lease demise certain premises to B. his executors and assigns for a term of 61 years, and three lives concurrent with a proviso, that in case the lives should drop within 61 years then the lease should be good for 31 years. In 1802 he demise the same premises to B., habendum to him and his heirs for the life of C. in the place, room, and stead, and by way of exchange for the life of D., the surviving in the lease of 1781, with a proviso that if C. died within the space of 11 years the lease should subsist for that period, this latter lease contained covenants not in the former lease. Held, that the new lease of 1802 operated as a new lease, and passed a legal estate. Bowen v. Hastings, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 61, Q. B.

W. H. being seized of an estate tail in Whitesacre, certain judgments were obtained against him in 1824. Upon his marriage subsequently in that year Whitesacre was settled upon him for life with remainder for the benefit of the issue of the marriage, and a recovery was suffered to the uses of the settlement. In 1825 W. H. by purchase acquired Blackacre in fee. In 1826 several other judgments were obtained against him. In 1829 E. agreed to lend W. H. £2000 upon mortgage of his fee in Blackacre, and of his life estate in Whitesacre, provided the judgment creditors of 1824 would release Blackacre from their judgments, to which they assented, and then (1829) executed a deed poll, which recited that W. H. being desirous to have Blackacre clear of incumbrances had requested the judgment creditors of 1824 to release it from their judgments, and that they being satisfied that the residue of the lands of W. H. were a sufficient security agreed thereto, and by the operation they released, exonerated, and for ever discharged Blackacre from their respective judgments, and from all writs of execution and executions, and every other writ then sued out, or thereafter to be sued out against Blackacre by virtue of their respective judgments or otherwise in relation thereto, and they agreed (for their respective judgments only) to indemnify W. H. for all costs, damages, and expenses which should at any time be incurred by reason of Blackacre being attached in execution under these judgments. Afterwards W. H. executed the proposed mortgage to E. Held that the legal effect and operation of the deed poll of 1829 was to exonerate Blackacre as well as Whitesacre from the rights and remedies of the judgment creditors of 1824. Handcock v. Handcock, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 565, C. P.

By indenture of the 19th of October, 1738, A. granted to J. M. and his heirs, certain lands, and amongst them "10 acres of Creggan," excepting mines, minerals and quarries, with liberty to A., his heirs and assigns, to enter and dig, bore, search d carry away, all mines, minerals, &c. By deed of settlement, of the 2nd of January, 1789, granted to trustees and their heirs "all that and the baronies, townships, manors, towns, lands, messuages, rents, and hereditaments" thereafter mentioned amongst which were the "10 acres of Creggan and also "the water corn-mill of, and with the mill, sucken, and molenture, growing, arising, flowing or arise out of the said lands," and "the fee-farm rents out of the premises mentioned" and "the reversion and reversions, remainders yearly, and the rents, issues, and profits in and every the aforesaid baronies, lordships, or reputed manors, lands, tenements, messuages, and premises, and all parts, parcels, members, or reputed parts, parcels, and members of the said premises, or any of them," to hold to them and their heirs forever. By another deed of the 12th of 1822, were all "the baronies, castles, manors, lands, quarter-lands, fee-farm rents, and messuages, tenements, and other hereditaments, and every of their rights, royalties, members and appurtenances, &c." subject to incumbrances upon certain trusts. Held, in an action of ejectment to recover the quarries and limestone on some of the lands so granted, that the words in the deed were sufficient to pass the quarries. Donnell v. McKinty, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 514.

Voluntary Deed, 10 Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 3 Ir.]—An issue under the Interpleader Act, to try whether a certain deed of assignment was fraudulent or not, the simple question as to whether it tended to defeat or delay particular creditors was a sufficient test of its bona fides. Semble, it is enough for the party impeaching the deed to show that it is within section 10 of the 10 Car. 2, c. 3, Ir., so as to enable him to make out a facie case, and that it then rests with the party to prove that he is exempted from the operation thereof, and protected by the 14th section of the same statute. Holt v. Kelly, 1 Ir. Jur. 2, B.

Priorities—Registry.—A. being seized of certain lands for lives renewable for ever, under a deed of 1796, by a deed bearing date the 19th of May, 1836, in consideration of a certain annuity, conveyed all his interest in these lands to B. In 1840 B. died leaving A. surviving him, having previously made his will, whereby he devised and bequeathed the lands of Glennalougha, part of said lands to C. and D. for a term of 500 years, to the survivor of B. for life, with remainder over, and appointed C. and D. executors of his will. After the death of B., C. executed a memorial of the deed of 1836, and had it registered upon the 19th of May, 1840.

In May, 1840, A. conveyed those lands, together with others, to the use of other persons, in consideration of the conveyance made to B., and this deed was registered on the 14th of May, 1840. Upon a conflict of priorities between these deeds, that C. was entitled, within the meaning of the Registry Acts (6 Anne, c. 2, and 8 Geo. 1, c. 7) to register this deed, both in his character of creditor to B. and also in his character of assignee.

Murphy v. Leader, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 189, Q. B.

Held also, that the Registry Acts ought to receive an equitable construction.

Held, that the rule of giving an equitable construction to Acts of Parliament, passed for the public benefit, in order to extend the remedy, and suppress the mischief contemplated by the Act, is a well established and subsisting rule. Id.

Alteration and interlineation.—On the trial of an ejectment against over-holding tenants, the lessors of the plaintiff produced and proved the tenant's part of the lease, which purported to be a lease for thirty-one years, "and during the life of A., (one of the lessees), which ever should last longest." The words in italics were interlined, and were introduced with the consent of B., the grantor of the reversion under whom the lessor of the plaintiff derived. Held that the interlineation did not avoid the lease, and that on the expiration of the thirty-one years, an ejectment might be maintained against the lessees, as over-holding tenants. Stoddart v. Neylan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 116, Ex.

Stamps.—The clause in the 56 Geo. 3, c. 56, sched. p. 1, (imposing additional duties on leases, &c. executed by power of attorney,) is applicable to leases, &c., for terms not exceeding three lives, or thirty-one years. Mannix v. McCarthy, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 372, Q. B.

A deed of assignment executed by the sheriff, on a sale under a fi fieri facias, requires an ad valorem stamp within the 56 Geo. 3, c. 56, sched. part 1. Nagle v. Ahern, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 41, Ex.

An instrument which is in form a lease, may be stamped as such, though its legal operation be that of an assignment. Magrath v. Magrath, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 89, Q. B.

By indenture made between A., of the first part, B. and C. his wife, of the second part, and E. and F., trustees of the marriage settlement, of the third part, after reciting that B. and C. had received from A. £850, part of C.'s fortune, which was charged and chargeable on the estates of A., and that B. had agreed to lend £800, part of the £850, A., in consideration of the £800 paid to him by B., conveyed by way of mortgage certain lands to E. and F. upon the trusts declared in the said marriage settlement of a sum of £1300 secured as therein mentioned. At the conclusion of the indenture there was a declaration that a certain sum described as the balance of C.'s fortune, and as still remaining unpaid, and charged on the estates of A. exclusive of a sum of £714 mentioned in the settlement, should be vested in E. and F. upon the trusts of the said sum of £1300. The deed was impressed with a stamp of £2 under the 5 & 6 Geo. 3, 56, Sched. Part 1, and was offered in evidence as a mortgage and conveyance of the legal estate, but rejected for the insufficiency of the stamp. Held, that it was rightly rejected, as it contained other matters not incident to the mortgage, and, therefore, required an additional stamp duty. Murphy v. Connolly, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 116, Ex.

Semble, That besides being stamped as a mortgage it should have been stamped as a settlement. Id.

A. being in arrear with his landlord, B. who had distrained his goods for such arrears, by a deed executed between them it was witnessed that in consideration of B. releasing and discharging A. from the payment of such arrears, and in consideration of five shillings. D. assigned and surrendered to B. the said premises for the remainder of the term unexpired, and also the goods and chattels so distrained to hold the same as his own proper goods and chattels for ever. Held, that such a deed required only a surrender stamp, and that an ad valorem duty on the sale of the goods was not necessary to render it admissible evidence in that particular action. White v. White, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 50, Q. B.

A deed-pole in point of form a mortgage of lands in a foreign country, containing in the recitals a power of attorney, and containing also special covenants for the execution of a proper instrument according to law in that country, with a covenant for further assurance. Held to be a mere agreement for a mortgage, and not to require a £5 stamp. Campbell v. Hynes, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 12, Q. B.

Held, that the party objecting to the stamp as insufficient was bound to shew that the deed operated as a mortgage in the country where the lands were situate. Id.

Premises were demised for three lives renewable for ever, at a yearly rent and a fine, in a subsequent part of the lease the timber trees growing upon the premises were conveyed to the lessee, the stamp upon the lease was admitted to be sufficient for the rent and fine. Held that the grant of the trees, which had been already demised, did not change the character of the lease, so as thereby to render it a conveyance, and, consequently, that no additional stamp was required. Peacock v. O'Grady, 1 Ir. Jur. 363, Q. B.

EASEMENT.

To a declaration in trespass, qu. cl. fr., and, erecting pens and tables thereon, the defendant pleaded the general issue, and at the trial proved a demise of the locus in quo, for a term of years, on the following terms—"All that and those, that part of the house known as 119, North King-street, corner of Smithfield, consisting of the small room of the bar, of said house fronting Smithfield, &c., together with the front part of said premises, extending from said office, to the centre of the said Smithfield-market." Also gave evidence of a custom, for the owners of houses in Smithfield, to let their frontage to sale masters at a rent, and of the commission of the trespass complained of. On the other hand, the defendant gave evidence of there being no such usage—that Smithfield was a public market—and, in evidence of no title the lessor of the plaintiff to demise the frontage, the judge directed the jury, that, if they believed that on a market day, the plaintiff had taken possession of the locus in quo, and was in actual possession of the said frontage demised to him; and, while in possession, the defendant thereon, against the will of the plaintiff, they should find for the plaintiff. Held, that the direction was correct, and that it was not competent for the plaintiff, on these pleadings, to raise any question beyond that of possession, and the commission of the act of trespass, while in that possession. Coffey v. Burrius, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 293. [Doherty, C. J., and Torrens, J., dissentientibus.]

On writ of error, Held, that the direction of the judge was incorrect. That he should have explained to the jury the distinction between a right to exclusive possession, which would have enabled the plaintiff to maintain this action, and such a right of occupation as was necessary for the enjoyment of an easement, which was not sufficient to maintain an action of trespass—and to have directed the jury, that if they believed that the plaintiff had a right to the exclusive possession, they were to find a verdict for him, but if they believed he had only a right to an easement, they ought to find for the defendant, the action not being maintainable. *Coffey v. ement on a notice to quit, the notice was d by an agent of the landlord, without stating e signed as agent; the agent had a power of attorney for receiving rents, but which did not give him authority to determine tenancies. There was also some evidence of a parol authority, by the landlord to the agent, to serve this notice. Held, that the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside. Lord Sligo v. Davitt, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 146, Q. B.

A lease for lives, commenced on the 29th of September, 1811, expired 4th of March, 1835. On the 20th of March following, the bailiffs of the landlord having taken possession, the defendants were let back, on signing the following document —“Sir,—Allow us back into the possession of the land lately held by us under Mr. Cooper, and we will consider ourselves monthly tenants; and will yield up the possession of the aforesaid lands on getting one month's notice, and that without litigation and trouble.”—March 20, 1835. The defendants continued to pay the same rent, and on the same days, as under the expired lease, until served on the 8th of September, 1838, with notices to quit on the 25th of the following March, as on the day of the determination of the tenancy. These notices were signed by the land agent of the landlord, who stated himself to be such. An ejectment had been brought, and was ready for trial at the Spring Assizes, 1840, but was not then tried. On the 23d of March, 1840, another notice to quit, on the 29th of the September following, was served on each of the defendants. Held, that the service of the second notice was no waiver of the previous notice. That the first notices were sufficient. That the fact of the agent having signed the notices as such, and of the ejectment having been brought on the said notices, established a sufficiency of authority in him to serve the notices. Cooper v. Flynn, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 472, C. P.

Ejectment by the landlord, on a notice to quit, signed by his agent and receiver. Held, that the subsequent bringing of the ejectment was not sufficient proof of the agent's authority to serve the notice to quit. Frewen v. Ahern, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 181, Ex.

Trimleston v. Kemmis, 9 Cl. Fin., commented on. Ib.

Demise.—The notice to quit required the defendant to quit upon 1st of November, or at the end of the year of the tenancy, which should expire next, after the end of half a year, from the time of the service of the notice; and the demise laid in the ejectment was laid upon the 1st of November. Held, that the demise was laid a day too soon. Lynas v. Hamilton, 3 Ir. L. 304, Q. B.

The demise stated that fifteen persons had jointly and severally demised, and at the trial it appeared, that the legal title, to the premises in question, was vested in but one of those persons. Held, that this demise was bad, not being consistent with the title proved. McAuley v. Molloy, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 360, Q. B.

If a landlord recover in ejectment, his title has reference to the day of the demise, and the tenant is a trespasser from that period. Nugent v. Phillips, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 17, Q. B.

Venue.—The ejectment was brought for lands in one county, and after issue joined and before trial, those lands were, by virtue of a statute, declared to be within the boundaries of another county, and at the trial a verdict was found for the plaintiff. Held, that a motion for a non-suit, on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction, could not be maintained, the parties having appeared, and tried the issues. Heywood v. Reynolds, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 1, Q. B.

Semble, the proper course would have been to have put the question upon the record, and then moved in arrest of judgment. Ib.

Quere, is this a mistrial, and cured by the statute 17 & 18 Car. 2, c. 12. Ib.

In an ejectment for recovery of premises situate in that part of a county at large, which has been by the provisions of the statute, 3 & 4 Vic. cc. 108 & 109, included within the boundaries of a borough, which is a county in itself, the venue must be laid in the latter county. Evans v. Barber, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 481, S. C. B. L. D. & O. 59. Ex.

The court will not change the venue in an action of ejectment on the title, when there have been two verdicts for the defendant in a previous ejectment about the same lands, in which he was the lessor of the plaintiff, upon the grounds of prejudices prevailing in his favour amongst the jurors of the county where the lands are situated. Jackson v. Lofe, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 161, Q. B.

Lessor's Title.—Where in an ejectment on the title by the executor of a co-lessee in a lease for years, it appeared that the granting part of the lease gave separate portions at separate rents to the respective lessees, but the habendum and covenants in the lease were joint, and it further appeared that the testator died, leaving the co-lessors surviving, and his widow, who subsequently married the defendant, and that the widow and the defendant continued since the death of the testator to pay rent, sometimes to the executors and sometimes to the head landlord, until the time of bringing the ejectment; upon the trial a verdict was had for the plaintiff subject to three objections: first, that the lease was a separate lease for the three tenants respectively, and could not be received in evidence, as it had but one stamp and ought to have had three; secondly, that by being received in evidence it was established as a joint lease, and the executors had no interest as the co-lessees took by survivorship, or if the deed operated as a deed of partition as well as a lease it required an agreement stamp; and thirdly, that the payments of rent by the defendant and his wife constituted a tenancy from year to year. On motion to set aside the verdict and enter a non-suit upon these grounds, Held, first, that the lease was a joint lease; secondly, that the lease required an agreement-stamp; thirdly, that there was evidence to go to the jury of a tenancy from year to year, and which question ought properly to have been left to them; but as the result would be the same upon a new trial the court refused to grant one, and made the rule for a non-suit absolute. Kennedy v. Hayes, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 186, Q. B.

In ejectment on the title the plaintiff proved a lease of 1775, made by his grandfather, and receipt from R. of rent reserved thereby for some time previously, and up to 1833, R. not being in possession or shewn to be connected with the lease of 1775, otherwise than by payment of rent in amount the same as that reserved by the lease; he further proved that he was heir at law of the lessor, and that the lease had expired; it also appeared that the defendant and some others were in possession for several years, and had not paid any rent to the lessor, but subsequently abandoned without any thing being levied under it. Held, that under such circumstances a notice to quit or demand of possession was not necessary before bringing the ejectment. Bagrell v. Boland, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 293, Q. B.

In 1768 a tenant demised for three lives in pursuance of a supposed covenant for perpetual renewal at £28, and his son who was tenant for life under a settlement in 1806, and subsequently in 1830 on each occasion of the falling of a life in the lease of 1768, demised by way of renewal in pursuance of the supposed covenant and died in 1838, when the remainder-man, the lessor of the plaintiff, entered and continued to receive the rents till 1836, when on the death of the last cestui qui vie in the original lease he brought his ejectment after a demand of possession, but without notice to quit. Held, that the question of a tenantry from year to year was properly left to the jury, and they having found in firmative that the verdict ought to stand. Bell v. Bell, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 296, Q. B.

The lessor of the plaintiff gave in evidence a lease in ground, bearing date the 4th of May, 1825, containing a clause of forfeiture in case same was not paid within four years, and proved the facts. The declaration in ejectment contained two counts upon the 5th of May, 1829, and the other upon the 1st of January, 1841. Upon the first was objected by the defendant that 12 years had elapsed since a notice to quit or a demand of possession was necessary to entitle the lessor to maintain his action. Held that the lessor was not entitled to bring this action without a demand of possession at least. Johnson v. Russell, 4 Ir. L. Rep.

The defendant was put in possession by a brother of the lessor of the plaintiff, who lived in the house with her, and tilled the lands, and the other of the plaintiff afterwards stated to the defendant that "as the lands were to be canted, she was not that he had got them sooner than any other person." Held that the ejectment could not be maintained without a previous demand of possession. W. v. Coady, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 298, C. P.

A grantor in a fee-farm reserving rent, and a right of re-entry to him, his heirs and assigns, assigns it to a third party, the condition is extinguished, and ejectment cannot be maintained by the heir grantor on an entry for condition broken. Orr v. Orr, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 2, Ex. Ch. A demand of rent on which to ground an ejectment for condition broken at common law, must be a demand of the whole arrear, but only a part of a single year; the re-entry and demand must be made at a particular time, namely, thirty days after the rent has fallen due. After that time, the right of entry, which accrued due, by non-payment of the antecedent year's rent, now constitute the arrears, is gone, quoad arrears, but it still exists, and is in force as long as any year falls due, and remains unpaid. note. [Per Pennefather, B.]

G. took an absolute estate, quasi in fee, with executory devise over to his brothers and sisters, in the event of his dying without issue, living at the time of his death, and E. G. died without issue. Ejectment by the representatives of the person entitled under the executory devise, against the heirs of E. G., after the death of the latter, that a demand of possession was not necessary. Geary v. Synan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 509, Ex.

A mortgage deed provided, that the mortgagees should not be at liberty to take any proceedings out of the mortgage debt, until they had given six months notice. Held, that in an ejectment brought by the mortgagees, and by the assignees of the mortgagor, the absence of such notice could not be relied on by a third person, who insisted on title being vested in the assignees of the mortgagor. O'Brien v. Bernard, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 1, B.

Held, that outstanding tenancies vested in defendants who suffered judgment by default, are no defence to an ejectment. Ib.

Quære, is a right of re-entry at common law necessary to entitle a landlord to maintain an ejectment, under the ejectment statutes. Delap v. Leonard, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 473, Ex. Ch.

In an ejectment on the title an agreement was given in evidence, whereby the defendant agreed to hold the premises for six years, which had just expired when the ejectment was brought, and by which he was to have the option of renewing for six years longer, and was bound to give six months previous notice, if he intended to give up possession at the termination of the first six years, which it appeared he did not give. Held, that the defendant was not entitled to a notice to quit. Thompson v. Andrews, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 285, Q. B.

A notice to quit was given by the mother of the lessor of the plaintiff who was an infant, describing herself as his guardian and next friend. She was neither a guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery, nor a testamentary one. Held, that the infant could not give authority to her to act on his behalf, and, therefore, that the notice was insufficient to determine the tenancy. Reade v. Kennedy, 1 Ir. Jur. 127, Q. B.

Property had been devised, previously to her marriage, to a wife, for her life to her separate use. The marriage settlement did not affect the premises in question, but contained a covenant, on the husband's part, not to interfere with the management of the wife therein. The parties separated soon after the marriage. The defendant had never dealt with any other persons, in respect of the premises, than the wife and her agent, and had paid rent on the receipts of the wife. Held, that a notice to quit, signed by the wife, and describing the holding as under herself, was sufficient. Dankert v. Wilson, 1 Ir. Jur. 141, Q. B.

Upon the expiration of a lease for lives, which contained the following covenant—"That the lessor, his heirs, or assigns, upon the death or demise of the before named four lives, or cestui que vie, should, and would add, and insert to the time, or term of that demise, the natural life of such person, as should be nominated by the said lessee, his heirs and assigns, in the place, and in the stead of the said four lives, during which the said estate should be continued, in consideration that the said lessee, his heirs and assigns, should lay out, and expend in building a dwelling house, upon the said premises, the sum of £200, within the period of four years next ensuing. An ejectment was brought, and the judge directed a verdict for the plaintiff, no evidence of the fulfilment of the condition having been given, and no demand of possession proved; subsequently to the trial, evidence of a substituted contract, which was performed, was discovered. Held, that a new trial should be granted, for the purpose of submitting the new evidence to the jury. Baker v. Harte, 1 Ir. Jur. 247, Ex.

Held, that if the original contract, or the substituted one, were performed by the defendant, the lessor of the plaintiff could not sustain the ejectment without a demand of possession. Ib.

Particulars of Demand.—In an ejectment on the title, where the question was one of part and parcel, the court, upon the application of persons served with the ejectment, who were at a loss to know the particulars of the land sought to be recovered, made an order restraining the lessor of the plaintiff from proceeding in the ejectment, until he should furnish a bill of particulars, with a map annexed, and specifying by metes and bounds the premises which he sought to recover. Ross v. Ejector, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 25, Q. B.

Defence.—When separate defences are taken to an ejectment on the title, the court will order them to be consolidated upon terms. Gregory v. Archer, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 97, Ex.

When the premises sought to be recovered by an ejectment are described in the declaration by one name (A.), and the person in possession claims them by another name (B.), the course for the person served is to take defence "for the lands of B. in the possession of the defendant, called in the declaration in ejectment the lands of A." Earl of Listowel v. Ejector, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 313, Ex.

A party cannot rule the lessor of the plaintiff to declare for lands in his possession until he has taken defence. Ib.

According to the practice in Ireland a party served with an ejectment, and who takes defence is deemed to be in possession of the premises sought to be recovered by the ejectment, and it is not necessary to give at the trial evidence of his possession. Ib.

A party whose interest has arisen subsequently to the service of the ejectment will not be permitted to take defence. McKiernan v. Shenkin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 180, Ex.

Where several parties have taken defence in an ejectment the court compelled them to consolidate their defences, and each of them to furnish the plaintiff with a bill of particulars of the lands for which he had severally taken defence. Boyle v. Ejector, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 220, C. P.

In the absence of fraud the court will not, unless in very strong cases, set aside a defence to an ejectment on the title for matter arising subsequently to defence taken. Drought v. Murphy, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 113, Ex.

Lands were devised to an infant, who with his mother, continued in possession of the premises from the time of the testator's death, and the trustees nominated in the will brought an ejectment against the mother, laying demises in their own names and in that of the minor, the court, under the circumstances, set aside the demise by the trustees in the minor's name, and gave him liberty to take defence to the ejectment by his mother and guardian. Foley v. Foley, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 235, Ex.

If two defendants appear by the same attorney the court will dispense with the usual affidavit that the plaintiff's title to the entire premises is the same. French v. Cahill, Bl. D. & O. 241, Ex. [per Pennefather, B. Cham.]

Judgment as in case of non-suit.—If a party allow a conditional order for judgment as in case of a non-suit to be made absolute, he cannot afterwards object to the proceeding for irregularity. In ejectment the defendant may file a second declaration, and enter up judgment as in case of non-suit without entering a rule for liberty to proceed on giving a term's notice. Kenny v. Coffey, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 225, Q. B.

The lessor of the plaintiff served notice of trial after defence taken; but before he had filed a second declaration, the cause was held to be at issue by the plaintiff's act in serving notice of trial, and after the lapse of three terms from the service of the notice, the court gave liberty to file the second declaration, and judgment thereon as in case of non-suit. Creagh v. Creagh, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 523, Ex.

Judgment.—The defendant, after service of the ejectment, but before defence, died; judgment was entered. The court refused to set aside this judgment, and allow the widow of the deceased tenant to take defence before she had taken out administration. Hastings v. Ejector, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 404, C. P.

Habere.—After verdict and before judgment the lessor of the plaintiff died. Held, that the judgment entered and habere executed thereon on behalf of the persons in whom the title of the lessor of the plaintiff was continued was not irregular, but that it should distinctly appear by affidavit that it was executed on behalf of the persons representing the title of the lessor. Newton v. Byrne, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 35, Ex.

The execution of an habere will not be suspended for the purpose of giving a party an opportunity of filing a bill in a Court of Equity to sustain his rights. McDonald v. Lawton, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 303, C. P.

Points saved at the trial were ruled with the plaintiff, and execution stayed for a fortnight at the instance of the defendant. But the court refused further to enlarge the stay of execution for the purpose of enabling the defendant to file a bill in a Court of Equity for an injunction to restrain the execution of the habere. Loughnan v. Loughnan, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 27, Ex.

After an habere has been executed, returned and filed, the court will not in general grant a renewal of it, and the party applying should come in at the earliest opportunity. Lady Handford v. Ejector, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 457, Q. B.

On the death of the lessor of the plaintiff, after the issuing, and before the execution of an habere, the court will grant a renewal of it. Lord Powercow v. Ejector, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 196, Q. B.

The court will not permit an habere to be renewed unless there be a fraudulent or forcible repossession. Rowley v. Ejector, Bl. D. & O. 146, Ex.

Evidence.—A. the lessor, his title being admitted, proved a deed of 1792, whereby his father conveyed certain lands, of which those in the ejectment formed a part, to a trustee, in trust for the lessor, and B. his brother, for life with cross-remainders. B. died without issue in 1824, and receipt of rent by him up to that time from the defendant was proved. On cross-examination of one of plaintiff's witnesses it appeared that upon several occasions the defendant shewed to the lessor an instrument under which he alleged he held the lands, and which the lessor at all times alleged to be a forgery; it also appeared that the lessor had in court that instrument, or some document connected with the defendant's title to l, which he said was greatly obliterated. New Trial.]—Ejectment on the title. The issue comprehended two questions, viz., a part and parcel question, and of the existence of a cestui que vie, and the attention of the judge was not directed to the 7 Wm. 3, c. 8, and the jury found for the de- fendant, without stating, or having been asked by counsel or judge on which of these grounds their verdict was founded. Coots v. O'Fallon, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 265, C. P.

If a defendant have judgment of non-suit against him for non-appearance at the trial to confess lease, entry, and ouster, the court will not grant a new trial upon any terms, unless it clearly appear that the defendant has a just legal defence to the action. McDonald v. Lawton, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 303, C. P.

Writ of Restitution.]—Seven persons applied for a writ of restitution, on the ground that they were dispossessed under an habere, and stated in their affidavit that their holdings formed no part of the premises in the ejectment, and were not pointed out to the view jury, who tried the case, as part of the premises sought to be recovered; and it was answered, that four of the tenants had since accepted new agreements, and that the other three were not dispossessed. They not occupying any part of the premises. The writ was refused. Wynne v. Swift, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 159, Q. B.

A writ of restitution will not be granted to a tenant who has lain by for a period of eight months after the execution of the habere, and permitted the landlord to repair, and re-let the premises, though the latter had obtained judgment on the ejectment, upon entering into a consent to execute a lease for three lives of the premises in question to the tenant. *Martin v. Service.]—When a party cannot be served with the summons in ejectment, the court, upon a proper affidavit, will deem service good by posting, &c., but it will not make an order to substitute service in ejectment cases. Earl of Derby v. Ejector, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 291, Q. B.

The court will not make the order that the service be deemed good, unless it appears that person to be served could not be served, in consequence of his keeping out of the way to avoid it. Connolly v. Ejector, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 38, Q. B.

Service on the parties in possession of the premises, the landlord of which was out of the jurisdiction, deemed good service, the court directing that the premises should be posted with a copy of the ejectment, notice, and order. Bourne v. Ejector, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 363, C. P.

Ejector*, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 160, Q. B.

Service—upon the brother of the persons to be served, he admitting that he was aware of their residence, and declining to give the particulars, and he receiving the rent of the premises, and paying it to these ladies—was deemed good. Lord Talbot de Malahide v. Ejector, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 114, Q. B.

An application to the court that the posting of the premises, and service of the caretaker, may be deemed good service, negatives an intention of proceeding under the 15 & 16 Geo. 3, c. 27, as against an absconding tenant. Stewart v. Sisson, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 135, C. P.

It is not necessary to make any application to the court previous to marking judgment against an absconding tenant. Id.

One defendant may set up, as a defence at the trial, the non-service of another, having a legal or beneficial interest. Jack v. Gannon, Bl. D. & O. 158, Ex., N. P. [Per Pigot, C. B.]

Service of an ejectment for non-payment of rent on the lessee, and under tenants, by putting the same under their respective doors, which were closed for the purpose of preventing personal service, was deemed good service, posting the premises with the ejectment and order. The lessee having moved in the Rolls to stay proceedings in the ejectment suit. St. George v. Ejector, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 133, C. P.

In an ejectment at common law for non-payment of rent, where a party could not be served with the summons, the court deemed a service, by posting on the premises, and by service of the summons, and declaration on another person, who had the key of the premises, and who stated that she was authorised to let or treat for them good service on that party. Doe v. Ejector, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 498, Ex.

Where mortgagees reside out of the jurisdiction, the court will not hold service of an ejectment, for non-payment of rent good, upon their solicitor in an equity cause, although it was instituted to sell the lands, the subject of the ejectment, and was still pending. Lessee Macnamara v. Ejector, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 421, Q. B.

In an ejectment for non-payment of rent, service on the receiver, over the premises, sought to be evicted. Held good service. Lessee Carroll v. Ejector, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 423, Q. B.

Lodgment of Money in Court.—The defendant tendered the lessee the rent reserved in the lease, but the lessors of the plaintiff refused to receive less than a penal rent reserved therein, the defendants were allowed to lodge in court the rent so tendered. Young v. Bell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 217, Q. B.

Declaration in Ejectment.—In an ejectment for non-payment of rent, the second declaration must correspond with the copy of the declaration served upon the tenants, and any variance is fatal. Therefore, when the copy of the declaration which was served, described the premises as situated in the parish of St. Mary, and the second declaration described of St. Mary's Lane, the plaintiff was nonsuited. Russell v. Thynne, 2 Jon. 733.

Lessors Title.—G. T. demised a house and premises from June, 1827, for 30 years, to G. H., in consideration of £1200 fine, and £500 per annum. G. T. brought an ejectment for non-payment of rent in 1838. The defendant gave evidence of a deed made between G. T., and G. H., dated 27th July, 1829, surrendering two drawing rooms, part of the demised premises, to G. T. It was executed by G. T. alone, and contained this proviso—"Provided always, nevertheless, and it is hereby declared, and agreed, by and between the said parties to these presents, to be the true intent and meaning thereof, and the same are upon this express condition, that nothing herein contained, shall in any manner prejudice, or affect the covenant, for payment of the said yearly rent of £500, or any other covenant in said lease contained, on the part of the tenant, his executors, &c., or any of the clauses, is, or agreements therein contained, or any remedies for the recovery of the said, or the of the said covenants, conditions, &c., on of the said G. T.—but that the entire of yearly rent shall still be, and continue out of the same—and the said covenants, be, and continue in full force, &c., as to residue of said demised premises, and not surrendered—and the said G. T. shall have the remedies for the recovery of said rent, enforcing said covenants, &c., as if these pre-did not been made any-thing.” Held, that this surrender did not operate to destroy the re-entry, but that it alone, as taken in conjunction with the original lease, constituted a minute, or contract, within the 25 Geo. 2, Thompson v. Home, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 179, Q. B. being possessed of certain premises, under a thirty-one years, still unexpired, the re-in fee of which belonged to B. agreed agreement to permit and suffer B to take on of, and occupy for the purpose of plant-mall portion of the demised premises, upon ns of the yearly rent reserved by the lease reduced to a certain sum agreed upon. The l rent was paid for some time by A. Held, is oral agreement amounted to a re-demise. Leonard, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 287. [Burton, J., etc.]

i, that by the operation of this re-demise, addition of re-entry, at common law, was sus-l, and that no ejectment could be brought at n law for breach of this condition. Ib.

d, that a right of re-entry, at common law, cessary to entitle a landlord to maintain an ent, under the ejectment statutes. Ib. [Pen-er, C. J., dissentiente.] ase containing the usual clause, empowering sor to re-enter and distrain, in the event of nt remaining unpaid for the space of twenty-ays, after either of the gale days specified n, and providing, that in case there should e sufficient distress to satisfy the rent and s, it should be lawful for the lessor to re-and re-possess as of his former estate; and proved that the rent was due for two years, ne half at the last gale day. Held, that the of the plaintiff was entitled to recover on a e laid after the last gale day, and before the tion of the twenty-one days. Kingston v., 5 Ir. L. Rep. 318, C. P. [Ball and Tor-J. J., dubitantibus.] nable, it was not necessary to prove that there i sufficient distress on the premises to satisfy nt and arrear. Ib.

misses were laid in the names of three of five reeners, and in the names of the husbands of of them; the lease proved at the trial was one the father of the co-parceners to the person whom the defendant derived, but no deduc-of title from the father to the lessors of the kiff was proved. Payment of rent for three s, prior to the ejectment, was proved to the co-parceners alone. Held, that such pay-t was sufficient evidence of title, as against l persons, to maintain an ejectment for non-payment of rent. Hyndman v. Bailey, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 143, Q. B.

A lessee who has demised for the same lives and years for which he holds the lands, cannot maintain an ejectment for non-payment of rent under the Irish Ejectment Statutes. Porter v. French, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 514, Ex.

To constitute the relation of landlord and tenant, within the meaning of the ejectment statutes, there must be a reversion; and when there is no reversion an ejectment for non-payment of rent cannot be maintained. Ib.

At the time of bringing the ejectment, the title of the lessor of the plaintiff, to a portion of the premises sought to be evicted, was for the same lives as were contained in the defendant's lease. Held, that as to so much of the rent as issued out of that portion of the premises, the plaintiff ceased to have a reversion, and that a verdict which passed for the entire of the premises, and for the whole of the rent, could not be maintained. Peacock v. O'Grady, 1 Ir. Jur. 363, Q. B.

1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 31, s. 12.]—In proceeding under the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 31, s. 12, it is not essential to the regularity of the proceedings, that the right of re-entry accruing in the term should be the first and only right of re-entry that has accrued, but the Act is applicable to such cases, though one or more previous rights of re-entry may have accrued before the term in which the ejectment is brought. Jones v. Ejector, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 574, Ex.

Where the gale days were the 1st of November, and the 1st of May, the lease contained a clause of re-entry, if the rent should be twenty-one days in arrear; more than one year's rent was due in November, 1844, a further half year became due on the 1st of May, 1845. Held, that a right of re-entry accrued under the terms of the statute, on 22d of May, 1845, though a right also existed in November, 1844. Ib.

Held, that the express contract of the tenant, giving the landlord a right to re-enter, if the rent were in arrear for twenty-one days, gave him a right of re-entry on the 22d of May, independently of the rule laid down in Keely v. Ahearn, Batty, 18 note. Ib.

Held, that this statute applies to ejectments for non-payment of rent. Ib. [Richards, B., dubitantibus.]

Held, that the objection on these grounds were properly made before the defendant appeared. Ib.

Particulars of Demand, 9 & 10 Vic. c. 3.]—A summons in ejectment contained the following notice—"The lessors of the plaintiff claim £84 10s. 9½d., being for over one year's rent, up to the first day of November, 1846. The times at which same accrued due being as follows, that is to say up to November, 1846, £61 5s. 4½d., balance of old arrear £23 5s. 4½d. Held, that this was a sufficient notification within the terms of the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 3, of the particulars of the landlord's demand. Bowen v. Clarry, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 449, Ex.

Defence.—A defendant may be required to confine his defence to the lands in his actual possession. Horsfall v. Jennings, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 218, C. P.

An insolvent in possession being served with an ejectment, and having taken defence thereto, the court directed the defence to be altered, by the insertion of the name of the assignee for that of the insolvent, or that the latter should give security for costs. Hoy v. Dillon, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 243, C. P.

A defendant will not be allowed to take defence for a part only of the premises, although he claims to hold from the lessor of the plaintiff, under a lease of the said part, executed previously to the lease, sought to be evicted, and there is but one half year's rent due thereunder; but the court will give him permission to take defence for the whole of the premises in the ejectment, and have a verdict entered for him, on proving at the trial, either that a year's rent was not due under the lease sought to be evicted, or that he is in possession under the alleged prior lease. Barrington v. Wolfe, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 428, C. P.

A defendant cannot be compelled to confine his defence to the part of the land actually in his possession. Power v. Connellan, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 266, Ex.

In the Common Pleas defence may be taken at any time previously to judgment having been marked against the casual ejector. Blake v. Golding, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 446, C. P.

A lessee took general defence, and gave a consent for judgment, with stay of execution, upon that consent judgment having been marked against him, and the time for which execution had been stayed having expired, one of his under tenants took defence, judgment not having been marked against the casual ejector. The court refused to issue an habere as against the lessee, though collusion was charged against him and the under tenant. Ib.

A motion after judgment, for liberty to take defence, will be refused without an affidavit of merits, though the judgment be by default, and the rule to plead served but no affidavit of service filed. Doe v. McEgan, Bl. D. & O. 206, Ex.

A defence describing the lands and premises for which the defence is taken is regular, and the judgment marked, as for want of a plea, will be set aside. Williams v. Ejector, Bl. D. & O. 277, Q. B.

The court will give a defendant liberty to confine his defence to the premises in his possession, for the purpose of raising the question, whether they are a portion of those for which the ejectment has been brought. Doe v. Ejector, Bl. D. & O. 292, Ex.

A defence taken by a bankrupt, against whose assignee judgment has been marked, was set aside, and the name of a solvent under tenant, against whom judgment, had been also marked, was allowed to be substituted. Hickman v. Behan, 1 Ir. Jur. 80, Q. B.

1 Geo. 4, c. 87.]—The tenant held under a lease for one life, and forty-one years, to commence from the death of the cestui que vie, and, by a subsequent deed, the parties agreed that the cestui que vie died upon a certain day, an ejectment having been brought against the tenant, under the 1 Geo. 4, c. 87, and a conditional order obtained, requiring the tenant to enter into the terms, by that act prescribed before being admitted to take defence, it was insisted as cause, that the term being uncertain, that the order was irregular, in not stating that the deeds, under which the tenants held, were produced in court when it was obtained, and the court refused to make the order absolute. Oryen v. Ejector, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 291, Q. B.

25 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 2.]—Ejectment. The document relied upon, as being an article, minute, or contract in writing, within the 25 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 2, purported to be a deed of attornment, whereby the defendant, among several others, acknowledged the ancestor of the lessor as his landlord, and covenanted with him, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to pay a certain rent for the premises, but referred to certain leases or agreements, whereby they held the said lands, as then existing. Held, that, in this form of action, it was necessary to prove the document under which the defendant held, and that it could not in the present case be said that he held under the instrument which had been relied on. Warner v. Martin, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 79, Q. B.

Quere, does an ejectment for non-payment of rent lie in the case of a tenancy from year to year. Ib.

Evidence.—In an ejectment for non-payment of rent an office copy of the ejectment and affidavit of service, duly attested by the filacer, is sufficient evidence of these documents on the trial of the ejectment in the Assize Court without proof of their having been examined. Boyle v. Kirran, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 273, Q. B.

Judgment.—A third party who did not claim under a lease sought to be evicted, but who claimed a small portion of the lands included in that lease, and in his possession under a prior lease made by the same lessor took defence. Held that the plaintiff might mark judgment, notwithstanding such defence, he undertaking not to disturb the party in the possession of that portion. O'Brien v. Keogh, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 185, Ex.

Habere.—The court refused to renew a writ of habere, the writ having been executed, and a new possession given. Mahon v. Ejector, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 345, Ex.

If possession of the premises be forcibly re-taken after execution of an habere the writ will be renewed. Lee v. Ejector, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 172, Ex.

A renewal of an habere was granted where the defendants having taken forcible possession after the habere had been executed, and before the return had been filed. Graydon v. Ejector, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 435, Q. B.

Upon the renewal of an habere, the tenants having given the acknowledgment required by the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 111, s. 8, the lessor will be put under terms not to execute it until the tenants may be able to reap the crop sown since the former habere. Wilmington v. Ejector, Bl. D. & O. 193, Q. B. [per Perrin, J. in chamber]

S. P. Irvine v. Ejector, Bl. D. & O. 275, Q. B. [per Perrin, J.]

The Court of Exchequer will not allow a tenant who has signed the acknowledgment under the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 111, s. 8, to remain in possession till he has reaped the crop sown by him since the former habere. Jordan v. Ejector, 1 Ir. Jur. 240, Ex.

Judgment against the casual ejector. The affidavit filed pursuant to the 4 Geo. 1, c. 5, for the purpose of ascertaining the rent, stated that there was due to the lessor of the plaintiff the sum of £31 2s. 6d., being the balance of the six years' rent. Held, that the affidavit was defective in omitting to state that more than one year's rent was due, and the court accordingly set aside the habere, and let the defendant in to take defence upon terms, notwithstanding a subsequent affidavit stating that the sum of £31 2s. 6d. was more than five years' rent of the premises. Doyle v. Ejector, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 383, Ex.

Writ of Restitution.—Several under-tenants were dispossessed under the habere upon the 10th of January, 1838, but allowed to return into possession and remain undisturbed until the 11th of January, 1840, when they were again dispossessed by an habere upon a judgment in scire facias in this cause, and of the proceedings in which the tenants swore they knew nothing. Held, that a writ of restitution should issue to restore these parties to their possession. Ashley v. Ejector, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 264, Q. B.

The court will not grant a writ of restitution on the application of the sheriffs who had executed the habere outside the limits of their bailiwick, the dispossessed tenant making no affidavit. Archbishop of Dublin v. Ejector, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 12, Q. B.

Ejectment by one tenant in common against another for the entire of the premises, to which the defendant took the usual defence. Held, that proof of actual ouster was not necessary. Dudgeon v. Dudgeon, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 534, Q. B.

Lessor's name being used without authority.—When the name of a party was used as a lessor of the plaintiff in an ejectment on the title without his sanction or privity, and also without his being aware of the circumstances until after a final judgment in the House of Lords for the defendant, and application to him for payment of costs, the court ordered the attorney who made use of his name to pay the costs in the first instance, but refused to strike the name of the party out of the ejectment and proceedings in the cause. Lord Trimbleton v. Kemmis, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 432, C. P.

Judgment in the Queen's Bench in ejectment for non-payment of rent. A cross ejectment was brought in the Exchequer in the name of a trustee not served in the ejectment in the former court; a motion to set aside the proceedings in the Exchequer, on the ground that the trustee had given no authority, was refused. Duckett v. Moulds, Bl. D. & O. 281, Ex.

ELECTION LAW.

Registry of Voters.—The mere production of his former certificate, without any examination upon oath, is prima facie evidence of the claimant's right to register anew, under the 27th section of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88. Any person qualified, under the 18th section, to oppose a claim of original registry, may oppose a claim of renewal, and insist that the person producing the certificate, whether he be the claimant himself, or his agent, shall submit to examination. In such cases of registry anew, no affidavit need be made by the claimant. In re Seton and in re McClelland, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 119. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

When a claimant has been rejected by the barrister for any other cause than insufficiency of value, the duty of the appellate court is not to hear the case, de novo, but merely to examine, and decide upon the validity of the cause assigned. Ib.

A claimant seeking to register anew, under the 27th section of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 83, may cause his certificate to be produced by an agent, without his necessarily appearing in person. The production of the certificate, by the third person, is of itself evidence of agency. Ib.

A party claiming to register anew, under the 27th section of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88, should give in evidence the original certificate. In re Rafferty, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 279. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

On application to register anew, under the 27th section of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88, Held, that a certificate of former registry was valid, though it omitted to state the voter's addition, or the county in which he resided. In re Reilly, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 245. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

Sessions, Place of Holding.—The power of adjournment, conferred upon the Lord Lieutenant, by the 33d section of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88, applies to all future Registry Sessions, as well as to the first Special Sessions, held under the act. In re McKee, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 249. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

Notice of Registry.—The notice of registry must state distinctly the situation of the premises. A description, as of upper or lower C. street, is insufficient. In re Savage, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 281. [Woulfe, C. B.]

The notice stated the residence of the applicant to be in North Cumberland Street. There were two North Cumberland Streets, Upper and Lower. Held, to be insufficient. In re Finlay, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 137. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

The notice of registry stated the claimant's residence to be in Bishop Street, without stating whether it was in the county, or the city of D., the claimant actually residing in the county. Held, that the notice was defective. In re Sinnott, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 188. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

Occupancy.—An administrator, and one of the next of kin, lived in the house of the intestate. The administrator was allowed to register as a householder, it not clearly appearing that the occupation of the next of kin was, in respect of his distributive share, so as to make it a joint occupancy. In re Daly, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 238. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

A salaried clerk, occupying a house in such capacity, is not entitled to register thereout as a freeholder. In re Gorman, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 282. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

Freemen.—The applicant claimed to register as a voter as being free by birth, and produced certificate of admission as a freeman by birth, at Michaelmas Assembly, 1838. The claimant being sworn, was examined as to his having taken the usual oaths before the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, and of his having obtained the Town Clerk's certificate produced; but refused to answer any questions, upon cross-examination, touching the validity of his admission to the corporation, for which reason he was rejected. Held, by the twelve judges, that he was rightly rejected. In re Disney, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 139.

The validity of the admission of a freeman claiming to register, under the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88, may be questioned at the registry. Ib.

When a freeman, having served notice of registry, changed his residence, he need not serve a new notice. In re Hall, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 284. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

The time of the service of an apprentice commences from the date of his indenture, and his admission by the Lord Mayor is not conclusive evidence of his right to such admission. In re Farrell, Bl. D. & O. 16. [per Brady, C. B.]

Value—Beneficial Interest.—A beneficial interest of £10 per annum, remaining after a due apportionment of the rent, upon that part of the premises out of which the leaseholder seeks to register his vote. Held, to be a sufficient qualification, under the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88, although such interest be not over and above the entire rent to which the premises are legally liable. In re McKee, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 249. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

The "solvent tenant test," is not the only test to be applied in estimating the value of the property required to confer the elective franchise, under the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88. In re Larkin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 46, Ex. [per Brady, C. B.]

A tenant holding under a lease, with the following proviso, "provided the landlord's interest shall so long last," cannot register for want of interest. In re Kinsella, Bl. D. & O. 15. [per Brady, C. B.]

In determining the clear yearly value of premises, under the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88, s. 7, the proper criterion of value is the amount for which the premises would let; the tenant paying the ordinary burdens incident to occupation. In re Whitaker, Bl. D. & O. 123. [Per Blackburne, C. J.]

Held, that the 10th section of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88, did not apply to cities. Ib.

Jurors—Form of Oath.—The form of oath prescribed by the 10 Geo. 4, c. 8, is not the proper form to be administered to jurors empanelled on registry appeals to try questions of value under the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88. The jurors empanelled, on such appeals, are to be sworn to try whether the freehold, or leasehold, in right of which the claimant of the elective franchise seeks to register his vote, under the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 88, is, or is not, of the clear yearly value, at which the claimant seeks to register, over and above all rent and charges, payable out of the same, except only public, or parliamentary taxes, county, parish, or church cesses or rates, or cesses on any town, land, or division of any parish or barony, wherein the said freehold or leasehold is situated. In re Larkin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 46. [per Brady, C. B.]

Form of Order of Rejection.—The order of rejection of a claim to register, when not grounded on insufficiency of value, should state the reasons which influenced the court below in making it, and so much only of the facts of the case as bear upon those reasons. In re Savage, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 281. [per Woulfe, C. B.]

Generally.—An objection was made to the evidence of a witness, that he had given parol testimony, as to a written document, there being proof of service, on the defendant's, of a notice to produce it. Held, that the defect was cured by the subsequent production of the instrument by the defendant, as part of his evidence, on a different issue, in the same trial. Daly v. Kelly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 174, C. P.

Quere, can parol evidence of a payment, by means of a bill of exchange, be given, without producing the bill, or proving the loss of it, or notice on the opposite party to produce it. Ib.

Semble, that where a rule is made for the exclusion of witnesses during the trial, and a witness remains, the party objecting to the testimony should make the objection when the witness comes upon the table; after examination the objection is too late. Farrell v. Maguire, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 187.

Semble, that in such case, the conduct of the witness is matter for observation upon his testimony, and not for its exclusion. Ib.

Where the declaration is entitled generally of the term, it is open to the party to give at the trial parol evidence, of the actual time of the commencement of the suit. Taylor v. White, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 43. [per Brady, C. B.]

If a pleading contain an averment of some act, the averment of which was unnecessary, in order to sustain the action, the proof of such averment is not necessary. Davis v. O'Hara, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 37, Q. B.

The mutilation of a deed is no reason against its admissibility in evidence, if it come out of the proper custody, and there is enough to shew that it had been a deed, that it had been executed, and that it had conveyed an estate; so that the upper part of the first skin of an indenture, bearing date in 1679, which had originally consisted of two or more skins, and which appeared to have been covered with a sharp instrument, and on the back of which were the names of the witnesses attesting the execution, though not of the executing parties, and coming from the proper custody, and which appeared to convey estates, in pursuance of certain articles of 1668, which had been previously given in evidence, was held to have been properly admitted. Trimleston v. Kemmis, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 380, Dom. Proc.

In an ejectment by J. T., Lord T. claiming as tenant in tail, under a settlement of 1686, against H. K., who claimed as assignee of T. K., the original lessee of N. Lord T., the father of the lessor of the plaintiff. A conveyance of the lands in question, by the said N. Lord T., to a third party S. R. in fee, subject to the said leases, which, with other leases, made by the same party, and his immediate ancestor, were contained in a schedule annexed to the deed, was held to have been properly admitted in evidence. Trimleston v. Kemmis, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 380, Dom. Proc.

An abstract of the title of N. Lord T. to the lands in question, found among the family papers in the possession of the said T. K., the land and law agent of the said N. Lord T., after his death in 1823, and which abstract contained notes in the hand writing of the said T. K., the father of H. K., was held not to have been admissible in evidence against the said H. K., who claimed under an assignment executed in 1804, there being no evidence at the time at which the entries were made. Id.

Matters judicially Noticed.—The court will take judicial notice that a particular day of the month falls upon Sunday. Pearson v. Shaw, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 1, Q. B.

Admissions on the Record.—Since the rule requiring the bill of particulars to be served with the declaration, it is evidence to shew the items of the plaintiff's demand. Flood v. Lennon, Bl. D. & O. 9, N. P. [Brady, C. B.]

Admissions and Declarations.—Though declarations made by a party in possession of an estate are admissible against his own interest, yet a declaration by a party in possession of what he has heard other persons say, is not admissible to cut down or defeat his estate. Trimleston v. Kemmis, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 380, Dom. Proc.

A declaration by a party in possession is inadmissible in reply, so far as it is confirmatory only of the plaintiff's original case; and the issue being whether a life estate had been surrendered in 1747 to R. Lord T., one of the plaintiff's ancestors, an admission by the son of the said R. Lord T., while in possession of the relative interests of the said R. Lord T., and the said tenant for life, at the time of the death of the said R. Lord T.'s father in 1746, was held to have been properly rejected, as immaterial to the issue. Id.

An affidavit made by the clerk of the plaintiff's attorney is not admissible as evidence against the plaintiff. White v. Dowling, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 128, Q. B.

The admission in an answer in Chancery is only secondary evidence, though a party may therein swear he executed the particular deed in question. Lord Gasford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 217. [Per Pennefather, C. J.]

To a letter, addressed by the attorney of the plaintiff to "Mr. Thomas Beddy, Sadler, Drogheda," the description of one of the trustees, in a trust deed, and transmitted by post, an answer was received a few days after by the attorney, signed, "Thomas Beddy," alluding to the contents of the former letter. Held that the latter letter must be considered as the letter of the person to whom the former was addressed, and that its contents were admissible in evidence against him. Bradley v. Barton, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 363, Q. B. [Crampton, J., dissentiente.] S. C., Bl. D. & O. 117, N. P.

A vendor offered by letter wool, described as of a particular quality, at a certain price, which proposal was not accepted; two months after there was an agreement, between the same parties, for the purchase of the same wool, at a different price. Held, that the first letter might be read to prove the vendor's representations as to the quality of the article. Harrison v. Balfe, Bl. D. & O. 22, N. P. [Per Ball, J.]

Proof by Secondary Evidence, Recitals, &c.—The plaintiffs claimed as devisees under a will, the original of which was not forthcoming, but to let in secondary evidence of its contents. Searches for the original were proved to have been made in the proper office of the Prerogative Court, and also in that of Ecclesiastical Court, of the diocese in which the testator died. Held, that it was not necessary to search among the original wills deposited in those offices, it being sufficient to examine merely the official books of the respective courts, in which copies of wills are entered according to course and practice of the office. Geary v. Synan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 509, Ex.

In an action for the disturbance of a fishery the plaintiff proved a lease to him of the locus in quo, by a corporation, which, to be valid, required the consent of certain parties thereto. The lease recited that such consent had been obtained. Held, that such was sufficient proof of its validity, without actual proof of such consent, which the jury might presume; no evidence to the contrary having been given, and the onus probandi lying on the party who asserted the invalidity of the instrument. Gubbett v. Clancy, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 299, Q. B.

If a lease be not produced, the party requiring its production may give secondary evidence, whether obtained by accident or otherwise. If the deed not produced is in the hands of third parties, and is witnessed, its execution must be proved; it is otherwise if in plaintiff's hands. A recital in a deed read by a party, is sufficient to rebut secondary evidence given by the same party, that the contents of the recited deed differ from the recital, and held that the jury should presume a deed to have been made in accordance with the recital, rather than believe the evidence given to contradict it. Flood v. Moriarty, Bl. D. & O. 165, N. P. [Per Pigot, C. B.]

A notice to produce a document, served the evening before the day of trial, is not sufficient to enable the party serving it to give secondary evidence of the contents of that document. Mauwells v. Curry, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 257, Ex.

If a plaintiff's witness be supposed to be collusively withheld by the defendant, the court will send an issue on that fact to the jury, and if it be found in the affirmative, will allow evidence of the handwriting of the witness to be given as if he were dead. Keating v. Smith, Bl. D. & O. 159, N. P. [Pigot, C. B.]

Proof of Handwriting.—A witness who admits a particular document to be the handwriting of the defendant, may be asked—"If there are any peculiarities, and whether they are the same as those in the document in question," the signature to which was disputed. Davis v. Bell, Bl. D. & O. 181, N. P. [Pigot, C. B.]

Presumption.—See PROOF BY SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

Lands were vested in trustees, named in an Act of Parliament, upon trust to sell, and invest the money for certain purposes; and it was enacted that all, and every part and parts of the lands which should not be sold for such purposes, should remain vested in the trustees in trust for such persons, and for such estate therein, as they would be entitled to, if the Act had not passed. Held, that a conveyance from the trustees to the beneficial owner might be presumed. The latter having, three years after the passing of the Act, suffered a recovery, and executed to the plaintiff a conveyance of the lands, under which there had been an uninterrupted possession for thirty years. Hosier v. Powell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 395, Ex.

Competency of Witnesses.—Trespass, qu. cl. fr. by A. against B. There was another action at the same assizes by B., against A., C., D., and others, for trespass on the same close, for the same period of time. C. and D. justified under A. Held, that C. and D. were admissible as witnesses, on the part of A., in the first action, to prove possession of the close in him, and that the fact of their being parties to the second action, was not sufficient to exclude their testimony in the first. Gillespie v. Cumming, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 504, Ex.

A mere liability to an action does not exclude the testimony of a witness who claims an interest in the subject of the suit in which he is sought to be examined. Ib.

In an action of trespass qu. cl. fr. the wife of the landlord of the plaintiff was produced as a witness, and proved the fact of the holding of the premises in question from her husband, and the commission of the act of trespass complained of. Held, that the witness was competent to prove every fact material to the issue, even though her evidence might eventually tend to exonerate or to charge her husband. Burris v. Coffey, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 298, C. P. S. C. 7 Ir. L. Rep. 509, Ex. Ch.

If a man be incompetent to be examined as a witness on the ground of interest, the evidence of his wife is likewise inadmissible. If a witness be incompetent to be examined upon any point on the ground of interest, he is incompetent to be examined at all. Ib.

To a declaration in replevin the defendant pleaded that the goods were the property of A. Held, that A. was not a party to the suit, nor a person on whose individual behalf the action was defended, and therefore was a competent witness. Kemp v. Mathews, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 405, Q. B.

A partner and shareholder in the London and Dublin Bank, (a company trading under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 42,) is not admissible as a witness on behalf of the bank. Perrott v. Humphrey, Bl. D. & O. 216, Ex.

Examination of Witnesses.—A witness cannot, for the purpose of impeaching his credit, be cross-examined as to the contents of depositions sworn by him on a former occasion, unless the depositions be produced. Pujolas v. Holland, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 533, Ex.

Records, and Proceedings in Courts of Law.—Two actions relating to the same subject-matter were tried at the same assizes; the verdict in that first tried, was offered in evidence on the trial of the second. Held, that it could not be given in evidence until judgment had been entered thereon. Gillespie v. Cumming, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 504, Ex.

A special verdict in a suit respecting the lands in question, between one of the lessors of the plaintiff's ancestors while in possession, and a third party unconnected with the defendant by blood or estate, was held to be inadmissible against the defendant. Trimleston v. Kemmis, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 380, Dom. Proc.

A judgment involving a general right, though between other parties, is admissible against a third person. Hemphill v. McKenna, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 43, Q. B.

On an issue in replevin as to whether a person of the name of Garvin was tenant at a certain period to A. or B. Garvin was produced on the trial as a witness, and an attested copy of an affidavit made by a person of the same name in a cause in the Court of Exchequer in 1839, was offered in evidence, in which the allegations as to facts were different to the evidence Garvin now gave. Held, that such attested copy was admissible in evidence, proof being given of the identity of the person who made the affidavit with the person produced at the trial. Garriss v. Carroll, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 323, Q. B. [Perris, J. dis-sonante.]

Bills, Answers, and Proceedings in Equity.—The attested and compared copy of an order in a minor matter, referring it to the Master to approve of a proper person to be receiver; an attested and compared copy of the report stating A. to be a proper person to be receiver, and an attested and compared copy of the order requiring the tenants to pay their rents to A. as such receiver. Held to be adcient evidence of the fact that A. was the receiver of the minor matter. Crosbie v. Barry, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 232, Ex.

A deed of compromise of an Equity suit made between the lessor of the plaintiff and a third party, as held to be admissible in evidence where its relevancy to the issue appeared by the bill, answer and decree in the cause; the bill having been filed by the administrator, pendente lite, of the said N. Lord T. against his agent for an account, among other things of the proceeds of the said sale to S. R., and the bill, answer, and decree were held to have been properly admitted in evidence as explaining the effect of the deed of compromise. Trimleston v. Kemmis, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 380, Dom. Proc.

A bill in Chancery filed by the lessor of the plaintiff against T. K., the original lessee of the lands in question, but after his assignment thereof, and amended against the H. K., the defendant; was held to have been properly admitted in evidence to show the subject-matter of the said suit, and that the plaintiff claimed as heir at law of his father, the same having been at an earlier stage of the suit put in evidence by the plaintiff himself for the purpose of reading admissions in the answer of the defendant. Ib.

Seemingly, the bill was admissible for the same purpose even if not previously given in evidence by the plaintiff. Ib.

The admission in an answer in Chancery is only secondary evidence, though a party may therein swear he executed the deed in question. Lord Gosford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 220. [per Pennefather, C. J.]

Sentences and Proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts.—In an action for the recovery of necessities supplied by the plaintiff to the defendant's wife during her separation from her husband, which was alleged to have been caused by the cruelty of the husband, or by his careless desertion and abandonment of her. Held, that a sentence of an ecclesiastical court, dismissing a suit by the wife for a divorce and for alimony, grounded upon the husband's alleged cruelty, and to which the husband set up as a defence, the wife's adultery, was admissible in evidence. Day v. Spread, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 247. [Perin, J. dissentiente.]

Held, that such a suit is not res inter alios acta. Ib.

In an action brought against one of three executors, on a covenant of the testator, Held, that the inventory taken before probate was evidence to charge him with the assets therein specified. Rowan v. Jebb, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 216; S. C. Bl. D. & O. 52. N. P. Q. B.

Parol Explanation of Written Instruments.—To a scire facias the defendant pleaded the statute of Limitations; Replication, an acknowledgment in writing contained in the defendant's schedule in the insolvent Court, in which he admitted himself to be indebted to the co-uzer of the judgment in three bonds. These bonds differed in amount and date from that on which the judgment was entered, and the defendant rejoined that there was no acknowledgment. Held, that parol evidence was admissible to show that one of the bonds mentioned in the schedule was identical with that on which the judgment had been entered. Hann v. Power, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 505, Q. B. [Perin, J. dissentiente.]

Hearsay and Reputation.—An inquisition taken in the year 1614 was deemed sufficient evidence as a matter of reputation of the existence of a certain place, without proof of the commission on which it was grounded. Gabbett v. Clancey, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 299, Q. B.

Variance.—Lands were leased after the passing of the 4 Geo. 4, c. 99, and an establishment for the composition of tithes within the parish, at a yearly rent of £184. 8s. 6d., together with £7. 1s. 6d. for tithe payable half-yearly, and the landlord, after the passing of the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 109, distrained for half a year's rent due, viz. one-half of the foregoing rent and tithe, minus one-eighth of the latter, and in an action of replevin avowed for the full amount of the said one-half year's rent and tithe without deducting the one-eighth. Held to be no variance. Burke v. Dignam, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 368, C. P.

Commission to examine Witnesses.—A commission was issued, not being able to attend before a jury, to examine witnesses under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 69, for the trial of an issue out of Chancery, but the examination was directed to be taken viâ voce. McLain v. Enery, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 268, Q. B.

The proper period to apply for a commission to examine witnesses abroad under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 66, is after issue joined. McCanes v. Vance, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 115, Ex.

Order for commission to examine witnesses out of the jurisdiction. Malley v. O'Malley, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 154, C. P.

The costs of a commission to examine witnesses under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, are in general costs in the cause, and will not be given against the party applying for it. Corporation of Dublin v. Stephens, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 265, Ex.

A commissioner residing near the witness to be examined prima facie is the proper person to be appointed. Ib.

On an application for a commission to examine witnesses by the plaintiff, the court refused to put him under terms to pay the costs of a former withdrawal of notice of trial, the defendant having neglected to enter the rule to stay proceedings till the costs were paid. Ib.

The costs of a commission to examine witnesses are always costs in the cause. If the defendant apply for the commission, the plaintiff is entitled to the costs of the motion. Harris v. Good, 1 Ir. Jur. 216, Ex.

A defendant is entitled to the costs of a commission to examine witnesses, though the witness examined was not produced, or his depositions read, the plaintiff by his order not having provided for that contingency. Kemmis v. Macklin, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 7, C. P.; S. C. Bl. D. & O. 222.

Expenses of Witnesses.—The application for the expenses of a witness under the 54 G. R. is a chamber motion, and cannot be moved before the full court. Shaw v. Belcher, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 332, C. P.

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.—

Generally.—In the case of a judgment entered by warrant of attorney on a bond conditioned for payment of a sum of money by instalments, the court will not allow execution to issue for any more than the instalments which have become due at the time of the application. Rigley v. Birch, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 14, C. P.

The court would not allow execution to be issued on a judgment collateral to secure an annuity which was more than twenty years old, and no payment or acknowledgment, although it had been revived in the meantime, the defendant being resident in America, and having no property in this country. Kelly v. Clarke, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 403, C. P.

The assignee of a judgment entered within a year may issue execution without a scire facias. Kane v. Bridgeman, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 222, Q. B.

A plaintiff having obtained judgment with a stay of execution until a certain day, is entitled to issue his execution on that day, if the money be not paid. Rogers v. Davis, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 399, Q. B.

A judgment creditor who had obtained the sequestration of a benefice, is entitled to be paid the fruits of his execution, in priority to the claim of the debtor's successor in the benefice, for the value of dilapidation, found under a commission of dilapidation. Casey v. Horner, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 221, Q. B.

A plaintiff cannot act upon two concurrent writs of ca. sa. and fi. fa. at the same time. Where a ca. sa. and fi. fa. having issued together, a small sum only was levied under the former, and before returning the fi. fa. the defendant was taken under the ca. sa. the court discharged her out of custody. Fennell v. Dempsey, 1 Ir. Jur. 64, Q. B.

Ca. Sa.—A defendant who has been arrested under a capias ad satisfaciendum, will be discharged from custody, the endorsement on the writ not being pursuant to the 43rd general rule. Hunter v. Reddy, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 106, Q. B.

The defendant was arrested in October, and by mistake made his application for his discharge under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, in Michaelmas Term, which failed. Held that he was not guilty of such laches as would deprive him of the benefit of the informality of the non-endorsement of the writ, as required by the 43rd general rule. Harrison v. Hanley, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 137, C. P.

The defendant was arrested in July, 1838, under a capias ad respondendum, and was detained until November, 1838. An application by the defendant on the 16th January, 1841, to be discharged, there being no endorsement, pursuant to the 43rd general rule, was discharged on the ground of laches. Murphy v. Prendergast, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 216, Q. B.

A ca. sa. with the abode and addition, or other description of the defendant, in compliance with the 43rd rule is irregular. Murdock v. Gregg, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 559, Ex.

The defendant was arrested in December; he became aware of the irregularity on the 10th of March, when the Barons were on circuit. A chamber motion on the return of the Chief Baron was directed to stand till term. Held not to be too late. Ib.

Elegit.—A return to an elegit, stating that the sheriff has delivered a moiety of the lands by "metes and bounds." Held to be a sufficient return. Nerney v. Walker, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 39, Ex.

Where an elegit executed under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, extending all the lands of the creditor, Held that the sheriff's return to the inquisition is the period of the commencement of the elegit creditor's title, and that a return, dated the 13th February, 1841, was an execution executed more than two months before the issuing of a commission on the 17th of May, 1841. O'Brien v. Bernard, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 6, Q. B.

Accounting.—In directing an account to be taken of the receipts of a creditor in possession, the court will order an account of what, without wilful default, might have been recovered. Leary v. Quarry, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 176, C. P.

The court will set aside an irregular execution, though the defendant be guilty of laches, if the proceedings be founded upon a parliamentary appearance. Tilly v. Newman, Bl. D. & O. 240.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

- I. GENERALLY.
- II. RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.
- III. ADMINISTRATION OF ASSETS.

I. GENERALLY.

To enable a personal representative to satisfy a judgment probate or letters of administration must be obtained from the Prerogative Court, though the judgment has been paid off in the life-time of the co-tenant. Lowry v. Walker, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 127, Ex.

Quere, is an executor or administrator entitled to search for judgments against his testator or intestate. In re Bagot, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 295.

Where administration is not granted to the plaintiff, but to the party through whom he derives, it is not necessary in a scire facias to make proof of the letters of administration, or set out the particulars thereof. Barry v. Hoare, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 97, Q.B.

The widow of an intestate was entitled to an undivided moiety of a leasehold property of her husband. Held, that having taken out administration she thereby acquired a legal estate in that moiety. Casey v. Dearing, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 183, Q. B.

Held, that express assent, on the widow's part, to take that moiety was not necessary. Ib.

II. RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

Actions by and against.—Covenant for rent against the administrator of a lessee for years. The declaration stated "all the estate, &c. term of years to come and unexpired, property, profit, &c. in the said premises by assignment thereof, came to and vested in the defendant, who thereupon then and there entered into and upon all and singular the said premises, and was thereof possessed from thence hitherto." The defendant pleaded, 1st. non est factum; 2nd. that the estate did not vest modo et forma. On this plea issue was joined; there were seven other pleas on which no question was raised. To support this issue the plaintiff gave in evidence the lease, and the letters of administration of the goods of the lessee granted to the defendant. The judge told the jury to find for the defendant, unless they were of opinion he was assignee, otherwise than as administrator; verdict for the defendant. On exceptions to this charge, Held, that proof of the letters of administration, without proof of entry by the administrator, sustained the issue. Green v. Listowel, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 384, Ex.

To a declaration in assumpsit against an administratrix the defendant pleaded that by a certain indenture of lease C. demised to the intestate certain lands at a yearly rent; "that the intestate covenanted for the payment of the rent, and that at the death of the intestate there was due and owing as and for the rent reserved a large sum of money, viz. the sum of £100, and which said sum is still in arrear and unpaid;" that she had fully administered the goods of the intestate, except goods to the value of five shillings, which were not sufficient to pay the debt due to C. on foot of the indenture. Replication that the defendant had goods of the intestate to be administered of the value of the damages in the declaration, over and beyond the goods in the plea mentioned. Held, that upon this pleading it was not admitted by the plaintiff as a fact to go to the jury that the precise sum of £100 was due and owing to C. for the rent reserved by the lease. Duane v. Walsh, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 243, Ex.

On the death of the lessee for life the heir at law took possession of premises demised to the lessee, and the rent having become due after the death of the lessee the executors of the lessee were compelled to pay it to the lessor. Held, that the heir at law was liable in an action for the money so paid by him. Kirkwood v. Burke, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 387, Q. B.

Held, that the executor was not bound to sue in his representative capacity. Ib.

A landlord distrained, and died without appointing an executor; neither a detention of that distress nor a new distress by a person who subsequently took out administration will sustain an avowry subsequent to the grant of the letters of administration. Rogers v. Dejoncourt, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 482, Q.B.; S. C. 8 Ir. L. Rep. 450, Ex. Ch.

To a declaration in indebitatus assumpsit against an administratrix, containing counts for use and occupation. Plea, that before she had any notice of the demand, and before she had any notice of the making of the said promises, she had fully administered. Held bad, as tendering an immaterial issue. Commissioners of Education v. Loughnan, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 167, Q. B.

In an action against one of three executors on a covenant of the testator, Held, that the inventory taken before probate was evidence to charge him with the assets therein specified. Rowan v. Jebb, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 216; S. C. Bl. D. & O. 51, N. P., Q. B. [Per Blackburne, C. J.]

III. ADMINISTRATION OF ASSETS.

Generally.—A. died having two accommodation acceptances of B.'s outstanding, and which were not due till after the death of A. The executor de son tort to A. took up these bills passing his own draft on another person in lieu of them, and which B. took in satisfaction of the debt. Held, that the passing of these securities by the executor was a discharge of the assets to that amount, and so far a due administration of the assets. Carrigan v. Muldowney, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 254, Q. B.; S. C. 1 J. S. 550.

FATHER.

Liability to provide for child.—A father is not under any legal obligation to provide for the support of his child, and to make him liable for necessities supplied for the maintenance of the child, there must be a contract expressed or implied, nor will the fact that the father has permitted the child to live with the mother while she lived apart from him, be any evidence that she is an agent of the father, or that she has any authority from him to contract debts for the maintenance of the child, where he disputes the legitimacy of such child. *Day v. GRAND JURY.

I. ASSESSMENTS.

II. JURORS.

I. ASSESSMENTS.

Where by local Acts (58 Geo. 3, c. 2, and 55 Geo. 3, c. 82,) certain premises were exempted from Grand Jury assessments, and the general Grand Jury Act directed in general terms that the levy of all grand jury assessments should be under it without exempting any particular property or persons, and did not notice these local Acts. Held, that the latter Act repealed them. Jones v. Hayes, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 341, Q. B.

Appointment of Applotters.—Where it appeared that a meeting was called for the purpose of appointing new applotters under the late Grand Jury Act, (6 & 7 W. 4, c. 116,) and it was sworn that the proceedings would not be carried on in consequence of the tumult occasioned by persons who deponent believed acted in this manner to prevent such appointment, and the time had nearly expired within which the applotment should be made under the terms of the Act, an absolute order for a mandamus was granted. Reg. v. Clendinning, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 350, Q. B.

Presentments.—A presentment was passed in Easter Term, 1839, and two traverses taken by the same person, one for inutility, and the other for damages. The court, in the Michaelmas Term following, on a motion to quash the presentment, refused to entertain objections as to the insufficiency of the affidavit, and estimate upon which the presentment was founded. Reg. v. M'Kay, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 16, Q. B.; S. C., 1 J. & S. 672.

Held, that the presentment being expressed to be made upon condition, that a certain sum would be advanced by the Board of Public Works and Mr. L., did not render the presentment void. Ib.

An Act of Parliament, after providing for the appointment of medical officers to the Dublin goals by the grand jury, directs—"That it shall, and may be lawful for the grand jury aforesaid, at every presenting term, after such appointment, to present a reasonable sum, to be as a salary for such physician." Held, that the grand jury were the proper judges of the reasonableness of the sum to be given, and where it appeared, that although for several years the surgeon and physician had been receiving £400 a year, and their duties had greatly increased since that sum had been first allowed, and the grand jury reduced the salary to £300 a year, the court refused to alter the warrant. In re Harty and Read, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 312, Q. B.

Semble, the court has jurisdiction to interfere and alter the warrant, not only where the sum presented would be illusory, but when that sum would be a denial of justice. Ib.

A presentment for enlarging a goal was made at a presenting sessions, under the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 116, and was subsequently approved of by the grand jury at the ensuing assizes. Held, that such presentment did not come within the terms of the 27th and 28th sections of that Act, and that if it had been approved of by the grand jury at the assizes, it was not necessary that it should again be laid before the magistrates and cess-payers, at the sessions, for their approval. In re presentment, Grand Jury of Fermanagh, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 394, Q. B.

The coroner of a county gave orders to two medical men, one for £4 10s., and the other for £2 10s. The treasurer of the grand jury paid the former, but refused to present the latter. The court would not give any direction to, or make any order upon the grand jury, in respect to the sum of £2 10s. In re Thornhill, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 162, Q. B.

The Court of Queen's Bench has not power to direct a presentment for the salaries of the officers named in schedule 15, to the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 106, until their duties be performed. In re Surveyors of the County of Dublin, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 189, Q. B.

A presentment cannot be made for compensation to the owners of property for malicious injuries done thereto, the statutes awarding compensation not extending to the city of Dublin. In re Miller, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 306, Q. B.

II. JURORS.

A challenge does not lie to a grand juror. Ex parte Nowlan, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 7, Q. B.

The coroner of the county of the city of Dublin is not disqualified at common law, or by statute, from serving upon grand juries for the county of the city of Dublin. Ib.

Semble, the court has jurisdiction to set aside an incompetent person when called upon the grand jury panel. Ib.

Plea in abatement, that A., one of the grand jury who found the indictment, was not an inhabitant, or resident, or freeman, or burgess, of the city of Dublin, or possessed of, or entitled to, any lands, &c., or any rateable property. Held, that the plea not having negatived every qualification, the court would presume him qualified. Reg. v. Duffy, 1 Ir. Jur. 81, Com. C.

GRANT.

The grant of a ferry by the Crown is a valid grant, though given after Magna Charta. Hemp-hill v. McKenna, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 43, Q. B.

The right of lessees deriving under such grant is not limited, as by a direct mathematical line, from one point to another, but extends to any part of the river within the specific limits, and the lessees may change the localities of transit within those limits. Ib.

GUARANTEE—See INDEMNITY.

A. sued out a fi. fa. against B., both C. and D., who had been in the suit, bail at bar for B., induced A. to take the draft of E., (whose solvency was questionable,) upon B., and give up the execution, they giving A. a guarantee for the payment of the bill. The bill was due on the 23d of July, and was not presented till the 26th, but, subsequently, one of the guarantee's promised to have it settled. Held, that C. and D. were liable to A. upon the guarantee, notwithstanding the laches of A. Sinclair v. Barnett, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 46, Q. B.

Held, that when inadmissible evidence was allowed to be given, though in the opinion of the judge it could not influence the jury, the court will not give costs against a party seeking a new trial on that ground. Ib.

A guarantee as follows—"Cork, 31st January, 1837,—Sirs, I will be accountable to you for payment, within six months of the said order forwarded by my son, R. A. H., and also for payment, within three months, of 600 barrels of vetches, to be forwarded by the first steamer.—I am, &c., S. H. To Messrs N. and Co." In an action by N. and Co. against S. H., Held, that the consideration sufficiently appeared on the face of this guarantee. Nash and Co. v. La Land, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 190, Q. B.

Held, that this guarantee was not entire, and although the vetches were never forwarded, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the price of the seed which had been forwarded. Ib. [See Adams v. Hartland, 2 J. & S. 155.]

Declaration in assumpsit, stating that the plaintiff, at the request of A. and B., had supplied gas, to the hotel of H., to the value of £32. That A. and B. had accounted with the plaintiff of, and concerning the gas so supplied, and upon such accounting, were found to be indebted to the plaintiffs in £32, to be paid on request. That the defendant was the receiver of the hotel, and of the monies and profits arising therein, for the use of A. and B.; and in consideration that plaintiffs, at the request of defendant, would forbear, and give time to A. and B. for the payment of the said sum, for the space of six months, he, the defendant, by a certain note, or memorandum in writing, signed by him, as the receiver of the hotel, and, with the sanction of A. and B., promised the plaintiffs to pay them the £32, within the space of six months. Averment, that the plaintiffs forbore, and gave time, until the expiration of the six months; but that the defendant did not perform his promise. Plea, that the promise of defendant was a promise to answer for the debt of other persons, (A. and

B.) and contained in the said note in writing, in the declaration mentioned, and in the words and figures following—"I hereby undertake, as the receiver of the hotel of H., and with the sanction of A. and B., that the sum of £32, due to the Hibernian Gas Company, (the plaintiffs,) for gas supplied to the above concern, shall be paid within six months, from the date hereof—and, I also undertake, that the future supply of gas, to the above concern, shall be discharged by me as it may become due, until you have further notice." Held, on demurrer, that a consideration of forbearance to sue, sufficiently appeared on the face of the instrument to support the declaration. Hibernian Gas Company v. Parry, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 453, Ex.

The plaintiff having distrained the goods of his tenant, the defendant undertook to pay the amount of the rent, in consideration of the discontinuance of the distress; and the distress having been thereupon withdrawn, and the goods left in the hands of the tenant. Held, that the promise of the defendant was a collateral promise, and that the absence of an averment of default in the principal, in one count, and of a special request in the other, in which the promise to pay was stated to have been upon request, were fatal objections on special demurrer. Bull v. Collier, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 107, C. P.

Assumpsit upon a guarantee, the declaration stated, that in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, would give to one E. P. credit, to the amount of £400, the defendant promised to guarantee them from any loss in their dealings with the said E. P., to the amount of £400. Averment, that the plaintiff confiding did give credit to the amount of £300, in certain dealings between them and the said E. P., but that he, the said E. P., did not pay the same. Held, on special demurrer, first, the plaintiffs were entitled to sue on the guarantee, though they had not given E. P. credit to the full amount of the £400; and secondly, that the mode of giving credit was sufficiently stated in the declaration. Lindsay v. Parkinson, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 124, Ex.

Action on a guarantee. The first count stated, that H. P. was sheriff of the county T., and the plaintiff his under sheriff; that Lord K. had distrained the goods of P. H. for rent, and that a Chancery Replevin had issued, directed to the said sheriff; that thereupon the plaintiff, as under sheriff, required the said P. H., with two solvent sureties, to execute the replevin bond; that P. H. having tendered certain parties as sureties, the plaintiff refused to accept of them, and that the defendant to induce him to do so, sent him the following guarantee—"Sirs, I request that you will take M. H., and P. K., as sureties with the plaintiff, in the replevin bond, in this cause, and grant a special warrant thereon, directed to T. H., and J. H., or either of them, or their assistants, and in consideration of your so doing, I hereby undertake, and guarantee, that the said sureties are severally solvent persons, and good marks for the sums for which they become bail, and accountable to you in said bond; and in case they, or either of them, should turn out not to be so, I hereby undertake to indemnify, and save you harmless, of, from, and against all losses, damages, expenses, and costs, which can, shall, or may, arise unto you, or either of you, in consequence of taking said persons as sureties, in said replevin bond, James Barry.—To T. P. H., High Sheriff, E. L. C., the Sub-Sheriff of the County of T.” The declaration stated, that the plaintiff, relying on said undertaking, took the said parties as sureties, who executed the usual bond; and it was averred, that the said P. H. did not return the said goods, and that an assignment of the bond was made to Lord K., and that the sureties being insolvent, the plaintiff was obliged to pay to Lord K. the sum of £300, &c. There were two other counts; in the second there was an averment of the delivery of the special warrant. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff, and a judgment entered up generally, Held, that the action was rightly brought by the plaintiff alone, without the high sheriff, as a co-plaintiff. Cambie v. Barry, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 34, Q. B.; S. C., 6 Ir. L. Rep. 49, Ex. Ch.

Held, that the first count was bad for omitting the averment of the granting of a special warrant to the parties named in the guarantee, and the defect not being such as could be cured by verdict, that a venire de novo should issue. Ib. [Dissentientibus, Lefroy, B., Perrin, J., Crampton, J., and Burton, J.]

The plaintiff distrained the goods of his tenant, and, in consideration that he would withdraw the distress, the defendant undertook by parol to pay the amount of rent due; the distress was thereupon withdrawn, and the goods left in the possession of the tenant. Held, that this was a collateral undertaking to pay the debt of another, and consequently void, not being in writing. Fennell v. Malcahy, 8 Ir. L. L. Rep. 434, Ex.

Declaration in assumpsit charged that, in consideration that the plaintiff would appoint J. B. to be one of their agents, the defendant undertook, and promised the plaintiffs, that J. B. would account from time to time for all sums of money he should receive for the plaintiffs, according to the terms and regulations contained in the instructions which he might from time to time receive from them. Averment, that J. B. received £500, and did not account for the same according to the instructions received by him. Breach, that the defendant did not pay the £500, or indemnify the plaintiffs against the loss they sustained by the default of J. B. On demurrer to the declaration, Held, that the instructions given to J. B. formed part of the plaintiff's evidence, and that the counts omitting them, were properly framed. Agricultural Cattle Insurance Company v. Cupen, 1 Ir. Jur. 354, Q. B.

Held, also, that the words in the declaration, “although, then, and there, requested so to do,” constituted a sufficient averment, a request being made, and of the time and place at which the request was made. Ib.

HABEAS CORPUS.—See REVENUE.

To obtain an attachment against a party for not obeying a writ of habeas corpus, if the writ be not personally served the affidavit must state that a servant or agent of the party, at the house where the person is detained to whom the writ is directed, was served. In re Wildridge, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 1, Q. B.

A. was arrested under a writ of ca. sa. for £336 out of the Court of Common Pleas, and a detainer being subsequently issued out of the Queen's Bench for a sum of £23. A habeas corpus issued out of the Queen's Bench to remove A. from the gaol of Carrickfergus, where he was in custody. The fact of the prisoner having been arrested upon the writ out of the Court of Common Pleas was not disclosed upon the obtaining of the writ of habeas corpus. The Court of Queen's Bench ordered the prisoner to be committed to the custody of the Marshal under both writs to prevent his discharge without an order from each court. Anonymous, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 241, Q. B.

On a motion for a conditional order for a writ of habeas corpus to remove children from the custody of one of the parents, and the circumstances which created the necessity for the writ, being domestic differences, which it was stated would be distressing to all parties, if made public. The court directed the affidavits to be handed in for their perusal, and did not require them to be stated at the bar. Anonymous, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 160 Q. B.

Return.—The return to a habeas corpus directed to the governor of the Richmond Penitentiary stated “that the prisoner was received into his custody under sentence of the Court of Oyer and Terminer, on the 14th of June, 1841, and that the said sentence of transportation was on the 7th of July, 1841, commuted to two years imprisonment, with one week solitary confinement in each alternate week.” Held to be a sufficient return. Reg. v. Feary, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 437, Q. B.

Semble, after the return is made and filed, the court can amend it. Ib.

Semble, the court are not bound by the return, but will look to the original sentence. Ib.

Where a habeas corpus is issued on behalf of a prisoner confined under a criminal charge, notice should be given to the Attorney General of the day on which the prisoner will be brought up under the habeas corpus. Ib.

To a habeas corpus directed to the Marshal of the Four Courts Marshalsea, a return setting forth a writ of attachment from the Court of Chancery to the sheriff of the City of Dublin, commanding him to attach H. in order to answer as well touching a contempt, as such matters as should be objected against him, which writ was marked for the levying of certain monies; and also setting forth the sheriff's warrant to his special bailiff for the arrest of H., and alleging that the arrest was made in pursuance of the writ and after the delivery thereof, and after the issuing of the warrant, and before the return of the writ, and after the passing of the 5 & 6 Vic. c. 95, and also setting forth the return of the writ, and certifying that after the arrest the sheriff did in due form of law commit H. to the Four Courts Marshalsea, there to remain in safe custody until he should pay the said monies marked at the foot of the writ, or until he should be otherwise discharged by due course of law, since which committal the marshal, in and on behalf of the sheriff, and by his command detained H. in custody under the authority of the writ. Held to be a good return though not averring that the committal was in writing. Ex parte Higgins, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 414, C. P.

Proceedings by, and against.—Process against husband and wife, a separate appearance for the latter was set aside, with costs to be paid by the attorney who entered it. Poe v. Jones, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 379, Ex.

A motion to set aside a judgment entered on a bond and warrant of attorney executed by a married woman, refused under the circumstances of the case, the application not having been made in proper time, and the conduct of the applicant not having been such as to entitle her to relief upon motion. Roddy v. Clements, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 229, Ex.; S. C., 1 J. & C. 170.

A motion on behalf of the wife, for leave to enter judgment in the name of the trustees in a marriage settlement, upon a bond and warrant of the husband, passed for the amount of the wife's property, and it appeared that the trustees refused to enter judgment, that one of them had issued an attachment against the goods of the obligor, and that the sum secured on the bond would be lost; the trustees having received no specific notice of this motion, and not consenting, the court refused the application. Campion v. Campion, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 13, Q. B.

Judgment may be entered against husband and wife, on a bond and warrant of the wife, given before marriage. Copperthwaits v. Tisdall, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 139, C. P.

In action against husband and wife for a personal tort committed by the wife, who was living apart from her husband, a joint appearance must be entered. White v. Seaver, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 465, Q. B.

A married woman sued as the drawer of certain bills of exchange, suffered judgment to go by default, and was taken in execution, the court, upon motion, directed her to be discharged, she having practised no deception by holding herself out as a feme sole, and that the plaintiff was aware of her coverture when he took the bills. Pepper v. Kelly, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 530, Ex.

If a husband turn his wife out of doors, he is liable for necessaries supplied for her support. The fact of her being allowed a sum for maintenance by her father is no defence to such an action, it not appearing her father was bound to give it.

Whitmore v. Gale, Bl. D. & O. 199, N. P., Q. B. [Per Blackburne, C. J.]

A notice from a husband, cautioning a party not to give credit to his wife, should expressly direct attention to the facts relied on. That he was a person of small income, and that his wife had a separate allowance. Id.

A husband is not liable for goods furnished to the wife—having a separate property—without his knowledge, privity, or assent. Groves v. Whitestone, Bl. D. & O. 169, N. P., Ex. [Per Pigot, C. B.]

The agency of the wife may be extended beyond mere household transactions, if the husband subsequently assent to them. Id. [See Curwen v. Maguire, 1 H. & J. 178.]

In an action for the recovery of necessaries supplied by the plaintiff to the defendant's wife during her separation from her husband, which was alleged to have been caused by the cruelty of her husband, or by his causeless desertion and abandonment of her. Held, that a sentence of an ecclesiastical court—in a suit by the wife for a divorce, and for alimony, grounded upon the husband's alleged cruelty, and to which the husband set up, as a defence, the adultery of the wife, dismissing the suit—was admissible in evidence. Day v. Spread, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 247, Q. B.

Such a suit is not res inter alios acta. Id.

Money belonging to a minor having been lent on a judgment, in which the plaintiff was described as a minor, and to have appeared by attorney, the court would not permit the minor, on receiving of the amount, to execute a power of attorney, to satisfy it upon the roll by her father, as her guardian or next friend. *McCullagh v. A parliamentary appearance, entered in the name of a defendant, who was an infant, will be set aside for irregularity. Scott v. Magee, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 484, Q. B.

Walsh*, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 217, Q. B.

In an action by an infant suing by his next friend, the omission of the words, "admitted by leave of the court for that purpose." Held bad, on special demurrer. Kihikelly v. Kelly, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 30, Q. B.

Lands were devised to an infant, who, with his mother, continued in possession of the premises from the time of the testator's death. The trustees, nominated in the will, brought an ejectment against the mother, laying demises in their own name, and that of the minor, the court, under the circumstances, set aside the demise laid in the minor's name, and gave him liberty to take defence to the ejectment by his mother and guardian. Foley v. Foley, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 235, Q. B.

An assignee is liable on a covenant for non-payment of rent, though at the time of the rent accruing due he was an infant, if he continue in the enjoyment of the land after he came of age. A declaration averring, that the defendant continued in possession until the action was brought, to which declaration infancy was pleaded, sufficiently implies that the assignee entered after assignment. Mahon v. O'Farrell, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 527, Q. B.

Where the attorney took defence to an action against an infant, before a guardian had been appointed for such infant, the court will hold him liable for the costs incurred by the opposite party in setting aside the defence. Walker v. Dwyer, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 364, Q. B.

Contracts by.—Debt for railway calls having been brought against an infant shareholder, he pleaded infancy at the time "of the making of the contract in the declaration mentioned." Held, on special demurrer, that inasmuch as his individual liability might, in one particular case, have arisen independently of contract, the plea was in its present form no answer to the action. *Midland G. The importance of the facts is not of itself sufficient reason for having a writ of inquiry for damages sped before a judge instead of the sheriff, when the venue is laid in Dublin. And the plaintiff declining to accede to the suggestion of the court—that the inquiry should be taken before a judge of assize—the motion was refused with costs. Naghten v. Harrison, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 286, C. P.

Judgment was entered on a parliamentary appearance, and a writ of inquiry sped, the notice of which was irregular, being entitled in the wrong court, the writ of inquiry was set aside without costs, and the defendant had leave to plead, on payment of the costs of entering the parliamentary appearance. *Stretch v. A writ of inquiry was directed to be sped before a judge at Nisi Prius, the writ was returnable upon the 27th of November, and was not executed till the 4th of December, but the sittings at Nisi Prius commenced on the 26th of November. Actions by.—An action of trespass, for breaking and entering plaintiff's house, and seizing his furniture, &c., may be maintained by a person who subsequently to such trespass, but, before the commencement of the action, has become insolvent, and executed the usual assignment to the provisional assignee, as the plaintiff is entitled to recover compensation for the injury sustained, during the interval between the committing of the trespass and the execution of the assignment, and the right of action to that extent does not pass, under the assignment, to the provisional assignee. Aspenall v. Arrott, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 261, Ex.; S. C., 1 J. & C. 145.

In Easter Term 1840, the plaintiff sued the defendant in assumpsit upon a special contract. Plea set after the filing of the declaration, the plaintiff being a prisoner filed his petition, as an insolvent debtor, praying to be discharged pursuant to the statutes for the relief of insolvent debtors, and conveyed and assigned all his interest in his real and personal property to the provisional assignee, that said petition was not dismissed, and that said indenture was in full force and effect. Replication, that after he was arrested and executed the said assignment, and before the said plea was filed, he settled the debt for which he had been arrested and imprisoned with the consent of his detaining creditor, and did not obtain his discharge from prison by virtue of any order or adjudication of said court, whereby he jurisdiction of the said court over the said matter became determined, and the said assignment became inoperative and void. Held upon general demurrer that this replication was bad, the right to sue being vested in the provisional assignee. Woods v. Power, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 163, Q. B.

A warrant of attorney was executed by an insolvent, pursuant to the 1 & 2 Geo. 4 c. 59 s. 28 authorizing the entry of a judgment against himself. The court allowed judgment to be entered under an order of the Insolvent Court, though more than twenty years have elapsed since the warrant had been executed. Campbell v. Regan, 8 Ir. L. Actions by and against the assignees.—The provisions of the 3 Geo. 4 c. 124, s. 16 which vest the estate of the insolvent in a new assignee, by relation to the time of the first assignment are not contained in the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 107. McKeon v. Smith, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 231, C. P.

A general avowry by an assignee of an insolvent for rent which had accrued due to a former assignee who had died, is bad. Id.

The assignment of a leasehold interest to the assignee of an insolvent is evidence of acceptance till be contrary be proved. Jack v. Gannon, Bl. D. & O. 157, N. P. [Per Pigot, C. B.]

The sheriff levied under an execution on a judgment, on bond and warrant, the warrant not having been filed within twenty-one days pursuant to the provisions of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105 s. 13, and paid over the amount levied to the assignees of the debtor, who had filed his petition in the Insolvent Court Held, that though this petition was afterwards dismissed on the application of the insolvent, such dismissal did not divest the right of the assignee so as to give a right to the execution creditor to recover the amount of the levy in an action for money, had and received against the sheriff. Madden v. Ball, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 104, C. P.

Title of assignee under vesting order.—The sheriff seized, on the 23rd of April, under a writ of fi. fa. founded on a judgment, on a bond and warrant of attorney. A. B. the insolvent was arrested at his own request, at the suit of another creditor before he sale, which took place on the 23rd of May. On the 15th of June he presented his schedule to the Insolvent Court; on the following day the order was made vesting his property in the plaintiffs. In an action of trover against the sheriff by the assignee. Held, that the sheriff was not liable under the 28 section of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 107, and that the vesting order had no relation to the date of the arrest. Lindsay v. Going 1 Ir. Jur. 278, Ex. Ch.

INTEREST—See JUDGMENT (REVIVAL OF.) EVIDENCE.

INTERPLEADER.

Practices.—A sub-sheriff having made a levy under a writ of fi. fa. was allowed under the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 64, to lodge in the court the monies levied, deducting therefrom the costs of the motion, he having been served with notices by claimants calling upon him on pain of personal responsibility not to pay over to the plaintiff those monies. Burke v. Darcy, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 287, C. P.

An officer of an inferior court, not in a position to file a bill before the passing of the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 64, cannot obtain an order for parties to interplead under its provisions. Moylan v. Rogers, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 266, C. P., S. C. Bl. D. & O. 244.

The plaintiff must have notice of a motion by the sheriff for a rule to interplead. — v. — Bl. D. & O. 264, Ex.

The sheriff is bound to apply for an order under the Interpleader Act, at the earliest possible opportunity after seizure and notice of claim. Wrisson v. Purcell, Bl. D. & O. 265, Ex.

The sheriff must come to the court as early as possible, and cannot make a supplemental affidavit to account for his delay. Wrigby v. Bergin, Bl. D. & O. 284, Ex.

When a party by his own act has been placed in a position to be sued, he cannot call on the court for relief under the Interpleader Act, 9 & 10 Vic. c. 64. Horner v. Wilcocks, 1 Ir. Jur. 186, Q. B.

What a sufficient claim.—The mere fact of claims being made to a levy in the hands of the sheriff, does not entitle him to the interference of the court within the provisions of the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 64 s. 6. Mahon v. Moyna, Bl. D. & O. 98, Ex.

Sheriff's fees and costs.—In the case of a disputed claim to goods seized under a fi. fa. the sheriff is entitled to his poundage and expenses of keeping the goods, but is not entitled to the costs of an interpleader motion under the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 64. Marquis of Lansdowne v. Bradshaw, Bl. D. & O. 173, Q. B.

The sheriff is not entitled to the costs of a rule to interplead although the claimant abandons his claim. Ball v. Bruen, Bl. D. & O. 283, Ex.

The court will allow the sheriff the costs of an application under the Interpleader Act, unless there has been gross neglect on the part of the other parties, but when an execution creditor waives in court his claim upon the goods seized, being already apprized by affidavit of the justice of the other party's demand, the court will allow the sheriff and the claimant the costs of their attendance on that day, against the execution creditor. Scully v. Figgis, 1 Ir. Jur. 16, Ex.

When the sheriff has used due diligence, the court will direct the costs of the rule to interplead, and of attendance on the motion to be paid by the party who shall fail on the issue. Fitzgerald v. Coates, 1 Ir. Jur. 64, Ex.

Where after the sheriff has obtained the common interpleader rule, the claimant and execution creditor enter a compromise whereby the former abandons a portion of his claim, the claimant was directed to pay the sheriff all the costs incurred. Luscombe v. Blake, 1 Ir. Jur. 248, Ex.

Costs of issue.—Where a sheriff made a seizure of sheep under a fi. fa., and an adverse claim being set up, applied for relief under the Interpleader Act, the court directed an issue, and directed the sheriff to retain the sheep until the determination of the trial. A verdict having passed for the claimant, he brought an action against the sheriff for injury alleged to be sustained by the seizure of the sheep, the court stayed this action and referred it to the Master, to ascertain whether any deterioration was caused to the sheep by the neglect of the sheriff; to take an account of the sheriff's expenses, and to strike a ballance between the charges of the sheriff and such loss. The court directed the costs of the issue to be paid to the claimant by the execution creditor. Butler v. Lloyd, 1 Ir. Jur. 37, Q. B.

A judge in chamber has no jurisdiction to set aside a demurrer, though it should appear frivolous, and merely filed for the purpose of delay. Scully v. O'Brien, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 379, Q. B. [See Smee-ton v. Collier, 1 Ex. Rep. 457; 5 Dow. & L. 184; 17 L. Jou. N. S. 57, C. P.]

Semble, that the Court of Common Pleas has jurisdiction to entertain writs of error from inferior courts. Harkin v. Montgomery, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 471, C. P.

When the judges differ in opinion upon cases reserved, the opinion of the majority is not conclusively binding on every judge in all future cases. In re Larkin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 46, Ex.

The law courts, and Court of Exchequer Chamber in Ireland, have no jurisdiction from the 28 Geo. 3, c. 31, s. 1, and the 4 Geo. 3, c. 39, Ir., to pronounce any judgment, or order, they would not have pronounced by common law before the passing of these statutes; and, therefore, the Exchequer Chamber has no power to select any particular portion of the evidence set forth in the bill of exceptions, not being the subject matter of an exception taken at the trial, and to affirm, or reverse, the judgment of the court below upon arguments built upon such portion of the evidence alone. Lord Trimbleston v. Kemmis, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 380, Dow. Proc.

Quere, can the court, under the provisions of 28 Geo. 3, c. 31, s. 1, direct judgment to be entered up, for the party taking a bill of exception, without awarding a venire de novo. Orr v. Stenson, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 2, Ex. Ch.

The origin of the jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer was the fiction of the quo minus. The 43 Geo. 3, c. 53, not only affects the mode of bringing parties before the court, it does more, it admits its jurisdiction to dispose of cases between subject and subject; the Legislature in effect has said that the fiction is no longer necessary. Knight v. Murray, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 237, Ex. [Per Pease-father, B.]

If the character of either plaintiff or defendant sufficiently appear on the face of the declaration, to found a jurisdiction as to him, that is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction in the action. Keele v. Wright, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 261, Ex.

The court will not summarily decide, upon motion, a question which will hereafter present itself for adjudication in an action pending between the parties to the motion, and founded upon the facts which have occasioned it. Molloy v. —, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 14, C. P.

The court above will review an order made by a judge in chamber, but the motion must be to vary or set aside the order granted by the judge. Cater v. Flattery, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 117, Q. B.

Jurisdiction over their Offices.—The court has not jurisdiction to pronounce any rule on an application made by a party who had held, and had been dismissed by the Chief Justice from the office of crier of the court, to be restored to the emoluments and duties of said office, alleging he had been illegally and improperly dismissed therefrom. In re Kennedy, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 217, C. P.

When an attorney obtains, from the opposite party, being an illiterate person, and under circumstances suspicious, though not actually fraudulent, a document purporting to be a disclaimer of his demand, and of his having authorized his attorney to bring the action, the court has a summary jurisdiction over its officer to order it to be given up. Tobin v. Gray, Bl. D. & O. 103, Ex.

An attorney brought actions in the names of several committee men of a railway company; judgments of non pros were entered by the defendants; before the actions were commenced one of the committee men had directed his name to be withdrawn from the committee. Held, that he was entitled to an indemnity from the attorney against the costs of these judgments. Mauney v. Pot. Kelly, Resp., Bl. D. & O. 175, Q. B.

JURY. (COMMON AND SPECIAL).—See GRAND JURY. CRIMINAL LAW.

I. COMMON JURY.
II. SPECIAL JURY.

When to be Summoned.—Challenge by the defendant to the array, because the jurors in this case, or any of them, were not summoned to serve upon the said jury six days before the day named; the plaintiff replied, that there was another distringas lodged with the sheriff, and that the jurors were summoned thereon six days, &c., and that they were the same jurors, named in the distringas, lodged in this case, and that they were in attendance ready to be sworn. Held, on demurrer to this replication, that the jury were summoned in sufficient time. Keogh v. Walker, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 210, C. P.

The defendant challenged the array, because six days before the first day of the Nisi Prius sittings the jurors empanelled were not, nor was any of them, nor any jury of the county of the city, &c., summoned to serve upon the jury for the trial of the issue in that cause, by virtue of any writ of venire facias, distringas, &c. Held, on demurrer, that the challenge was bad. Watters v. Hughes, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 362, Ex.

An issue being joined on a challenge to the array, on the ground that the jurors were not summoned six clear days before the date of the trial, Held, that the omission of a few jurors would not vitiate the panel. Taylor v. Gibney, Bl. D. & O. 85.

Held, that triers are not to presume that all the jurors who did not appear in court were summoned in time. Ib.

A challenge to the array will not be allowed where the plaintiff is not in default. Hartigan v. McCarthy, Bl. D. & O. 86, note.

The question decided in Gillespie v. Cumming, was only as to the default of the plaintiff. Ib.

Costs of Jury.—See COSTS.

II. SPECIAL JURY.

The cause had been tried by a special jury, and, upon a bill of exceptions having been taken, a venire de novo was awarded. The defendant brought down the cause by proviso. The distringas was in the common form, except that the words "proviso," were written under the officers name, and it was objected at the trial, first, that the distringas was informal and irregular; and, secondly, that the special jury, struck upon the first trial, was the proper jury to try the case, and not the common jury by which it had now been tried. Held, that the cause had been properly tried. Smith v. Nangle, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 296, Q. B.

The form of a rule for a special jury when obtained by defendant after notice of trial served. Woods v. Sandford, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 380, Ex.

A town councillor of the borough of Dublin is exempt, and disqualified from serving on a special jury summoned within the borough; and one of the special jurors having been challenged at the trial, on the ground of being a member of the town council of the borough of Dublin, the opposite party pleaded, that that jury was a special jury, "and that at the time of the striking of the jury aforesaid, and the arraying of the said panel, the said juror was a town councillor of the borough of Dublin, and that the same was well known to the said defendant at the time of the striking of the said jury, and arraying of said panel." Held, that the challenge was good, and the counter-plea no answer. O'Connell v. Mansfield, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 179, Ex. Ch. [Richards, B., dissentiente.]

Under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 91, it is the duty of the Recorder of Dublin annually to revise the lists of the jurors of the county of that city, and to cause a general list of jurors to be made out, and delivered to the clerk of the peace of the said city, for the purposes of the ensuing year. On motion for a new trial, on the ground that these general lists, from which were framed the juror's book, and the special jury list, were fraudulently dealt with, for the purpose of prejudicing the traversers in their defence. Held, that this was not a proper ground for a motion for a new trial. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 261, Q. B.; S. C. Armstrong and Trevor, 11 Cl. & Fin. 155, Dom. Proc.

A town councillor of the borough of Dublin is exempt from serving on any special jury summoned in trials in the superior courts, and the objection may be taken advantage of either before the officer at striking of the special jury, or by a challenge to the polls, when the juror comes to be sworn. Long v. Barrett, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 439, C. P.; S. C., 8 Ir. L. Rep. 331, Ex. Ch.

Sed quare, whether, if the objection be not taken before the officer, it can be taken advantage by way of challenge. Ib., 8 Ir. L. Rep. 331, Ex. Ch.

Tenancy at Will.—A tenant holding under a lease, containing a clause of forfeiture, omitted to perform the condition, but was allowed to remain thirteen years in possession after the forfeiture. Held, that the landlord having allowed a reasonable time to elapse after the forfeiture became complete, the tenant became at all events a tenant at will, which tenancy must be determined before the bringing of an ejectment. Johnson v. Russell, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 170, Q. B.

Leases.]—A lease to several, in the granting part, gave separate portions to the respective lessees at separate rents; but the habendum and covenants in the lease were joint. Held, that the lease was joint. Kennedy v. Hayes, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 186, Q. B.

In an action for the disturbance of a fishery, the plaintiff, in proof of his title, proved the execution of a lease, of the locus in quo to him, by a corporation, which lease, to be valid, required the consent of certain parties thereto, and recited that such consent had been obtained. Held, that such was sufficient proof of its validity, without actual proof of such consent, which the jury might presume, evidence to the contrary not having been given, and the onus probandi lying on the party who asserted the invalidity of the instrument. Gabbert v. Clancy, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 299, Q. B.

Over-holding Tenant.]—A tenant over-holding, after the expiration of a notice to quit by the landlord, is not liable to a distress for rent which became due subsequently, unless there has been an agreement for a new tenancy, or a renewal of the former one. Daly v. Colbert, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 355, C. P.

Rent.]—See DEBT. COVENANT. USE AND OCCUPATION. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. being possessed of certain premises for two terms of years, under separate leases, at the yearly rent of £12, and £16 respectively, assigned the said premises to B., "subject to the payment of the yearly rent of £44, and to the performances of the covenants" in the original leases. A. subsequently by deed reciting, that he was entitled to a profit rent of £16 per annum out of the premises in question, sold, and conveyed his interest thereon to C. Held, that there was a sufficient reservation of rent on the assignment from A. to B., and that C., as the assignee of the former, was entitled to maintain an action of debt against the latter, for the recovery of the arrears of the rent. Clarke v. Coughlan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 427, Ex.

Rent may be conveyed, severed from the reversion, so as to give the grantor an action of debt for the arrears. Ib.

Rent arising from the sale of the profit of the land, there being no tenancy, is not apportionable between the executors of the tenant for life and the remainder man. Dease v. O'Reilly, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 52, Q. B.

Double Rent.]—In debt for double rent, under the 15 Geo. 2, c. 8, s. 9, Ir., for not giving up possession pursuant to the tenant's notice to quit, the declaration must aver the notice to have been in writing. Farrel v. Donnelly, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 476, Ex.

Surrender.]—L., lessee, pur autre vie, assented to a new letting, by the landlord, of a part of the devised premises to M., who entered into possession. Held, that this was a valid surrender by act and operation of law, within the Statute of Frauds, (7 Wm. 3, c. 12, Ir.) of the interest of L., in the part demised to M. Lynch v. Lynch, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 131, Ex.

The doctrine of surrender by act and operation of law, as laid down in Thomas v. Cook, (2 B. & Al. 119,) in the case of a chattel, recognised and applied to a freehold. Ib.

Contracts of tenancy.]—A. being possessed of certain premises under a lease for thirty-one years still unexpired, the reversion in fee of which belonged to B. did by parol agreement on the 15th of March, 1837, permit and suffer B. to take possession of, and from thenceforth to occupy and use for the purpose of planting trees, a certain portion of the said demised premises upon the terms of the yearly rent reserved by the lease, being reduced by a certain sum agreed upon, and which said reduced yearly rent was for some time paid by A. to B. who gave receipts for the same. Held, overruling the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, (5 Ir. L. Rep. 287,) that this parol demise did not amount to a re-demise. Delap v. Leonard, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 473, Ex. Ch.

Defendant by parol agreement with the plaintiff took a portion of his land for grazing, the plaintiff undertaking to watch the cattle of the defendant, and reserving to himself the grazing of a horse. Held, that this was a mere contract for agistment, and the possession of the land did not thereby pass to the defendant. Mulligan v. Adams, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 132, Q. B.

Land was prepared and tilled by A. a tenant for life, and allotted by him, at a certain rate per acre, in small portions to his labourers for the purpose of planting potatoes, the labour being done at his expense; the potatoes were planted by the labourers and above ground when A. died, and the remainder man prevented the labourers from carrying off the crop until they had paid him the rate so agreed upon. Held, that the contract created by such holding was not a demise of the land, but a sale of the profit derivable therefrom. Dease v. O'Reilly, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 52.

Real actions.]—In replevin the plaintiff declared on a taking on the 9th of August, 1838, and the defendant avowed for five years arrears of rent, next before and ending on the 25th of March, 1836, due to the defendant by virtue of a demise theretofore made. To this avowry the plaintiff pleaded, amongst other pleas a plea of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4 c. 27 s. 42, to the whole amount of the arrears; the defendant demurred that the plea of the statute should have been confined to the period of the five years which were beyond the six. Demurrer overruled. Wilson v. Jackson, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 1, Q. B.

The 3 & 4 Wm. 4 c. 27, applies to conventional rents between landlord and tenant. Ib.

Quere, are arrears of rent reserved by indenture within the 42nd section of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4 c. 27. Armstrong v. Lloyd, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 70. C. P.

The 3 & 4 Wm. 4 c. 27 does not apply to claims for tithe composition as between the tithe claimant, and the owner of the land, but only to estates in tithe. The withholding tithe composition by the occupier of the land, is not the adverse possession intended by the 15th sect. of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4 c. 27. Lord Shannon v. Hudder, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 228.

If no rent be paid under an existing lease, containing an express clause of re-entry for the non-payment of the same, for upwards of 20 years, the landlord is barred by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, from recovering in an ejectment brought for the non-payment of the rent. Mannion v. Bingham, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 456, C. P.

Where an additional rent in the nature of a penal rent, was reserved by indenture of demise between landlord and tenant. Held, that such rent was not within the second section of the statute of limitations 3 & 4 Wm. 4 c. 27.) Daly v. Bloomfield, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 65, Q. B.

Semble, no rent reserved upon an indenture of demise between landlord and tenant is within that section. Ib.

An ejectment for non-payment of rent is maintainable during the continuance of the lease, though more than twenty years have elapsed since the last payment. Crosbie v. Sugrue, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 17, Q. B.

The 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 2, does not apply to rent received on a demise. Ib.

Ejectment on the title. The plaintiff produced and proved a lease of the premises, bearing date 769, and made by E. D. W. to J. A. "for and during the term of sixty-six years, provided the said E. D. W.'s lasted so long," but gave no evidence of the existence of the interest of E. D. W. in the premises. There was some evidence of a verbal negotiation between the defendant and the plaintiff for a new lease between 1835 and 1838 in which latter year the defendant got into possession. Held that notwithstanding proof of the death of the said E. D. W. in 1821, the jury were properly directed to find verdict for the plaintiff, and that as the lease must be taken to have expired in 1834 there was no ground for the operation of the statute of Limitations. Wilson v. Hendra, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 429. C. P.

If mines be excepted to the grantor in a lease his right and title is not barred or extinguished if he quit to work them for twenty years, such right remains in the grantor as if he had never executed the rent. McDonnell v. McKinty, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 514, Q. B.

Held, that an omission to work quarries granted was not a discontinuance within the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 3. Ib.

Held, that a use and possession of part of these quarries by the grantee of the lands would not justify a presumption of the possession of the whole so as to vest the title of the grantor. Ib.

Judgment.—A judgment of Trinity Term, 1817, against A. who since died, in 1831 a scire facias issued, but no further proceedings were had thereon; in 1835 the judgment was re-docketed. The court gave liberty to issue a scire facias to revive the judgment against the heir and terre-tenants of the conuzor. Kelly v. Croghan, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 88, C. P.

Scire facias by the executors of the conusee of a judgment more than twenty years old at the issuing of the writ of scire facias. Plea, the statute of Limitations, (3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 40.) Replication, a judgment of revivor recovered by the plaintiff within twenty years. Held, that the plea was a sufficient answer to the claim, and that the replication was bad being a departure from the case made in the scire facias. Farran v. Beresford, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 487; 10 Cl. & Fin. 333, Dom. Proc. overruling the judgments of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer Chamber. 2 Ir. L. Rep. 110, Ex. Ch.; S.C. 2 J. & S. 97.

Semble, a judgment of revivor by the executors of the conusee is that which secures the money within the meaning of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 40, and the time runs from the entry of that judgment. Ib.

Semble, the 8 Geo. 1, is repealed, as far as judgments are concerned by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Ib. [The 8 Geo. 1, is repealed by the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 90, registration of Judgments Act.]

Application for a scire facias to revive a judgment on the 23d November, 1840, on an allegation of payment of interest on the 23d of November, 1820, a similar application having been previously refused in consequence of an informality. Held, to be in time to save the bar of the Statute of Limitations. Kent v. Lawrence, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 61, C. P.

Scire facias, to revive a judgment against the heir and terre-tenants of the original conuzor. Plea, Statute of Limitations. Replication, a revival of the same judgment, against the personal representative of the original conuzor, within twenty years from the issuing of the scire facias. Held, sufficient. Martin v. McCausland, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 118, C. P.

A payment of interest, by the personal representative of the original conuzor, within 20 years, is sufficient to keep the judgment alive against the lands in the hands of his heir and terre-tenants. Ib.

Scire facias, against heir and terre-tenants, tested on the 25th of November, 1827, and directed to the sheriff of T., reciting a judgment of Michaelmas Term, 1806, by O., against W.; that O. died, and appointed two executors, who obtained probate, and assigned the judgment to the plaintiff, and that W. had died seized. Plea, by H. W., the heir of the conuzor, the Statute of Limitations. Replication, that in Easter Term, 1819, another writ of scire facias, issued by the executors of O., for the revival of the same judgment, that the sheriff returned that he had warned R. W. &c., and that in Michaelmas Term, 1819, judgment was had in this scire facias. The replication contained no averment that R. W. was the heir of the conusor, nor did it connect him in any way with H. W., the present defendant. Rejoinder, nul tiel record. Held, on motion, in arrest of judgment, that a judgment against the heir at law, is of the same effect as a judgment against the conusor himself, and that the statute commenced to run from the judgment of 1819 only. White v. White, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 118, Ex.

The court allowed the scire facias to revive the judgment to issue, there being a recital of a judgment in a deed of mortgage, executed by the conusor to the conusee, within the last twenty years, for the purpose of securing the judgment along with other debts, and proceedings had been taken for the foreclosure of the said mortgage, but had been discontinued. Lanigan v. Fogarty, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 185, C. P.

Quære, if such a recital in a mortgage be an acknowledgment in writing, within the meaning of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Id.

The court allowed a scire facias to revive a judgment against the original conusor, where there had been neither payment, nor acknowledgment, nor any proceeding on the judgment within the last twenty years, beyond an order for liberty to issue a scire facias to revive it. Lynch v. Bourke, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 286, C. P.

The conusor of a judgment, obtained in 1814, became insolvent; liberty to issue a scire facias, to revive the judgment, was granted on an application, grounded on admissions of the debt contained in the insolvent's schedule, filed in 1818, and in the answer of his assignee, to a bill filed in 1826 by the conusee, to raise the amount of the judgment. Neligan v. Gunn, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 354, Ex.

Debt for the recovery of a judgment of 1812. The action was commenced, and issue joined, in 1830, since which, no proceedings were taken, and the judgment was now, (1842,) barred by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 40. The court allowed the plaintiff to proceed in the said action against the defendant, giving a terms notice, on an affidavit by the plaintiff, that the proceedings had been suspended in consequence of the embarrassed state of the defendant's circumstances. Starkie v. English, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 419, C. P.

A scire facias was permitted to be issued to revive a judgment more than 20 years old, recovered against a personal representative, de bonis testatoris, though there had been no payment of principal, or interest, or acknowledgment in writing, within 20 years, and nothing to keep it alive except the continuance of a Chancery suit. Gower v. Monks, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 343, C. P.

The court allowed a scire facias to issue to revive a judgment more than twenty years old, and no revivor or acknowledgment in writing, but the affidavit stated, that "about fifteen years" since the plaintiff had been allowed to retain, on account of interest on the judgment, a sum of money payable to the defendant. Hunt v. Hunt, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 375, C. P.

A plea of the Statute of Limitations, (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 40,) is no answer to a scire facias, in which a judgment obtained more than twenty years before the issuing of the scire facias, and an award of execution on the same, to the administrator of the conusee, against the conusor, within the 20 years, are stated. Conlan v. Bodkin, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 467, C. P.

A judgment was obtained in 1813, and revived by scire facias, at the suit of the executor of the conusee, against the heir and terre-tenants of the conusor, in 1829. A bill was filed in 1833 in the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, against the representatives of the real and personal estate of the debtor, praying for an account, and payment of the principal and interest due on the judgment, out of the debtor's personal or real estate. Held, that a plea of the Statute of Limitations, (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 40,) by a defendant claiming a part of the real estate, under a settlement bearing date subsequent to the original judgment, but prior to the judgment of revivor, was no bar to the suit. Farrall v. Gleason, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 478, Dom. Proc.

To a scire facias in 1846, to revive a judgment recovered in 1811 by W. against L., which scire facias stated, the recovery, in 1827, of a judgment in an action of debt, by the executors of W. against L., for the amount of the judgment debt of 1811, and of another judgment debt due from L. to W., and contained an averment, that, upon the recovery of the judgment in 1827, a present right to receive the amount of the judgment of 1811 accrued to the executors of W. Held, that a plea of the Statute of Limitations, (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 40,) was a valid defence. Waters v. Lidwell, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 362, C. P.

A judgment in an action of debt upon a judgment, has not, upon the latter, the same effect, as a judgment of revivor by scire facias. Id.

Personal actions.—A., in 1833, being indebted to B., distrained, whereupon C. became surety that A. would pay the rent in December following, or re-deliver the goods to B. A. did not do so, and B. recovered judgment against C. and compelled C. to pay the debt by instalments. Held, that to an action by C. against A. for a breach of this special agreement of indemnity, and also for money paid to his use, A. could not plead the statute of limitations—the payments on foot of the judgment recovered by B. having been made within six years before the commencement of the action. Connolly v. Connolly, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 400, Q. B.

Bond—Plea of Payment.—To debt on a bond dated in 1806, the defendant pleaded admi pui diem, and at the trial, the plaintiff having failed to prove that any suit had been commenced or prosecuted for the recovery of said debt, or any payment of principal or interest, or other satisfaction made on account of said bond, within twenty years before the commencement of the suit. Held that the judge ought not to have left the question of payment to the jury, but to have directed a verdict for the defendant. Kemmis v. Macklin, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 401, C. P.

Acknowledgments to Bar.—A. and B. were de-defendants in certain suits in which a reference was made to the Master to report the incumbrances affecting the freehold lands of A., and amongst others he reported B. a creditor by judgment affecting them for a certain sum. Held, that this was not such an acknowledgment in writing, by the agent of A. to B. as would take the case out of the statute of limitations. Hill v. Stanswell, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 302, Q. B.

The plaintiff, an attorney, furnished the defendant with a bill of costs, and wrote a letter stating that he was aware that some of the matters were beyond six years, but that he took it for granted that the defendant would not take advantage of the statute of limitations against him. The defendant in answer wrote, "P. will attend for me to tax your costs, which will be best for both parties, as one will know what to pay, the other what to receive." Held that this was a sufficient acknowledgment to take the demand out of the bar of the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1. Murphy v. Meredith, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 120, Ex.

Held, that this was not a conditional acknowledgment, or agreement to pay on taxation, and that it was not therefore necessary that the costs should have been taxed before the action brought. Ib.

A sci. fa. was issued in 1839, to revive against the consor a judgment of 1807. In 1827 a schedule was filed by the consor in the court for the relief of Insolvent Debtors, containing an admission of the judgment debt, but no payment or satisfaction had been made upon account, nor any proceeding taken for the recovery thereof, within twenty years next before the issuing of the writ. Held that an acknowledgment in writing within the 40th section of the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, was not sufficient to set up or give validity to the judgment which had been barred in 1833, (at the time of the passing of that act), by the operation of the 8 Geo. 1, c. 4. Morrogh v. Power, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 494, Ex.

Semble, that an admission of the debt in the schedule of an insolvent is a sufficient acknowledgment to prevent a judgment being barred by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Ib.

Scire facias to revive a judgment against the heir and terre-tenants of the consor. The judgment was of 1814; the consor was insolvent in 1819. An acknowledgment by the insertion of the judgment in his schedule, within twenty years, was held to be a sufficient acknowledgment to warrant the issuing of the writ. McCarthy v. O'Brien, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 67, Q. B.

Scire facias. Plea, statute of Limitations. Replication, an acknowledgment in writing setting forth a schedule filed by the defendant in the Insolvent Court, in which he admitted himself to be indebted to the consor of the judgment in three bonds, but which were different in amount and date from that on which the judgment was entered, and the defendant rejoined that there was no acknowledgment. Held, that parol evidence was admissible to show that one of the bonds mentioned in the schedule was identical with the bond on which the judgment had been entered. Hanan v. Power, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 505, Q. B. [Perrin, J. dissentiente.]

Scire facias. Plea, statute of Limitations, (3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27.) Replication, that the defendant by his schedule filed in the Insolvent Court acknowledged the right of the plaintiff to the damages, &c. Rejoinder, that he did not within twenty years before the issuing of the scire facias acknowledge to the plaintiff his right to the said damages, &c. mode et forma. At the trial it appeared that the debt acknowledged in the schedule was one due upon a promissory note, but the amount was the same as in the scire facias, and evidence was given that they were one and the same debt. Held, that upon the issue as joined the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Dugdale v. Vise, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 568, Q. B.

Semble, an insolvent's schedule is a sufficient acknowledgment of a debt within the statute. Ib.

This statute has a retrospective operation, and an acknowledgment made before its enactment is sufficient to take a case out of the bar created thereby. Ib.

Assumpsit against the administrator of J. S. for wages due and money lent. It was proved that J. S. had, shortly before his death, and within six years of action brought, stated to a third party that he owed the plaintiff nearly £60 for wages and money lent, and that the money lent was £34. Held, that this statement was not sufficient to take it out of the statute of Limitations, (9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1.) Lusk v. Auld, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 452, Ex.

A proposal for a lease unaccepted or signed by an agent is not a sufficient acknowledgment of title to take the case out of the statute of Limitations. Corporation of Dublin v. Judge, Bl. D. & O. 162, N. P. [Per Lefroy, B.]

An acknowledgment in writing by the mortgagor of the payment of interest on a mortgage and not signed by him. Held, sufficient within the 40th section of the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, to take the case out of that statute. In re Commissioners of Wide Streets, Cork, 1 Ir. Jur. 9, Rolls.

An acknowledgment, by one maker of a joint and several promissory note, that interest had been paid thereon, and indorsed on the note, Held not to be evidence against his co-contractor, either as an acknowledgment of the fact of payment, or, after the indorser's death, as an entry made by a deceased person against his interest. Murtagh v. Crawford, 1 Ir. Jur. 14, Ex.

A statement in the schedule of an insolvent debtor in the year 1828, that she had been "defeated," in 1824, in a former ejectment brought on the demises of three lessors of the plaintiff, one only of whom was a lessor in the present action. Held that this was no acknowledgment of title, within the 14th section of the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, in any one of the said lessors. Hobson v. Burns, 1 Ir. Jur. 227, Q. B.

Held that such statement did not amount to more than a mere narrative of a past transaction, and was not an acknowledgment within the 14th section (3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27.) Ib.

Quære, whether a statement by an insolvent in his schedule is, under any circumstances, a sufficient acknowledgment within the 14th section. Ib. [See Barrett v. Birmingham, Flan. & Kel. 556.]

Adverse possession.—A possession without payment of rent, or an acknowledgment in writing for more than twenty years, was held to be a sufficient bar to an ejectment for the recovery of the lands—the possession being adverse at the time of the passing of the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, though it had not been so during the entire 20 years. O'Sullivan v. M'Sweeney, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 89, Ex.

A., the owner in fee of certain lands, put B. with whom he lived in illicit intercourse, into possession of a portion thereof, and permitted her to continue in possession of same for a period of more than twenty years. Held that A. and the persons deriving under him, were barred by the operation of the 3 & 4, W. 4, c. 27, and could not maintain an ejectment for the recovery of these lands. De Montmorency v. Walsh, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 254, Q. B.

It is not at all necessary that the possession to confer title should be adverse; that statute has put an end to the doctrine of adverse possession, except in respect of cases coming within the 15th section. Id. [Per Burton, J.]

In 1791, A. was put into possession of premises by B. as care-taker. In 1804 A. wrote a letter to B. acknowledging his title, and proposing to become his tenant, and in 1811, after the death of B., wrote to his devisee, proposing to become the purchaser of the premises. A. died in 1832, since which period C. his son, kept possession. Neither A. nor C. ever paid rent for the premises. In 1841 an ejectment was brought by D., the devisee of B. against C. Held that the right of D. was barred by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, there being no evidence of a holding as care-taker, since 1811. Ellis v. Crawford, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 402, Ex.

Held, that though the possession of C. may not have been adverse at the time of the passing of the Act, yet that the ejectment ought to have been brought within five years after, pursuant to the saving in the 15th section. Id.

A landlord built a school-house upon a portion of his property, and appointed a schoolmaster who was paid an annual stipend by the landlord, and was also paid by subscription, and by the scholars, and the schoolmaster was permitted to occupy those premises for the purpose of a school. Held that such occupation for upwards of twenty years did not give the schoolmaster an adverse right under the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27. Moore v. Doherty, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 449, Q. B.

T. B. tenant for life of freehold estate under the limitations of a will, levied a fine with proclamations to the use of himself in fee, and devised the lands to H. J. B. for life, with remainder to H. B. in fee. H. J. B. having survived the testator T. B. for upwards of twenty years, died, having devised the same property to trustees in fee for the benefit of his widow and children. In an ejectment brought by H. B. for the recovery of the lands, Held, that whatever might be the legal effect of the fine, H. J. B. having assumed to take under the will of T. B. and his life-estate being solely referrible thereto, his possession could not be considered an adverse one, within the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27. Brownrigg v. Cruikshank, 1 Ir. Jur. 212, Q. B.

Pleading.]—A plea of the statute of limitations should negative the exceptions contained in that statute. Molony v. O'Brien, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 577, Ex.

Therefore, where a plea to a scire facias to revive a judgment, founded on the above section, omitted to negative a payment of interest, within twenty years next preceding the issuing of the writ. Held, on demurrer, that the plea was bad. Id.

As to pleading continuances, under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 7, see Brennan v. Monahan, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 545, Ex.

Scire facias to revive a judgment. Plea, the Statute of Limitations, (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 40,) averment, "That no part of the principal money secured by the said judgment, or any interest thereon, was paid at any time within twenty years." Replication, the payment of a sum of money "as for, and so much of the interest which had accrued due and payable upon or on account of the said judgment." Held on demurrer that this replication was insufficient. Kealy v. Bodkin, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 383, C.P. [Ball, J. dissentiente.]

Plea, framed for the purpose of taking advantage of the 6 & 7 Vic. c. 54, and 7 & 8 Vic. c. 27, limiting, after the 1st of January, 1845, the bringing of actions relating to presentations, concluded by denying that this suit had been commenced, or that any original writ had been issued in this action at any time on or before the 1st of January, 1845, in manner and form as the plaintiff alleged. The only allusion in the declaration to the original writ, was the statement that the defendant had been summoned to answer, &c. Held upon special demurrer to those pleas, for having traversed that which was not alleged in the declaration, that they were good. Marquis of Ormonde v. Bishop of Cashel, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 577, C. P.

LANDS CONSOLIDATION ACT—See PUBLIC COMPANY.

Notice to treat.]—By a local Act power was vested in the Council of the Borough of W. to purchase certain properties in a schedule to the Act specified, and to complete the same within five years, and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, was incorporated with said local Act. The council of the borough served a notice on the lessees of said properties, requiring the particulars of their title, and the amount of compensation they sought. Held that the relation of vendor and purchaser was thereby created, and that the council were bound within a reasonable time to complete such purchase. Reg. v. the Borough of Belfast, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 40, Q. B.

MAGISTRATES AND JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Jurisdiction.]—The divisional justices of the Head Office of Police have jurisdiction, under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 58, to hear and determine, at all times, offences committed in the County of Dublin against the excise laws. Reg. v. Pickering, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 298, Q. B. [Perrin, J. dubitante.]

Justices of the peace for a county at large, have no criminal jurisdiction under the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 108, s. 173, within a county of a city. Reg. v. Byrne, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 513, Q. B.

Actions against.—A. was arrested by a magistrate on suspicion of felony and sent for identification in the custody of a policeman to the house of a person who could not leave his bed, and with orders that in the event of his being identified he was to be taken from thence to goal. The prisoner having been identified, and in accordance with the foregoing orders committed to goal, and afterwards acquitted at the trial. Held, that in an action against the magistrate, the jury were rightly charged that the conduct of the magistrate was illegal. Held, that the bona fides of the magistrate was no defence. Annette v. Osborne, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 317, Q. B.

A portrieve of a town is not entitled to a month's notice before action brought under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 1, not being included in the word "justices of the peace," or "governor," or "deputy governor" of any county or place in Ireland. Kelly v. Collis, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 67, Q. B.

In an action against a magistrate the court will not set aside a special plea of justification filed in addition to the general issue, though all the special matter could be given in evidence under the general issue. Stewart v. Lynar, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 193, C. P.

A notice of action under the provisions of the 43 Geo. 3, c. 143, must follow accurately its provisions. Where a notice omitted to specify the place where the transactions complained of occurred, the plaintiff was non-suited. Kane v. Lloyd, 1 Ir. Jur. 208, C. C. [Per Moore, J. and Lefroy, B.]

Where a justice of the peace who had authority to require a pedlar to produce his license, and seize his goods if he refused, and upon a conviction for not having a license, might commit him—illegally arrested the pedlar, and seized his goods for refusal to produce it, and committed him to prison before conviction. Held, that the direction to the jury that if they believed the defendant at the time of such arrest was acting bona fide in his magisterial capacity under the 55 Geo. 3, c. 19, which limits the bringing of such actions to three months, they should find for the defendant, four months having elapsed before the writ issued, was a proper direction. O'Reilly v. Lawton, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 290, Q. B.

Held that justices of the peace are included in the words "any person or persons," in the 97th section of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 19, notwithstanding the general provision in the 43 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 7, for their protection. Id.

Held that the provision in the 55 Geo. 3, c. 19, is not repealed by the subsequent enactments upon the subject matter of that statute. Id.

Semble, that where the notice of action against a justice of the peace, describes the plaintiff as of the city of Cork, and the evidence is that he is a Dublin man, the variance is fatal. Id.

The court will not grant a mandamus against a magistrate, unless it appear that there was some mistake in point of law in his decision. Reg. v. Singleton, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 21, Q. B.

The recorder of Dublin is one of the board of magistrates of the county of the city of Dublin, within the meaning of the 49 Geo. 3, c. 20, s. 3, and therefore ought to have been convened or summoned by the lord mayor, to attend an election held on the 21st of February, 1839, for the treasurership of the county of the city of Dublin, and not having been convened or summoned as aforesaid, and having attended at the said election. Held, that the said election was void. [Dissentientibus, Lefroy, B., Richards, B., Crampton, J., and Burton, J.] Darley in Error v. Smyth, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 376, Ex Ch.

Held also that neither the divisional justices, appointed under the 48 Geo. 3, c. 140, the 5 Geo. 4, c. 102, and the 1 Vic. c. 25; nor the constabulary justices appointed under the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 18, were entitled to vote at said election. Id.

Held also, that one of the divisional justices of the Castle division, who had been appointed previous to the 1 Vic. c. 25, and sworn in as a justice of the peace for the county of the city of Dublin, was not entitled to vote at said election. Id.

Held also, that the provision in the 49th Geo. 3, c. 20, s. 3, that the lord mayor should "within twenty-one days after the vacancy of the office, convene the board of magistrates," &c. to meet and hold the election for the treasurership, was directory, not mandatory; and that therefore the omission to summon the said board within the twenty-one days, did not void the election. Id.

Held also, that an action of assumpsit for money had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff, was a proper form of action to try the right to said office. Id.

Held also, that the special verdict for finding that the defendant did receive for salary and fees for the execution of the duties of said office, £8011 9s. 4d., and finding a verdict for the plaintiff, with damages, the said sum was correct. Id. [Dissentientibus Jackson, J., Balh, J., Perrin, J. Dubitante, Pennefather, B.]

MALICIOUS INJURIES.

The statutes awarding compensation for malicious injuries for property, do not extend to the county of the city of Dublin. In re Miller and Dowell, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 306, Q. B.

Semble, those Acts do not extend to any cities or towns which are counties in themselves. Id.

The notice required in the case of a malicious burning by the 19 & 20 Geo. 3, c. 37, s. 3, to be served in six days, is sufficient, if served six days from the time the injury was completed. In re John Elliott, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 100, Q. B.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—See CASE.

MANDAMUS—See POOR LAWS. PUBLIC COMPANY.

Generally.—The court will not grant a mandamus against a magistrate, unless it appear that there was some mistake in his decision in point of law. Reg. v. Singleton, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 21, Q. B.

The court will not make absolute a conditional order for a mandamus to compel magistrates "to receive and take informations, touching a forcible entry, and do then according to law, when they have already taken informations, and, on the examination of witnesses, have dismissed the case, as not within their jurisdiction. Reg. v. Gresson, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 13, Q. B.

A mandamus will be granted to enforce the empanelling of a jury by the Commissioners of the Limerick Bridge, for the purpose of awarding compensation to a person who had been deprived of his emoluments and fees as water-bailiff, under the provisions of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 84, notwithstanding, that three years have elapsed since the passing of the Act. Reg. v. Limerick Bridge Commissioners, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 15, Q. B.

The court will not grant a mandamus to compel a county surveyor to certify for the performance of a contract, although he obstinately refuses so to do, the proper course of proceeding is to apply to the judge at the assizes, who will refuse the surveyor's salary if it appear that he acts improperly. Anonymous, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 444, Q. B.

In an appeal, under the Statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 58, the notice of appeal must state on the face of it, that the person bringing the appeal is aggrieved by the judgment. Reg. v. Recorder of Dublin, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 440, Q. B.

In cases of doubt or difficulty the court will not grant a peremptory mandamus. Reg. at the prosecution of the Treasurer of the City of Dublin v. The Parish of St. Nicholas, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 112, Q. B.

The court will not grant a mandamus to compel the treasurer of a fever hospital to appoint a qualified apothecary in the place of a person who was elected, although the latter be not duly qualified as an apothecary, under the 31 Geo. 3, c. 34. Reg. v. Treasurer of Michelstown Fever Hospital, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 7, Q. B.

On a mandamus to the treasurer and secretary of a dispensary, to remove the names of two gentlemen who had been elected as medical superintendents, and to enter the name of a third candidate who was not elected, due notice of the objection not having been given to the voters. Held, that it is not necessary that a candidate should have his diploma at the time of the election, if he has passed his final examination for it. Held, also, that although a bye-law requires a superintendent to be properly qualified, by corresponding testimonials, to act as physician, surgeon, and man-midwife, it is not necessary to have a distinct diploma in midwifery, if the general diploma in surgery qualifies the holder to practice in that department. Reg. v. Fairtlough and Halloran, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 76, Q. B.

Conditional orders had been obtained for two writs of mandamus to compel the minister and churchwardens of two parishes in the city of Dublin, to applot upon the inhabitants, under the 33 Geo. 3, c. 56, and it appeared that these two parishes were united into one by Act of Parliament, the court refused to make them absolute, although it had been the immemorial usage to applot in the usual way. Reg. v. Minister and Churchwardens of St. Catherine's, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 70, Q. B.

A mandamus will be granted to compel magistrates to hear a second information for the breach of the excise laws, though they have already dismissed one for the same offence, upon a technical objection. Commissioners of Excise v. Thompson, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 5, Q. B.

When a proprietor in the Grand Canal Company applies for a mandamus to compel the directors to allow him to inspect the books and proceedings of the company, under the provisions of the 11 & 12 Geo. 3, c. 31, s. 15, he must shew, that in his application to the directors, that he stated the object for which he required the information he desired to obtain, and that the application was a reasonable one, and that the refusal of the directors was unreasonable. Reg. v. The Grand Canal Company, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 337, Q. B.

A. and B. were candidates for the office of treasurer of the public monies of the city of Dublin, and A. having been elected, B. brought information in the nature of a quo warranto against him, and obtained judgment of ouster against him, and was subsequently admitted into said office by virtue of a writ of mandamus. C., a third party, then filed an information against B., for usurpation of said office, upon the ground that B's election was void, some of the electors, who were within summons, not having been summoned to the meeting at which he was elected, and not having attended said meeting, and judgment of ouster was pronounced by this court against B. upon this information. B. brought a writ of error to reverse this judgment, and C. applied to this court for a mandamus to the public officer to hold a new election, upon the ground, that there was then no rightful treasurer in the office, the former election being void upon the conceded facts in the case. Held, that although this mandamus was not an actual execution of the judgment of ouster against B., it was a proceeding consequential upon that judgment, and operating to put it into effect; and, upon that ground, that between the parties to that judgment, it would operate as a superadeas; and between third parties it was good ground for staying proceedings; and, therefore, the cause shewn against the conditional order for the mandamus was allowed. The Queen v. The Lord Mayor of the City of Dublin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 147, Q. B.

Where a statute directed that at a meeting to be held under such act, for, amongst other purposes, electing commissioners, and "declared, that every person who shall reside within the city, &c., and who shall have been assessed or charged by the last rate made at vestry, in the parish wherein such person shall dwell, for, or in respect of a dwelling house, or other tenement of the computed annual value, according to the said rate of £20 or more, shall be eligible to be elected commissioners for the purposes of this Act;" and it appeared at said meeting, that the houses of the parishioners had not been rated at vestry for upwards of fifty years, the only assessment in said parish being a certain annual sum charged per acre upon lands, without reference to the actual annual value thereof, and no annual value whatever appearing to be laid on houses; but evidence was given to prove that the houses of those who claimed to be eligible to be elected commissioners were of the annual value of £20, and upwards. Held, that the Statute contemplated the existence of a subsisting vestry-rate in the localities in which it was to be brought into operation, and made that rating the sole test of the qualification of those who were to vote, and those who were eligible to be elected under the Statute, and, therefore, a mandamus was refused to compel the president of such meeting to declare those persons duly elected. Commissioners under this Act, Regina v. Ruston, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 478, Q. B.

Where it appeared that A. had been for nearly twenty years an annual subscriber to a dispensary, and had given general directions to his agent, who was also the treasurer of the dispensary, to pay his subscription every year, and the latter had long acted upon those directions, but omitted to pay A's subscription, which fell due upon the 1st of June, 1839, and whom A. discovered this in April, 1840, he had it paid, and then also paid his subscription for 1840 in advance; it also appeared that he continued to act as an existing member of the institution during these years, and under the bye laws, was liable for these subscriptions. Held, that he was qualified to vote for a medical attendant in October, 1840, and that he had substantially complied with the terms of the Statute, (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 92,) which requires that a person to be entitled to vote "shall have paid his subscription to the treasurer of such dispensary at least one year complete, before any such election shall take place." Reg. v. Shkelton, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 492, Q. B.

Quære, is a payment by a subscriber at any time in the current year, for that year, and also in advance for the ensuing year, a sufficient payment to enable the subscriber to vote in the course of the second year, although a year complete has not elapsed since the time of payment of the subscriptions. Id.

This court will grant a mandamus to compel the visitors of Trinity College, Dublin, to proceed to hear and determine the appeal of a party who complains of an undue election of a scholar in said College. The Queen at the prosecution of Heron v. The Visitors of Trinity College, Dublin, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 41, Q. B.

Where on the face of a return to a mandamus, the law and facts are mixed, the court will, before argument on the law, reserve liberty for the prosecutor to file a traverse if necessary. The Queen at the prosecution of Carpenter v. The Corporation of Dublin, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 65, Q. B.

Return.—The Statute 47 Geo. 3, c. 109, vests the property in the streets of the city of Dublin in commissioners, and enacts that no person shall open those streets for any purpose whatsoever, without having obtained the consent of the commissioners. A mandamus having issued directed to those commissioners, calling on them to grant a license to open certain streets for certain purposes therein stated, subject to certain terms and conditions; to which mandamus the commissioners made a return, stating that they, in the due exercise of the discretion vested in them by this Act, and in good conscience, did determine that it was not consistent with their duty, as such commissioners, or for the benefit of the inhabitants within their jurisdiction, that a license should be granted as prayed for; and that they therefore declined to grant it. Held, a sufficient return. The Queen at the prosecution of the Alliance Gas Company v. The Paving and Lighting Commissioners, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 448, Q. B.

Held, also, where a discretion was vested in those commissioners, this court had no power to issue a mandamus to control that discretion. Id.

The remedy by mandamus is only to compel the performance of an abstract duty, and where fraud has been practised in reference to a contract, such a remedy is not applicable.

Where, on an application for a mandamus, a question of doubt or difficulty be raised, the court will not decide the question, but will allow the mandamus to issue, for the purpose of having a return made thereto. Id.

Where a mandamus directed to Poor Law Guardians, commanding them to appoint collectors of poor rates, and to issue their warrants to the persons so appointed, the guardians made a return, stating that they had appointed collectors, all of whom, save one, had entered into securities as required by the Poor Law Act; that one of the collectors had not duly perfected his securities, and that the guardians had passed a resolution not to issue their warrants until all the collectors had been duly appointed, and had perfected their securities. Held, that the return was insufficient, and offered no reasonable excuse for the guardians not doing their duty. The Queen v. The Guardians of the Tuam Union, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 320, Q. B.

Costs.—The question as to whether the 9 Anne, c. 20, amended by the 1 Wm. 4, c. 21, apply to Ireland, was fully argued in the case of The Queen at the prosecution of Moss v. The Corporation of Dublin, in last Hilary Term, and on the 23th of April following. Blackburne, C. J., observed, that the court were of opinion these acts did not extend to this country. Subsequently thereto, the 6 & 7 Vic., c. 67, passed, and by its enactments the court are empowered to award costs in mandamus cases. The Queen v. The Guardians of the Tuam Union, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 321, Q. B.

An order directed that a Board of Guardians should be individually liable for costs, and a rule nisi for an attachment having issued to enforce that order, such rule must be served on all the members of the board. Id.

Where plaintiff obtained a mandamus to compel a railway company to issue their warrant to a sheriff, to summon a jury, to assess the amount of compensation to which he was entitled, and the jury afterwards awarded him a less sum than the company had previously offered, Held, that he was not entitled to the costs of the mandamus. O'Donnell

Payment of Money out of Court.—Where money is lodged in court by a sheriff until the conflicting claims of two parties are decided, the party found to be entitled may, when inconvenient to himself to attend, obtain an order for his attorney duly authorized to accept the transfer. Desmond v. Desmond, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 160, Q. B.

A notice of motion to draw money out of court, lodged on a plea of tender where the action has not been discontinued, is regular, and when the opposite party would not sign a consent and appeared on the motion it was granted with costs. Chadwick v. Daly, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 176, C. P.

Jurisdiction of the Court over.—Where an attorney obtains from the opposite party, being an illiterate person, and, under circumstances suspicious, though not actually fraudulent, a document purporting to be a disclaimer of his demand, and of his having authorised his attorney to bring the action, the court has a summary jurisdiction over its officers to order it to be given up. Tobin v. Gray, Bl. D. & O. 103, Ex.

The court has no jurisdiction to pronounce any rule on an application—made by a party who had held, and had been dismissed by the Chief Justice, from the office of crier of the court—to be restored to the emoluments and duties of said office, alleging that he had been illegally and improperly dismissed therefrom. In re Kennedy, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 217, C. P.

The court does not possess a jurisdiction to entertain such an application in the case of any officer. Id. [Torrens, J., dissentiente.]

There is an inherent jurisdiction in this court over its own officers, to direct the reference which the defendant applies for (to have the costs taxed for the amount of which the action was brought) upon his offering fair terms, with this single qualification, that the bill of costs contains at least one taxable item. The rule is substantially laid down as it at present exists, in Hullock on Costs, 504. Bastable v. Reardon, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 167. [Per Pennefather, C. J.] See Acc. — v. Massey, Bl. OYER.

In an action of covenant, the tender of a copy of the deed for Oyer is not sufficient, and proceedings will be stayed till the original be produced. Sterns v. Mooney, Bl. D. & O. 235, Ex.

In an action against a clerk of a joint-stock banking company, upon his bond to the trustees of the company for the faithful discharge of his duties, the court refused to compel oyer of the deed of settlement of the company, which recited the bond. Stanhope v. Quill, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 68, C. P.

The rule for oyer does not stop the entry of the rule for judgment, though it stops the entry of the judgment itself. Fitzpatrick v. Wilson, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 238, Ex.

PARLIAMENT.

Peers of.—A motion to set aside proceedings taken against a peer, during the sitting of Parliament, will not be entertained. Smyth v. Earl of Charleville, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 33, Q. B.

Held, upon demurrer to a plea in abatement, that a peer may be sued by bill without original writ. Id.

Members of.—Proceedings by distringas against a member of Parliament to compel an appearance, and obtain payment of the plaintiff's demand. Callanan v. Callaghan, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 85, Ex.

PARTNERSHIP.

Assumpsit for goods sold and delivered. Plea, that the defendants were in partnership with A; that the cause of action arose out of that partnership, and was a debt jointly due by them with A.; that the plaintiffs had sued A. singly and recovered a judgment against him for that joint debt. Replication, that the defendants and A. concealed from them they were in partnership, and that it was in consequence of the concealment of that partnership by the defendants they had not sued the defendants jointly with A. On special demurrer the replication was held to be bad. Nesbitt v. Howe, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 273, Ex.

A declaration in assumpsit by an indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, commenced—“Samuel Lindsay and Company, being a co-partnership entered into pursuant to the statute in that case made and provided, the plaintiffs in this suit, debtors, &c.,” proceeding in the ordinary form, and averring in the conclusion a promise to “the said co-partnership, the plaintiffs,” and a breach “to the damage of the said co-partnership, the plaintiffs.” Held on special demurrer to be bad, as not disclosing any title in the plaintiffs to sue in the name of Samuel Lindsay and Company. Lindsay v. Loughhead, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 2: 6, Ex.

PLEADING.

Setting aside Pleadings.—See PRACTICE.

Generally.—I think, and my Lord Chief Justice agrees with me, that as the course of precedents is settled and uniform, it ought to be supported, and a departure from form should be allowed as a special demurrer, until an alteration be made by statute, or by a general rule of all the courts. Killikelly v. Kelly, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 38, Q. B. [See also acc. Apothecaries Hall v. Calvert, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 194, Q. B.; Knos v. Irwin, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 258, Ex.]

In an action by an infant suing by his next friend the omission of the words "admitted by leave of the Court for that purpose," Held to be bad upon special demurrer. Ib.

The declaration suggested that the plaintiff was a debtor to the Queen, but did not contain the quo minus clause. Held good on special demurrer. Keogh v. Murray, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 237, Ex.

The declaration omitted the debitus and quo minus clauses. Held, that as the court might have jurisdiction by reason of the character or person of the defendant, the demurrer should be overruled. Knos v. Irwin, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 250, Ex.

Seem, such a demurrer is a plea to the jurisdiction, and cannot be pleaded by attorney. Ib.

The omission of the statement of a venue to a traversable allegation in a declaration is aided by the venue in the margin. Barden v. Magennis, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 345, C. P.

The omission of the ad damnum clause from the conclusion of a declaration is a cause of special demurrer. O'Connor v. Deehan, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 506, Ex.

A declaration concluding "to the damage of the plaintiff in one hundred" omitting the word "pounds." Held to be bad on special demurrer. Parton v. Martin, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 508, Ex.

In the indebitatus counts time, though not laid under a videlicet, is immaterial. Southey v. Mogan, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 250, C. P.

The omission of the quo minus clause is not a ground of special demurrer. Allen v. Linahan, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 291, Ex.

Venue.—The omission of the statement of a venue to a traversable allegation in a declaration is aided by the venue in the margin. Barden v. Magennis, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 345, C. P.

In an action against the sheriff of the County of Galway for a false return, the venue being laid in the County of Wicklow. Held on general demurrer that the declaration was sufficient for that stage of the case, as non constat but that the sheriff might have made his return in the County of Wicklow. Green v. Blake, 1 Ir. Jur. 271, Ex

Uncertainty.—The agreement was stated in the declaration to be "that the said plaintiffs (two) and defendant did thereby bind themselves in a penalty of £200 that they would continue their establishment for one year from the date," and the breaches assigned were "that the defendant did not and would not continue the aforesaid establishment for the said period of one year." Held, that the declaration was bad on special demurrer for uncertainty. Cummins v. Kenny, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 347, Q. B.

Ambiguity.—A declaration in the ordinary form of an action of debt, and concluding thus, "yet the defendant hath disregarded his promises, and hath not paid any of the said monies or any part of them. Held bad on special demurrer, it being doubtful whether it was a declaration in debt or assumpsit Bennett v. Sandheim, 1 Ir. Jur. 215, Ex.

The queritur in the commencement of a declaration in debt is not material, and therefore the sum claimed in it not covering the sum claimed in the counts is not a good ground of special demurrer. Ib.

Duplicity.—Covenant for rent. Plea, that the defendant surrendered the premises, and that the plaintiff accepted the same, to which the plaintiff replied, that he (the plaintiff) did not surrender, and that he (the plaintiff) did not accept the same. Demurrer for duplicity. Held, that the surrender and acceptance constituted but one entire matter of defence, and that therefore the replication was good. Purdon v. Dickson, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 351, Q. B.

Assumpsit. Plea, that the promises were made jointly with two other persons, and that the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant and said two other persons in a large sum of money, to wit, &c. Demurrer for duplicity, and that it was attempted to set off a joint debt against a separate demand. Held that the plea was good. Lilburn v. Kenney, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 327, Q. B.

A plea to a scire facias on a judgment against a public officer of a banking company, stating that the judgment was had and obtained, and was still kept on foot, and suffered to remain in force by the fraud and covin of the plaintiff, and of the said public officer, was held to be bad for duplicity. Neale v. McDonald, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 163, Q. B.

Traverse.—To a declaration in indebitatus assumpsit the defendant pleaded that the promises, &c. were made jointly with one T. P. H. and the defendant, and that the plaintiff sued the said T. P. H. in assumpsit for not performing the identical promises, &c. in the present declaration mentioned, and the jury assessed the damages of the plaintiff on occasion of the non-performing of the said promises, &c., which were the identical promises, &c. in the present declaration mentioned, to a certain sum, which the said T. P. H. afterwards paid to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff accepted the same in satisfaction and discharge of the said damages, &c., which had been so assessed to him. Replication, that the plaintiff did not accept and take the said monies in satisfaction and discharge of the said causes of action against the defendant in the present action. Special demurrer. Held that the replication was bad, not being a direct traverse of the matter alleged in the plea, but the plea being bad on general demurrer, being no answer to the plaintiff's declaration, the demurrer was overruled, and judgment given for the plaintiff. Small v. Drummond, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 92, Q. B.

To a declaration debt the defendant pleaded "that he never was indebted in manner and form as in plaintiff's declaration alleged." This plea was held bad on special demurrer. Dinneford v. White, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 291, Q. B.

The plea of not guilty only involves a denial of possession by the plaintiff, or of the trespass by the defendant; and on it the defendant is not at liberty to go at large into evidence of justification or excuse. Burris v. Coffey, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 298, C. P.

Plea, the statute of limitations. Replication, a writ sued out with continuance. After stating the defendant's appearance to the last writ, the replication contained a prout patet in the following form, "as by the record and proceedings thereof remaining in the court of, &c. may more fully and at large appear." Rejoinder, that there "was not any record remaining in said court, in manner and form as plaintiff had in his replication alleged." Held, on special demurrer, that inasmuch as the several proceedings set forth in the replication constituted but one record, the rejoinder was sufficient in law. Brennan v. Monahan, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 545, Ex.

Quere, if the replication was bad on general demurrer, as not having been framed in compliance with the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 7. Ib.

Repugnancy.]—A declaration by an administrator stated a debt to the intestate, and a promise to pay him in his life-time, laying the day on the 14th day of April, 1845. The letters of administration were afterwards to have been granted to the plaintiff, on the 21st of December, 1844. Held on special demurrer, that this date was repugnant, and if rejected, the declaration would be bad, for want of alleging the day. Hunter v. Macan, 1 Ir. Jur. 12, Q. B.

A declaration stated the time of the defendant's being indebted to the plaintiff's intestate in his life-time, and of his making the promise to be the 1st day of January, 1845, and stated the time of the grant of the letters of administration to the plaintiff to be the 20th of June, 1844. Held on special demurrer, that the averments were inconsistent, and that none of the allegations of time could be rejected as surplusage. Healy v. Mulhallen, 1 Ir. Jur. 32, Ex.

Pleas of Tender.]—A declaration in debt contained four counts; pleas of tender to the first three, on which issues were taken and found for the defendant. Plea to the fourth count, "that as to the said sum in the said last count of the declaration mentioned, residue of the said several sums above demanded, over and above the said sums in the first, second, and third counts mentioned, the said defendant says he does not owe the same, or any part thereof to the said plaintiffs, in manner and form as the said plaintiffs have above thereof, &c. On issue on this plea, held that the plaintiffs should have shewn a debt beyond the sums contained in the first three counts. Where the defendant told plaintiff's agent that an amount more than sufficient to cover the demand was in a desk in the room, and desired his son to hand the amount to the agent, and the son rose to do so, but was interrupted by the agent, saying that he would not at all take the money, as a third person had forbidden him to do so; Held, this refusal dispensed with the necessity of producing the money, either in number or specie. Ballina Union v. Walsh, 1 Ir. Jur. 70, Ex.

Held that evidence of such a transaction was sufficient to support a plea of tender. Ib.

Quere, whether the consent of the poor law commissioners to an action for rates, as required by the 6 & 7 Vic. c. 92, s. 2, should be given under their seal; and if so, whether a defendant can avail himself of the non-production of such sealed assent at the trial. Ib.

Quere, whether a tender of rates to a collector on a Sunday is a good tender. Ib.

Semble, a tender to a rate collector whose appointment continues, binds the guardians, though they may have expressly ordered him not to take the money. Ib.

A replication to a plea of tender, stating a writ sued out, but not executed before the tender was made, and then a second writ sued out, without shewing the entry of any continuance, or that the second writ was connected with the first, is no answer to the plea. Hopburn v. Platt, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 10, Q. B.

Misjoinder.]—A declaration containing only the money counts, and commencing and concluding in the usual form by an executor, but omitting proffer of the letters testamentary. Held bad on general demurrer, on the grounds that though the other counts might be upheld as disclosing causes of action personal to the plaintiffs, the count, on an account stated could only be sustained by them in their executorial capacity, therefore there was a misjoinder. Sharp v. Shearman, 1 Ir. Jur. 13, Ex.

Replication de Injuriâ.]—Assumpsit by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note. Plea, that the note was not indorsed to the plaintiff until after the same had become due, and that at the time the said note became due it was in the hands of the payee, and, whilst the payee continued to hold the same, and before the commencement of this suit, the payee was indebted to the defendant in the sum of £17 3s. 3d., for the use and occupation of a certain house of the defendant, &c., and that an account was settled and stated between payee and defendant, such account including said note, and the said payee had credit in such account for the full amount of the said note, of all which the plaintiff had full notice, and was well aware, and informed, that the said note remained in the hands of the said payee, to secure the balance due to him on foot of said account; and then averred an indorsement, without consideration, after the note became payable. Replication, de injuriâ. Held, on demurrer to the replication, that the plea disclosed matter of excuse, as between plaintiff and defendant, and that de injuriâ was properly pleaded. Healy v. Campion, 1 Ir. Jur. 24, Ex.

When the plea denies the cause of action, instead of being in confession and avoidance, the replication de injuriâ is bad, and a demurrer must be allowed, though the plea is itself specially demurrable as amounting to the general issue. A demurrer to a replication, putting in issue a false plea, will be set down for immediate argument. Signing the name on a blank bill of exchange stamp, with an express agreement to draw it for a specified amount, is not a contract to pay any sum which may afterwards be inserted in the bill as between parties having notice of the agreement. Allingham v. Walker, 1 Ir. Jur. 119, C. P.

Immaterial Issue.—The defendant avowed for rent due on a particular day. Plea, "rien in arere." The jury found no rent on the particular day named. Held, that such finding of the jury did not dispose of the actual issue knit between the parties, the precise day, specified by the avowry, not constituting a parcel of the issue; and in such case the time is immaterial. Nevins v. Phelan, 1 Ir. Jur. 166, Ex. Ch.

To a scire facias, on a judgment against the public officer of a banking company, the defendant pleaded, first, that she was not at any time, nor is she now, nor hath she ever been, a member of said society; secondly, payment; and thirdly, that the said judgment was had and obtained, and was still kept on foot, and suffered to be, and remain in force, by the fraud and covin of the plaintiff, and the said public officer. Held, on special demurrer, that the first plea was bad, as it tendered an immaterial issue, and also as it traversed matter not alleged. Neale v. McDonald, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 163, Q. B.

To a declaration in indebitatus assumpsit against an administratrix, containing counts for use and occupation, and the money counts, the defendant pleaded to the whole declaration, that before she had any notice of the said demand, and before she had any notice of the making of the said promises, she had fully administered. Held, to be bad, as tending an immaterial issue, and as surplussage. Commissioners of Education v. Loughnan, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 167, Q. B.

Held, also, that surplussage, tending to embarrass the pleading, is ground of special demurrer. Id.

Quære, would such a plea to the count for use and occupation be a good plea. Id.

Common Forms.—The first count of a declaration was against the defendant as maker of a promissory note, stating a promise to pay "according to the tenor and effect thereof," and was followed by the money counts, with a promise to pay "the said several monies respectively to the plaintiff on request." Held, that the omission of the words "last-mentioned," in the statement of the second promise, was not ground of special demurrer. Sonder v. Darcy, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 50, Ex.

Counts for goods sold, and for work and labour done, the money counts commenced with "whereas also," and the words "last-mentioned" occurred in the conclusion. Held, that the first count was bad, on special demurrer, for want of a promise. Planagan v. Nally, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 230, C. P.

Indorsee against acceptor. The declaration contained a special count, with the usual promise to pay, and the money counts, and concluded, "that the defendant afterwards, in consideration of the promises respectively, then and there, promised the plaintiff to pay the said several last-mentioned monies respectively on request; yet he hath disregarded his promise, and hath not paid any of the said monies, or any part thereof, to the plaintiff's damage, &c." Held, to be a sufficient averment of a breach of the promise contained in the special count. Burke v. Cooney, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 204, C. P.

Semble, that the form of pleading the common counts, prescribed by the general rules of Hilary Term, 1832, constitutes but one consolidated count. Wade v. Croker, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 514, Ex. (See contra McGregor v. Groves, 18 L. Jou. N. S. Ex. 109; Morse v. James, 11 M. & W. 831; Morrissey v. Walsh, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 296.)

In a declaration by payee against the maker of a note, the first count averred, that whereas the defendant made his promissory note in writing, and thereby promised to pay the plaintiff £45 three months after date, which period is now elapsed. Held, on special demurrer, that the promise to pay was sufficiently averred. Conway v. Lewis, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 4, Q. B.

The form of declarations, as settled by the judges, should be strictly followed. Id.

In an action by indorsee against drawer of a bill of exchange, the declaration contained the words, "which period is now elapsed," and, in the conclusion of the money counts, the word "promise" was used, instead of "promises." Held good, on special demurrer. Barrett v. Daly, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 518, Q. B.

Title of Declaration.—A declaration on promises was entitled generally, as of Michaelmas Term, 1842, and stated the promises and breach thereof to have been made on the 16th of November, 1842. Held good, on general demurrer. Day v. Wright, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 240, C. P.

The declaration entitled generally, as of Michaelmas Term, stated, that the defendant, on the 20th of August preceding, made his bill of exchange payable three months after date, which period had then elapsed. Demurrer, because the cause of action appeared thereby to have accrued after declaration filed. The declaration was held to be good. Foulkes v. Mowlds, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 507, Ex.

Where the cause of action accrues during term, the declaration must be specially entitled. Croft v. Snagg, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 8, Q. B.

Indorsee against acceptor. The declaration entitled generally, as of Michaelmas Term, 1847, and filed on the 16th of November, in that year, stated the bill of exchange as made on the 18th of October, 1847, and as payable forty-one days after the date thereof, which period has now elapsed; a demurrer, assigning for special cause, that the said action appeared to have been commenced before the bill was due, was over-ruled, on the ground that the bill may have been dated on a day prior to that on which it was alleged to have been made. French v. Tottenham, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 245, C. P.

The declaration was entitled generally, as of Trinity Term, 1847, and stated that certain persons, "on the 9th day of November, 1846, made their bill of exchange, payable seven months after date, which period has now elapsed." A special demurrer assigning as cause, that the bill appeared to have become payable on the last day of the term of which the declaration was entitled; that by law, and mercantile usage, the defendant was not bound to pay the bill until 9 o'clock, P. M., on that day, and that it did not appear that the declaration was filed after that hour upon that day, was over-ruled. Southey v. Magan, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 250, C. P.

Quære, would the demurrer have been sustained the declaration had stated the bill to have been stated upon the 9th of November, 1846. Ib.

A declaration was entitled as of a term subsequent to the term of the defendant's appearance, in order to include a cause of action which accrued since the entry of the appearance. The court set aside the declaration with costs, and refused to allow it to be amended. Hinds v. Shannon, 10 r. L. Rep. 458, Ex.

Multifariousness.—Averry for additional or annual rent. The plea averred, "that a right to demand the said additional rent accrued to the said defendant, more than twenty years before any part of said rent became payable, and that the defendant did not within twenty years next after the right, to demand the said additional rent, accrued to him, receive claim, demand, or make any distress for, or bring any action to recover the said additional rent, but always did thence hitherto receive and accept the said original rent of £158 is. as the rent of, and payable out of the said demised premises. This plea is bad, on special demurrer, as multifarious, being a plea of the Statute of Limitations, and also a plea of waiver, and it is bad, on general demurrer, as a plea of waiver. Daly v. Lord Bloomfield, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 74, 76, Q. B.

Names of Parties.—The declaration stated, but by indenture made between W. G., by the name and description of W. F. of the one part, and T. T. of the other part, W. F. demised. Held sufficient, on special demurrer, without an averment that he was known by one name, as well as by the other. Knox v. Irwin, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 250, Ex.

Pleas amounting to the General Issue.—See Humphrys v. Lord Mayor of Dublin, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 159, Q. B.

Demurrers.—If a demurrer be pleaded to the whole declaration, assigning certain special causes to particular counts, and others applicable to the conclusion, the latter can alone be relied upon if any one count be good. Byrne v. O'Flaherty, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 90, Ex.

A demurrer which covers too much is bad. Knox v. Irwin, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 250, Ex.

Discontinuance.—The declaration contained three counts, on three bills of exchange, and the money counts. Plea, to the third count award and satisfaction, and to the first, second, fourth, fifth, and last counts, a special plea, in the nature of a plea of the Statute of Frauds. Replication, traversing the first plea, and demurring to the second. Held, that though the second plea was bad, judgment should be given for the defendant, there being a discontinuance, the plaintiff having treated the money counts as several counts, and not having replied to the sixth. Cochrane v. Fitzpatrick, 8 r. L. Rep. 187, Q. B.

Trespass for taking, detaining, and impounding goods, and that thereby the goods were lessened in value, and damaged. The plea answered the taking, leaving the lessening and damaging unanswered. The plaintiff pleaded over, without marking judgment of nil dicit, for the part of the declaration uncovered by the plea. Held, that he had not thereby worked a discontinuance. Atkinson v. Nesbitt, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 271, C. P.

Pleading Statutes.—Although words of equivalent meaning may suffice for pleading a Statute, the better course is an exact adoption of the language of the Legislature. Kealy v. Bokin, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 363, C. P.

Plea, Puis darreign continuance.—The cause having been called on for trial, the defendant put in a plea in the nature of a plea, puis darreign continuance, alleging that the matter of defence arose "after the several supposed causes of action accrued," in an affidavit contemporaneous with, and in verification of the plea, the defendant stated that the matter of the plea had arisen, within eight days last past, next before the pleading of the said plea. Held, that the plea was ill, there being no precise averment that the matter of defence had arisen after the last continuance. Atkinson v. Nesbitt, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 271, C. P.; S. C., BL D. & O. 184, N. P. [Per Doherty, C. J.]

A scire facias, to revive a judgment after tracing its devolution by assignment, and otherwise, to A., stated her death intestate, and a grant of administration by the Court of Prerogative to B., who, as administratrix, assigned secundum formam statuti to the persons from whom the plaintiff deduced title. The plea filed by the coexecutor stated, that A. made her last will and testament, but named no executor thereof, and that administration, as in the case of intestacy, was granted by the Prerogative to B., but alleged that puis darreign continuance, to wit on the 12th day of June, 1847, a sentence was pronounced by the same court, by which the will of A. was established, and the letters of administration granted to B. were "cancelled," and "declared to be utterly null and void, and to have no force or validity in law whatsoever," and by which sentence administration, cum testamento annexo, was granted to another person. Held, on general demurrer, that this plea could not be supported. Bevan v. Lloyd, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 228, C. P.

Profert.—Scire facias by the executor of the cognizee; the defendant was called on to shew wherefore the plaintiff should not have execution against him, "according to the form of the recovery, without an allegation that the plaintiffs did so as executors, profert of the letters testamentary was made. Held, sufficient. Falls v. Brassington, 1 Ir. Jur. 8, Ex.

POLICE—See MAGISTRATES. RATES.

POOR LAW.

Guardians.—Where a mandamus directed to the poor law guardians commanding them to appoint collectors of poor's rate, and to issue their warrants to the persons so appointed. The guardians returned, that they had appointed collectors, all of whom save one, had entered into securities as required by the Poor Law Act, and that one of the collectors had not duly perfected his securities, and that the guardians had passed a resolution not to issue their warrants until all the collectors had been duly appointed, and had perfected their securities. Held, that the return was insufficient, and offered no reasonable excuse for the guardians not doing their duty. Reg. v. Guardian of the Tuam Union, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 320, Q. B.

Where the Poor Law Commissioners, under the 1 & 2 Vic., c. 56, s. 36, had ordered the guardians of a union to assess the sum of £400, (an additional sum incurred in completing the workhouse,) on the poor's rate, which the guardians had refused. Held, that a mandamus would lie in such case. Poor Law Commissioners v. Guardians of Clones Union, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 26, Q. B.

Held, also, that the court had no power to inquire into the soundness of the discretion exercised by the Commissioners in such a case. Ib. [Per Pennefather, C. J., and Crampton, J.] Sed, that such a question ought not to be entertained upon motion. Ib. [Per Perrin, J.]

Under the 36th section of the Poor Law Act, (1 & 2 Vic., c. 56,) the Poor Law Commissioners had made an order for an additional sum to be raised out of the poor's rate. Held, that they must, on an application for a mandamus to the guardians to levy such sum, show clearly to the court that this order is within the scope of the authority. The Poor's Law Commissioners v. The Edenderry Union, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 29, Q. B.

Held, also, that this court has jurisdiction, under the 114th section, to adjudicate upon the legality of such an order, and that such will be done as well upon application for a mandamus as upon a return thereto. Ib.

An order directed that a board of guardians should be individually liable for costs, and a rule nisi for an attachment having issued to enforce that order, such rule must be served on all the members of the board. The Queen v. The Guardians of the Tuam Union, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 325, C. P.

Guardians of the poor having acted in the office as such, have no power to resign the trust so reposed in them. Poor Law Commissioners v. The Guardians of the Limerick Union, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 402, Q. B.

In case the guardians refuse to act, the court will not allow a mandamus to issue, another specific remedy having been provided by the Poor Law Act. Ib.

Paid Guardians.]—The paid officers, appointed under the 25th and 26th sections of the 1 & 2 Vic., c. 56, may properly sue under the style of "The guardians of the poor of the—— Union." Guardians of Castlerough Union v. Dillon, 1 Ir. Jur. 229.

POWERS.

Where a lease of three lives, renewable for ever, was put in settlement, and a power to the successive tenants for life "to demise, or lease, for any term, or number of lives, or years, consistent with their respective interests therein, to commence in possession, and not in reversion." Held, that a lease for three lives, other than those in the head lease, with a covenant for perpetual renewal, was a valid execution of the power. Smith v. Clarke, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 78, 205, C. P.

A power to lease for any term or number of years not exceeding three lives, or thirty-one years. Held, to authorize a lease for the lives of three persons, and also for the term of thirty-one years, to be computed concurrently, which ever should last longest. Hazier v. Powell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 395, Ex.

Though the execution of such a lease operates by way of appointment, it is sufficient to describe it in pleading as a lease made by the donee, by virtue, and in pursuance of the leasing power. Ib.

A lease by tenant for life, under a leasing power, reserving rent to the lessor, his heirs and assigns, with whom also the covenants were made in stand of the persons entitled in remainder, was held to be good. Ib.

A lease was executed,—under a power which required the execution to be in the presence of two witnesses,—in the presence of one subscribing witness, and in the presence of another person who could testify to the fact, but had not previously, nor at the time been called upon to be a witness. Held, not to be a due execution of the power. Church v. Donnell, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 306, C. P.

G. in 1754 obtained a lease of lands, (of which the premises sought to be recovered in the ejectment were part,) for a term of forty-nine years, or three lives; and in 1756 he assigned the residue of the term to T. E. who, in 1764, became entitled to the fee; I. demised his portion to J. M. who remained in possession until a new lease was made to him, in 1805, by K., the assignee of J's interest. The son of T. E., in 1772, made his will, under which his son, E. P., became tenant for life, with remainder to his first, and other sons, in strict settlement; and by that will a power was given to the tenant for life to demise the property, in his possession, for any term not exceeding thirty-one years, in possession, and not in reversion, reserving the best improved rent, with clauses of distress and re-entry. E. P., under that power, executed a lease to K., having the residue of the term vested in him, and J. M. being a tenant to K. under the title derived from J. Held, that such power did not authorize the tenant for life to make a lease of the reversion, and that the lease to K. by E. P. was therefore invalid. Powell v. Kelly, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 192, Q. B.

Held, also, that the 5 Geo. 2, c. 4, did not make such lease one in possession; the provisions of that Statute are in reference to, and assume the right of the lessor to execute a renewal. E. P. having but a reversion, had therefore no right to deal with the possession. Ib.

Held, also, that surrender of the estate of J. M. could not be presumed, because there was no power to make the lease of 1793. Ib.

Held, also, that the registration of a deed, operating in law as a surrender, is not equivalent to the registration of an actual deed or instrument of surrender. Ib.

XVI. ERROR, COURT OF.

I. PRACTICE GENERALLY.

Generally.—Parties cannot by consent vary a rule of court, without making such consent a rule of court. Dawson v. Bell, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 279, Q. B.

In alleging a defence at law to the merits, it is not necessary to state the facts on which counsel is advised; it is sufficient for the defendant to allege, that he has fairly disclosed all the facts to his counsel, and that he has advised him, he has a good substantial defence at law, to the action. Adams v. Nerney, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 284, C. P.

Where the defendant himself should generally make the affidavit, if he be prevented from doing so by the act of God, an affidavit made by his attorney may be used instead. Scott v. Macaulay, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 40 Q. B.

A party is not bound to notice an irregularity when he has notice of the proceeding in reference to which the irregularity is committed, unless such irregularity is apparent on the face of the proceedings. Mathers v. Coyle, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 280, Q. B.

It is entirely in the discretion of the judge at Nisi Prius, whether he will admit or reject a rebutting case. Anonymous, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 39, Ex.

The court will not grant liberty to proceed in an action after a delay of two years, without serving notice of the application on the defendant. Seymour v. Blake, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 285, C. P.

A copy of a petition against an attorney should be served at his registered lodgings, before he is called on to answer the matter of it. Chambers v. Franklin, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 356.

When the record of the memorial of the assignment was not on the record before the Court of Error, it was held that the plaintiff in error, who assigned for error, that there was no such record of the memorial, was bound to have made an application upon notice, before the case came on for argument, for a writ of certiorari to have the said record brought for inspection, and, not having done so, the court would not suspend their judgment till the application was made, he having no merits. Creagh v. Fulton, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 322, Ex. Ch.

II. PROCESS.

Irregular Service.—Where a defendant applied to set aside proceedings, on an affidavit that he had not been served with the process, and he was ordered to prosecute the process server, and upon the trial the jury disagreed, although there was strong evidence of the process server's guilt, the court afterwards made the conditional order absolute, with costs, although the defendant would be thereby enabled to plead the Statute of Limitations to any future action for the same demand. Comerford v. Burke, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 197, C. P.

If it appear to the court probable that the defendant was not served with process, they will, on the affidavit of the defendant, that he is ready to prosecute the process server for perjury, order his affidavit to be taken off the file for that purpose, and allow the costs of proceedings to abide the event. Ib.

A writ of ca. ad resp. was forwarded to defendant's land agent, with a request to forward the same to the defendant, who, it was supposed, was out of the country; subsequently a notice was served upon plaintiff's attorney by O. S., cautioning him from proceeding further in the cause as the defendant was in the country, and at large, when the writ was forwarded to his agent, and the notice was signed by O. S., as "attorney for the defendant," the court allowed the service to be deemed good service. Anonymous, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 161, Q. B.

Service of a writ upon the defendant's servant deemed good service of the defendant, giving him notice thereof by a letter through the Post Office, inclosing a copy of the writ, after it was out of return. Knipe v. O'Reilly, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 199, C. P.

The court refused to allow the service of a writ on the agent resident in Ireland, of a party who was residing in France, to be deemed good service of the latter. If a sufficient attempt be unsuccessfully made the court will assist. Gillespie v. Cumming, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 200, C. P.

To render the service of process at the office of the proprietor of a newspaper, instead of personal service thereof, valid and sufficient to warrant the entry of parliamentary appearance, such facts must be spread upon the affidavits of service, as will bring the case within the provisions of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 76, and from which it will appear to the court that the suit, or proceeding against the defendant, is in relation to his character of newspaper proprietor. Coffey v. Barrett, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 81, Q. B.

A statement of service, "by leaving with a clerk of the defendant, at the office of the said defendant, where the newspaper, of which the said defendant is the registered proprietor, is published, situate, &c., a true copy." Held, insufficient. Ib.

In this case the plaintiff might have applied for an order, that the service already had be deemed good service. Ib.

Semble, that the Christian and surname of the attorney, for the plaintiff, should be signed in full, at the foot of the English notice attached to the capias. Ib.

The service of process on Sunday is absolutely void, by the Statute of 7 Wm. 3, c. 17, s. 7; and where it appears from the process server's affidavit that the writ was served on Sunday, the court will set aside the proceedings. Lewis v. Kirwan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 123, Ex.

The service of an order on an officer of a Court of Record, at a place where, and time when, he does not transact the business of the court. Held, bad service. McDonna v. Hanly, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 155, Q. B.

It is no irregularity to include more than one defendant in a capias, and afterwards declare against them separately. Crawford v. McDonnell, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 194, Q. B.

Where, after due service of process, the process server was attacked, and the original writ taken from him, the court granted a new writ, and allowed the plaintiff to proceed upon it, as he would have been entitled to proceed if the original had not been lost. Anonymous, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 40, L. E.

Where defendant, on being served with a copy of the writ, snatched the original from the hands of the process server and absconded, the court deemed such service good, the plaintiff to be at liberty to issue a duplicate writ serving the order. Robinson v. Weir, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 41, Ex.

Where it appeared that the capias was served by the plaintiff, and a parliamentary appearance entered, the court set aside the proceedings upon terms. Beamish v. Fitzmaurice, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 497, Q. B.

Quære, is service of process by the plaintiff irregular. Ib.

The defendant against whom judgment had been marked, and a writ of inquiry had been issued, having sworn that he had never been served with the process, but admitted the debt, the court ordered him to pay the amount of the plaintiff's demand to him, and that the officer should lay over the process server's affidavit, in order that he might be prosecuted, reserving the question of setting aside the proceedings, and the plaintiff's costs in the mean time. Fahie v. Nash, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 304, C. P.

Where the process server was prosecuted by the defendant, and convicted of perjury, the court set aside the civil proceedings with costs, but refused to make the plaintiff pay the costs of the prosecution. Lewis v. Hynes, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 177, L. E.

The court refused to set aside a parliamentary appearance, on the ground of non-service of the writ on the defendant not having sworn to merits, or so how he obtained knowledge of the proceedings, denied service of a copy of the process. Bailey v. Macklin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 312, C. P.

Substitution of Service.—This court will substitute service of process upon a partner out of the jurisdiction, by serving a partner within the jurisdiction, although the demand was sworn to be a partnership demand, and that the partnership was continued. Oldham v. Shaw, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 1, C. P.

The court will not deem a service of the writ sufficient, unless it is made to appear that the writ reached the hands of the defendant. Finney v. Gore, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 3, C. P.

The court will order service of a writ of ad respondendum to be substituted where there have been several ineffectual attempts to serve the defendant, and where there are special circumstances to lead to the belief that he was concealed in the house, on one occasion, when the process server went to serve him. Anonymous, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 99, Q. B.

In an order to substitute service of process on a partner resident out of the jurisdiction, by serving a partner within it, it is necessary that the plaintiff should state that the cause of action is a partnership demand. The following statement was held sufficient—"The action is brought against defendants as partners in trade for goods sold and delivered." McKenny v. Mark, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 163, Q. B.

Where it was sought to revive a judgment against the heir and terre-tenants of the defendant, and the heir was resident in England, service on him was substituted, by serving the guardian of his fortune, who resided in this country, as guardian of his person, with whom he resided in England. Bond v. Bond, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 163, Q. B.

Conditional order granted to shew cause against service of a Scire Facias, (the return of which was out at the time of application,) on the law agent of the consor residing out of the jurisdiction, that he was, and had been for some years the of the consor. Bruce v. Poe, 4 Ir. L. Rep. P.

The court will not make the said conditional absolute, without notice of the motion being given to the law agent. Ib.

Where the court will not in general deem service already had good service, the same not being of the court, but will give an order to substitute service. Ib.

Where the premises, and serving a party interested with the ejectment notice and summons, out of the jurisdiction, will not be deemed good service. Doe dem. Stewart v. Casual Ejector, 3 Rep. 20, C. P.

Where a defendant resided out of the jurisdiction, the court refused to substitute service of a ca. ad res. on a receiver appointed over his estate, and on a party by whom he had entered appearances in other actions in this court two terms previously. See v. Austin, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 258, Q. B.

Where the defendant was out of the jurisdiction, the court refused to substitute service of a ca. ad res. on his land agent and attorney, although he had previously brought actions in this court, and recently proceeded by civil bill against the defendant, by the same attorney, it not appearing that such actions were still pending. Fitzgerald v. Doe, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 259, L. E.

Where service of a ca. ad res. substituted on the land agent of a defendant resident out of the jurisdiction, where it appeared he was present in person, by his attorney, in an action that was still pending. Service on the land agent, in such a case, is a way of notice only, and not as giving the jurisdiction. Macculagh v. Sharpe, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 260, L. E.

Where the court has no jurisdiction in a personal action, to substitute service on a defendant resident out of the jurisdiction, unless under very special circumstances. Burke v. Quinlan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. Q. B.

Where the plaintiff having sworn that the defendant had left the country for the purpose of avoiding creditors, and the agent of the defendant having informed him that the defendant was residing out of the jurisdiction, the court gave liberty to substitute service of the conditional order, for the scire facias, on the said agent. Ryan v. Lentoigne, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 362, C. P.

Where the court granted a conditional order for substitution of service of a scire facias on the brother of the consor, against whom a separate judgment had been entered for the same debt, the consor being in America. Watson v. Armstrong, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 219, C. P.

Where service of a writ on the hatchman of the sheriff's office will not be deemed good service on a prisoner, service on the governor of any of the Dublin gaols will be deemed good service. Anonymous, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 275, Q. B.

Where service of process on the keeper of the Marshalsea was deemed good service of the defendant, who in confinement therein, the said keeper having refused to bring him into the hatch for the purpose of serving him served. Maguire v. Gardiner, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 310, C. P.

Where the refusal of the keeper to bring forward the prisoner, for the purpose of having him served, was a contempt of court. Ib.

The court ordered substitution of service, of a scire facias, on the land agent of the consor, who resided abroad, where the amount of the judgment was small, and the expense of attempting personal service would have been great. Executors of Langton v. Massey, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 412, C. P.

In an action against partners, the court refused to substitute service of a ca. ad res. upon one partner, for another residing out of the jurisdiction; the 3 & 4 Vic., c. 105, s. 37, restricting a plea in abatement for non-joinder of a co-defendant, to cases where the latter is resident within the jurisdiction. Viner v. Boyd, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 433, L. E.

Where one of two executors of a deceased consor of a judgment resided in England, and the other could not be discovered, the court refused to substitute service of the scire facias on a party who had acted as solicitor for the said executor in some late Chancery proceedings; but required that the executor residing in England should be served, and granted a conditional order, that service on him should be deemed good service on his co-executor. Atteridge v. Lord Audley, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 90, C. P.

An affidavit to ground a motion for substitution of service upon parties out of the jurisdiction, should state the grounds of the belief of the deponent that the parties are resident out of the jurisdiction. Lessee Trumbal v. Ejector, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 358, Q. B.

Service of a cupias ad respondendum will be substituted on the Irish agent of an English Insurance Company, in those cases only in which the action is brought upon a policy of insurance. Eiffe v. Caledonian Insurance Company, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 38, Ex.

Where the members of a mining company were resident out of the jurisdiction, service was allowed to be substituted on the officer who superintended the mines, and paid the workmen. Roberts v. Cornish, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 539, Q. B.

The court has authority, under 43 G. 3, c. 58, to order service of process to be substituted on a defendant resident out of the jurisdiction; and it is a question of discretion, depending on the particular circumstances of each case, whether the court will make such order. Phelan v. Johnson, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 527, Ex.

Service on clerk of board of guardians is good service on the guardians, if made either immediately before, or at a meeting of the board of guardians. Poor Law Commissioners v. Cootehill Union, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 128, Q. B.

This court will not substitute service of a cupias on the attorney of a defendant resident out of the jurisdiction, unless a suit be actually pending in this court to which he is a party. Murphy v. Crewsdon, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 161, Q. B.

In applications of this nature the practice is for the party to move for an order to substitute, and it is irregular to effect service, and then move to have it good. Ib.

Service of process on a lunatic substituted, by serving the manager of the asylum in which he was confined. Wilmot v. Marmion, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 224, Q. B.

In an action of covenant against T. H., and his son T. G. H., as co-covenantors in a mortgage deed, a writ of capias ad respondendum was served upon the son, and at the same time a copy left with him for his father, who was then out of the jurisdiction, and a copy was also left at the residence of the latter. T. H. shortly after proposed to the plaintiff's attorney an arrangement of the debt, and admitted the service of the writ upon his son. The court refused to hold the above service good service of T. H., or to grant an order to substitute service on him, by serving his attorney in a pending equity suit. Fowler v. Hemsworth, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 77, Ex.

The court will substitute service on the agent of an English insurance company, resident in Dublin. O'Brien v. —, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 183, Ex.

The court substituted service of the capias on the land and law agent. Mandeville v. Eyre, 1 Ir. Jur. 269, Ex.

In case for libel against three defendants, two of whom resided in England and one here, the agent of the other two, the court refused to substitute service on the defendants out of the jurisdiction by a service upon them, and on their agent, the co-defendant, in this country. Waterhouse v. Hatfield, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 38, Ex.

In an action upon a policy of assurance effected

IV. PRACTICE AS TO PLEADINGS.

Declaration.—Where three defendants were included in the one common law subpoena, and a joint appearance was entered for two of them, upon which separate declarations were filed against each. Held that such declarations were regular. Le-nausse v. Stokes, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 109, Ex.

Where the last day for entering an appearance was the last day for filing declarations, and the appearance was entered before twelve o'clock, on the following morning the Court allowed the plaintiff to file his declaration as of the preceding day. Jackson v. Cottingham, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 10, Q. B.

A declaration, by the bye must be filed in term, and a copy served on the opposite party in the term in which it was filed. Hunt v. Lane, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 56, Q. B.

The practice of filing declarations, by the bye considered. Southey v. Magon, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 250, P.

Where a declaration in chief was filed in Hilary term, and an appearance entered in that term, the plaintiff declared against the defendant on 3rd of April, and served a copy of the declaration on that day. Held, that the proceedings were perfectly regular according to the practice of the court, and that 52nd general rule does not at all alter that practice. Story v. Hassard, 10 Ir. L. p. 547.

Strangers to the writ may declare, by the bye before a declaration in chief. Ball and others v. Cox, D. & O. 28, Q. B.

Where the last day for entering an appearance is the first of June, which was also the last day for filing the declaration, so as to have judgment or plea of Trinity Term, and notice of appearance was served on the following day; in consequence of which, the plaintiff lost his opportunity of declaring in time. The court granted liberty to the plaintiff to file a declaration, and the rules to plead as of the first of June, and the costs of the motion. Broadbent v. Potter, 1 Ir. Jur. 264, Ex.

If a prisoner be in the custody of the sheriff on a writ of habeas corpus for two terms, without any declaration having been filed against him, he is not entitled to be discharged from custody, under the 8th of Anne c. 9, 1r. The defendant may, at any time within two terms after his arrest, put the usual two-day rule on the plaintiff, to declare against him; but if he suffer two terms to pass without serving such rule, he must have himself removed by habeas corpus into the custody of the marshal before he can rule the plaintiff to declare. O'Donnell v. Sweeney, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 239, Ex. [Note.—A different practice prevails in England.]

Particulars of demand.—When the plaintiff does not furnish a bill of particulars, the defendant may move at once for them, without making any application to the plaintiff, and he will be entitled to the costs of the motion. Earl O'Neil v. Orr, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 287, Q. B.

The plaintiff having, in his bill of particulars, referred the defendant to an account previously furnished, and not having sworn to the probable length of the said account, or to the particular time of the service of it, the court directed him to furnish a full account in his bill of particulars. Steele v. Leadbetter, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 376, C. P.

After plea a special case must be made for the delivery of a bill of particulars; an affidavit that they are necessary for the defence is not sufficient. Blackwood v. Jones, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 328, C. P.

A bill of particulars for money lent, without specifying any date, is insufficient. Ferguson v. Hassard, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 178, C. P.

But a defendant cannot require the plaintiff to specify in his bill of particulars, under what voucher or document (if any) he claimed with the dates and particulars thereof. Id.

A plaintiff omitted to file a bill of particulars with his declaration; but on being served with a notice of motion on the same day, to compel him to furnish it, paying the costs incurred, forwarded it before six o'clock on the same evening, with an offer to pay the costs incurred up to that time. Held, that he was justified in refusing to sign a consent to pay a taxed bill of costs of the motion; and on the defendant moving the original motion to compel him, it was refused with costs. Hughes v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 114, C. P.

The plaintiff in an action of covenant, was ordered to furnish a particular of the breaches on which he intended to rely, in consequence of the generality of the breach stated in the declaration. Sparkes v. Blacquiére, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 126, C. P.

A plaintiff in trespass was ordered to furnish a bill of particulars of the time when, and the place where the particular acts of trespass complained of were committed, specifying the boundaries by a map. Larkin v. Lauder, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 227, C. P.

In cases of undoubted mistake, the court will amend the particulars of demand, without prejudice to the rules to plead. Scully v. Scully, Bl. D. & O. 285, Ex.

In action by a stock-broker, for the balance of his account, the particulars of demand need not state the names of the parties who purchased shares, though defendant swear such information is necessary for his defence. Bacon v. Greer, Bl. D. & O. 92, Q. B.

In order to entitle the defendant to his costs of demanding further particulars, notice of the irregularity should be given to the plaintiff. —v.—, Bl. D. & O. 99, Ex.

The court will compel the plaintiff to furnish a bill of particulars in an action of covenant, when the breaches alleged are numerous, and of a general character. Wildridge v. Clarke, 1 Ir. Jur. 151, C. P.

Rules to plead, and motions for further time.—A motion for time to plead must be upon notice. Lewis v. Tisdall, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 39, Ex.

Where the time for pleading has expired, but judgment is not marked, the court will not grant further time to plead in the absence of the plaintiff; but they will grant liberty to serve a notice. Dancer v. Kelly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 32, C. P.

When, after the expiration of the four-day rule to plead—but before judgment has been marked—the defendant applied for time to plead, and obtained leave to serve a notice on the opposite party; after which the plaintiff's attorney marked judgment before the notice had been served upon him, although he had been verbally apprised of the order. The court ordered the judgment to be set aside with costs, and enlarged the time to plead. Dancer v. Kelly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 64, C. P.

A rule to plead was set aside as irregular, having been entered as of a day prior to that on which notice of the filing of the declaration was served. Anonymous, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 204, Q. B.

Application for time to plead, after judgment had been marked for want of a plea pending a consent served for time and which offered to plead substantially issuable pleas, was granted on the terms of defendant's paying all the costs incurred, and the costs of the motion. Adams v. Nerney, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 284, C. P.

The court will not give time to plead, unless notice of the motion has been given; and notice served the day before is sufficient. Robinson v. Julian, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 4, C. P.

The rule to plead was set aside for irregularity, having been entered prior to the day on which notice of filing the declaration was served. Governor of Bank of Ireland v. Brown, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 351, Q. B.

The court will, without notice, extend the time for pleading where no trial will be lost. Osborne v. Power, Bl. D. & O. 285, Ex.

Under particular circumstances the court will give time to rejoin, though notice of the application be not given. Dickson v. Gerty, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 209, C. P.

Pleas, demurrers, &c.—Leave was given to withdraw a demurrer to a plea in replevin after argument; demurrers to four other pleas having been held good, and issue joined on another. Reeves v. Morris, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 3, Q. B.

The declaration was filed on the 1st of May, against an attorney of the Exchequer, as if he were an attorney of the Queen's Bench, when, in fact, he was not so; and an amended copy of the same was served on him on the 19th of May, and interlocutory judgment was signed on the 2nd of June. Held, that a cautionary notice on the part of the defendant, on the 4th of June, was too late to ground a motion to set aside the proceedings on the ground of irregularity. Stewart v. Chadwick, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 5, Q. B.

Where one of several avowries cannot be amended on the file, it will be necessary to apply to the court for liberty to file a new engrossment of all the avowries to be filed. Dancer v. Kelly, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 3, C. P.

The defendant having pleaded a recovery in the Assistant Barristers' Court, prout patet per recordum, the plaintiff replied nul tiel record, concluding with a verification, and giving a day to the defendant to bring in the record, and afterwards set down the cause for argument. Held, that the plaintiff was irregular in not having given the defendant an opportunity of rejoining. Fuzimon v. Lyons, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 222, C. P.

In all cases of pleas of record or demurrer, counsel must certify that the plea or demurrer is tenable, and such certificate will not be considered by the court as a mere matter of form. McNevin v. Mason, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 89, C. P.

After a demurrer to a declaration has been overruled, the defendant will not be let in to plead, without a special application, grounded on an affidavit of merits. Lindsay v. Parkinson, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 124, Ex.

The plaintiff having filed two declarations, in the same term, against the defendant, who appeared in the second action alone, and filed a demurrer to the declaration in the first. The court held the appearance sufficient, and refused to set aside the demurrer as having been filed without appearance. Day v. Wright, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 179, C. P.

Where, on argument of a demurrer, the objections have not been noted in the judges' books, in pursuance of the 134th rule of the court, the party obtaining judgment on such objections will not be allowed his costs. Cochrane v. Fitzpatrick, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 187, Q. B.

All grounds of general demurrer should be noted in the judges' books. Birch v. Blennerhassett, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 394, Q. B.

A demurrer will not be set aside on motion as being frivolous; but if it appear to be so, the court will set it down for immediate argument. Burgett v. Daly, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 518, Q. B.

Where the plaintiff's attorney is prevented from setting down a demurrer to his pleading in time to be argued in the term, by the promises of the defendant's attorney to withdraw the demurrer as frivolous, upon certain terms with which he does not comply, the court will order the demurrer to be put in the list for argument. Gower v. Brett, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 8, Q. B.

In an action of libel, the defendant having pleaded the general issue, and the special plea of an apology under the 6 & 7 Vic. c. 96, s. 2, the court refused to allow him to withdraw the latter plea, the plaintiff having sworn that he would be prejudiced thereby at the trial. Sullivan v. Lemken, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 463, C. P.

In an action by the assignees of a bankrupt against sheriff for selling a bankrupt's goods, the defendant was allowed to withdraw his plea for the purpose of serving a notice to dispute the act of bankruptcy. Thompson v. Waller, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 135, S. C. Bl. D. & O. 27, Q. B.

Pleas in Abatement.—A plea by an officer of the Court of Chancery, insisting on his privilege to be sued in that court, must be verified by affidavit; and such affidavit must be in positive terms, and not upon belief merely. Levy v. Fenton, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 129, Ex.

The defendant, an attorney, who had not taken out license for several years, being served with process, appeared by attorney, and pleaded, in abatement, his privilege to be sued by bill without process. The court refused a motion to set aside the plea, leaving the plaintiff to his replication. Fury v. Ryan, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 518, Ex.

Where there is an insufficient plea in abatement the court will give the plaintiff liberty to mark judgment, though the time for pleading has not expired. Brett v. Taylor, Bl. D. & O. 35, Ex.

An affidavit to verify a plea in abatement is sufficient, though the names of the defendants be not set out, if it appear by necessary implication that the words in the affidavit "defendants in the suit" mean A. and B., the real defendants. Serke v. Hoyte, Bl. D. & O. 140, Q. B.

Pleas of Confession.—A defendant after issue joined on a plea of payment, and notice of trial, filed a plea of confession, with a stay of execution yond the time it might have been had, if the trial had taken place, without withdrawing his plea of judgment. The court set aside both pleas, and allowed the plaintiff to mark judgment. Moffit v. Humphreys, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 312, C. P.

The practice of requiring pleas of confession to be given contemporaneously with securities by bills notes is improper. Sawyer v. Maguire, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 373, Ex.

A plea of confession given by an attorney before trial brought is not invalid, and a judgment entered thereon will not be set aside. Ib.

Quære, would it be otherwise in the case of an ordinary individual. Ib.

To prevent proceedings being taken, the defendant's attorney undertook to sign a plea of confession for the demand, with the usual stay of execution. The plaintiff's attorney thereupon issued a writ against the defendant, sending a copy to the defendant's attorney, requiring him to enter an appearance thereto for the defendant. The defendant's attorney refusing to do so, but still offering to sign the plea of confession, a motion to enforce the writ of an appearance to the writ was refused with costs. Green v. Bingham, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 70, Ex.

Where the defendant inserts a stay of execution in his plea of confession, without the consent of the plaintiff, the application should be to set aside the plea, and the affidavit should negative the fact of consent by the plaintiff. Moore v. Hockler, Bl. D. & O. 31, Ex.

V. STAYING PROCEEDINGS.

The defendant may enter a rule to stay proceedings until the costs of not going to trial, pursuant to notice, be paid, a trial having been lost by the default of the plaintiff in not delivering the list of names to the sheriff in sufficient time to enable him to summon the jurors six days before the assizes. Gillespie v. Cumming, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 28, Ex.

On a motion to stay proceedings in an action against the bail, on the ground of delay in the plaintiff's proceedings, and that the principal had in the mean time become insolvent, the courts require that the affidavit by the bail should deny collusion with the original defendant. Smith v. Tallan, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 180, Q. B.

Seven actions of trespass were brought against the same defendant, by different plaintiffs, for the taking and detention of their goods until payment of an alleged claim for tolls, proceedings were ordered to be stayed, (upon terms,) in six of the causes, and abide the event of the seventh. McDonnell v. Franks, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 161, Ex.

A motion to stay proceedings in Ireland in an action on a judgment obtained in England, pending a writ of error there, cannot be sustained, unless bail in error have been put in and perfected. Sims v. Thomas, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 415, Ex.

Where two actions had been commenced for the same cause of action, and a rule to discontinue entered in one, proceedings will be stayed in the other, until the costs of the rule to discontinue be paid. Considine v. Mooney, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 485, Q. B.

Where in an action of trespass for diverting a water-course, the plaintiff was non-suited, proceedings were stayed in a second action brought for the same cause, until the costs of the non-suit were paid. Horgan v. Quinlan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 590, Q. B.

The court stayed proceedings in an ejectment, until the costs of a former one, brought in the Queen's Bench by the assignor of the lessor of the plaintiff, were paid, and the costs of the motion, though the tenant taking defence was discharged as an insolvent. Cardale v. O'Connell, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 208, C. P.

A defendant entered the usual rule to stay proceedings, until the costs of not proceeding to trial, pursuant to notice, should have been paid. Held, that defendant by applying for a special jury, and having served notice for the admission of documents before the costs were taxed, waived the benefits of the rule. Deering v. Palmer, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 209, C. P.

Proceedings in ejectment were stayed until the costs in two prior ejectments in the Exchequer were paid, though the plaintiff had been allowed to proceed in the second without an order to pay the costs of the first, and the second was out of court. Duhigg v. Duhigg, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 212, C. P.

A motion for liberty to enter a rule to stay proceedings till the costs of not going to trial pursuant to notice, will not be granted if the side bar rule be not entered within the first four days of term, unless some fatality has occurred. Gernon v. Gernon, Bl. D. & O. 111, Ex.

In an action of covenant the tender of a copy of the deed for oyer is not sufficient, and proceedings will be stayed till the original be produced. Sterne v. Mooney, Bl. D. & O. 235, Ex.

The court postponed a case—argued on behalf of the plaintiff—upon the ground of the defendant's attorney having been suddenly summoned to London, upon the terms of the latter paying the costs of the day, and not charging them to his client. Church v. Dalton, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 355, C. P.

VI. SETTING ASIDE PROCEEDINGS FOR IRREGULARITY.

Writs and Declarations.—In an action against two defendants who had appeared in different terms, and the declaration had been filed as of the term in which, and on the day before, the last appearance had been entered; the court set aside the proceedings for irregularity, the plaintiff not having entered a rule for liberty to file the declaration as of the subsequent term, and having filed the declaration previous to the last appearance. Mathers v. Coyle, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 280, Q. B.

An attorney being sued as an executor, and having voluntarily undertaken to file a plea as an attorney, the court refused a motion to set aside the declaration for want of a writ and appearance, with costs. Fahy v. Dillon, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 180, C. P.

The defendant was sued by the name of W. R. Gibson, he appeared by the name of W. P. Gibson. The plaintiff declared against him by the name in the writ, and obtained judgment for want of a plea. The court refused to set it aside on the ground of irregularity. Lewis v. Gibson, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 82, Ex.

The court will set aside the proceedings against a minor for irregularity, though he is fully aware of his position, and it is not in the discretion of the court to allow the proceedings to stand, and leave the defendant to his writ of error. Green v. Copland, Bl. D. & O. 110, Ex.

The defendants, and one A. L., on the 1st of May, 1846, were indebted to the plaintiff in £37 7s. 9d., one year's rent, payable quarterly, and the tithe rent charge due to that day; on the 2nd of June following a capias issued, returnable the 6th, endorsed for £100 debt, and £3 10s. costs; on the 31st of October the plaintiff's attorney, no steps having been taken in the meanwhile, refused to receive less than a year and a quarter's rent, and demanded the costs of drawing and engrossing a declaration. The defendants, on the 2nd of November, lodged the year's rent in bank to the credit of the plaintiff, and shewed the receipt to his attorney, who, notwithstanding, entered a parliamentary appearance, and proceeded to execution and sale. The court set aside the parliamentary appearance, and all subsequent proceedings, with costs. Bent v. Livingstone, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 99, Ex.

By the notice at the foot of the copy of a writ of capias ad respondendum the defendant was directed to appear at the return thereof, "the day of May next." The plaintiff having notwithstanding notice of the irregularity, entered a parliamentary appearance, and proceeded thereon to judgment. The court set aside the appearance, and all subsequent proceedings. Birch v. Shaw, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 107, Ex.

The defendant, having been served with the writ when going abroad, had forgotten to instruct his attorney. After a writ of inquiry sped, and damages assessed, the court set aside the parliamentary appearance, and subsequent proceedings, upon lodgment of the amount in court, payment of costs, and an affidavit of merits. Quin v. Arthur, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 446, Ex.

A declaration was entitled as of a term subsequent to the term of the defendant's appearance. The court set aside the declaration with costs, and refused to allow it to be amended. Hinds v. Shannon, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 458, Ex.

Notice of a motion to set aside proceedings ought to state on whose behalf the motion is made. Crawford v. M'Donnell, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 104, Q. B.

A writ in which there is no plaintiff's name is a nullity, on which an appearance cannot be entered. Anonymous, Bl. D. & O. 50, C. P.

A writ directed to a county of a city, not existing, is a nullity. Vance M'Cormick, Bl. D. & O. 42, Ex.

The city of Londonderry is a part of the county. Id.

The absence of a date at the foot of a writ is an irregularity, and lapse of time does not waive it, when notice of it has been given at the earliest opportunity. Keat v. Shaw, Bl. B. D. & O. 149, Ex.

An erroneous date in the parliamentary notice at foot of the writ, is not such an irregularity as will vitiate subsequent proceedings. Anonymous, Bl. D. & O. 183, C. P.

Where a writ has been served without any endorsement, stating the amount of debt and costs, the proceedings will be set aside, although notice has been served by plaintiff's attorney stating the amount of debt and costs. Warren v. —, Bl. D. & O. 249, Q. B.

A notice of motion to set aside proceedings for irregularity must set forth the irregularity complained of. Wade v. Dowling, Bl. D. & O. 249, Q. B.

A notice of motion to set aside proceedings for irregularity should set out the irregularity complained of; but if it appear, from the affidavit made to oppose the motion, that the other side knew what the irregularity was, costs will not be given. Williams v. Barton, Bl. D. & O. 253.

Where a trader applies to set aside a judgment as irregular, and contrary to good faith, the court, before granting a conditional order, will put him under terms to commit no voluntary act of bankruptcy. M'Evoy v. Reid, Bl. D. & O. 261, Ex.

Proceedings were set aside, upon the ground of an alteration in the direction of the writ after it had sealed and issued. Couper v. Kerby, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 254, Ex.

A party who seeks to set aside proceedings on the ground of non-service of the process, should apply to the court for relief immediately after notice of the proceedings, and before additional expense has been incurred by the opposite party. Lewis v. Berry, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 45, Ex.

When the defendant swore he had not been served with process, and had a good defence, the court, on a motion to set aside the judgment and proceedings, ordered the amount claimed to be lodged in court, that the judgment be set aside, and that the defendant should plead forthwith, and take short notice of trial. Heneacy v. Wolf, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 205, C. P.

The process server having been convicted of perjury in the affidavit of service, the court set aside the parliamentary appearance with costs, it appearing that the debt was paid. Murphy v. Crofts, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 334, Ex.

A plea was filed on the 4th of May. The defendant, on the 6th of June following, served a notice of motion to set it aside as frivolous, and filed for delay. The court refused the motion, on the ground of laches. Reynolds v. Lopdell, 6 Ir. L. 468, C. P.

In an action by the administratrix of A., against the administrator of B., the declaration stated, that B., in his lifetime, was indebted to A., in his lifetime, in six separate sums of £60, for goods sold and delivered, goods bargained and sold, money lent, money paid, money had and received, and on an account stated, laying the promise by B. to A. After the words, "and whereas also," the declaration averred, that B., in his lifetime, was indebted to A. in two other sums of £60, for goods sold and delivered, and money lent, stating a promise from the defendant to the plaintiff, in their representative capacities, to pay the sums in this count mentioned." After a second "And whereas also," the declaration averred, that the defendant, as administrator, was indebted to the plaintiff as administratrix, in a further sum of £60, upon an count stated, with a promise by the defendant to pay the plaintiffs the monies "in the said last mentioned counts" specified. Plea, treating the declaration as containing but three counts. Whereon plaintiff entered a nolle prosequi as to the three counts to which the defendant pleaded, and marked judgment by default as to the remainder. Held, that the declaration contained but three counts, and the plaintiff, by his nolle prosequi, having put the case out of court, the judgment, and subsequent proceedings, were set aside. Wade v. Croker, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 514, Ex. [See Morrissey v. Walsh, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 293; Morse v. James, 11 M. & W. 831; McGregor v. Graves, 18 L. Jour., N. S. 109, Ex.]

Where an attorney's name is entered in the registry book of the residences of attorneys practising in the court, though not an attorney of the court, and though the entry was made without his sanction or knowledge by a former partner of his, the court refused to set aside proceedings taken against him as an attorney of the court. Knaggs v. French, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 331, C. P.

Nash*, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 304, C. P.

Where there is no cause in court and an affidavit without a stamp is filed, entitled as if in a cause in court, and a fiat obtained thereon, the proceedings will be set aside. Plunket v. Plunket, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 366, Q. B.

An affidavit in support of a motion to set aside the service of a writ was held to be defective in not stating the particular place in which the defendant was served, and for not negating that he was served within the jurisdiction. Maguire v. Scott, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 224, Ex.

Semble, the Christian and surname of the attorney for the plaintiff should be signed in full at the foot of the English notice attached to the capias. Coffey v. Barrett, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 81, Q. B.

The copy of a serviceable capias must not vary from the original either in sound or sense. Spence v. Finn, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 476, Ex.

Pleas and Demurrers.—In trespass for mesne profits, where there was a plea of the general issue, two pleas of liberum tenementum, and a plea of no property in the plaintiff, the court will order the latter to be taken off the file, being unnecessary. Jack v. Swift, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 7, Q. B.

Where an information in the nature of a quo warranto is brought in the name of the coroner at the relation of a private individual, to try the right of the defendant to hold the office of treasurer of the city of Dublin. Quere, can the defendant plead several pleas? Reg. v. Darley, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 334, Q. B.

Where a defendant pleads several pleas, in a case in which he is only entitled to plead one plea, can the objection be raised by demurrer, or is a motion to set them aside, as irregular, the proper course? Ib.

The defendant having demurred to the declaration, for not being properly entitled, the court would not set aside the demurrer as frivolous. Atcock v. Holland, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 366, C. P.

The courts on some occasions have exercised a summary jurisdiction, in ordering objectionable pleas to be struck out; but I am not disposed to carry those decisions farther. Sims v. Thomas, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 420, Ex. [Per Brady, C. B.]

A defendant in an action of debt pleaded by mistake non assumpsit for nil debet. The plaintiff marked judgment for want of a plea, and refused on notice and consent to set it aside without costs. The court set aside the judgment with costs against the plaintiff. Boileau v. Homan, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 118, C. P.

Where a party under terms to plead issuably, pleads an informal plea, upon which the opposite party cannot safely take issue, the court will direct it to be taken off the file with costs. Graydon v. Kernan, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 121, C. P.

In an action of assumpsit containing a count upon a bill, and the money counts, the defendant demurred to the whole declaration, assigning special causes of demurrer to the first count, and pleaded the general issue to the money counts. The demurrer was set aside with costs. Warren v. Haughton, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 26, Ex.

VII. NOTICE OF TRIAL.

The 29th rule of the court, requiring a terms notice before going to trial, when the cause is three terms at issue, is not now acted on. Condon v. Condon, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 427, Q. B.

Plea, filed after the last day for pleading, and before judgment marked, is good, and notice of trial served—on the last day for pleading, and for serving notice of trial—before plea pleaded, is regular. Doolan v. Dunne, Bl. D. & O. 40, Ex.

And under similar circumstances, if there be notice of trial served, the defendant will be made to accept short notice of trial. Byrne v. Jones, Bl. D. & O. 40, Ex.

Notice of trial served in anticipation of a plea on the last day for pleading will be deemed sufficient, if the defendant plead issuably. Lowry v. Robinson, Bl. D. & O. 197, Ex.

VIII. POSTEA.

When the defendant has obtained a verdict, the plaintiff has no right to prevent him from moving on the postea, by lodging with the officer a sum sufficient for the payment of his costs, the defendant being entitled to have a judgment entered for him, as a protection against a future action. Perrin v. Hodgson, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 24, Ex.

When the jury in action of trespass, against several defendants, find, on first plea, general damages, and then apportion them between the defendants, such finding is good, and the court will treat the apportionment as surplusage. Kelly v. Dillon, Bl. D. & O. 267, Ex.

IX.—MOTIONS.—(See different heads.)

Generally.—A motion brought upon a notice served before the affidavits were filed, on which it is grounded, is irregular, and will not be entertained, though copies of the affidavits be served at the same time with the notice. Anonymous, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 169, Q. B.

The defendant is entitled, on the last day of term, to discharge the plaintiff's notice of motion with costs, it not being in the list. On any other day in term, the course would be to put it in the list, and have it discharged with costs. Laird v. Laird, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 210, C. P.

The court will not allow the costs of a motion to set aside proceedings, when the notice of motion does not sufficiently specify the defect upon which the motion is grounded. Lynch v. Ejector, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 240, Ex.

No motion can be entertained when the cause is out of court, until the expiration of a term's notice to the defendant. Jones v. Lucy, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 361, C. P.

The notice of motion to set aside proceedings should state on whose behalf the motion is made. Crawford v. McDonnell, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 104, Q. B.

The court will allow an affidavit to be read in support of a motion in Chamber, though not filed at the time of the service of the notice, if a copy be served with the notice. Smith v. Blair, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 397, Q. B. Ch.

A notice of motion should always state the grounds upon which it is to be made. Anonymous, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 434, Ex.

The affidavit of service of a notice of motion did not state that it had been served before six o'clock in the evening. Held, that defect was not waived by the appearance of the party served, and a cautionary notice served by him, which only specified another alleged defect in the notice. Boileau v. Homan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 183, C. P.

A notice of motion founded on an affidavit "to be filed," is irregular and cannot be used. Taylor v. White, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 44, Ex.

The notice of motion ought not to state that it will be grounded on affidavits "to be filed." Lewis v. Kirwan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 123, Ex.

Costs of a motion will not be given if the party moving omit to ask them. Levy v. Fenton, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 129, Ex.

A notice of motion will not be discharged till set down in the list by one or other party. Stevens v. French, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 244, C. P.

An objection to a notice of motion, stating it to be grounded on affidavits, "this day filed," though not filed till the following day, is waived by the opposite party filing an answering affidavit. Cooper v. Kerby, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 254, Ex.

Counsel should not move, unless furnished with a brief of the documents upon which the motion is founded. Anonymous, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 237, Ex.

A party filing an affidavit as cause against a conditional order, served no notice of a motion to show cause; and the opposite party gave notice of a motion to make that order absolute. Held, that the party moving to make the order absolute had a right to begin. Reg. v. Recorder of Dublin, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 440, Q. B.

A notice of motion to set aside proceedings for irregularity should specify the irregularity. Kirk v. Anderson, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 467, Q. B.

Filing an answering affidavit, and appearing on the notice is no waiver of the irregularity. Ib.

A notice of motion is irregular if it does not state the grounds on which it is made, and a reference to an affidavit filed is not sufficient. Larkin v. Lander, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 227, C. P.

A motion to extend the time for making up a bill of exceptions must be upon notice. Russell v. Whalley, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 492, Ex.

"When there are two notices pending at the same time, one to show cause against a rule nisi, and the other to make rule nisi absolute, unless the other party shall move his motion on or before a day to be named in said notice; and which day shall not be less than two days after the day named in the notice of showing cause; and if, after the said second notice shall become moveable, a question of precedency, as to the two motions, shall arise, that in such case the motion first brought forward is to have precedency." Q. B. 18th April, 1845.

A notice of motion should specify the grounds of the irregularity on which the proceedings are sought to be set aside. Cator v. Flattery, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 117, Q. B.

Taking out an attested copy of a declaration waives an irregularity in the notice of its being filed, and the rule to plead. Cannon v. Willington, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 138; S. C. Bl. D. & O. 47, C. P.

A notice of motion signed by an attorney, who is not the attorney upon record, for the party moving is insufficient. Strettle v.—10 Ir. L. Rep. 461, Ex.

The court will not, in the absence of new facts or documents, review an order made upon motion. Lord Miltown v. Reeves, Bl. D. & O. 273, Q. B.

By the settled practice of the court a conditional order must stand or fall upon the documents on which it has been obtained. White v. Doolan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 500, Ex.

When an affidavit has been filed as cause against a conditional order, but no counsel appeared to shew cause, the court will not, without notice to the opposite party, make the conditional order absolute. Fenton v. Motherwell, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 353, Q. B.

Motion for Liberty to Tot.—In an action of covenant on an annuity deed, by the executor of the grantor, who had obtained judgment on demurrer, the ordinary rule for liberty to tot is the proper one. Brien v. Lord Ponsonby, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 422. [Pennefather, C. J., dissentient.]

Motions for Liberty to Proceed.—The court refused to allow the plaintiff to proceed in a replevin suit, giving a term's notice, when nearly four years had elapsed since the last step was taken, though some of the goods had not been returned. Armstrong v. Freeman, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 174, C. P.

Liberty to proceed, giving a term's notice on a declaration filed six years back, will be granted, unless the defendant can shew some special cause to the contrary, such as the absence or death of a material witness. Moroney v. Danagher, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 562, Ex.

When issue has been joined for three years, liberty to proceed, on giving a term's notice, must be applied for by motion in court upon notice. O'Reilly v. Monaghan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 567, Ex.

Issue had been joined, and notice of trial served six years back, and then withdrawn at the request of the defendant then promising to settle the demand; and subsequently in two years by a letter, the court gave the plaintiff a conditional order for liberty to proceed to trial, giving a full term's notice, and serving the order on the defendant and his attorney personally, previous to the next term. Connor v. Blake, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 341, C. P.

The 29th rule of the court, requiring a term's notice, before going to trial, if the cause be three terms at issue, is not now acted upon. Condon v. Condon, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 427, Q. B.

Motion for New Trial.—The court will not grant a new trial when the damages would necessarily be nominal, and there is no title in question. Purcell v. Nolan, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 258, C. P.

A new trial will not be granted upon the ground that the count in the declaration was not properly framed, if it could have been correctly done. Minkeer v. O'Leary, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 73, Q. B.

A tenant, sued for use and occupation, and who obtains a verdict by reason of the misdirection of the judge, cannot rely upon a wrongful eviction by the landlord during the tenancy, suspending the rent, as cause against a motion for a new trial. Smyth v. Kellott, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 43, Q. B.

When the trial is had before a Baron of the Exchequer the order for a new trial is absolute in the first instance. Doe v. Kennedy, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 35, Ex.

In an action against the defendant as the acceptor of three bills of exchange the plaintiff produced three witnesses, one of whom, who had but imperfect means of knowing the defendant's hand-writing, after stating his belief that two of the bills were accepted in the hand-writing of the defendant, admitted that he thought the acceptance of one of the bills more like the hand-writing of the defendant than the other; the second witness having also given general evidence as to his belief of these acceptances, gave evidence similar to that of the former witness, and added that the hand-writing of the defendant's nephew was very like that of the defendant; the third witness positively swore that neither of these bills were in the hand-writing of the defendant and that one of them was written by his brother. Upon this evidence there was a verdict for the plaintiff, the defendant not having examined any witness. Upon motion to set this verdict aside, and for a new trial upon the ground that it was had against the weight of evidence, and by surprise, and founded on affidavits denying that the defendant ever accepted those bills or authorized any person to do so, and that he was misled by observations of the plaintiff's attorney to the effect that he intended to rely solely upon a case of authority and not of actual hand-writing. Held, that this verdict was not against the weight of evidence; but the court, without admitting the surprise, considering the unsatisfactory evidence of hand-writing and the positive swearing of the defendant, granted a new trial. Smith v. McGonagall, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 267, Q. B.

If a party intend to rely upon a case of surprise for the purpose of disturbing a verdict, he should bring the fact of surprise under the attention of the judge that a note of it may be taken. Ib.

A. declared for the disturbance of a water-course, through which he alleged he had a right to have the water of a certain ancient stream flow, "at all reasonable times." It appeared that A. was tenant from year to year to B., who had a use of this and certain other water from the same stream for more than twenty years, using one at one time, and another at another time, as he pleased; and under whom, until the interest of B. was evicted, the plaintiff had been enjoying the benefit of the stream. Since the eviction the tenant had been holding as tenant from year to year to the head landlord, as he previously held from B.; a verdict being found for the plaintiff. Held, on a motion for a new trial, or for a non suit, on the ground of a variance between the right declared on, and proved, that there was no variance. Hough v. Kennedy, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 182, Q. B.

Water alone cannot be demised without deed; but may be so in conjunction with land. Ib.

Where a verdict was had subject to objections, and the court were of opinion that one of the questions, which the judge at nisi prius refused to leave to the jury, should have been so left. A new trial was refused, as it appeared the result of a second trial would be similar. Kennedy v. Hayes, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 186, Q. B.

The Judge at nisi prius has no power to reserve leave to the party against whom the verdict is given, to move to set aside that verdict, and have a verdict entered for himself without the consent of the opposite party. Hely v. Hicks, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 92, Ex.

The court will not disturb a verdict, though the conclusion the jury came to was not such as the members of the court might individually have arrived at. Rooney v. White, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 153, Ex.

A trial was had by consent upon several judgments of the same date, and between the same parties, and the plaintiff attempted to rebut certain payments, given in evidence by the defendant, by the production of two other judgments against the same party, and which were vested in the plaintiff in a different right from the four preceding, and were the subject of two other distinct actions. The court set aside a verdict for the plaintiff, on payment of costs by the defendant. Daly v. Kelly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 174, C. P.

In an ejectment on the title there was an issue comprehending two questions, viz., a part and parcel question, and of the existence of a cestui que vie. The attention of the judge was not directed to the 7 W. 3. c. 8. and the jury found for the defendant, without stating, or being asked by counsel or judge, on which of the grounds the verdict was found. The court set aside the verdict, and directed a new trial. Coote v. O'Fallon, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 265, C. P.

Held, that the evidence as to M. H. being the principal debtor, was some proof of the allegation in the declaration of a pre-existing separate debt due by M. H. to the defendant; also that the judgment was some evidence of the bond and warrant, and therefore, the court could not set aside the verdict on the ground of the inducement not being proved. Honan v. Ryan, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 106, C. P.

The expression by a judge, of his opinion as to the facts of the case, without submitting them exclusively to the jury, is no ground for setting aside a verdict for mis-direction of the judge. Reg. v. O'Connell, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 261, Q. B.

On a motion for a new trial on the ground, that an affidavit had been improperly rejected in evidence the court, if it see that the evidence so rejected will not affect the verdict, will not grant a new trial. White v. Dowling, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 128, Q. B.

The court, in setting aside a verdict on the ground of the non-production of a written agreement, will put the defendant under the terms, to produce the document to enable the plaintiff to have it stamped. Thunder v. Warren, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 181, Ex.

When an order nisi had been made, setting aside a verdict generally, and no mention made of the costs of the trial, the party succeeding in the second trial is entitled to the costs of the former. Rush v. Purcell, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 379, Q. B.

Notice of motion to set aside verdicts, and for new trials, must, according to the practice of this court, be served within the first two days, and moved on within the first four days. The court will not relax the stringency of this practice, though the party seeking the dispensation, has been prevented from serving notice by a fatality, unless he disclose to the court a case of merits. Blake v. Vaden, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 1, C. P.

The court, prior to the motion, will not allow additional affidavits, in answer to affidavits filed to resist the application, to be filed by the party applying for a new trial. Kelly v. Dolphin, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 78, C. P.

Where a cause had been tried by a special jury, and upon a bill of exceptions a venire de novo was awarded, and the defendant brought down the cause by proviso, it appeared that upon the latter occasion the distingas was in the common form, except that the words "by proviso" were written under the officer's name, and it was objected at the trial; first, that the distingas was informal and irregular; and secondly, that the special jury which had been struck on the former trial was the proper one to try the case. The court refused to disturb the verdict had for the defendant. Smith v. Nangle, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 296, Q. B.

The court will not, after refusing an application for time to make up a bill of exceptions, grant a conditional order to set aside the verdict. Bridgford v. Dublin and Kingstown Railway Company, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 19, C. P.

The court will not postpone the entry of judgment on the postea, in a trial of an ejectment, and a verdict had for the defendant, until after the trial of witnesses of the defendant who were indicted for perjury; the motion being a new trial motion, and moveable during the first four days of term. Rogers v. B. of Arran, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 25, C. P.

If an application to set aside a verdict be made and refused, it is contrary to the rule of court to grant any other motion that is substantially the same. Ib.

If the judge at Nisi Prius entertain a doubt, and wish to have the question reserved for the opinion of the court, costs will not in general be given against the unsuccessful party. Aliter, if the question be reserved by the party seeking the advantage of them. Barratt v. Hyndman, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 109, Q. B. [See Acc. Daly v. Colbert, Ib. 355.]

On a motion for a new trial, on the ground of excessive damages, the certificate stated that the damages were excessive, for the reasons, in the affidavit of the defendant, stated. Held, that this certificate was defective, in omitting to state the facts from which it appeared that the damages were excessive. Dos v. Power, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 438, Ex.

The court will not give leave to serve notice of motion for a new trial on the last of the four days, though an affidavit be made of the party being ignorant of the record being in this court, or of the rule of the court. Coppinger v. O'Dell, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 297, C. P.

If a defendant in ejectment have judgment against him for non-appearance to confess lease, entry, and ouster, the court will not grant a new trial on any terms, unless it clearly appear that the defendant has a just and legal defence to the action. McDonald v. Lowton, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 303, C. P.

A notice of motion for a new trial, which refers to the certificate of counsel for the grounds of the motion, is informal. Anonymous, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 434, Ex.

A motion to increase or reduce damages is in the nature of a new trial motion, and subject to the same rule; and notice of it must be given within the first four days of term. Taylor v. White, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 44, Ex.

A record was tried a second time in mistake, pending a notice for a new trial; the parties on both sides appearing, and producing their evidence, and a verdict given against the party who obtained the first verdict, if the court are satisfied there has been a fair investigation, they will not disturb it. Knos v. Lord Lucan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 96, C. P.

To set a verdict for surprise, the party applying should state specifically the evidence he could have produced. Ib.

Semble, if the facts appear upon the record, and are proved, the judge should not non-suit. The proper course is to move to arrest the judgment, or for judgment non obstante veredicto. Keenan v. Phillips, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 440, Q. B.

If an objection be taken at the trial as to the effect of a deed, and cannot be sustained on a motion for a non-suit, the party making it is not precluded from looking into the deed, and making any other objection. Kingston v. Ready, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 367, Q. B.

X.—DISCONTINUANCE.

1 & 2 Vic., c. 109.]—The court after argument of points saved will not permit the plaintiff to discontinue without costs, under the 1 & 2 Vic., c. 109. Purcell v. Wigmors, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 318, Ex. note. [Per Pennefather, B.]

mere—where a defendant had demurred to the count of a declaration, but neither pleaded or argued to the indebitatus counts, and after argument of demurrer, but before judgment, the plaintiff demanded the defendant with a rule for judgment generally, and the defendant then pleaded to the whole declaration; on motion by the plaintiff to set aside the plea as irregular, and for judgment generally, the court gave judgment for the plaintiff on the plea, allowing the plea to stand to the indebitatus counts only and requiring the defendant to pay short notice of trial;—was there any discontinuance before the court gave judgment on the demurrer? French v. Tottenham, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 245. respasse for taking, detaining, and impounding lands, and that thereby the goods were lessened and aged; the plea applied to the taking and left lessening and damaging unanswered, plaintiff demanded over without marking judgment of nisi dicitur be part of the declaration uncovered by the plea. Held, that he had not thereby worked a discontinuance. Atkinson v. Nesbitt, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 271, C. P.

—JUDGMENTS, (See Scire Facias. Warrant.)

Generally.]—Semble, the grounds of a foreign judgment are not examinable in another country, unless such judgment be plainly repugnant to natural justice, or to the law of the land where it is pronounced. Sims v. Thomas, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 1, Ex.

A vested remainder in fee after an estate tail in session is bound by a judgment, although such remainder never came into possession of the usufruct. Martin v. McCausland, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 1, C. P.

The day marked on the margin of the judgment, pursuant to the 7 W. 3, c. 12, s. 11, is the true date of the judgment. O'Loughlin v. Fogarty, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 63, Ex. [Per Brady, C. B.]

After judgment the functions of the attorney are at an end, and he is not then competent to sign, on behalf of his client, a consent to vacate it. Dean v. Mohan, Bl. D. & O. 34, Ex.

Upon the motion of the assignee of a judgment to set a scire facias to revive, the affidavit should state that a memorial of the assignment had been enrolled, and an attested copy of it be produced. Seaward v. Lee, Bl. D. & O. 262, Ex.

In bringing a writ of error from the Exchequer Chamber to the House of Lords it is necessary that the original transcript of the judgment from the court below, as well as also the judgment of the court of Exchequer Chamber should be lodged with the clerk of the errors of that court. Rogers v. Despard, Bl. D. & O. 91, Q. B.

Rule for Judgment.]—The rule for oyer does not stop the entering the rule for judgment, though it does stop the entering the judgment itself. Fitzpatrick v. Fleming, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 238, Ex.

After the court gives judgment on a motion for judgment as in case of non-suit, or for a new trial, it is not necessary to enter the four day rule for judgment, but judgment may be signed immediately, there being no reservation in the conditional rule. McKiernan v. Kiernan, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 273, Q. B.

The rule for judgment may be entered on a plea of confession with stay of execution, at any time within a year from the time when the stay of execution expired. Oldham v. Dowling, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 468, Q. B.

A judgment of non proes was set aside as irregular, the rule for judgment having been entered within the year, but not served till after its expiration. Rorke v. McCarthy, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 29, Ex.

Motions in Arrest of Judgment.]—In an action for use and occupation, the declaration—entitled generally, as of Easter Term, 1840—stated, that the defendant, “heretofore to wit on the 31st of October, 1840,” was indebted, &c. The money counts averred, that the defendant, “on the day and year aforesaid,” was indebted, &c. Plea, general issue, verdict for the plaintiff. A motion in arrest of judgment was refused, the court presuming that the judge at Nisi Prius directed the attention of the jury to the matters properly in issue, and excluded from their consideration all causes of action which had not accrued before the commencement of the term of which the declaration was entitled. Taylor v. White, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 44, Ex.

In an action of covenant, the defendant craved oyer, and pleaded that the deed was void, because made in pursuance and performance of said supposed agreement, for the purpose of evading a Statute, and the jury having found for the plaintiff, it was held that the defendant could not move in arrest of judgment, on the ground of a corrupt agreement being embodied in the deed as pleaded. Osborne v. Byrne, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 93, C. P.

A motion in arrest of judgment must be made within the first four days of term. Hanan v. Power, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 505, Q. B.

It is not the practice to grant concurrent orders to arrest the judgment, and set aside the verdict. Conway v. Lewis, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 421, Q. B.

Entering Judgment.]—Where there was a plea of confession as to part of a count, and non-assumpsit as to the remainder, the court, after trial and verdict, will give liberty to enter judgment on the confession nunc pro tunc. Lindsay v. Cluston, Bl. D. & O. 286, Ex.

Where there are issues in fact and law, and the plaintiff succeeds on the former, the court will not direct their officer to enter judgment on the demurrer, for the purpose of allowing the plaintiff to have judgment on the postea, unless the defendant consent. Bolton v. Cooke, Bl. D. & O. 43, Q. B.

In an action of debt to recover the sum of £60 plaintiff marked judgment for £690, being the sum stated in the commencement of the declaration as the aggregate of all the counts. Held, that this judgment was irregular, and that plaintiff should not mark judgment for a larger sum than he was entitled to issue execution for. Lord Miltown v. Reeves, Bl. D. & O. 272, Q. B.

Where a defendant dies, between the term in which a demurrer has been argued, and the pronouncing of judgment by the court, judgment will not be entered nunc pro tunc, if there are issues in fact undisposed of. Armstrong v. Lloyd, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 57, C. P.

Where after verdict for the plaintiff, and pending a motion for a new trial, the defendant died, the court granted liberty to enter up judgment as of a former term, upon the terms of the plaintiff undertaking not to interfere with the rights of intermediate bonâ fide creditors or purchasers. Horner v. Powell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 406, Ex.

The court will not allow a plaintiff to mark judgment as for want of a plea, because the defendant being a female pleads in the masculine gender. Berry v. McNeill, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 17, C. P.

The court will grant but a conditional order to enter up judgment against a defendant, who has not appeared to the writ of distringas, in an action of quare impedit. Marquis of Winchester v. Bishop of Killaloe, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 344, C. P.

In February, 1844, by an order of nisi prius, a verdict was taken for the plaintiff, subject to arbitration; in Michaelmas Term, 1846, a balance was found to be due by the plaintiff, and a verdict was entered for the defendant, who died on a day in the same term, prior to the entry of the verdict for him. The court held that the proceedings were notwithstanding, regular, and directed the judgment to be enrolled as of the first day of Easter Term, 1844. Wright v. Keena, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 97, Ex.

Amendment of Judgments.—See AMENDMENT.

Priority of Judgments.—There can be no priority between judgments entered as of the same day. Daly v. Kelly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 176. [Per Ball, J.]

The second section of the 9th G. 4, c. 35, relating to judgments entered within twenty years before the passing of the act, does not apply to the case of purchases made before that act. Held, that a judgment of Easter Term, 1809, did not lose its priority over a subsequent conveyance, for valuable consideration, executed on the 20th of September, in the same year, although the judgment was not revived or redocketed since the entry thereof, nor within five years after the passing of the 9th Geo. 4, c. 35. Geraghty v. Abbott, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 60, Ex.

C. in Hilary Term, 1818, recovered a judgment against R. M., and in the same term recovered another against R. M. jun. These judgments were revived Hilary Term, 1821, and again in Michaelmas Term, 1840, against the heir and terre-tenants of each consor; an annuity deed of the 11th June, 1819, charged the lands of the consors with an annuity of £225. The judgments were not revived or redocketed within five years after the passing of the 9th Geo. 4, c. 35. Held, that the judgments were null and void against the parties entitled under the annuity deed, by reason of their not having been revived or redocketed pursuant to the provisions of the 9th Geo. 4, c. 35. Collyer v. Marnell, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 353, Q. B. [Per Blackburne, C. J., and Crampton, J.; contra, per Burton, J. and Perrin, J.]

Judgment of Non Pros.—The words of the 27th general rule are to be construed strictly; therefore, the year is to be computed from the return day of the writ, and not from the date of the appearance; and consequently the rule for judgment of non pros must be entered within one year from the return of the writ. Lewis v. Meehan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 350, Ex.

A judgment of non pros was set aside as irregular, the rule for judgment having been entered within the year, but not served till after its expiration. Rorke v. McCarthy, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 29, Ex.

For not joining in demurrer books.—Where a party applies for leave to enter judgment on the ground that his opponent has neglected to supply his portion of the demurrer books. Held, that notice must be given of such application. Rock v. Hackett, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 278, Q. B.

The court will allow a plaintiff to enter judgment where the defendant has taken a demurrer, and neglected to furnish the points to be argued, although called upon to do so, and notice of the motion having been given. Willne v. O'Connor, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 284, Q. B.

As for want of a plea.—Although the defendant, a female, pleaded the general issue in the masculine gender, the court would not allow the plaintiff to mark judgment as for want of a plea, she having had had notice to amend, and which notice had not been attended to. Assignee of Berry v. McNeill, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 17, C. P.

Judgment by default.—The defendant in an action on a bill of exchange by allowing judgment to go by default, admits the date of the bill to be as stated in the declaration; and the officer may calculate interest therefrom. Doyle v. Duffy, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 153, C. P.

As in case of non-suit.—Where a party obtains a conditional order for judgment, as in case of non suit, and does not make it absolute, the court will not allow him to do so after an undertaking and notice of trial served, though that notice be withdrawn. Carrey v. Williams, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 115, C. P.

On a motion for judgment as in case of a non-suit, after default in a peremptory undertaking to go to trial, the plaintiff will be put under terms to pay the defendant the costs already incurred,—the costs of the motion, and further that the defendant may enter up judgment without further motion, if the plaintiff again fail in this undertaking to go to trial. O'Donohoe v. O'Donohoe, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 9, Q. B.

Where a cause has been entered for trial, but not tried, and the plaintiff be guilty of no default, the defendant cannot have judgment as in case of non-suit, his remedy is to bring the case to trial by proviso. Wright v. Hodgins, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 268, Ex.

A rule to stay proceedings until the payment of costs, of not proceeding to trial pursuant to notice must be vacated before the defendant can apply for judgment as in case of non-suit. Read v. Sher, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 269, Ex.

It is not necessary to serve a notice of a motion for judgment as in case of non-suit. Anonymous, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 345, Q. B.

On a motion for judgment as in case of non-suit, after notice of trial has been served and withdrawn, if it appear that the record was withdrawn at the instance of the defendant, or by any understanding to that effect between the parties, that will be a sufficient answer to such motion. Clarke v. Callaghan, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 345, Q. B.

Where a conditional order has been obtained for judgment as in case of non-suit, a peremptory undertaking is not of itself sufficient cause against an absolute order, the plaintiff must show some "just ause" for his delay. Gillman v. Connor, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 346, Ex.

If the record be brought down for trial and notice of trial withdrawn by the plaintiff, that will not be sufficient cause against this motion. Ib.

Aliter, if the cause be made a remanet, or the plaintiff be obliged by some circumstances of surprise to withdraw it. Ib.

Where a cause was entered in the list of records or trial at the sittings after term, but in consequence of the death of the Lord Chief Baron was not tried, the court refused to give judgment as in case of non-suit, the plaintiff not having withdrawn the record or been in default. Graydon v. Reardon, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 355, C. P.

If the plaintiff withdraw the record after entering the case for trial, the defendant may have judgment as in case of non-suit, the mere entering of the record for trial not being sufficient to prevent it. Ib.

Where the record is brought down to trial and withdrawn with the assent of the defendant, he cannot have judgment as in case of a non-suit. Anonymous, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 167, Q. B.

The meaning of the rule as to bringing down the record, is not merely bringing it down and entering it but proceeding to trial, unless the cause be made a remanet. Ib.

Upon showing cause against a conditional order for judgment as in case of non-suit, it appeared that notice of trial had been served before the motion came on, that the sum to be recovered was but £5, and the plaintiff stated he had a just cause of action. Held, to be sufficient cause. Anonymous, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 263, Q. B.

Where in an action for false imprisonment arising out of a disputed right of fishing, the cause had been at issue since Michaelmas Term, 1838, and the year from thence till June, 1839, was not accounted for except by an allegation that the principal action to try the right was pending during that time, and since June the plaintiff had been unable to proceed in consequence of the illness of his attorney. Held to be insufficient cause. — v. Worthington, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 266, Q. B.

By the practice of the Court of Exchequer a peremptory undertaking to go to trial at the next sittings or assizes is considered as just cause against a motion for judgment as in case of non-suit. Tuthill v. Bridgeman, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 361, Ex.

Where a term intervenes between the obtaining of the conditional order for judgment as in case of non-suit, and the motion to make it absolute, the court will not make the order absolute on a certificate of no cause. Bell v. Bell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 79, Q. B.

In Easter Term, 1839, the lessor of the plaintiff brought two ejectments for lands in the counties of W. and G.; defence was taken in Trinity Term following, and the defendant having refused to consent to waive temporary bars, the lessor was compelled to file a bill to compel him to do so, a decree was pronounced on the 2nd of June, 1840, there appeared to be no delay on the part of the plaintiff. A motion on the part of the defendant was held to be premature, as the time in which he was engaged in the equity proceedings could not be counted against him. Rutledge v. Rutledge, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 102, Q. B.

Where it appeared by implication from the defendant's affidavit that the plaintiff's knowledge of the defendant's poverty was subsequent to the commencement of the action, and the defendant did not state an ability to pay, the court refused to allow a judgment as in case of non-suit to be entered. Going v. Dempsey, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 184, C. P.

In shewing cause against a conditional order for judgment as in case of non-suit the affidavit must state positively some just cause why plaintiff delayed going to trial. Wallace v. McClelland, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 199, Q. B.

Where the indorser of a bill of exchange having sued the acceptor ineffectually, sued his immediate indorser; after the commencement of the second action the debt and costs were paid by the acceptor; the court refused a motion by the indorser for judgment as in case of non-suit. White v. Doolan, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 500, Ex.

Where a bill had been filed against a banking company, and a receiver appointed over all their property, with a reference to the Master to report on the suits to be prosecuted or defended by them, the court would not allow judgment, as in case of non-suit, to be entered against them in a cause at issue more than three terms, they undertaking to go to trial on the first nisi prius day in next term. Hughes v. Glenney, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 5, C. P.

In an ejectment on the title against eleven persons, the defences of five of those persons had been consolidated, and the cause was brought to trial against those five; but such trial was postponed at the instance of the defendants to the next assizes; and at the following assizes the plaintiff could not proceed, by reason of the absence of his counsel; and it was stated that the cases of all the defendants were similar. Held, that was a sufficient cause against a motion for judgment, as in case of non-suit, on behalf of the defendants whose cases had not been brought to trial. Lord Powerscourt v. Brislán, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 283, Q. B.

Issue was joined in Hilary Term; a motion for judgment, as in case of non-suit is moveable in Trinity Term. An affidavit is not necessary to sustain such a motion, and the court will refuse it, on the plaintiff giving a peremptory undertaking to go to trial, the costs to be costs in the cause. Comyns v. McGrath, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 412, C. P., and see note, Ib.

In ejectment cases the cause is not at issue until the second declaration is filed, and three terms must therefore elapse from that time before judgment as in case of a non-suit can be obtained. Dempsey v. Nowlan, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 450, Ex.

An affidavit filed by one of several defendants, will not be considered as cause against a conditional order to enter up judgment as in case of non-suit obtained by another defendant. Chevolly v. Whitty, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 40, Q. B.

A party having entered a rule to stay proceedings, cannot move to enter judgment as in case of non-suit without having first vacated the rule. Raleigh v. Raleigh, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 182, C. P.

If a party permits an order for judgment as in case of non-suit to be made absolute he cannot after object to the proceedings for irregularity. In ejectment the defendant may file a second declaration and enter up judgment as in case of non-suit, without entering a rule for liberty to proceed on giving a terms' notice. Kenny v. Coffey, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 225, Q. B.

A conditional order for judgment as in case of non-suit was served on the 21st of November, entitled in a wrong cause, and the plaintiff gave notice of the irregularity the following day, and also gave notice of trial for the 26th, on the 23rd he withdrew the notice of trial and served notice of trial for the sittings after term, on the 25th the defendant served a conditional order properly entitled. Held, that there was no such laches as dissatisfied the defendant to the benefit of his conditional order. Murray v. O'Hanlon, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 374, Q. B.

A peremptory undertaking to go to trial, is a sufficient answer to a motion for judgment, as in case of non-suit. Anonymous, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 242, C. P.

The costs of such a motion are always costs in the cause. Ib.

A plaintiff will be allowed to enter a stat processus on the ground of the defendant's insolvency, notwithstanding default made in a peremptory undertaking to go to trial. Sterne v. Sheane, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 25, Ex.

In the Exchequer it is necessary to give notice of a motion for judgment, as in case of a non-suit. Anonymous, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 44, Ex.

A motion for judgment, as in case of non-suit, on the ground of the insolvency of the plaintiff, will not be granted after issue joined; but the court will stay the proceedings. Filton v. Evans, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 466, Q. B.

In ejectment the cause is not at issue until the second declaration has been filed; but where the lessor of the plaintiff served notice of trial after defence taken; but before he had filed a second declaration. Three terms after the service of this notice, the court gave liberty to the defendant to file a second declaration, and enter judgment thereon, as in case of non-suit. Creagh v. Creagh, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 528, Ex.

A plaintiff in showing cause against a conditional order for judgment, as in case of non-suit, averred his belief that the defendant was in insolvent circumstances, and stated facts from which such insolvency might be inferred. The defendant in answer must aver that he is solvent. O'Connor v. Evans, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 210, C. P.

A defendant entitled to judgment, as in case of non-suit, will be allowed to enter that judgment without costs, the plaintiff having refused to proceed in consequence of the embarrassed circumstances of the defendant, and of the fact of his having threatened to take the benefit of the Insolvent Act, in the event of the plaintiff succeeding against him. Crawford v. Crowthor, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 99, Ex.

Where the defendant had become insolvent after action brought, a motion to enter up judgment as in case of non-suit was refused with costs, the defendant having refused a stat processus out of court. Brennan v. Mullins, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 39, Ex.

In answer to a motion for judgment as in case of non-suit, it was shown that the proceedings had been carried on by an attorney, by the direction of a third party, in the names of the plaintiff, without their knowledge or consent, or their being interested in the suit, and that the attorney had since died. The court ordered a stat processus to be entered without costs. Dowling v. Bonnell, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 443, Ex.

It is a sufficient answer to a conditional order for judgment, as in case of non-suit, in an action by the drawer against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, that the bill has been paid by an indorsee. Manning v. —, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 484, Ex.

Semble, that if, in such a case, the defendant has a good defence to the action, the proper course, in order to obtain his costs, is to bring the case to trial by proviso. Ib.

Where a rule to stop has been entered—and afterwards withdrawn—that term is to be excluded in computing three terms to found an application for judgment, as in case of non-suit. Dawson v. Loughnan, Bl. D. & O. 45, C. P.

If a plaintiff proceed both at law and in equity, for the same demand, and elects to proceed in the latter, the court will enter judgment as in case of non-suit. Hollier v. Eyre, Bl. D. & O. 108, Ex.

If a plaintiff become insolvent after issue joined, the defendant is not entitled to judgment, as in case of non-suit, but a stat processus will be entered. Jones v. Newbury, Bl. D. & O. 147, Ex.

Where a record has been left a remanet at Nisi Prius, and no proceedings taken for three years, the court will not grant liberty to the defendant to enter up judgment, as in case of a non-suit. Stenson v. Stephens, 1 Ir. Jur. 39, Ex. [Collier v. Jones, 1 H. & B. 321, over-ruled.]

In quare impedit cases the court will only give a conditional order to enter judgment, as in case of non-suit, against a defendant who has not appeared to the writ of distringas. Marquis of Winchester v. Bishop of Killaloe, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 344, C. P.

Setting aside.—Where a conditional order was obtained to set aside a judgment entered upon a bond and warrant, on the ground that they were forged; on motion to make the order absolute, the court being unable to decide on the conflicting statements, directed the plaintiff to declare on the bond, which not being done, the order was made absolute. Connors v. Connolly, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 244, Q. B.

The court will set aside a judgment obtained on a parliamentary appearance, when there is a substantial question to be tried between the parties, though no irregularity be alleged in the making of the judgment. Heron v. —, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 51, C. P.

The court will set aside a regular judgment where the party has by a fatality been prevented from pleading in time, though the time for pleading had previously been enlarged. Ryan v. Francis, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 154, C. P.

Judgment was entered on a bond and warrant of attorney, executed by the defendant to the plaintiff, the former being in custody at the suit of the latter, and no attorney being present at the execution. The defendant being subsequently arrested under an execution on this judgment, took the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and returned the judgment in his schedule. Held, that by returning the judgment, he waived the irregularity. Doherty v. McDaid, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 236, Ex.

Where, after the expiration of the four-day rule plead, but before judgment had been marked, the defendant applied for time to plead, and obtained leave to serve a notice on the opposite party; whereby the plaintiff's attorney marked judgment before the notice had been served upon him, though it had been verbally apprised of the order. The court set aside the judgment with costs, and enlarged the time to plead. Dancer v. Kelly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 64, C. P.

After notice of trial in a quære impedit, the defendant entered into a consent that judgment should be entered against him, with sixpence damages, and a release of errors, on the understanding between the parties that such a consent carried the merits of the action, and the judgment was accordingly entered with costs. The court on a motion by the defendant, refused to strike out the portion of the judgment awarding costs. Archbold v. Bishop of Down and Connor, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 281, C. P.

In a replevin case the defendant's attorney having promised the plaintiff's counsel additional time to join in demurrer, which was afterwards withdrawn by the orders of the defendant himself and judgment marked, the plaintiff having pleaded no plea to the writ, the judgment was set aside without any costs to either party. Daniel v. Bingham, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 36, C. P.

An affidavit of merits made in support of a motion to set aside a judgment should state positively that there is a good cause of defence, if the judgment be entered irregularly or mala fide no affidavit of merits is necessary. Lenahan v. Earl of Bantry, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 274, Q. B.

The court set aside a judgment marked for want of replication, the plaintiff having omitted to enter a plea to discontinue under a mistaken impression, though the defendant had relied on the same, in an answer to a bill filed in equity by the plaintiff to raise the amount of the judgment. Lynch v. Lynch, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 298, C. P.

A judgment having been entered on a bond and warrant the latter of which alone was executed, the court set aside the judgment and execution without costs. M'Lernan v. M'Lernan, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 331, C. P.

The court refused to set aside a regular judgment of non pros on the terms of the payment of the costs of it, the affidavit of merits being sworn by the attorney's clerk who conducted the business, and was positively contradicted by the affidavit of the defendant himself. Cater v. Plattery, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 175, C. P.

Judgment of non pros was set aside as irregular the rule for judgment having been entered within the year, but not served until after its expiration. Rorke v. McCarthy, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 29, Ex.

A. fa. having issued upon a judgment obtained upon a plea of confession filed in pursuance of a written authority signed without any attorney being present on his behalf, or any process having been served upon him, the court set aside the execution judgment, and previous proceedings with costs. Wilcos v. O'Gorman, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 459, Ex.

The defendant appeared in the Queen's Bench to a writ issued out of that court, the plaintiff's attorney served notice of a declaration and the rule to plead, and marked judgment in the Exchequer. Held, that the judgment could not be sustained. Anonymous, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 467, Ex.

The defendant having appeared in the Queen's Bench to a writ sued out of that court, the plaintiff's attorney served notice of a declaration and the rules to plead and marked judgment. Held, that the judgment could not be sustained and that the defendant was not deprived of his right to object to its validity by having received notice of the declaration and rules to plead, without apprising the plaintiff of the defect in his proceedings. Ib.

Assignment of judgments.—When a judgment has been assigned to new trustees by a person appointed for that purpose pursuant to an order of the Court of Chancery, made upon petition under the 1 W. 4, cap. 60, the court directed the proper officer to perfect the assignment. Burrowes v. Hogan, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 369, Ex.; S. P. Burrough v. Ferrard, Ib. 372.

A judgment, upon the marriage of the conusee, was assigned to the trustees of the marriage settlement, and a memorial of the assignment duly enrolled; the conusee having married a second time, the judgment was again assigned to the trustees of a second settlement. The personal representative of the surviving trustee of the first settlement having refused to assign the judgment to the surviving trustee of the second, the court refused to allow the memorial of the first assignment to be taken off the file in order that a memorial of the second might be enrolled. Beresford v. Beresford, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 316, Ex.

When a judgment, the property of an insolvent conusee, is vested in his assignee under the Insolvent Act, the court will direct an assignment by the latter to a third party to be enrolled without the judgment having been revived in the name of the assignee of the insolvent. Browne v. Browne, 1 Ir. Jur. 70, Ex.

Satisfaction of judgments.—The defendant applied for leave to lodge the amount due to the plaintiff out of two judgments, and for an order that the plaintiff should execute warrants to satisfy same. There was a dispute as to the time to which the defendant was bound to pay interest, and the defendant had also been guilty of laches in making the application. The motion was refused. Quin v. Eastwood, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 165, Q. B.

A judgment creditor having got into possession of the lands of his debtor by elegit, and the officer, on a reference to account, having reported that he had been overpaid his debt, the court granted a conditional order to show cause why satisfaction should not be entered on the roll. Birch v. Meredith, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 138, C. P. [See acc. Wilkinson v. Meredith, Ib. 139.]

The court will not order satisfaction to be entered on the record of a judgment on a warrant of attorney by one of two trustees of the fund secured by the judgment, though the other never accepted the trust, and was out of the jurisdiction, and refused to act. Satisfaction will not be allowed to be entered on a judgment obtained at the suit of two conusees, on the allegation that the full amount had been paid to one of them, the other having emigrated in 1837, and not having been heard of since. King v. King, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 329, C. P.

The court refused to allow a judgment to be satisfied on payment to the plaintiff's attorney of a sum agreed upon between him and the defendant, the plaintiff residing in New South Wales, although the attorney held a general power of attorney to sue for and give discharges for all debts due to the plaintiff, and had been empowered by letter to issue execution on said judgment. Brennan v. French, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 120, C. P.

Where a judgment has been satisfied under a warrant of attorney fraudulently and improperly obtained, and the facts, upon which the warrant is impeached, are clearly made out by the affidavits, the court will, upon motion, set aside the satisfaction entered on the roll, without directing an issue, or sending the case to be tried by a jury. Nuttall v. Nuttall, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 480, Ex.

A judgment collateral with a mortgage was obtained against E. C. in the names of two trustees; one of the trustees had never acted in the trusts, and had disclaimed by deed. Held, that a warrant to satisfy the judgment executed by the acting trustee alone was sufficient. Wise v. Creed, 8 Ir. L. 222, Q. B.

Searches for Judgments.—An application since the passing of the Registration of Judgments Act, 7 & 8 Vic. c. 90, for liberty to inspect the judgment-book and roll of the court to ascertain whether any judgments were entered against a third party was refused, the Act having directed that no search shall be made except in the office established under it. In re Bagot, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 295, Ex.

Quære, whether an executor or administrator would be entitled to make a search for judgments against his testator or intestate. Id.

Releasing of Judgments.—Judgments being a charge upon both B. and A. were by deed poll executed by the judgment creditors released as against B. Held, the effect of the release was to discharge both A. and B. Handcock v. Handcock, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 565, C. P.*

XI. BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

When objections were taken to the judge's charge and overruled, and the judge gave time to have the exception reduced to writing and the document was not delivered to the judge until after the jury were discharged. Held, that they could not hear those exceptions, as it did not appear from the record whether they were taken before the jury were discharged. Close v. Batt, 1 Ir. Jur. 256, Ex.

The court with great reluctance allowed time for filing a bill of exceptions where the trial had taken place more than two years before, though the parties had by consent between them extended the time until within a few days of the term in which the application was made. Dawson v. Bell, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 279, Q. B.

The court will not enlarge the time for making up a bill of exceptions though the evidence in the case was very voluminous, where the whole long vacation had elapsed since the trial, and but four days of that time had been occupied in negotiations for a compromise. Bridgeford v. Dublin & Kington Railway Co., 3 Ir. L. Rep. 19, C. P.

The court, after refusing an application for time to make up a bill of exceptions, will not grant a conditional order to set aside the verdict. Id.

The defendant in a bill of exceptions stated that he had insisted before the learned judge, "that the said condition of re-entry, in the said fee-farm grant contained, was altogether gone by the assignment and release; and if not, that the said power of re-entry was gone by the assignment, in the matter of the insolvency of J. D." Held, that it was not open to the defendant to argue that the said right of re-entry had been transferred to the provisional assignee of the insolvent. Orr v. Stevenson, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 2, Ex. C.

By the operation of the rules of the Court of Common Pleas, a party taking a bill of exceptions at a trial in the sittings after term, is not irregular in not setting down the same for argument in the ensuing term. Reid v. Mitchell, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 300 C. P.

Where it was a matter of warranty in a policy of insurance, that the habits of a party whose life was insured, were "strictly temperate." Held, that the words "strictly temperate" are subject to construction, and that the defendants, (the directors of the company), were not entitled to a direction from the judge that those words should be construed in their literal sense; and a general exception taken by the defendants to the judge's charge, so far as it was explanatory of their meaning, was over-ruled, much of the charge being admittedly right, and the defendants not having pointed out by their exception, the particular parts of it which were objectionable. Scanlon v. Seale, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 130, Ex.

The counsel for the defendant objected to the testimony of B. M., on the ground that said testimony was offered to sustain her husband's deed; and called upon the judge to reject said testimony, but he refused, and permitted her to be examined, to sustain the issue on the part of the plaintiff; to which opinion of the judge, the defendant did then and there except, and the said B. M. was sworn and examined subject to said exception. Held, too large, as portion of her evidence was admissible. Burris v. Coffey, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 294, C. P.

Second exception—That the learned judge should, upon the whole of the evidence so given by the parties, plaintiff and defendant respectively, upon the issue, have directed a verdict for the plaintiff, was held to be too general. Id.

A motion to extend the time for making up a bill of exceptions, must always be upon notice. Russell v. Whaley, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 492, Ex.

A lease for years, containing a covenant to renew, which was declared on as absolute and unqualified, and the value of the interest under such lease, with the covenants for renewal being proved, and no evidence being offered of the eviction of the covenantee by title paramount, but bare evidence of an eviction, and a notice served by the defendant, stating that he had no title to renew. Held on exception, that the judge was right in refusing to direct the jury to find for nominal damages, as there was no evidence that the title to the term, if granted, would have been invalid. Semble, such refusal was not ground of exception. Kean v. Strong, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 83, Q. B.

* By the 11 & 12 Vic. c. 48, s. 72, a portion of the lands charged may be released.—EDITOR.

Held, that exceptions, to different expressions in the charge of the learned judge, seriatim, without stating clearly what the judge did tell the jury, or what the defendant required him to tell them, was not a proper mode of framing a bill of exceptions; and per Blackburne, C. J., on this ground alone the exception should be over-ruled. Kean v. Strong, 1 Ir. Jur. 333, Ex. Ch.

XII. VENUE.

Local.—In an action of assumpsit, for money had and received, brought by the assignees of a bankrupt against the sheriff, to recover the proceeds of a sale of the bankrupt's effects made by the sheriff pursuant to writ of fi. fa. the venue is local. The venue will be changed in a local action on terms. Anonymous, 9 Ir. L. 394, Q. B. And see Hennessy v. Synge, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 184, Q. B.

Transitory.—In an action for pound breach, and the removal of a distress, founded on the statutes 7 W. 3, c. 22, and 15 Geo. 2, c. 8, the venue is transitory. Earl of Meath v. M'Phail, 9, Ir. L. Rep. 316.

Motion to change venue.—The court will change the venue to an adjoining county in an action against a magistrate if there be reason to suppose that a satisfactory trial cannot be had in the county where the venue was originally laid. Stewart v. Lynam, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 199, C. P.

The court will not change the venue in an action of ejectment on the title, where there have been two verdicts for the defendant. Jackson v. Lodge, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 161, Q. B.

Where the venue has been changed upon the usual affidavit the party seeking to retain the venue is not bound to come in within four days after the rule to change. Stannion v. Magrath, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 293, Q. B.

The venue was changed upon the usual affidavit. A motion to retain it on the ground of partiality in the jury, and that the defendants exercised undue influence upon the jurors, was refused. O'Shaughnessy v. Lambert, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 104, Q. B.

The court will not change the venue in an action on a bill of exchange, though the defendant swears that he himself and all his witnesses reside in the county to which it is sought to be changed. Harnett v. Torrens, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 116, C. P.

A motion to change the venue on the usual affidavit is too late after plea pleaded. Muloany v. White, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 33, Ex.

In transitory actions an attorney has the privilege of suing in his own court, and laying and retaining the venue in the county it is situated in. An application to change the venue on the usual affidavit was refused upon that ground. Montgomery v. Cheyne, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 163, Q. B.

The common affidavit to change the venue is informal in not stating in express terms that the cause of action did not arise in the county in which the venue was laid, and also in introducing any thing beyond the usual form as to the place where the cause of action arose. Anonymous, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 286, Q. B.

Where the venue has been changed on the usual affidavit, and it appears incontrovertibly that the allegation in the affidavit is untrue, the court will bring back the venue. Nichol v. Hickson, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 328, Q. B.

The venue will not be changed on the ground that the plaintiff is a county surveyor, and is on that account possessed of influence with the jurors. Hall v. M'Kernan, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 359, Q. B.

In an action by an attorney for the recovery of a bill of costs, the venue was changed, before plea pleaded, to the adjoining county from the county of the city in which the venue was laid, upon an affidavit that a fair and impartial trial could not be had there. Boyes v. Smith, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 366, Ex.

The venue in an action on a policy of insurance was changed from the county of a city to the adjoining county upon an affidavit that a fair and impartial trial could not be had in the former. Slight grounds are sufficient to change the venue from the county of a city to the adjoining county. Scanlan v. Scoates, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 368, Ex.

The venue was retained in an action of covenant for waste, notwithstanding the defendant's affidavit that all the witnesses resided in the county to which the venue was sought to be changed, and that a view of the premises, which were in the county to which it was sought to bring the venue, would be necessary, on the terms that the plaintiff should previously admit the defendant's witnesses to view the premises to the trial. Hawthorne v. Denham, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 1, Q. B.

The court will not change the venue from the county of the city of Dublin to the county of the city of Cork, though the defendant state in his affidavit that he has twenty witnesses to examine, all of whom reside in the latter place, it appearing from the plaintiff's affidavit that some of his witnesses resided in the locality where the venue had been laid. Watson v. Kennelly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 214, Q. B.

The venue will be changed on special grounds in an action on a bill of exchange. O'Callaghan v. Sullivan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 256, Ex.

In an action of libel the court refused to change the venue to the county in which the action had wholly arisen, though all the witnesses resided therein, the plaintiff having sworn to the prevalence there of excitement on the subject, though he did not deny but that an impartial trial might be had. Galagher v. Cavendish, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 375, C. P.

Where the defendant is prevented by the act of God from making the usual affidavit to change the venue it may be made by his attorney. Scott v. Macaulay, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 40, Q. B.

The rule to change was discharged on the usual undertaking to give material evidence, though the defendant undertook to admit such evidence at the trial. Ib.

No leave being reserved, the costs of a party appearing to oppose a motion to change the venue within the last four days of term will not be allowed, though he may have been served with notice of the motion. Mara v. Murphy, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 138, C. P.

In an action on a promissory note the court would not change the venue from Dublin to Mayo, on an affidavit stating "that the cause of action arose in Mayo, that the defendant had good grounds on the merits for disputing the consideration, and that the several witnesses, fifteen in number, necessary and material to be examined, resided in the county Mayo." Flanagan v. Reynolds, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 335, C. P.

In an action by an attorney for work and labour done, the court changed the venue from Dublin to Cork, on an affidavit of the defendant, that the defendant and the principal witness for the defence were aged persons, on the terms of the defence being confined to a single point (a denial of the retainer), and that judgment for the plaintiff, if any, should be entered up as of the term in which the motion was made, and that the costs of the motion should be costs in the cause. Geary v. Warren, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 425, C. P.

The common affidavit to change the venue need not state the cause of action. Anonymous, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 508, Ex.

The prescribed form of the common affidavit to change the venue at the instance of the defendant must be strictly adhered to. Walker v. Collins, 1 Ir. Jur. 232, Ex.

Proof of the ordinary rule to lodge money in court, in discharge of the action before declaration filed, satisfies an undertaking to give material evidence in the original venue. Brady v. Rotherham, 1 Ir. Jur. 246, Ex.

In an action of libel the court will not change the venue upon special grounds, if issue be not joined upon all the counts in the declaration. Macneil v. Dunlop, 1 Ir. Jur. 269, C. P.

The venue was changed in an action on a bill of exchange, on an affidavit stating that the bill was a forgery and that defendant's witnesses resided in the county where he sought to have a trial. Lorimer v. McElrath, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 588, Q. B.

An affidavit to change the venue stated, "that the cause of action arose in the county of C. and not in the county of the city of D. nor elsewhere in Ireland save in the said county of C." Held, to be an improper deviation from the usual form, and an order to change the venue obtained upon such an affidavit purporting to be the common one was set aside. Lewis v. Fitzgibbon, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 255, Ex.

The court will not allow a plaintiff to change the venue without some special grounds being stated. Aungier v. English, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 226, C. P. [See King v. Sharry. Ib. Note, Q. B.]

Where the venue has been changed upon the usual affidavit and the plaintiff can give the undertaking required by the 47th general rule, the venue will not be brought back except upon the terms of his giving that undertaking, in that case it being insufficient to falsify the defendant's affidavit. Lewis v. Nixon, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 359, Ex.

Where the venue had been changed upon the usual affidavit, and a motion was made to bring it back upon the ground that the cause of action arose partly in England, but that fact did not distinctly appear, the court refused to make the order except on the plaintiff's undertaking to give material evidence in the county where the venue was originally laid, or out of the jurisdiction. Ib.

Venue was changed in an action of covenant from the county of L. to the city of Dublin, before issue joined, upon an affidavit of the defendant, that it would be necessary for him to examine on the trial several witnesses, all of whom resided in Dublin, and some of them were medical men in practice there, on the terms of defendant undertaking to pay plaintiff's extra costs of bringing from L. to Dublin a person who was sworn to be a material witness for the plaintiff, if on the trial he should appear to be so, also undertaking to rejoin gratis and take short notice of trial. Shagov v. Murphy, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 550, Ex.

The common affidavit to change the venue should be made by the defendant, unless a sufficient excuse be shown. O'Reilly v. Bond, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 118, Q. B.

Notice of a motion to change the venue on the common affidavit must be served, and if the plaintiff does not appear on the motion he cannot afterwards move the court to bring back the venue on the usual undertaking to give material evidence. Simpson v. Dixon, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 410, C. P.

The venue will be changed in a local action on terms. Anonymous, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 394, Q. B.

In a motion by an Assurance Company to change the venue, after issue joined, to the county in which the fire took place, on an allegation that a view was necessary for the defence, this court will not grant the motion unless the reason why such a view is necessary appear on the face of the affidavit. M'Loughlin v. R. Exchange Assurance Company, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 510, Ex.

Motion by defendant to change the venue after issue joined to a county, because the witnesses for the defence reside there is sufficiently met by the plaintiff, on an allegation that the majority of his witnesses reside in the county in which he has brought the action. Ib.

On behalf of a defendant, the court will be slow to change the venue to a county where the father of the attorney of defendant is sub-sheriff. Ib.

Where the venue was changed upon the usual affidavit and a statement at the bar that the declaration was in the ordinary form for work and labour, but it subsequently appeared that the declaration contained a special count for work and labour done in pursuance of an agreement and specification in writing, the court discharged the rule to change the venue though it was admitted that no part of the cause of action arose in the county in which it was laid. Alford v. Begg, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 104, Ex.

In an action against the sheriff the first count of the declaration stated, the recovery of a judgment by the plaintiffs, the issuing of a scire facies thereon, the delivery of it to the sheriff, and that he seized thereunder the goods of the debtor and levied the amount, and averred as a breach that he had not the money so levied in court, on the return of the writ, nor had paid the same to the plaintiff, and that he falsely returned nulla bona. The second count after stating the recovery of the judgment, the issuing of the fi. fa. and the delivery thereof to the sheriff, averred that though there were before the return of this writ, goods of the debtor in the defendant's bailiwick, whereof he ought to have levied the money endorsed on the writ, and assigned as a breach that he would not levy the money, and returned nulla bona. Held, that supposing the false return to be an essential part of the evidence in such action, it was not one exclusively for a false return, and consequently the plaintiffs might bring their action in the county in which the return was filed, or where the matters of fact necessary to be proved, occurred. Hennessy v. Synge, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 184, Q. B.

On a motion to change the venue from Dublin to Galway in an action against the proprietors of a Galway newspaper, it appeared that on the eve of the trial, letters calculated to excite a prejudice in the plaintiff's favour were published in a newspaper circulating in Dublin, and, on the other hand, that a report of certain proceedings, reflecting injuriously on the plaintiff's character, published in the defendant's newspaper, had been read from the altars of many chapels in the county of Galway. The court changed the venue to a third county. Ryder v. Burke, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 474, Ex.

In an action for use and occupation, upon an application to change the venue, the affidavit stated that several of the witnesses resided in Cavan, where the lands also were situated. Held to be sufficient. Richardson v. Pranken, Bl. D. & O. 190, Q. B.

Notice must be served of a motion to change the venue on the common affidavit, and if the plaintiff does not appear on the motion, he cannot afterwards move the court to bring back the venue, on the usual undertaking to give material evidence in the original county. The venue can only be brought back upon special grounds. Simpson v. Dickson, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 410, C. P.

An affidavit in support of a motion to change the venue under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 51, need not set forth special grounds. Thompson v. Gregg, Bl. D. & O. 276, Q. B.

The court will change the venue where the common affidavit contains a special ground, which would not, of itself, be sufficient, but will not give costs. The undertaking to give material evidence will not be a sufficient answer to an application to change the venue, where the plaintiff falsifies the affidavit in the first instance. Griffith v. Cunningham, Bl. D. & O. 35, Ex.

After plea, the court will not in general change the venue, when the party might have previously moved on the common affidavit. Rutledge v. Irwin, Bl. D. & O. 29, Q. B.

XIII. VERDICT—(See Criminal Law.)

A special verdict need not be as technical as an indictment—it need not negative every possible fact. Regina v. Burke, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 549, Q. B.

A special verdict cannot be opened by a member of the inner bar. Nixon v. Blake, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 581, Q. B.

As to the doctrine of aider after verdict, and the authorities thereon, see the law fully discussed and considered. Cambie v. Barry, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 34, Ex. Ch.

A judge cannot receive a verdict upon some issues, and discharge a jury on the remainder if those issues be material. Edge v. Wandersford, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 181, Q. B.

XIV. VENIRE DE NOVO.

Quare, can the court under the provisions of the 28 Geo. 3, c. 31, s. 2, enter judgment for the party taking a bill of exceptions, without awarding a venire de novo. Orr v. Stevenson, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 2, Ex. Ch.

The first count being bad for the omission of the averment of the granting of a special warrant to the parties named in the guarantee, and not being such as could be cured by the verdict, Held that a venire de novo should issue. Borrey v. Cambie, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 34, Ex. Ch. [Lefroy, B. Perrin, Cramp-ton, & Burton, J. J., dissentientibus.]

Where on a bill of exceptions, the court above award a judgment of venire de novo, no writ of error lies on such judgment. Kennedy v. Gregg, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 359, Q. B.

XV. ERROR, (COURT OF.)

Where the record of the memorial of the assignment was not on the record before the Court of Error, it was held that the plaintiff in error, who assigned for error that there was no such record of the memorial, was bound to have made an application upon notice, before the case came on for argument, for a writ of certiorari, to have the said record brought up for inspection; and that not having given notice of such an application, and having no merits, the court would not suspend their judgment until such an application could be regularly made. Crough v. Fulton, 5 Ir. Rep. 322, Ex. Ch.

Where there was judgment for the plaintiffs below on demurrer, and also on a bill of exceptions, and it was admitted on the part of the plaintiffs below, that the judgment on the demurrer could not be sustained, the Court of Exchequer Chamber refused to enter up a judgment of acquittal for the plaintiffs in error, with the costs of their defence in the court below; before that the question raised by the bill of exceptions, had been argued and decided on by them. McCausland v. Martin, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 469, Ex. Ch.

Semble—That when the judgment of the court below was for the plaintiff, the court of Exchequer Chamber, on a reversal of that judgment, was bound to enter up the same judgment for the plaintiff in error, which the court below should have given Id.

A., the clerk of a loan society, received money from K., for the purposes of the society, upon an agreement with A. (who acted on behalf and with the sanction of the manager of the society), that K. should receive six per cent. interest upon the loan, being a rate of interest which the society was not legally competent to give. A., upon receiving the money, gave K. the following acknowledgment: "Mr. Thomas King has deposited with me this day, by his son, the sum of £100 sterling, to be added to the amount of capital in the Drums-kett loan fund, and for which he will get interest at the rate of six per cent. from this date. Dated this 12th of March, 1844." Held that notwithstanding this receipt, and the illegality of the transaction, A. was not personally liable for the sum lodged with him, in an action by the representatives of K. King v. Kor, 1 Ir. Jur., 261, C. P.

The husband of a cestui que trust, who resided in a house, a portion of the trust property, and received the rents of the residue, gave orders to the plaintiff to execute certain repairs; a portion of the trust fund was reserved by the trust deed for the maintenance of this property, which was vested in the trustees by conveyance, and after such conveyance the repairs were executed. Held that the husband was the agent of the trustees, and that they were liable to pay for the work done. Bradley v. Boddy, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 363; S. C., Bl. D. & O. 117, N. P., Q. B.

Plaintiff furnished G. with a sample of oatmeal for sale, and G. sold the oatmeal to the defendant. G. did not at the time enter any memorandum of the sale, or deliver a bought and sold note, but in a day or two after made this memorandum: "Sold Mr. J. R., (the defendant) for Mr. R. G. (the plaintiff) 100 loads of oatmeal, to be delivered here immediately, and to be full weight, and to be fully equal to sample, at 28s. per load, cash. Held that G. was an agent lawfully authorised by both parties. Richey v. Garvey, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 544, Q. B.

A principal cannot set up as a defence, forgery by his agent, if the act be done within the scope of the authority delegated to the agent. Duroey v. Jennings, Bl. D. & O., 12, N. P., Ex. [Per Brady, C. B.]

Where certain suits were pending, in which A. and B. were defendants, and a reference was made to the Master to report the incumbrances affecting the freehold lands of A., and amongst others he reported B. a creditor by a judgment affecting them for a certain sum. Held that this was not such an acknowledgment in writing by the agent of A. to B., or to his agent, as would take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Hill v. Stowell, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 302, Q. B.

PROCTOR.

A registrar of one of the Ecclesiastical Courts, in obtaining probate of letters of administration in uncontested cases, and charging and receiving fees for the same, is not liable to the penalties imposed by the 10th section of the 54 Geo. 3, c. 68, which prohibits any person or persons, in his or their own name, or in the name of any other person, from performing any act in any way appertaining or belonging to the office, function, or practice of a proctor, for or in consideration of gain, fee, or reward, or with a view to participate in the benefit to be derived from the office, functions, or practice of a proctor, without being admitted or enrolled. Stephenson v. Higginson, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 458, Ex. Ch. [Dissentientibus, Ball, J., Crampton, J., Doherty, C. J., and Blackburne, C. J.]

Held that the evidence of witnesses to prove the practice of other Ecclesiastical Courts in England and Ireland, in permitting the registrars thereof to obtain probates and letters of administration in uncontested cases, and to charge fees and costs for the same, was admissible on the part of the registrars. Id.

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

The court refused to order certain bills of exchange, &c., in the hands of the defendants, and which were produced and relied on by him at a former abortive trial, to be lodged with the officer for inspection by the plaintiff, on an allegation that some of them were forgeries. Daly v. Kelly, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 209.

When the defendant alleges that certain bills on which he is sued are forgeries, the court will order the plaintiff's attorney to exhibit them to the defendant for inspection. Smith v. McGonagall, 2 Ir. L. Rep., 272, Q. B.

A declaration in debt upon an annuity deed contained two counts; the first, four years' arrears, due 1st of May, 1840; and the second for five years' arrears of the same, due to the 1st of May, 1841. The court refused to strike out the first count as superfluous, or to compel the plaintiff to furnish the defendant with a copy of the deed of assignment, it having been suggested that there had been an assignment of the deed. Clarke v. M'Daniell, 4 Ir. L. Rep., 181.

QUARE IMPEDIT.

Amendment.—See AMENDMENT.

Pleading.—A declaration in quare impedit stated that, by an indenture of the 6th of June, 1683, the advowson of Athassel was vested in trustees to hold, after certain uses which had since determined to the use of the first Duke of Ormond in tail male, with remainder to Richard Butler for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; with remainder on his death to his first and other sons successively in tail male; the declaration averred that, under the remainder to the first Duke in tail male, the second Duke became seized of an estate in tail male, that he died without issue male, and that his brother Charles Earl of Arran became seized of an estate in tail male, under the remainder to the first Duke in tail male; that Charles Earl of Arran died without issue male, and that John Butler became seized of an estate in tail male, under the remainder to the first and other sons of Walter Butler in tail male, and from John Butler, deduced title, to the plaintiff. The sixteenth plea stated, that by Statute 1 Geo. 1, made for Ireland, and passed at Westminster, it was enacted, that the second Duke of Ormonde should stand attainted of high treason, and his estates be forfeited, unless he surrendered himself at, or before, a given day to take his trial; the plea then stated that he, not having surrendered at the prescribed time, became attainted of high treason, and all his estates within this kingdom of which he was then seized, became forfeited to the king; and that afterwards by another Act, (7 Geo. 1,) made for Ireland, and passed at Westminster, reciting the attainder of the second Duke, it was enacted that Charles, Earl of Arran, was thereby, for a valuable consideration, declared to be the purchaser of the second Duke's forfeited estates, and that those estates were thereby vested in trustees to the use of Charles, Earl of Arran, for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to himself in fee, the plea having averred that Charles, Earl of Arran, being seized and possessed of the forfeited estates, died without issue male, having first devised to trustees upon certain trusts, concluded with a special traverse of the seizin of John Butler. Held, upon general demurrer, that this plea was bad, as not showing that the remainders over, after the estate tail in the second Duke of Ormonde, was forfeited, or in anywise affected by his attainder, or by the Acts of Parliament as pleaded, inasmuch as those Acts only professed to deal with the estates which were forfeited. The Marquis of Ormonde v. The Bishop of Cashel, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 577, C. P.

The plaintiff proceeded for four separate churches of Athassel; the declaration contained a distinct count for each church. The defendant in some of his pleas averred, that the four churches were one and the same church, and not several churches, as alleged by the declaration. Held, on special demurrer, that these pleas were good. Ib.

The eighteenth and nineteenth pleas were framed for the purpose of taking advantage of the Statutes 6 & 7 Vic., c. 54, and 7 & 8 Vic., c. 27, which limit, after the 1st of January, 1845, under certain circumstances, the bringing of actions relating to presentations. These pleas concluded by a denial that this suit had been commenced, or that any original writ had been issued in this action on or before the 1st of January, 1845, in manner and form as the plaintiff had alleged. The only allusion to the original writ in the declaration was the statement that the defendant had been summoned to answer, &c. Held, upon special demurrer to those pleas, for having traversed that which was not alleged in the declaration, that they were good. Ib.

The twenty-second plea was, that no clerk was at any time offered, or presented, by the late Marquis of Ormonde, in his life-time, or since his decease, by the plaintiff, as a fit clerk to be admitted by the defendant, (the ordinary,) nor did any clerk claiming to be admitted, instituted and inducted by virtue of any such presentation, offer himself to the defendant for examination, or approval, respecting his fitness, or qualification, to be accepted, and admitted to the said church by the defendant. Held, bad for duplicity. Ib.

Whether the twenty-second plea was bad as amounting to the general issue ne disturba pas? Quare. Ib.

In a declaration on a quare impedit the plaintiff set out as the commencement of title, letters patent of the 6th of April, 1662, whereby King Charles the Second granted unto Rickard, the sixth Earl of C., and his heirs inter alia, the advowson of K. habendum to the use of C. M. C., Lord M., his heirs and assigns, until the said Rickard or his heirs should pay to the said Lord M., his heirs or assigns, the several sums in said letters patent specified at the time and in the manner therein mentioned, which sums, the declarations averred, had been long since duly paid off, and discharged—to wit, on the day and year, and at the place last aforesaid, and from and after due payment of said several sums in form aforesaid, then to the use of the said Rickard, and his heirs male, &c. The declaration then stated that by the act of settlement (14 and 15 Car. 2) it was enacted that all houses, castles, &c., and other hereditaments whatsoever, granted by said patent, should be immediately vested, settled, and established, and were thereby vested, settled and established in the said Rickard and his heirs to and for the uses, &c., expressed and set forth in said patent, saving all manner of persons, &c., other than his said Majesty his heirs and successors, or those claiming under him and other than such whose estate would have vested in his said Majesty, his heirs and successors, or those claiming under him, and other than such whose estates would have vested in his said Majesty, by the scope of this act, if the above provision had not been inserted, and other than such as might claim any right or title thereto in prejudice of any of the uses limited by said patent by descent, or by virtue of any estate tail in remainder from any of the late Earls of C. It was then averred that the said Rickard, as also his heir William, the seventh Earl, were and continued to be Irish Papists until their respective deaths, and that by the act of explanation (17 and 18 Car. 2) it was enacted that nothing in the acts of settlement or explanation should be understood to give, restore, or confirm, to any Irish Papist any advowson or right of patronage, but all should vest, remain and continue in his Majesty, his heirs and successors until the conforming of such Papist, and after such conforming, should re-vest in the person so conforming and his heirs. It was then averred that King Charles the Second being seized of the said advowson, did by patent of the 19th of December, 1681, reciting the act of explanation and that Richard, Lord Dunkellin (the eldest son of William the seventh Earl), had renounced the communion of the Church of Rome, and had embraced the Protestant religion, and had thereby put himself in the capacity of obtaining a mark of the said king's favour, grant to the said Lord Dunkellin and his heirs continuing Protestants, inter alia, the said advowson of K. It then averred a presentation of said advowson to said Lord D., which was the presentation relied on. Held that the words in the act of explanation providing that the advowsons of Irish Papists should "remain and continue" in the king, until conforming were introduced to retain and preserve that species of property in the crown until the conforming of the Irish Papist who had forfeited it, and therefore that it was not competent for Charles the Second to grant the advowson to Lord D., and that consequently the declaration was bad, in not showing a presentation which could be referred to the title relied upon. The executors of the Marquis of Winchester v. the Bishop of Kilmore, 9, Ir. L. Rep., 107, Q. B.

Held also, that the declaration was defective, in not having averred that Lord D. was a Protestant, or had conformed at the time of the patent of 1681. Ib.

The title of the plaintiff, as stated in the declaration, was a term of 500 years, created by settlement of 1785, which was not to commence until the determination of a previous term of 300 years, created by a private act of the 10 Geo. 3, and "the trusts of which said term (it was averred) had been long since satisfied, and the said term ceased and determined." Held that the declaration was bad, in not having shown in what event or events that term was to cease or determine, or that any event or events had occurred upon which the term did cease and determine. Ib.

Quare, did the said declaration show that a good title to present to the said vicarage was vested in any person anterior to, or at the time of, the presentation on which the plaintiff relied. Ib.

In an action of quare impedit, for the recovery of the advowson of Camus, in the county of Londonderry, in which the Bishop of Derry was the defendant, the principal issues being on the claim of King James the First, and the seisin and possession of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs gave in evidence, (among other things,) a Royal Commission, directed to the Bishop of Derry (among others), and an inquisition taken at Limavady in obedience thereto, on the 30th of August, 1609, finding that the patronage of all the advowsons in the county of Coleraine (afterwards Londonderry), of which Camus was one, did of right belong to the king, in right of his crown. They next gave in evidence articles of agreement, dated in the following January, between the Lords of the Privy Council of King James the First, and the Mayor and Commonalty of the City of London, whereby it was stipulated that the City of London should have the patronage of all the churches, as well within the City of Derry and town of Coleraine, as in all the lands to be undertaken by them, and a patent by the king, dated 29th March, 1613, incorporating the Irish Society (the plaintiffs), and granting to them (inter alia) the advowson of Camus. The defendant, in support of his case, offered in evidence a surrender of the 1st of August, 1610 (not confirmed by the Dean and Chapter, and not enrolled in Ireland), by George Montgomery, Bishop of Derry, to King James the First, of the rectory of Derry, and also all parsonages, advowsons, &c., within the diocese of Derry and County of Coleraine, and the ferry of Derry to be disposed of at the king's good will and pleasure. Also a patent of the 3rd of August, 1610, enrolled in England but not in Ireland, to Bishop Montgomery, by which King James the First granted to the said bishop and his successors for ever several denominations of lands, including the lands in Camus, and the advowsons, &c., to them, and the said bishoprick belonging or appertaining, excepting certain advowsons expressly excepted, and nine out of fifteen advowsons which, by mutual consent, were to be transferred from the bishop to the society; and after a recital that "whereas we are informed that there are, in the county of Coleraine, and within the said diocese of Derry, fifteen advowsons of churches, &c., anciently belonging and appertaining to the said bishoprick of Derry; and also of the agreement that the bishop was to have six and the society nine of them, there was a provision for the election and appropriation of the said advowsons by and to their respective patrons. The said patent also contained a covenant on the part of the bishop for further assurance to the king and his successors, of the aforesaid glebe lands, ferry, and water of Derry, and the premises excepted. Also, two king's letters, under the privy seal, nominating and discharging from the first fruits the two subsequent Bishops of Derry, bearing date respectively the 11th of August, 1610, and the 21st of December, 1611, reciting and enjoining the performance of the aforesaid agreement between the crown and the society. Held, that notwithstanding the said articles of agreement of January, 1609, the said patent and the surrender as connected with it, were admissible as evidence of an act of the crown, at variance and inconsistent with the finding of the inquisition of Limavady, and leading to the inference that the crown had no prior title of its own to all the advowsons in Coleraine. Irish Society v. the Bishop of Derry, 4 Ir. L. Rep., 196, Ex. Ch.; 8 C. 8 Ir. L. Rep., 467, Dom. Proc.

Semble, that the said surrender and patent were some evidence of an admission that Camus anciently belonged to the bishoprick. Ib.

Held that the two letters under the privy seal were admissible on the same ground as the letters patent, and as recognising the bargain with the bishop therein mentioned. Ib.

Held that the 35 Geo. 3, c. 39, cured the objection of the patent not having been enrolled in Ireland. Ib.

Held that the bishop's returns to the first-fruits writs were admissible as secondary evidence of collations, by the bishops and their successors to the livings of Camus, and part of the same being receivable in evidence, the defendant was entitled to have the whole submitted to the jury as being one official act. The circumstance of the returns having been made by the bishop or his predecessors only affected the value and not the admissibility of the evidence. Ib.

Held that the Primate's triennial visitation books, and entries of the Bishop's returns in the First Fruits books, were admissible on the part of the defendant, as secondary evidence of the collations by the bishop. Ib.

Held that the original collations by the bishops were admissible as evidence of the possession of the advowson. Ib.

QUO WARRANTO—See CORPORATION.
MANDAMUS.

S. and D. in 1836 were candidates for the office of treasurer of the public monies of the city of Dublin, the former was elected—the returning officer (the Lord Mayor) having rejected the votes of some of the divisional justices of the city who attended and tendered them for D. D. subsequently filed an information in the nature of a quo warranto, and obtained a verdict that S. was not duly elected, to which exceptions were taken and overruled, the court holding that these justices had a right to vote. D. then applied for a mandamus to the Lord Mayor to convene a meeting to complete his (D.'s) election, and at the same time applied for a mandamus to the Lord Mayor to hold a new election, on the ground that the former was void, the court granted the former and refused the latter application. To this mandamus the Lord Mayor made a return, setting out that the divisional justices were not duly summoned, and to shew the election void, and while that question was pending he held another election at which S. was the only candidate, and was elected. D. then obtained an order to quash the return, and for a peremptory mandamus to the Lord Mayor by virtue of which he was put into possession of the office. The present relator now applied for a quo warranto against D. upon the ground that the election of 1836 was void, the divisional justices not having been duly summoned; and the court—though it was insisted among other things that this was really the application of S., who hitherto had upheld the validity of that election, and had several opportunities of raising the same question—made the rule for the quo warranto absolute. Reg. v. Darley, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 253, Q. B.

To an information in the nature of a quo warranto the defendant must set forth fully in his plea the title upon which he relies against the right of the crown. Reg. v. Darley, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 334, Q. B.; S. C. 5 Ir. L. Rep. 108, Ex. Ch.; 8 Ir. L. Rep. 484, Dom. Proc.

Where a plea to such an information, after admitting the vacancy stated in the information set forth, that afterwards, &c., a meeting was held at, &c., between the hours of twelve in the fore-noon, and two in the afternoon of said day, for the purpose of electing a fit and proper person to the office, in the room of, &c., the deceased, pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided. Held, that a traverse which put in issue the fact that said meeting was held pursuant to the statute, was a good traverse. Ib.

Quere, whether the defendant was entitled to plead several pleas. Ib.

Quere, whether, when a defendant pleads several pleas in a case where he is only entitled to plead one, the objection can be raised by demurrer, or whether a motion to set them aside as irregular, is not the proper course. Ib.

On a motion for an information in the nature of ajquo warranto, the election of a town councillor being impeached by objections to his voters, on the ground of personation, it is no answer in shewing cause, that, upon the defendant's affidavit, enough of the opposite party's votes are bad to reduce his number in the poll below that of the defendant. Regina v. Byrne, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 273, Q. B.

Quere, is a quo warranto information maintainable for the office of borough weigh-master, appointed under the 4 Ann, c. 14, within the statutes 19 Geo. 2, c. 12, and 38 Geo. 3, c. 2? Honan v. Versher, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 64, Q. B.

RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Generally.—Where certain calls were made by the directors of a railway company, who were bound by the 90th section to pay up all calls due by them before they acted in any way; and before these calls were made, or anything done upon them, they were again rescinded. Held, that the directors were authorised to rescind the resolution for these calls, though they had not paid them. Dublin and Drogheda Railway Company v. Nash, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 289, Q. B.

Where a conditional order for a mandamus was obtained against a railway company, to compel them to hold an inquisition to assess compensation, and in the interval between the obtaining of the order, and the shewing cause, they held the inquisition, and lodged the purchase money, the court will compel them to pay the costs of the conditional order, when a reasonable time had elapsed between the notice to treat, and the date of the order. Reg. v. Great Southern and Western Railway Company, Bl. D. & O. 139.

Provisional Committee.—The members of the committee of a company provisionally registered, under the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 110, are not partners so as to make one liable for the acts of the other. The fact of a person agreeing to become a member of the provisional committee, and signing the consent required by the Act of Parliament, merely amounts to an engagement to arrange measures for a future partnership; therefore in an action against a provisional committee-man, for work done by the order of another person, on behalf of the intended company, to render the defendant liable, he must be shewn to have entered into the contract. Forrester v. Bell, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 555; S. C., Bl. D. & O. 119, N. P., Q. B.

Railway Shares.—A stockbroker negotiating the sale and transfer of shares in a railway company, is not within the term "promoter of a company," in the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 110, s. 24. To an action, therefore, brought by him for to recover money paid for the defendant in the purchase of shares, it is no defence that such shares were in companies not registered. Rooney v. Palmer, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 327, Q. B.

Notice to Treat.—If after the service of a notice to treat by a railway company, the party served replies thereto by a notice stating his title to the lands, and the compensation he claims, and the company neither refer the matter to arbitration, or summon a jury to decide it. Held, that they thereby acquiesce in the offer made, and that the 8 Vic. c. 18, s. 68, gives a right of action to the owner of the land for the amount claimed. Katon v. The Midland Great Western Railway Company, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 310, Q. B.

Held, also, that the 68th, 184th, and 194th, sections of that statute, (the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845,) are not repugnant to each other. Ib.

Recovering back Deposits.—See ASSURANCE.

An allottee of shares in a railway company provisionally registered, paid a deposit of £2 2s. per share, and signed the subscriber's agreement, which gave the provisional directors power to carry on the undertaking, or any part of it, or to abandon the whole, or any part of it, and out of the money which should come to their hands by way of deposit, or otherwise, to make such deposits, or investments, as might be required by the standing orders of Parliament, &c., and generally to apply such moneys in paying and satisfying all other costs, expenses, or liabilities, which they might incur in paying and satisfying all other costs, expenses, or liabilities, which they might incur in relation to the undertaking. The project proved abortive, and in an action of assumpsit to recover back the deposit, Held, that the plaintiff could not, in such action, impeach the validity of the subscriber's agreement, and that by executing that deed he had authorized the directors to dispose of the money, and, therefore, could not recover back any portion of the deposit. Daly v. Rooney, 1 Ir. Jur. 196, Q. B.

The defendant being the proprietor of certain shares in a projected stock company for which he paid a deposit of £50, sold the same to the plaintiff for £250, through a third person who negotiated the entire sale. In about a fortnight after the project was set on foot it was entirely abandoned, and before any deed or written agreement was executed by the parties, the plaintiff received back the £50, the amount of the original deposit on the shares he purchased, and then brought the present action for money had and received for his use by the defendant, in order to recover the residue of the £250. Held, that he was entitled to recover that sum. Maguire v. Goddard, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 306, Q. B.

Actions for Calls.—A. was a subscriber for five shares in the D. and D. R. C., and in February, 1836, executed a parliamentary contract, covenanting for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to pay the amount of the shares he subscribed for; and afterwards, in May, 1836, sold his shares, and assigned his scrip to B.; and in August in that year an Act of Parliament was passed incorporating the subscribers into a company; but A. continued as the registered proprietor, in the books of the company of these shares. B. never claimed any right as assignee, nor was he recognized as such by the company. Held, that A. continued liable for the amount of calls, on foot of the five shares made after the said assignment, as the proprietors thereof. Dublin and Drogheda Railway Company, v. Nash, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 239, Q. B.

Lodgment of Purchase Money.—An affidavit to ground an application for liberty to transfer money lodged by a railway company, under the 8 Vic. c. 18, must state accurately the rights of the persons claiming. In re Great Western Railway Company, Bl. D. & O. 112, Ex. [See, Ex parte Grange, 3 You. and Col. 62.]

Mandamus.—See MANDAMUS.

The prosecutor was possessed of a piece of ground on the sea shore, on which he erected a dwelling-house, for the purpose, among others, of bathing; of which enjoyment he was deprived, in consequence of a railway embankment raised between the dwelling-house and the sea. Held by a majority of the judges, that a mandamus lay against the company, under the provisions of the 68th section of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 20, (Railways Clauses Consolidation Act); and that it was not a subject for compensation under the provisions of the 94th section of the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 18, (Lands Consolidation Clauses Act.) Falls v. B. & B. Railway Co., 1 Ir. Jur. 303, Ex. Ch.

RATES.

Police rates.—By an act of Parliament a power was given to Commissioners, &c., to levy rates for cleansing and lighting the town of B., and the valuers were to value "the several messuages, tenements, houses, buildings, and hereditaments;" and the persons assessed were "all and every person who should rent or occupy within said town, any messuage, house, warehouse, shop, cellar, vault, stable, coach-house, brew-house, granary, malt-house, building, garden, land, tenement, or hereditament." Held, that a person who derived quayage from a quay in the town, was not rateable in respect of the quay or quayage derived therefrom. Tombs v. Commissioners of Borough of Belfast, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 164, Q. B.

Poor's Rate.—The Grand Canal Company being rated under the Act for the relief of the poor for the canal and its banks, an additional rate is assessed on them for the "value of land or water supplied to the pipe water establishment of the city of Dublin," and for "profits" received from the pipe water establishment for the water supplied for "watering the streets," and "profits from the supplies to the public fountains." Held, bad as being a rating of the whole already rated. Grand Canal Company v. Guardians of the South Dublin Union, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 424, Q. B.

Held also, that the Canal Company are not occupiers under the 61st section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, so as to make them rateable. Ib.

Quere, are those profits "rateable hereditaments" under the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 56, s. 63. Ib.

The landlord of a house and land occupied as a charitable institution is not liable to be rated to the relief of the poor under the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 56. Ex parte Hayes, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 196, Q. B.

Rates on Public Buildings.—When a dead wall or void space of ground attached to a public building abuts on a street, so much of the street as lies immediately in front of the public building is, under the 54 Geo. 3, c. 221, liable to be taxed by the square measure, and the remainder by lineal measure only. King's Inns Society v. Commissioners of Paving, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 157, Q. B.

The 65th section of the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 56 enacts, "that the particulars of every rate made for relief of the poor shall be entered in a book in the form given in the schedule to the Act annexed, and the Guardians shall before the same is levied sign the declaration at foot of said form, and the said book shall be evidence of the truth of every particular so contained therein." Actions of debt were brought by Guardians of the poor to recover from the defendant the amount of a rate made upon him as "immediate lessor," of occupiers of hereditaments of less annual value than £4. The guardians produced the rate book at the trial and relied on them as establishing conclusively the liability of the defendant to the rate. Held, that the defendant was at liberty to rebut the statement contained in the rate books, and to go into evidence to show he was not the immediate lessor. Guardians of Castlebar Union v. Lord Lucan, 1 Ir. Jur. 142, Q. B.

Ministers' Money.—Ministers' money is a rate within the meaning of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 108, and is necessary to be paid, before the person liable can be enrolled as a burgess. In re O'Flynn, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 47, Q. B.

RE-BUTTER—See PRACTICE.

RECEIVER—See EJECTMENT. (NOTICE TO QUIT.)

RECITALS.

Held that a recital in a deed read by a party is sufficient to rebut secondary evidence given by the same party that the contents of the recited deed differed from the recital. Held, that the jury should presume a deed to have been made in accordance with the recital, rather than believe the evidence to contradict it. Flood v. Moriarty, Bl. D. & O. 165, N. P. [Per Pigot, C. B.]

RECOGNIZANCE—See SCIRE FACIAS.

Should the original record be returned, or is an exemplification of it a sufficient compliance with the statute? Ib.

No subpoena shall in future issue for the production of any record in the custody of the paymaster of civil services, or of any other officer of her Majesty, distinct from those under the controul of the several courts, without the order of the court, or of one of the judges thereof, upon special application in the cause where the same shall be deemed necessary, and notice of such application must be given to the Crown-solicitor of the district wherein the record is deposited; and the order served on the officer in whose custody it is with the writ of subpoena or duces tecum. In re Attorney-general, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 185.

The court will amend the return of a record by extending the same to the following term, provided it is not out of return at the time of the application, and that the amended return-day be not beyond the time at which the record might at first have been made returnable. *Bagot v. Amendment.—See AMENDMENT.

Generally.—Quære, can the bailee of a chattel maintain an action of replevin, and if he can, is it necessary that he should have the actual possession of the chattel at the time of the seizure? Butler v. Bridge, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 464.

Quære, should the bailment be replied specially to the pleas of property. Ib.

A general avowry by the assignee of an insolvent for rent, which had accrued due to a former assignee who had died, is bad. McKeon v. Smith, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 231, C. P.

In an action of replevin the defendant pleaded—first non cepit, secondly, that the goods seized were not the property of the plaintiff, thirdly, a special cognizance that he seized the goods under a statutable execution against a third party and that these goods were not the goods of the plaintiff, on which pleas, issue was joined as to the property in the goods, and a verdict found for the plaintiff. Held that under such circumstances a motion for a nonsuit could not be sustained. Keeven v. Philips, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 440, Q. B.

A defendant in replevin may move for judgment non obstante veredicto. McCreery v. Jackson, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 443, Q. B.

In an action of replevin, an immaterial issue had been joined on a replication, and a verdict found for the plaintiff. Held, that the avowant was not entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto upon that issue, though there was no confession of the cause of action in that plea. Ib.

Distress.—As to the necessary amount of evidence of insufficiency of distress. See Orr v. Stephenson, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 6. [Per Pennefather, B.]

The 6th section of the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 75, requiring a landlord to deliver a particular of distress, does not apply to actions of replevin in the superior courts. Daly v. Bloomfield, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 65.

An agreement to change the gale-days on which the rent is to be paid, and ascertaining the fraction payable on the then last new gale-day, will be sufficient evidence, to go to the jury, of rent being in arrear, so as to support a distress. Percell v. Nolan, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 258, C. P.

Writ.—A writ of replevin will not be quashed if it issue to get back goods, which the defendant obtained by virtue of a contract, to convey them over the sea for the plaintiff, there being questions of law and fact which can be tried in the action. Corracaden v. Stewart, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 166, Q. B.

When the plaintiff, from whom a mare had been stolen, which was found in the possession of the defendant, who had purchased her from a party accused of having stolen her, had issued a writ of replevin, returnable into this court, and thereby obtained possession of the mare, after informations had been sworn against the reputed felon, but before he had been tried. The court ordered the writ to be quashed, and the mare to be returned to the defendant. Doyle v. Kelly, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 9, C. P.

Pleading.—Where in replevin, the plaintiff declared for a taking on the 9th of August, 1838, and the defendant avowed for five years arrears of rent, next before, and ending on the 25th of March, 1836, due to the defendant by virtue of a demise theretofore made, and the plaintiff pleaded, amongst other pleas, a plea of the recent statute of Limitations (3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 42), to the whole amount of the arrears; the defendant demurred, principally on the ground, that the plea of the statute should have been confined to the period of the five years which were outside six years; but the court overruled the demurrer. Wilson in replevin v. Jackson, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 1, Q. B.

Although the terms of the contract must be accurately stated in an avowry, and a variance in respect to them would be bad, yet the time stated is not material. [Per Burton, J.] Ib.

Where a further plea to an avowry, in the formal part (as to leave of the court, &c.), professed to be an answer to the whole of the avowry; but in the substantial part of the plea professed to be an answer, and only answered a part of the demand. Held good on general demurrer. Ryan v. Young, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 76, Q. B.

Semble—That this plea would be bad on special demurrer. Ib.

Where, to an avowry, the defendant pleaded that the property in question was the joint property of himself and the plaintiff. Held, that this was a good plea; and where to the avowry several other pleas were pleaded; in all of which, the taking was denied, and the detention justified. Held, that the said pleas were bad for duplicity. Roeves v. Morris, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 309, Q. B.

The plaintiff in replevin being under terms to plead issuably, pleaded to all the avowries and recognizances, in the names of different parties, a plea of riens in arrear, "from the plaintiff to the said defendant." The court ordered the plea to be taken off the file with costs; but gave the plaintiff liberty to plead anew. Graydon v. Kernan, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 121, C. P.

In replevin the declaration stated that the defendant on, &c., "in the parish of St. Thomas, in the county of the city of Dublin, in a certain dwelling house, there took the goods, &c." of the plaintiff; and the defendant demurred, specially on the ground that the locus in quo was not sufficiently described. Held, that the description in the declaration was sufficient. Kenny v. Simpson, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 42, Q. B.

In replevin of a distress for a rent-charge, the defendant, in the cognizance, set out deeds which made title to part of the lands on which it was charged, as well as the rent-charge itself. Held, that it was not necessary to plead the lease and release as distinct deeds, as the conveyance might be resorted to as grants at common law. Cooper v. Hamilton, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 225, C. P.

Held, that it was not necessary to aver continuance of seizin in fee of the rent in the party distraining at the time of the distress, and that an averment at the conclusion of the cognizance, that "the locus in quo is, and at the time when, &c., was part of the premises granted and re-leased by the deed of 1712; and by virtue of which deed, the premises therein mentioned were charged with, and made subject to the said yearly rent, to be issuing and growing thereout; and because a certain sum at the said time, when, &c., was due, &c.," was a sufficient allegation of the lands being charged with the rent, at the time of making the distress. Ib.

Held also, that it is not necessary to make proffer of a deed making a tenant to the præcipe, and leading the uses of a recovery; or of any conveyance operating under the statute of uses. Ib.

An avowry, which, after stating that the taking or detention of several distinct parcels of goods was for several and distinct gales of rent, in the conclusion justified the taking or detention of all the goods, for the whole arrear of rent, is bad on general demurrer. Dejoncourt v. Rogers, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 450, Ex. Ch.

A plea to an avowry in replevin, framed under the 10th section of the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 111, ought distinctly to apprise the defendant of the precise default complained of by the plaintiff; and therefore where the language of the plea was so ambiguous as to leave it doubtful whether the plaintiff complained of a non-delivery of the particulars of distress, to a person in possession—there having been such a person—or of the defendant's having omitted to put the same on a conspicuous part of the premises, being vacant at the time. Held to be bad for uncertainty. Richardson v. Newhenham, 1 Ir. Jur. 204, Q. B.

Semble—The plea might have been in the alternative; provided that neither allegation was so worded as to leave the materiality of the other doubtful, for the purposes of the pleading in question. Ib.

Semble—That the plea was bad, having been pleaded to two avowries, differing in respect of the rent-days, and nevertheless referring to a single particular. Ib.

Variance.—Lands were leased after the passing of the 4th Geo. 4, c. 99, and an establishment for the composition of tithes, within the parish at a yearly rent of £104 8s. 6d., together with £7 1s. 6d., for tithe payable half-yearly; and the landlord, after the passing of the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 109, distrained for half-a-year's rent due, viz. one-half of the foregoing rent and tithe, minus one-eighth of the latter, and in an action of replevin, avowed for the full amount of the said one half-year's rent and tithe, without deducting the one-eighth of the latter; and at the trial gave the lease in evidence. Held not to be a variance. Burke v. Dignam, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 368, C. P.

Amendment of Pleadings.—A notice and consent served on the plaintiff, to allow the defendant to amend and add new avowries, on the terms of amending the plaintiff's copy, entering the rules to plead de novo, and paying to the plaintiff such costs as might be incurred by him, by reason of the amendment. Held to be sufficient, without the additional terms of the defendant paying the costs of pleas in bar. Whelan v. Annesley, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 17, C. P.

Evidence.—In replevin it appeared that the plaintiff, who was an admirer of paintings, became acquainted with the defendant, who represented himself as an artist, and immediately after lent 42 paintings from his dwelling-house, for exhibition in the defendant's lodgings, in order, as it was alleged, to assist defendant, and also to have them cleaned; and in about a month afterwards, the plaintiff purchased several paintings through the defendant, which were also sent to the same place with the plaintiff's consent. With respect to one painting, it appeared that the plaintiff gave the defendant the money to purchase it; sent him to buy it; and directed him to bring it to Nassau-street. The defendant purchased the painting, but did not bring it to Nassau-street, but took it to his own lodgings with the rest of the plaintiff's paintings. It further appeared, with respect to three others of the paintings, that when the plaintiff went with the sheriff, to point out to him his paintings in the defendant's lodgings; these three were missing, and the defendant said he had sold them; but upon search they were discovered removed from the room in which the others were, and concealed in the garret of the house. Held, by the whole court, that with respect to the one painting above mentioned, there was sufficient evidence of a taking of it by the defendant to go to the jury, and to sustain their finding for the plaintiff on the plea of non cepit. Reeves v. Morris, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 484, Q. B.

Where to a declaration in replevin, the defendant pleaded that the goods were the property of A. Held, that A. was not a party to the suit, nor a person on whose individual behalf the action was defended, and therefore that he was a competent witness. Kemp v. Mathews, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 406, Q. B.

On an issue in replevin, as to whether a person named Garvin was tenant at a certain period to A. or B. Garvin, was produced at the trial as a witness, and an attested copy of an affidavit, made by a person of the same name, in a cause in the Court of Exchequer, was offered in evidence, in which the allegations as to facts were different to what Garvin swore at the trial. Held, that such attested copy was admissible in evidence—proof being given of the identity of the person, with the person who swore the affidavit. Garvin v. Carroll, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 323, Q. B. REVENUE.—See MAGISTRATE. MANDAMUS.

A grocer, obtaining the license specified in the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 38, s. 3, to retail spirits in quantities, not less at one time than one pint, and to be consumed elsewhere than in the house or on the premises of such retailer, is liable to the higher rate of duty imposed upon retail spirit licenses, by the 2nd section and schedule 6 Geo. 4, c. 81. Dickson v. Pape, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 74. [Brady, C. B. dissentiente.] S. C.—Decision reversed. Dickson v. Pape, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 107, Ex. Ch. [Lefroy, B., Richards, B., Torrens, J., & Pennefather, B., dissentientibus.]

The effect of the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 38, s. 3, is, that a licensed publican is not entitled to a grocer's license for the sale of coffee, tea, &c., on the same premises; and a person holding a grocer's license, is not entitled to any other license, for the sale of spirits, but that mentioned in 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 38, s. 3. McKenna v. Pape, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 98, Ex. C.

The 7th section of the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 68, applies to the case of a person applying for a license for the first time; and therefore it is necessary that a party applying for, and obtaining a license, should enter into the bond required by the 7th section, even though he should have obtained a license, and entered into a similar bond in the preceding year. McGarry v. Pape, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 141, Ex. Ch.

A person who is already a licensed publican, is not entitled to a grocer's license since the passing of the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 38. Reg v. Commissioners of Excise, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 287, Q. B.

A. and Co. being brewers, at W., and having two licenses, one authorising them to brew for sale, and another to brew and retail beer, to be consumed elsewhere than on their premises—sent a van to C., in charge of a servant, who from it, on their behalf, sold beer by retail to any person who offered to buy. Held, that no other license for doing so was required by the 6 & 7 G. 4, c. 81. Quære, was any license necessary for such a sale. Stevens v. Strangmans, 1 Ir. Jur. 159, Ex.

Semble—That in cases of serious doubt, as to the construction of statutes, and licences thereunder, the court will be slow to inflict penalties for their infringement. Ib.

Information.—Where a defendant was arrested under the 95th section of the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 53, by virtue of a capias, which recited that an information had been exhibited—no information having been exhibited or filed. Held, that the proceeding was regular. Attorney General v. Kyle, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 87, Rev. Ex.

Held also, that the defendant was not entitled to a copy or an inspection of the affidavits, upon which the fiat for the captus was grounded. Ib.

The appearance in court, mentioned in the 95th section, may be made by attorney; and bail to answer the forfeitures, may be taken before commissioners appointed by the parties. Ib.

An information being exhibited before a magistrate against two parties, under the 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 55, for that they did keep a certain mill, and did permit to be received into it certain malt, the duties of which had not been paid; and the evidence adduced to support the information, having proved that the mill was the property and kept by one of the two parties only, the magistrate dismissed the case. Held, that the information was not supported by the evidence, and that the decision of the magistrate was correct. The Queen v. McCullon, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 27, Rev. Ex.

Under the 19th section of the 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 55, an information was exhibited against the defendant for having been found in a certain place, where the process of distillation was then carrying on. Held, that the decision of the magistrates dismissing the complaint, on the ground, that the evidence proving that the defendant was not seen or arrested in the place, but was only seen coming out of a shed attached to an old house within which the distillation was carrying on, and was arrested within a few paces of the shed, did not sustain the information, was erroneous. On certiorari to this court, that decision was quashed, and the case sent back to the magistrates to re-hear and decide on the merits. Reg. v. Mullins, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 33, Rev. Ex.

The court quashed the decision of certain magistrates, dismissing an information exhibited before them, under the 19th section of 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 55, against the defendant, for having been found in a certain place wherein the process of illicit distillation was then carrying on—the magistrates erroneously conceiving that evidence of the defendant being found not upon the place, but being seen coming out of it, and pursued and arrested at some distance from the place, the officer arresting not saving during that period lost sight of him, was not sufficient to support the information. Reg. v. Moran, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 35, Rev. Ex.

Where an information charged that a party did knowingly harbour and conceal, and did also permit and suffer to be harboured and concealed certain contraband articles, and the conviction thereon adjudged him guilty of the offence so charged. Held that this information did not charge two offences, and that there was no duplicity in the conviction. Reg. v. McNaghten, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 93, Rev. Ex.

An appeal does not lie under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, s. 53, s. 82, from a dismissal, by parties at petty sessions, of an information brought for a custom's offence, (under the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 53, s. 44,) by an excise officer, by virtue of the 4 & 5 W. 4, cap. 52, 28. Reg. v. McFeely, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 395, Q. B.

In revenue cases the court will not grant the ordinary rule that the defendant join in the expense of the demurrer books or judgment for the plaintiff. Reg. v. —, 1 Ir. Jur. 236, Rev. Ex.

Habeas Corpus.—For the practice as to issuing an habeas corpus at the revenue side of the Exchequer, see The Attorney-general v. Sullivan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 254, Rev. Ex.

Notice of Trial, 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 55, s. 19.]—The defendants having been arrested in a house in which illicit distillation was then carrying on, and brought before a magistrate, were then admitted to bail under the 36th section of that Act, to appear on a certain day before the petty sessions. On the day fixed for the trial they appeared, and objected that they were not duly summoned, or any notice of trial for that day served upon them, in contravention of the terms of that statute. The magistrates, admitting the objection, dismissed the complaint. Held, that such summons or notice for trial was not necessary; and therefore this court, upon certiorari, quashed the decision of the magistrates, and sent the case back to them to re-hear on the merits. Reg. v. Gillespie, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 36, Rev. Ex.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 52, s. 1, and 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 51, s. 6.]—Held, that so much of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 52, s. 1, as imposed the forfeiture of malt found in an unentered building was impliedly repealed by the above enactments of the latter. Attorney-general v. Dunne, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 357, Ex.

When two statutes have the same purview, and inflicting different punishments for the same offence, the punishments are not to be taken as cumulative, but the latter statute is to be taken as expressing the intention of the Legislature, and therefore, so far as relates to the punishment, repealing the former one. Ib.

I. JUDGMENT.

II. RECOGNIZANCE.

I. JUDGMENT.

Issuing Scire Facias.—Where an arrangement had been entered into by a committee consisting of several members of a company, for the purpose of contributing and collecting contributions, in order to discharge the debts of the company, the court refused to allow a scire facias to issue, on a judgment obtained, against the public officer of the company, by a creditor put forward by such committee, against a former member of the company, who was alleged to be a member for the time being, but whose name did not appear on the registry. Sutherland v. Hodges, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 292, Q. B.

The court granted a scire facias to revive a judgment more than twenty years old, although there was nothing to take it out of the statute, except a revivor against the conusor in 1825, and an acknowledgment in writing by his wife, written, as the applicant believed, with the sanction and authority of her husband. Assignee of Egan v. Joyce, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 341, C. P.

The court issued a scire facias to revive a judgment more than twenty years old, recovered against a personal representative de bonis testatoris, although there had been no payment of principal or interest, or acknowledgment in writing within twenty years, and nothing to keep it alive except the continuance of a Chancery suit. Gower v. Monks, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 343, C. P.

Where a judgment had been obtained in 1818 by A. against B., and in 1832 a scire facias had been sued out thereon by the joint administrators of A., which scire facias was served, and the rule for judgment entered thereon in January, 1834, and no further proceedings were had on foot of the scire facias, the court refused to grant liberty to proceed on the scire facias, and to allow a suggestion to be entered for that purpose, stating the death of one of the plaintiffs. Roche v. Blake, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 479, Q. B.

A judgment in scire facias is headed of the term of which the first writ of scire facias is tested, but is entered on the roll of the term in which the judgment is marked. O'Reilly v. Monaghan, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 507, Ex.

In an affidavit to ground a motion for liberty to issue a scire facias to revive a judgment, a statement that payments of interest were made "for and on account" of the conusor, and not stating by whom, is insufficient. Wignmore v. Wignmore, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 103, Q. B.

The affidavit of an assignee of a judgment, who seeks to revive, must shew by special circumstances that it is still unpaid. Holmes v. Gregory, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 66, C. P.

Upon motion for liberty to issue a Sci. Fa. to revive a judgment twenty years old, the affidavits must state by whom payments of interest have been made. Crenim v. Stephenson, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 287, Q. B.

One of two conusors of a joint judgment being dead, a sci. fa. may issue to revive it against the surviving conusor, and the heir and terre-tenants of the deceased conusor. Keegan v. Deakin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 15, C. P.

An affidavit for liberty to issue a sci. fa. to revive a judgment, if the judgment be over twenty years old, should specify the particulars as to the payments of interest relied upon. Anonymous, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 104, Q. B.

A scire facias to revive was issued, the judgment being more than twenty years old, it being merely sworn "that several sums had been paid within the last thirteen years, on foot of interest." Woodroffe v. Blake, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 417, C. P.

A judgment may be revived by the personal representative of the cestui que trust, the personal representative of the person in whom the legal estate was vested, being out of the jurisdiction. Tariffs v. Kelly, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 220, C. P.

Scire facias to revive a judgment of Hilary Term, 1807—it was never revived or redocketed; the conusor was entitled for his life to the interest of the sum secured by the judgment, the principal to go upon his death to his issue. The conusor was discharged as an insolvent debtor. Held, that the representatives of the conusor were entitled to revive. Dillon v. Kennedy, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 296, Q. B.

On a motion by the assignee of a judgment, for liberty to issue a sci. fa. to revive, the court dispensed with the usual affidavit of the original conusor; that the full sum was due on foot of the judgment, at the time of the assignment—it being sworn that the conusor was bed-ridden, and unable to make an affidavit. Salmon v. Lord Audley, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 91, C. P.

The court would not grant liberty to the assignee of an assignee of a judgment, to issue a sci. fa. to revive it—the original conusor being dead, and the first assignee making no affidavit; and the applicant merely swearing that the judgment was assigned to him in consideration of the sum of £400, without stating that he had paid anything for it. Ib.

A judgment of 1719 having been assigned in 1830, the conusor and conusor being previously dead, the court would not issue a sci. fa. to revive it, on an affidavit which stated that all interest due on foot of it had been paid up to the preceding May, without stating anything specific of the payments previous to the assignment. Kirman v. Blake, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 187, C. P.

The court will not grant an order for liberty to issue a sci. fa. to revive a judgment more than ity years old, when there has not been any payment of interest, or anything to take it out of the debt, except a written acknowledgment given at the expiration of the twenty years. Brady v. Fitzgerald, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 295, Q. B.

An admission in the schedule of an insolvent of his due on foot of a judgment, is an admission in the 40th section of the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27; liberty to issue the sci. fa. will not be granted as the affidavit grounding the application have any of the schedule containing the admission attached to it. Cockburn v. White, Bl. D. & O., Q. B.

Service.—Service of a scire facias to revive a judgment need not be personal. Hill v. Stawell, 1 L. Rep. 104, Q. B.

Service of this writ by throwing it into defendant's yard through an open in the gate, was deemed good service under the circumstances of this case.

Substitution of Service.—Service on the consor of a judgment, who has absconded from the country, of the conditional order for liberty to issue sci. fa. to revive a judgment, will be substituted serving his wife and son who reside upon his property, and a receiver who has been appointed in it in an equity cause. Molloy v. Clarke, 1 Ir. Rep. 38, Q. B.

Service of a scire facias was substituted on the part of the heir of the consor, who was residing in America. Johnson v. Wilson, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 273, P.

Where the residence of the heir-at-law and one issue cannot be ascertained, the court will substitute service of a sci. fa. on the remaining devisees resident in this country. Bell v. Fyan, Bl. D. & 31, Ex.

Return to Writ.—See SHERIFF.

Moving on Sci. Fa.—A party will not be permitted to move on a sci. fa. in a term it is not returnable, unless he take the earliest opportunity of applying to the court for liberty to do so; but a delay the part of the plaintiff, in not applying until late in the term, was cured by the circumstance of the defendant having asked the plaintiff for time to answer. Maley v. O'Malley, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 1, C. P.

Setting aside Scire Facias.—Where a judgment of revivor and execution thereon had been set aside, on allegations of non-service and of payment, on the terms of the plaintiff issuing another scire facias, and trying an issue on a plea of payment at the next assizes, the defendant undertaking not to bring any action whatever. The plaintiff having failed to issue said scire facias, the court continued the setting aside the scire facias and execution, and struck out the undertaking on the part of the defendant not to bring an action. Tutill v. Shank, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 205, C. P.

The plaintiff, being the personal representative of the surviving assignee of the judgment, was defeated in the title of a demurrer to the scire facias of the assignee of the judgment, and the plaintiff having marked judgment, the court set it aside, but allowed the plaintiff to amend. The defendant having made no affidavit of merits, and it appearing that the plaintiff could not amend, he was allowed to quash the writ. Lowe v. Hoare, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 263, C. P.

An affidavit, to ground a motion for a sci. fa. to revive a judgment at the suit of a banking company, made by the solicitor of the company, is not sufficient unless the facts deposed to be within his actual knowledge. Bank of Ireland v. —, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 266, Ex.

Pleading.—Scire facias upon a judgment setting forth an assignment by deed of the judgment debt, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, "as by the memorial and record of the same enrolled manifestly appears." Plea, that no one witness to the memorial, who was a witness to the deed of assignment, made an affidavit at the foot of the memorial of the true perfection of the deed of assignment and memorial before the officer, &c., where the judgment was entered secundum formam statuti, and that therefore the judgment was not duly assigned secundum formam statuti. Held bad as amounting to a plea of nul tiel record. Walters v. Lidwell, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 362, C. P.

To a scire facias on a judgment, the return alleged that the consor, at the time of the rendition of the judgment, was seised of a descendible freehold, but did not aver it to be still subsisting. Plea by the heir, that A. B. was seised in fee before the issuing the scire facias, and being seised before the issuing of the scire facias, to wit, on &c., demised to the heir for one year, and so from year to year, by virtue of which demise, which is still subsisting, the heir is still possessed, and that the consor was not, at the time of the rendition of the judgment, seised of a descendible freehold still subsisting. Replication, that he was seised at the time of rendition of judgment, modo et forma, as in scire facias and return stated. Quære, first, whether the replication is bad for not averring the descendible freehold to be still subsisting; secondly, whether the plea is bad being a plea by the heir of non-seisin in the ancestor. Ib.

Plea (to the same scire facias) alleging, that it is stated in the memorial that the deed of assignment bears date the 19th of June, 1843, and that it is not stated in the memorial that the deed was perfected on any other day, as appears by the record of the memorial, and averring that the deed was not perfected on the 19th of June, 1843, but was in fact perfected on another day, Held to be bad as amounting to a plea of nul tiel record. Ib.

A judgment, and by the executors of the consor, a judgment in debt obtained for the amount of the debt secured by the original judgment, and of another debt; death of the debtor in execution under a ca. sa. upon the second judgment is no bar to the assignee of the original judgment having execution against the lands of the consor. Ib.

The omission of the quod recuperet in a writ of scire facias to revive a judgment is bad on special demurrer. Moriarty v. Wilson, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 52, C. P.

Scire facias issued by the executors of a consor of a judgment, recited and prayed execution of the judgment, which was recovered upwards of twenty years before the issuing of the writ. Plea, statute of limitations, 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Replication, a judgment of revivor recovered by themselves within twenty years. Held by the House of Lords that the plea was a sufficient answer to the claim as stated in the declaration, and that the replication was bad upon general demurrer, being a departure from the declaration. Farran v. Beresford, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 487, Dom. Proc.

A new right acquired with said executors by the judgment of revivor. Ib.

Semble, the time of limitation, prescribed by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 47, s. 40, begins to run from the entry of the original judgment, and not from the date of the judgment of revivor, except that where a new right was conferred by the judgment of revivor the money sought to be recovered may be considered to have been secured to them by that judgment, within the true meaning of the 40th section of the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, and the time, therefore, begins to run from the date of such a judgment in scire facias. Ib.

In a scire facias at the suit of the assignee of the personal representative of the conusor, the writ, after stating the recovery of the judgment, stated that "the said D. F. (the conusor) is since dead, and afterwards D. B. F., administrator of the said D. F. deceased, by his deed duly executed, the judgment debt and damages aforesaid, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided to R. B., the plaintiff, transferred and assigned, as by the said memorial, &c." Held, upon special demurrer to this writ, first, it was not necessary to state the time of the death of the conusor; secondly, it was sufficiently shown that the assignment was executed after the death of the conusor; thirdly, that it sufficiently appeared that administration to the conusor was obtained before execution of the assignment—the document amounting to this, that D. B. F. being administrator, assigned. Fourthly, the same averment supplied the want of an averment that the conusor died intestate, as it imported that D. B. F. was the legal administrator of the conusor, and whether he was so to an intestate, or administrator with the will annexed, is not material, and when the administration is not granted to the plaintiff, but to the party through whom he derives, it is not necessary to make profert of the letters of administration, or set out the particulars thereof. Fifthly, that it was not necessary to make profert of the assignment; and sixthly, that it is not necessary to specify the time of the entry of the memorial upon the roll. Barry v. Hoare, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 97, Q. B.

A scire facias stated a judgment of 1825 for £2000, and £2 1s. damages recovered in the court of the late King George IV. before our justices. Held not to be a variance either in the description of the court or in the statement of the amount of the judgment. Farr v. Rutledge, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 405, C. P.

A scire facias against a surviving conusor, and the heir and terre-tenants of the deceased conusor, and prayed execution against the former generally, and against the lands which were of the latter, &c. The sheriff at the conclusion of his return certified that "at the time of the rendition of the within judgment, or at any time afterwards during the lifetime of the said A. D. that there are not, nor were there any heir or heirs of the said A. D., nor were there any tenants of any other lands or tenements which were of the said A. D., at the time of the rendition of the said judgment, or at any time afterwards, within my bailwick, to whom I could make known, as by the within writ I am commanded." Held, that there was no misjoinder in the said writ, and that the prayer of execution was not irregular. Held also, that the sheriff's return was bad in having restricted the return of the tenants to those who were tenants of the lands during the life of the deceased conusor. McNevin v. Dolphin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 406, C. P.

To a scire facias by the assignee of a judgment of Hilary Term, 1809, against the assignee of the conusor, who had been a bankrupt, the defendant pleaded that at the time of the rendition of the judgment, and from thence continually until the issuing of the commission, the conusor had been a trader, &c., and that upon the 1st of June, 1819, he had been indebted to A. in £100, and being so indebted afterwards, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, he became a bankrupt, and thereupon afterwards a commission of bankruptcy issued against him. Held, on special demurrer to the plea, that it sufficiently appeared that the bankruptcy occurred after the rendition of the judgment. Stewart v. Beggs, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 379, Q. B.

A scire facias by the assignee of a judgment recited the recovery of the judgment, and that D. St. Q., afterwards by his deed duly executed, the judgment debt and damages aforesaid, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, to H. Fulton, transferred and assigned, as by the memorial and record of the same in our court before us remains and appears. Held to be a sufficient averment of title in the assignee, without specially setting out the due performance of the requisites of the 9 Geo. 2, c. 5. Creagh v. Fulton, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 322, Ex. Ch.

Held, that the defendant having pleaded nil in record of the memorial of the assignment, that a replication of titel record and praying inspection, was correct. Ib.

Held, that the record of the memorial of the assignment not being on the record before the Court of Error, the plaintiff in error, who assigned for error, that there was no such record of the memorial, was bound to have an application on notice, before the case came on for argument, for a writ of certiorari, to have the said record brought for inspection. Ib.

In a Sci. Fa. by an executor of the conusor, the defendant was called on to show anything for himself, why the plaintiff should not have execution against him, according to the form of the recovery, without stating as executor. Held to be sufficient. Hanington v. Cairnes, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 838, C. P.

In a Sci. Fa. by the assignee of a judgment, it is not necessary to make profert of the deed of assignment, or to show that the memorial was enrolled pursuant to the statute 9 G. 2, c. 5; or executed with the several requisites thereby prescribed. Dillon v. Hanlon, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 568, Ex.

The Sci. Fa. stated that J. D., on the confession and acknowledgment of J. H., recovered a judgment "against the said defendant." Held a sufficient averment of a recovery against J. H., without expressly averring the latter to be the defendant. Ib.

An averment in a Sci. Fa. that the conusor "died, and that A. H. became his executrix." Held, on special demurrer, not to be too general, A. H. being styled in a subsequent part of the writ, executrix of the last will and testament of the conusor. Ib.

A negative plea to a writ of Sci. Fa. ought not conclude, either with a verification, or to the country. Cullen v. Sharkett, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 239, Ex.

No pleading to a writ of Sci. Fa. ought to conclude to the country. Ib.

In Sci. Fa. on a judgment a plea of non-seisin of the conusor, properly concludes with a verification. Clarke v. Lynch, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 240, (n.) C. P.

A Sci. Fa. tested 6th of May, 1843, and directed to the sheriff of D., commanding him to make known, &c., as before commanded. Plea, that the present action or suit of Sci. Fa. was commenced on, &c., and that a present right to receive the money secured by the judgment, &c., accrued to J. S. twenty years before the commencement of the action or suit of Sci. Fa.; and that, at the time the right to receive the money secured by the judgment so accrued to J. S., he was capable of giving a discharge for the same; and that no part of the principal money secured by the judgment, or any interest thereon, was paid at any time within twenty years before the issuing of the writ. Replication—That on sundry times, within twenty years next before the issuing of the writ, the defendant paid several sums on account of the money secured by the judgment absque hoc. No part of the principal money secured by the judgment, or any interest thereon, was paid at any time within twenty years before the issuing of the writ. Held, on special demurrer, that this replication was bad. Birch v. Blennerhassett, 8. Ir. L. Rep. 394, Q. B.

Held also, that the plea could not be objected to on general demurrer, for not stating whether an original Sci. Fa. had issued; it appearing to the court, from the record, that no original Sci. Fa. had issued. Ib.

Practice in the action of Sci. Fa. Ib. note.

A Sci. Fa. recited a judgment for the not performing certain promises and assumptions. The judgment had been entered on the money counts, on plea of nul tiel record. Held—no variance. Morrissey v. Walsh, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 293, Ex.

A Sci. Fa. to revive a judgment recovered to secure punctual payment of an annuity. This circumstance was not stated on the Sci. Fa. Held to be no ground of objection on a plea of nul tiel record. Haig v. Kirk, Bl. D. & O. 251, Q. B.

Scire Facias by the executors of the cognisee. The defendant was called upon to show "wherefore the plaintiffs should not have execution against him," according to the form of the recovery, without an allegation that the plaintiffs did so "as executors." Profert was made of the letters testamentary. Held, on special demurrer to be sufficient. Vance v. Brassington, 1 Ir. Jur. 8, Ex.

An administrator cum testamento annexo may maintain a scire facias upon a judgment obtained durante minore etate, and the sci. fa. is sufficient in form, though it does not aver that the defendant was summoned to show cause why the plaintiff, "as such administrator, should not have execution." Cronin v. Murphy, 1 Ir. Jur. 231, Ex.

The practice of reviving judgments by nisi in ejectment, is irregular. Ashley v. Ejector, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 264, Q. B.

The writ of sci. fa. was tested on the 25th of November, 1837, and directed to the sheriff of C. and recited a judgment of Michaelmas Term, 1806, by O. against W.; that O. died, having by his will appointed two executors, who obtained probate and assigned the judgment to the plaintiff; that W. had died seized, &c., and the sci. fa. commanded the sheriff to make known to the heir and terre-tenants of W., &c. The sheriff returned that he had warned H. W., the heir of the conusor, and certain terre-tenants within his bailiwick, naming them. H. W. pleaded (per se) the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Replication, a judgment of revival in Easter Term, 1819. Held, that this case was governed by that of Ottiwell v. Farran, (2 Ir. L. Rep. 110), and that the statute ran from the date of the revival. White v. White, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 118, note, Ex.

Variance.]—The judgment commenced:—"County of the city of Dublin; to wit, H. D., of S., in the county of Galway, was attached to answer R. K., of Loughrea, in said county." And the writ of sci. fa. commenced:—"To the sheriff of the county of the city of Dublin, greeting, &c. Whereas, B. K. of Loughrea, in said county." Held, on plea of nul tiel record, that there was a fatal variance in the description of cognizee of the judgment. Kelly v. Dolphin, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 352, C. P.

A Sci. Fa. recited a judgment, "by reason of a certain plea of trespass on the case, as for costs and expenses." The judgment on record was for damages, sustained by reason of the non-fulfilment of several assumptions and promises, and for costs and expenses. Held, upon a plea of nul tiel record, that this was no variance. Agricultural Bank v. Nugent, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 357, Q. B.

Judgment.]—See STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. having confessed a judgment, died, and a sci. fa. to revive same having issued at the suit of the administrator of the conusee against the heir and terre-tenants of A.—B. was summoned as tenant of the lands, and judgment was had upon the sci. fa. Held that the court could not look behind the judgment in sci. fa., and that if B. had any title to plead, he should have pleaded it to the sci. fa. Keuns v. Barry, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 211, Q. B.

A rule nisi to mark judgment will be granted against the terre-tenants, notwithstanding a plea "that A. is heir, and that no writ was issued to summon him," it being not verified by affidavit. Hogg v. Armstrong, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 178, Q. B.

A judgment of revival, of Trinity Term, 1823, was ordered now (1840) to be enrolled as of that Term, though the original pleadings in scire facias were not forthcoming; it appearing to the court that the party had done all that he had to do, to have the judgment regularly entered, and that it was through an omission in the officer it had not been done. Martin v. McCausland, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 201, C. P.

Costs.—See COSTS.

A personal representative residing out of the jurisdiction, will be ordered to give the defendant in a sci. fa. security for costs. O'Brien v. Upton, 4 I. L. Rep. 419, C. P.

A sci. fa. against the heir and terre-tenants is a personal action, within the provisions of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 57, so that if a plaintiff enter a nolle prosequi against any of the terre-tenants served with the sci. fa. they are entitled to their costs. M'Nevin v. Dolphin, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 329, C. P.

II.—RECOGNIZANCE.

Pleading.—Payment is a bad plea to a sci. fa. on a recognizance. Reg. v. Walker, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 381, Ch., (Petty bag side.)

In a sci. fa. on a crown bond or recognizance, Held, on plea of nul tiel record, that it is unnecessary to set forth the condition of the bond or recognizance, it appearing from the uniform course of precedents in the office to be the practice to omit the condition. The Attorney-General v. Upton, 7 I. L. Rep. 505, Ex.

Semble, that such a practice is borne out by the authorities. Ib.

SECURITY FOR COSTS.—See COSTS.

SEQUESTRATION AND SEQUESTRATOR.

Sequestration when issued.—A sequestration having issued in 1838 against a beneficed clerk on a judgment on a bond, and marked for the principal sum and interest then due, which sum was not levied or paid until 1842. The court gave the plaintiff liberty to issue a new execution for the amount of the interest which had accrued between 1838 and 1842, being short of the penalty of the bond. Thacker v. Williams, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 97, C. P.

Where a beneficed clergyman had been discharged as an insolvent debtor, the court held that a judgment creditor whose debt had been returned in the schedule might legally issue a fi. fa. for the purpose of obtaining a return of nulla bona, and thereupon issue a levari de bonis ecclesiasticis. Mills v. Horner, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 212, C. P.

Death of bishop pending sequestration.—Where a levari had been sent to a bishop, and he had issued a sequestration thereon. Held, that on the death of that bishop, the levari and the sequestration issued thereon were in full force, and it was not necessary to revive the same. Held also, that on the death of the bishop his successor became responsible for the due application of the profits of the benefice under such levari and sequestration. Hogg v. Archbishop of Tuam, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 460, Q. B. [See as to removal. Dawson v. Symmons, 12 Jur. 1072, Q. B.]

A judgment creditor issued a sequestration against an incumbent, and thereupon went into possession of his benefice. The bishop of the diocese subsequently issued a sequestration for non residence against the same incumbent. Held, that the sequestration for non residence had the effect of suspending the creditors sequestration, and that the bishop was entitled to apply the proceeds of the benefice, in the first instance in defraying the necessary expenses of serving the cure, and in paying the costs which he has incurred in relation to his sequestration. Middleton v. Maxwell, 1 Ir. Jur. 198, Q. B. [Crampton, J., dissentiente.]

A sequestrator is liable to account for an arrear of rent-charge which became due while he was in possession. Ib.

Where the possession of the sequestrator ended on the 5th of March, 1844, no apportionment of the rent-charge which accrued between the 1st of November, 1843, and that date, could be made so as to charge the sequestrator. Ib.

A sequestrator is not liable for the gale which became due previous to his appointment. Ib.

Account by.—The court will treat a sequestrator as its officer, and as such will make him account before it on a summary application. Waldron v. Garrett, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 118, Ex.

The court has jurisdiction to order a sequestrator, appointed by the bishop pursuant to a levari, to account before its officer. Garstin v. Williams, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 512, Ex.

Such account may be enforced by the defendant, though the plaintiff has satisfied the judgment. Ib.

The sequestrator having, with the knowledge of the defendant, accounted in the Ecclesiastical Court, and specific over-charges having been pointed out in such account, it was ordered that the account in the Ecclesiastical Court be taken as correct with liberty to the defendant to sur-charge and falsify it. Ib.

It is no objection to an order on a sequestrator to account that, during the time, he was sequestrator in other causes under writs of levari issued forth of other courts of law. Ib.

Upon the death of the bishop the sequestrator is bound to account to his successor for the proceeds of the benefice which became due after the death of the bishop. Hogg v. Archbp. of Tuam, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 460, Q. B. [See Waldron v. Garrett, 1 J. & C. 69.]

The Court of Queen's Bench will not direct a sequestrator to account until the bishop certifies what he has done under the writ of levari. Walker v. Darcy, Bl. D. & O. 187, Q. B.

See, as to the difference of the practice in the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer of issuing writs of sequestration Walker v. Darcy. Ib.

A judgment creditor, who had obtained the sequestration of a benefice, is entitled to be paid the fruit of his execution in priority to a claim of the debtor's successor in the benefice, for the value of delapidations found under a commission of delapidation. Casey v. Horner, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 221, Q. B. [Baker v. Swayne, 1 Jon. & Car. 231, is not law.]

The court granted a writ of sequestration to the bishop without a writ of fi. fa., it appearing from the records of the court that the sheriff (to whom such writ, if issued, must have gone) had recently returned nulla bona to a fi. fa. sued out of this court against the defendant by another creditor. Smyth v. Armstrong, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 447, Ex.

Where a sequestrator has been ordered to account for the sums which he has received, he ought not, pending the confirmation of the Master's report, to pay over to the bishop the money in his hands; and if he does the court will, notwithstanding such payment, compel him to bring in the amount. Galbraith v. Pilkington, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 473, Ex.

SERVANT AND MASTER.

In an action on a special contract for dismissing without notice a farm-servant who had been hired for a year. Plea, first, that the plaintiff did not properly conduct himself, and did not obey the lawful and reasonable commands of the defendant, in relation to the services to be performed; secondly, that the plaintiff, whilst in the service of the defendant, was intoxicated, and incapable of attending to the business of the defendant; thirdly, that the plaintiff, whilst in the service of the defendant, had performed the services in a negligent and careless manner. Held, that the first was bad on special demurrer, as being uncertain, and too general; Held also, that the second and third were bad on general demurrer, as the facts alleged by those pleas did not amount to a justification of the dismissal. Wilson v. Brereton, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 466, Q. B.

SET OFF.

H. J. H. sued as accommodation-acceptor of a bill of exchange drawn on him by G., the defendant, for £50 in the usual form, and averred that he was damaged to the amount thereof with interest. The declaration contained the usual money counts, and the bill of particulars claimed only the amount of the bill and interest. The defendant pleaded the general issue, and gave notice of set off. At the trial defendant's counsel admitted the plaintiff's claim as set forth in the special count, (the money counts not being relied upon,) and gave the following memorandum, stamped with a penalty and an agreement stamp, in evidence of the set off: "My dear Sir—You have given me this day £280, which I undertake to return to you next week. This money you have given me on behalf of Sir G. G. out of the trust-money of Miss G., which you hold for her." "H. J. H. To Sir G. G." Held, that the defendant's set off should be allowed, as the plaintiff might have recovered under the money counts, and he could not deprive the defendant of his set off by declaring specially. Hamilton v. Gould, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 171, Q. B.

An application for further particulars must be upon affidavit. Wilson v. Ramsay, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 37, Q. B.; and see Acc. Darley v. Murphy, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 381.

In an action by executors the defendant served a notice of set off, stating among other credits, certain acceptances by defendant of the drafts of the testator, the dates of which were furnished, the court refused an order for further particulars of set off. Cover v. Stephens, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 124, Ex.

The proper means of procuring such information is by a bill of discovery. Ib.

If a bill of costs be pleaded as a set off, the court has a discretion to order them to be taxed, without the plaintiff giving an undertaking to pay the amount. Alker v. Dunne, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 105, Q. B.

SETTING ASIDE PROCEEDINGS—See PRACTICE.

SHERIFF—See INTERPLEADER. TRESPASS.

Sheriff of the city of Dublin, 3 & 4 Vic. c. 108.]—By the 26th G. 3, c. 19, (1r.), constituting the ballast corporation of Dublin, the sheriffs of the city of Dublin, for the time being, were appointed members of the said body. The Municipal Act (3 & 4 Vic. c. 108), though it alters the mode of appointment of the sheriff, does not affect his right to be a member of the Ballast Board. Such right is incident to his office of sheriff, and he holds the same position the two sheriffs formerly had. Reg. v. Borough, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 57, Q. B.

Practice, and duties of Sheriff generally.]—The Sheriffs levied a certain sum under an execution, and before they paid it over to the plaintiff, received two notices from creditors of the defendant, stating that the latter was a bankrupt, and cautioning them against paying the said sum to the plaintiff; and it appeared that the sheriffs had delayed the execution of the writ, and sale of the defendant's goods, and did not appear to have acted bonâ fide. The court refused, with costs, a motion by the sheriffs to lodge the sum in court till the adverse claims were decided. Ramsden v. Coury, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 175, Q. B.

A sheriff, against whom an order for a fine, for not returning a writ of habere facias possessionem had been obtained, and under which possession had been given, applied for a duplicate writ, and stated in his affidavit that the original had been lost, and could not be found since the execution of it. His motion was granted upon payment of all costs. Donnelly v. Malone, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 262, Q. B.

The sheriffs levied an execution in July, when they received notice from a third party, a creditor of the defendant, not to pay the amount, on an allegation that the defendant had committed an act of bankruptcy, and that it was intended to have a commission issued, but no steps were taken in this respect. On the sheriff moving that the time for returning the fi. fa. be extended, offering to lodge the amount levied in court. The court refused the motion, but without costs, there being no collusion. Power v. O'Brien, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 8, C. P.

The special bailiff of a sheriff need not employ an auctioneer, or have a license to act as such himself, for the purpose of selling under civil bill decrees. Reg. v. Martin, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 153, Q. B.

Quære, is the 46th section of the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 75, repealed by the 1 Vic. c. 43, s. 3. Ib.

Where it had been sworn that a writ had been delivered to the returning officer of the sheriff, and a conditional rule entered requiring the sheriff to return it; the court refused to discharge the rule on an affidavit of the sub-sheriff denying the reception of the writ by him or the sheriff. Held also, that the sheriff could not object to the regularity of the writ for want of the indorsement required by the 43rd general rule, on the ground of its not having been stated in the affidavit on which the conditional rule was obtained, that it had been so indorsed. Knipe v. Patterson, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 181, Q. B.

Where the sheriff deducted, from the proceeds of a sale under an execution, a sum of money which he in the first instance retained on account of auctioneer's fees, but which he subsequently claimed to be entitled to on account of extra expenses incurred in laying on the execution, he was ordered upon motion to refund the sum so retained, and to pay over the amount to the execution creditor, but in consequence of delay on the part of the latter in bringing forward the motion; the court withheld the costs of the application. Hayden v. Barton, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 410, Ex.

The court, in such a case, possesses a summary jurisdiction over its officer which it will exercise upon motion without putting the party aggrieved to his action against the sheriff. Ib.

A sheriff may maintain an action for his fees for executing a ca. sa. against either the plaintiff or defendant in the original cause of action. Bagot v. Malone, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 454, Q. B.

A sheriff seizing and selling under a fi. fa. more than sufficient to satisfy the amount of the execution, does not thereby render himself liable to an action of trespass. Hughes v. Browne, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 492, Ex.

A sub-sheriff having made a levy under a writ of fi. fa. was allowed, under the 9 & 10 Vic., 64, to lodge in court the monies levied, deducting therefrom the costs of the motion, he having been served with notices by claimants adverse to the plaintiff, calling upon him, on pain of personal responsibility, not to pay over these monies to the plaintiff. Burke v. Darcy, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 287, C. P.

An attachment for non-compliance with an order of this court, will be issued to the sheriff, the court taking no notice of the sub sheriff. Ib.

The court will always presume in favour of a sheriff, where there is a doubt as to the regularity of the proceedings. Connell v. Mahon, Bl. D. & O. 211, Ex.

Where a capias had been placed in the hands of a sheriff for the arrest of a defendant, and he thereupon waited on the defendant, and told him that a writ had been lodged with him for his arrest, and the defendant thereupon paid to the sheriff the sum indorsed on the writ, in lieu of special bail, Held that such a proceeding did not amount to an arrest. Browne v. Ibbotson, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 66, Q. B. [Perin, J. dissentiente.]

The court will not attach the sheriff for non-compliance with an order which has not been personally served upon him; service upon the returning officer is not sufficient. Wilson v. Fair, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 227, C. P.

Returns by Sheriff.—A sheriff will not be ordered to make a return of a writ of ca. sa. against three defendants, where he has arrested two of them, and the plaintiff entered into a compromise with one of the defendants, and took securities from him for part of the debt, and then discharged him, and the other defendant escaped; and where there were contradictory affidavits as to whether the bailiffs who affected the arrest were not special bailiffs of the plaintiff. Dwyer v. McKeogh, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 3, Q. B.

The sheriff will be directed to amend his return to a writ of sci. fa., if it appears that any person having an interest, has not been returned as served. O'Brien v. Fitzgerald, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 200, C. P.

Goods seized under a fi. fa., and an arrear of rent due on the premises claimed by the landlord, the sheriff is not bound to specify in his return the goods seized, or the amount of their value; it is sufficient if he state the amount of the rent claimed, and avers that the value of the property in execution is not equal thereto. Needham v. Kelly, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 181, C. P.

The sheriff is bound to return a sci. fa., though his fees for serving the writ have not been paid. He has no right to delay a Queen's writ for such cause. Deacon v. Scott, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 343, Ex.

The court will make an order on sheriffs to pay the costs of a conditional fine, entered against them for not returning a writ, together with the costs of the motion, on which the order is obtained. Cash v. Robertson, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 352, Ex.

A sheriff having returned to a testatum fi. fa. "that the defendant hath not any goods in my bailiwick, whereof I can cause to be levied the damages, &c." The court ordered him to amend his return with costs. Couper v. Cullinane, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 98, C. P.

A sheriff returned that he had seized goods under the writ of fi. fa. to a certain amount in value; but that he had been served with a notice by the landlord of a year's rent being due, amounting to a much larger sum of which he had given notice to the plaintiff. Held, the plaintiff being desirous of issuing a ca. sa. should have issued a renditione expensas, and was irregular in calling upon the sheriff to amend his return by returning nulla bona. Anonymous, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 152, C. P.

If a sheriff's return be good on the face of it and there is no case of neglect or of clear collusion, the court will not order the sheriff to answer a hostile affidavit but will leave the plaintiff to his remedy by action for a false return. Davis v. Roberts, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 206, C. P.

A sheriff's return to a testatum distringas set aside as being contrary to form. Keown v. Lord Charleville, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 223, Q. B.

An attachment will not be granted against a sheriff for not making a return to a writ of elegit the sheriff being ignorant where the lands were, and the plaintiff refusing to point them out. Collins v. Watters, Bl. D. & O. 178, Q. B.

A return by the sheriff not in accordance with the usual practice of the court will be set aside. Kennedy v. McKillop, Bl. D. & O. 189, Q. B.

The court will direct the sheriff to amend his return when he gives no answer or raises no question as to the truth of the plaintiff's statements. Wilson v. Fair, Bl. D. & O. 226, C. P.

The sheriff will be compelled to return a writ of sci. fa. though his fees for serving it upon the heir and terre-tenants be unpaid. Loos v. Nolan, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 284, C. P.

Quære, if the sheriff be entitled to fees for serving tenants of the lands other than those named and required to be served as terre-tenants in a list furnished by the plaintiff to the sheriff. Ib.

A sheriff to whom a writ of fi. fa. has been directed and execution levied thereon, and who made no return during his shrievalty, on motion by the defendant will be required to make a return to that writ, though more than six months out of office. Croker v. Hughes, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 289, Ex.

The court will as of course direct the sheriff's return to a sci. fa. to be amended, where by mistake there was a return of nil instead of servica. Hayden v. O'Ryan, 1 Ir. Jur. 264, Ex.

The practice that a sheriff, more than six months out of office, will not be required to make a return to a writ directed to him whilst in office, applies only to motions on behalf of plaintiff. Id.

Where a notice of motion has been served upon a sheriff to compel him to return a writ of fi. fa. he will have to pay the costs though the return be filed before the motion is moved. Delany v. Meera, Bl. D. & O. 275, Q. B.

To a writ of fi. fa. the sheriff returned the delivery of prior writs to his predecessor and to himself; seizure by the predecessor, in whose hands goods remained for want of purchasers, and that there were not any other goods and chattels within his bailiwick at the time of the delivery to him of the said annexed writ, or at any time since whereout he could levy the sum mentioned or any part thereof. Held a bad return. Prendergast v. Lord Glengall, 1 Ir. Jur. 69, C. P.

Actions against.—A sheriff had levied money on an execution on a judgment, where the warrant had not been filed within 21 days, pursuant to the provisions of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, s. 13, and paid over the amount levied to the assignees of the consor, who had filed his petition in the Insolvent Court. Held, that though this petition was afterwards dismissed on the application of the insolvent, such dismissal did not divest the right of his assignee so as to give a right to the execution-creditor against the creditors for the amount of the levy. Madden v. Ball, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 104, C. P.

In an action against a sheriff, the first count in the declaration stated the recovery of a judgment by the plaintiffs, the issuing of a fi. fa. thereon, the delivery of it to the sheriff, and that he seized thereunder the goods of the debtor and levied the amount and averred as a breach that he had not the money so levied in court on the return of the writ, nor had paid the same to the plaintiffs, and that he falsely returned nulla bona. The second count after stating the recovery of the judgment, the issuing of the fi. fa. and the delivery of it to the sheriff, averred, that though there were before the return of this writ goods of the debtor in the defendant's bailiwick, whereof he ought to have levied the money endorsed on the writ, and assigned as a breach that he would not levy the money and returned nulla bona. Held, that supposing the false return to be an essential part of the evidence in such action, it was not one exclusively for a false return, and consequently the plaintiffs might bring their action in the county in which the return was filed, or where the matters of fact necessary to be proved occurred. Hennery v. Synge, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 184, Q. B.

The sheriff seized, on the 23rd of April, under a writ of fi. fa. founded on a judgment upon a bond and warrant of attorney. A. B. the insolvent, was arrested at his own request, at the suit of another creditor, before the sale, which took place on the 23rd of May. On the 15th of June, he presented his petition to the Insolvent Court; on the following day the order was made vesting his property in the plaintiff. In an action of trover against the sheriff by the assignee, Held, that the sheriff was not liable under the 48th section of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 107, and that the vesting order had no relation to the date of the arrest. Lindsay v. Going, 1 Ir. Jur. 278, Ex. Ch.

In an action of trespass and false imprisonment against the sheriff, who pleaded the general issue, the plaintiff's counsel stated the case to be an abuse in the mode of executing a writ of ca. sa., and gave in evidence, among other things, certain notices, served by plaintiff on the defendant, which recited and admitted that she had been arrested on such a writ. Held, that the defendant having omitted to prove said writ, the judge ought to have directed the jury to find for the plaintiff. Deering v. Palmer, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 421, C. P.

Sheriff's fees.—On the construction of the 6th Anne c. 7, Ir. Held, that the defendant, not the plaintiff, is liable to pay the poundage of the sheriff. Couper v. Gould, 2 Jones 475, Ex.

Actions for abuse of process.—See TRESPASS.

SKERRIES LIGHT—See TOLLS.

SOLICITOR—See ATTORNEY.

The same solicitor should not be concerned for parties whose rights and interests are adverse. And where the solicitor filed an answer for one party, admitting the claim of the other. Held, that he could not maintain an action for the costs incurred, in his capacity as solicitor of the former. O'Brien v. Graham, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 406, Ex.

Lien for costs.—Where the object of a suit is attained before judgment, the attorney will not be permitted to proceed with the suit for the costs alone; his lien does not arise till after judgment. Lyons v. Wilkinson, 1 Ir. Jur. 270, Ex.

Actions for negligence.—If an attorney be authorized by his client to have a joint and several bond and warrant of attorney executed by two persons, one of whom only executed it at the time, no breach of duty arises from the non-entry of the judgment, till it be executed by both; and when the duty has arisen, i. e. damages is sufficient for a mere non-feasance. Baker v. Carroll, Bl. D. & O. 60, N. P. [Per Brady, C. B.]

Where an order of a court of equity directed a defendant to pay money before a certain day, and to indemnify a third party against his costs, his solicitor having money in hands for that purpose, is guilty of a breach of duty in not paying it; but he is not bound to indemnify. Nison v. Hudson, Bl. D. & O. 65, N. P. [Per Brady, C. B.]

Semble.—Where a declaration in case sets out an order to pay money alone; and that produced, is to pay money and indemnify, it is no variance; and if the declaration set out both grounds, and but one is proved, the defendant is entitled to a verdict; and if both be stated, the plaintiff should show on which the attachment issued. Ib.

STAMPS—See DEED.

A letter of attorney, empowering a person to receive rents, and serve notice to quit, requires two separate stamp duties. Boothe v. McGowan, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 188, Ex.

Semble—That a letter or power of attorney to receive rents, and to distrain, being incidental and ancillary to the power to receive the rents, requires but one. Ib.

Upon the trial of an ejectment under the order of a court of Equity, the question to be tried being whether an accepted proposal was for a term of 21 or 31 years. Held, that the proposal might be given in evidence, though not stamped. Harding v. Macnamara, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 190, Ex.

Where leasehold premises were conveyed to a trustee, in order, out of the rents, to pay head-rent, and the costs incurred in an equity suit; and also the costs of the deed of conveyance, and of registering the same, and then to pay the sum of £300 with interest. Held, that a stamp for £1 10s. was sufficient on such conveyance. Lysaght v. Warren, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 269, Q. B.

Premises were demised for three lives renewable for ever, at a yearly rent and fine. In a subsequent part of the lease, the timber trees growing upon the premises were conveyed to the lessee. The stamp upon the lease was admitted to be sufficient for the lease and fine. Held, that the part of the trees which had already been demised, did not change the character of the lease, so as thereby to render it a conveyance; and consequently that no additional stamp was required. Peacock v. O'Grady, 1 Ir. Jur. 363, Q. B.

If there be no cause in court, the affidavit upon which a fiat is sought to be obtained, requires a two-shilling stamp; but if a cause be pending, no stamp is necessary. Plunket v. Plunket, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 366, Q. B.

STATUTES.

Construction of.—Held by five judges that in the construction of statutes the court would rather strain the words in order to arrive at the construction evidently intended by the policy of the Legislature than either omit them, or declare the state of facts which had occurred to be a casus omissus. Reg. v. Sugden, 1 Ir. Jur. 58, Ex. Ch.

Where two statutes have the same purview, and inflict different punishments for the same offence, the punishments are not to be taken as cumulative, but the latter statute is to be taken as expressing the intention of the Legislature, and therefore, so far as relates to the punishment, repealing the former one. Attorney General v. Dunn, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 357, Ex.

When the language of an Act of Parliament is equivocal or obscure, usage, when universal and unvarying may be called in aid to explain it. Nagle v. Ahern, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 41, Ex.

It is dangerous to look out of the words of the Act, (3 & 4 Vic. c. 105.) for an equity in particular cases, the best equity is to construe the Act in such a way as to meet general cases. Cohen v. O'Donovan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 88, Q. B. [Per Crampton, J.]

In construing the terms of a special act of parliament, the court is bound to see that the transaction sought to be affected by it, is within the plain and ordinary meaning of these terms. Attorney General v. Cathew, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 149, Ex.

My opinion is in accordance with that of Lord Tenterden in Brandling v. Harrington, (6 B. & B. 475), "That there is always danger in giving effect to what is called the equity of a statute; it is much safer and better to rely on, and abide by the plain words; although the Legislature might have provided for other cases, had their attention been brought to them." Reg. v. Savage, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 482, Q. B. (note.) [Per Perrin, J.] See Murphy v. Leader, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 139, Q. B.

Though I admit that the title of a statute cannot control the manifest enactments of it, yet it is the duty of the court to call it in aid, when it can throw a light on an ambiguity in any of its provisions. Daniel v. Bingham, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 293, Q. B. [Per Torrens, J.]

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

By the custom in the spirit trade in the City of Dublin where whiskey is bonded in the Queen's Stores, the party selling gives to the purchaser certain request notes, on the faith of which the price is paid, and which constitutes a sufficient authority to the store-house keeper to deliver the whiskey to the holder of them. The defendant having sold six puncheons of whiskey to A. B., and having got his acceptance for the amount handed him six request notes. A. B. sold the same to the plaintiff, giving him the request notes, the plaintiff takes two puncheons out of the stores, and on application for the remainder discovered that the defendant had, on the acceptances of A. B., being dishonoured, taken out the remaining four. Held, that trover lay at the suit of the plaintiff for the four puncheons, and that he had such a possession as put an end to the stoppage in transitu. Croher v. Lawder, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 21, Q. B.

A bond (after reciting that R. F. Q. had been appointed by the plaintiffs—as directors of the National Bank—to be accountant at their bank, at L.; and that the defendant had, with other persons, agreed to enter into the obligation as his sureties,) contained the following condition:—That the said R. F. Q. should, from time to time, and at all times, faithfully account for, pay, and deliver up to the court of directors of the said society, or to such other person or persons as such court should appoint, and in such place as said court should direct, all and every such sums of money as he, the said R. F. Q., had been, or at any time thereafter should, while he continued in the service of the said society, exclusively, or be employed for or on account of any local bank in connection with them. Plea, performance. Held, that it was not necessary, in an action against the surety of a defaulting accountant, for the plaintiffs to aver in their replication that the directors had appointed a person by whom, or a place in which the accounts were to be taken. Stanhope v. Mathews, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 125, C. P.

Held also, on special demurrer, that the plaintiffs having averred that R. F. Q. was employed by the said society as accountant in the branch bank at M., and that he continued in the service of the said society exclusively as such accountant from, &c. it was not necessary to aver an appointment of R. F. Q. to the office of accountant at M., or that he had accepted of the said office. Ib.

Coyne*, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 214, Ex.

SURRENDER.

G. T. having demised a house and premises, from June, 1827, for 30 years to G. H. in consideration of £1200 and £500 a-year, brought an ejectment for non-payment of rent in 1838, and gave this lease in evidence, the defendant gave in evidence a deed which was produced by the attorney of the lessor of the plaintiff, pursuant to notice, and which expressed to be between G. H. of the one part and G. T. of the other, dated the 27th of July, 1829, and two drawing-rooms, part of the demised premises, were thereby surrendered to G. T. It was executed by G. H. alone, and contained the following proviso: "Provided always, nevertheless, and it is hereby declared and agreed by and between the said parties to these presents to be the true intent and meaning thereof, and the same are upon the express condition that nothing herein contained shall in any manner prejudice or affect the covenant for payment of the said yearly rent of £500, or any other covenant in said lease contained, on the part of the tenant, his executors, &c. to be done, &c. or any of the clauses, conditions or agreements therein contained, or any of the remedies for the recovery of, or the enforcing of the said covenants, conditions, &c. on the part of the said G. T., but that the entire of the said yearly rent shall still be, and continue payable out of same, and the said covenants, &c. shall be, and continue in full force, &c. as to all the residue of said demised premises, and not hereby surrendered; and that said G. T. shall have all the like remedies for the recovery of said rent, and enforcing said covenants as if these premises had not been made, &c. Signed G. H." Held that this deed of surrender did not operate to destroy the right of re-entry. Thompson v. Home, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 179, Q. B.

Covenant for rent due; Plea, a surrender of the premises, and that the plaintiff accepted the same. Replication, that the defendant did not surrender, and that he did not accept the same, to which the defendant demurred for duplicity. Held, that the surrender and the acceptance constituted but one entire matter of defence, and that therefore the replication is good. Purdon v. Dickson, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 351, Q. B.

Quære, what is evidence of the surrender of a lease by operation of law. Lord Shannon v. Lord Stoughton, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 521, Ex. Ch.

L. lessee pur autre vie assented to a new letting by the landlord of a part of the demised premises to M., who entered into possession accordingly, but there was no surrender in writing of the interest of L. Held, that this constituted a valid surrender by Act and operation of law within the statute of Frauds (7 W. 3, c. 12, Ir.) of the interest of L. in the part so demised to M. Lynch v. Lynch, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 181, Ex.

Held, that according to the construction of the order, the word "rectory" did not include the glebe lands, and therefore they did not pass to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, but continued annexed to the treasurership. *Foster v. TITHE COMPOSITION.

Pleading.—Debt for tithe composition—The first count stated that T. R. and others, (tenants of the defendant), during a certain period, had been in the occupation of lands specified in the applotment, and thereby made chargeable with the yearly sum of £8 16s. 8d., as tenants from year to year to the said defendant, who, as having the first estate greater than such tenancy from year to year, was liable to the composition. Plea—That all the lands, whereof the said T. R. was tenant to defendant, before the 6th of August, 1832, by indenture of demise between defendant and T. R., were demised to T. R. for a term still subsisting; and so defendant saith, that during the period aforesaid, he had not the first estate greater than a tenancy from year to year, in the said lands so chargeable with the yearly sum of £8 16s. 8d., modo et formâ, as the plaintiff in his first count alleged. Held, that the averment in the declaration was distributive, and therefore, the plea was bad as not answering the whole of the count. Pennefather v. Lee, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 25, Ex.

Since the passing of the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 119, the plaintiff, in an action for tithe composition, must show by his declaration, that he comes within some of the exceptions mentioned in that act; otherwise the declaration will be bad upon general demurrer. Thus the counts for tithe composition, and for tithes bargained and sold, contained in a declaration, which was entitled as of Hilary Term, 1839, were held to be bad; but a general demurrer taken to the whole declaration was over-ruled, upon the ground of its containing a count upon an account stated, which was held to be free from objection; for though it described the plaintiff as rector, and the defendant as occupier of land within the parish, it did not necessarily follow that it was conversant about the tithe or tithe composition. Plea, stating that parcel of the sum demanded was claimed for arrears of tithe composition, due for the three years immediately preceding 1834, was held to be bad, the right to recover for those years not having been barred by the implied operation of the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 119. Beresford v. Loughnan, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 364, Ex.

Where, in an action for tithe rent-charge, the plaintiff was described in the declaration as rector, and the proof was, that he was both rector and vicar. Held to be no variance. Crosthwaite v. Conlan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 534, Q. B.

What estate is liable.—A mortgagor in possession of mortgaged premises, chargeable with the tithe rent-charge prior to the execution of the mortgage, and held under a lease of lives renewable for ever, was held liable to such rent-charge. Crosthwaite v. Conlan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 534, Q. B. [Perrin, J., dubitante.]

Semble—To render a party entitled to an equitable interest liable for the tithe rent-charge, it must be an interest of a clear, absolute, unquestionable nature. Ib.

Applotment.—A. and B., joint commissioners appointed under 4 G. 4, c. 99, duly made and lodged a certificate of composition in 1831, but made no applotment thereon, A. having been subsequently appointed a sole commissioner under the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 119, adopted that certificate, and duly made and lodged an applotment in 1833, pursuant to the latter act; B. afterwards affixed his signature, in the registry of the diocese, to the applotment made by A. alone, as sole commissioner. Held, first, that the applotment of A., as sole commissioner under the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 119, was invalid and void; and that at the time of such appointment, and of his making the applotment, as such sole commissioner, his authority as one of the joint commissioners originally appointed under the 4 G. 4, c. 99, was still subsisting and valid. Secondly—That the applotment made by A., as such sole commissioner, notwithstanding his intention to act in making it under the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 119, must be taken to have been made by virtue of his valid authority under the 4 G. 4, c. 99. Thirdly—That B. had authority, by affixing his signature to the applotment made by A. alone, to adopt it as his own ct, though he had taken no part in the actual duty of making it. Fourthly—That the applotment having been made, it became the only standard for measuring the amount of composition payable by the parties thereto, and had reference back to the period of making such composition. Semble—That until the making of the applotment, it was optional with the party entitled to the composition, but not imperative on him, to resort to the provisions of the 1 G. 4, c. 99, regulating the payments of composition according to the grand jury cess. Armstrong v. Kilkelly, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 270, Ex.

An applotment book stated the quantity of land contained in each of several holdings, and the gross amount of tithe composition charged thereon respectively, but omitted to specify the acreable amount of such composition. Held, that the applotment was not therefore invalid. Defendant on all former occasions having paid his composition for the said land, and previous to the action promised to pay. Held, it was not open to him to object to the applotment. Purcell v. Wigmors, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 318, Ex.

Certificate of Composition.—Where the rector of the parish was the sole claimant of the tithes. Held, that a certificate of the tithe composition under the 4 G. 4 c. 99, s. 25, was sufficiently certain, though it did not name or describe the party to whom such composition, or any portion thereof, was payable. Lodge v. Cragha, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 315, Ex.

A tithe-payer will not be allowed to set up, as a defence, the title of a third party not named in the certificate of composition. Lord Shannon v. Stoughton, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 521, Ex. Ch.

Evidence.—The presumption of a defendant's liability to tithe composition, arising from his possession of the lands, is not rebutted by the statement of the plaintiff's witness, the land agent of the defendant, that there had been an outstanding lease, and that the defendant had entered into the possession of the land upon a parol surrender, without any instrument in writing; the defendant, in such circumstances, not falling within either of the exceptions contained in the 12th section of the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 119, being neither tenant from year to year, nor at will, within the meaning of the act. Lord Shannon v. Stoughton, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 521, Ex. Ch.

As to what is evidence of the liability of the defendant in an action for tithe composition. Ib.

Statutes of Limitation—The 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 2, does not apply to claims for tithe composition, as between the tithe claimant and the owner of land, but only to estates in tithe. Lord Shannon v. Hodder, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 223, note, Ex.; Lord Shannon v. Stoughton, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 521, Ex. Ch.

II. TRESPASS FOR MESNE RATES.

A landlord may justify in an action of trespass qu. cl. f., under the general issue, not only an entry to distrain, but also the continuing in possession beyond the time that was necessary for the purposes of the distress. Purcell v. Nolan, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 258, C. P.

In an action of trespass for assault and battery, the defendant cannot, under the general issue, give in evidence by way of mitigation of damages, matter of defence, which, if pleaded, would amount to a justification. Pugolas v. Holland, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 533, Ex.

In an action of assault and battery brought by A. against B. & C., it appears that A. came to the house of B. to enter into a final settlement for some debts he owed him, and for which the latter agreed to take one-fourth as a composition. A. B. & C. were in B.'s office, engaged in this arrangement for some time, when B. had to go out to his shop to a customer, and soon after, an altercation having arisen between A. & C., who was the book-keeper and relative of B., C. committed the assault complained of, which was of a violent character, and lasted twenty minutes. It appeared there was no cause of quarrel immediately between A. & C. The dispute arose altogether out of the settlement between A. & B.; and that the shop in which B. was, during the entire of the assault, was adjoining the office in which it was committed, and was only separated from it by a glass door, which was partly open and from which C. called for a rope to hang the plaintiff, which was thrown to him by a person in the shop; and there was great reason to infer that B. could hear, if not see nearly all that occurred in the office. The learned judge who tried the case, directed the jury, that if B. ordered the assault, or encouraged it, or expressed approbation of it, or gave countenance to it, or did anything to adopt it as his own, they should find a verdict against him; and added he should be surprised if they found against B. The jury found against B. On motion to set aside this verdict for misdirection, and as being against law and evidence. Held, that the question for the jury, was correctly left to them in the preliminary part of the learned judge's charge; and though the court disapproved of the strong expression of opinion by the learned judge, thought it did not amount to a misdirection. Held also, the verdict was not against the weight of evidence. [Crampton, J., dissentiente.] Treanor v. Campbell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 387, Q. B.

In an action of trespass and false imprisonment against the sheriff, who pleaded the general issue, the plaintiff's counsel stated the case to be an abuse in the mode of executing a writ of ca. sa. and gave in evidence, among other things, certain notices, served by plaintiff on the defendant, which recited and admitted that she had been arrested on such a writ. Held, that the defendant having omitted to prove said writ, the judge ought to have directed the jury to find for the plaintiff. Deering v. Palmer, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 421, C. P.

Semble—That the omission by the landlord to give a bill of particulars of distress, under the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 75, even if necessary, would render the landlord a trespasser ab initio. Daly v. Bloomfield, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 65, Q. B.

In trespass for false imprisonment, it appeared that on the 19th of September, 1833, the plaintiff being then in the custody of the sheriff of Kildare, at the suit of J. S. M. and others, the defendant issued a ca. sa. against him on foot of a judgment previously obtained. During the year 1839 the plaintiff, being still in confinement, obtained in various ways discharges from several of the writs under which he was detained, and amongst others from that of defendant, which, together with the judgment under which it was issued, was set aside by an order of the court on the 23rd of November, 1839. There was slight evidence that the judgment was set aside for misconduct on the part of the defendant or his attorney. Under these circumstances upon the question whether the plaintiff having been in lawful custody at the suit of other creditors, during all the time that the defendant's detainer was laid on, an action of trespass did not lie at the suit of the plaintiffs against the defendants. Pennefather, C. J. and Perrin, J. were of opinion that it did not. [Burton and Crampton, J. J. dissentientibus.] Coppinger v. Bradley, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 257, Q. B.

But by reason of the admission of illegal evidence, misdirection of the learned judge, and excessive damages, the court awarded a venire de novo. [Pennefather, C. J. dissentiente, holding that judgment should be entered for the defendant.] Ib.

Quære, would an action on the case lie under the circumstances of the case? Ib.

"It is wrong to say that no man shall be made a trespasser by mere construction of law, it is true no man can be a trespasser in any sense when no trespass has been committed, but when a trespass is committed persons may, by construction of law, be parties to that trespass; it is upon this principle that the advisers of a trespass before the act, and the assenters to it afterwards, are trespassers; all are principals in trespass, and one may then be a trespasser in relation to an act which he had advised or directed, although the man by whom the act is done is no trespasser at all, as in the familiar instance of the execution of a false writ by a sheriff—the sheriff is justified by the writ, but the party who gave it to be executed may be a trespasser." Ib.

In a declaration in trespass q. c. f. containing two counts for entering the plaintiff's close, and digging drains, &c., and two counts de bonis asportatis, and another for expulsion, the defendant pleaded and proved at the trial leave and license to do the acts complained of, viz. to scour the drains. Held, that it was not competent for the plaintiff to rely on evidence of a revocation of the license after the commencement of the work, there having been no new assignment. Wily v. Boyd, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 421, C. P.

In an action of trespass on the case, the declaration stated, that A. being possessed of a certain quarry, B. wrongfully and injuriously obstructed him in the use and enjoyment of it, by turning large quantities of water upon the same. A. on the trial proved that B. had stopped up a drain which A. had opened to prevent the water from flowing into the quarry, and also that B. had filled a pipe that had been sunk in order to drain the quarry. Held, that such acts being immediate injuries, an action on the case could be sustained, but that the trespass vi et armis was the proper remedy. Scott v. Nelson, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 207, Q. B.

Semble, where an injury is done to the soil and freehold, plaintiff has no election, but must bring trespass vi et armis. Ib.

"It appears to the court it should have been an action of trespass vi et armis. The distinguishing circumstance is that in this form of action the injury should be wilful, forcible, and the consequence immediate, although if there be consequential damage that will go as an aggravation of the trespass, but will not convert it into an action of trespass on the case, and in this case there is also an injury to lands." Ib. [Per Pennefather, C. J.]

To a declaration in trespass q. c. f. for breaking &c., the plaintiff's close, and erecting pens and tables there, the defendant pleaded the single plea of the general issue, and at the trial proved a demise for a term of years of the locus in quo in the following terms:—"All that and those part of the house known as No. 119, North King street, corner of Smithfield, consisting of the small room of the bar of said house, fronting Smithfield, &c., together with the front part of said premises, extending from said office to the centre of the said Smithfield market, &c., and to be used by said R. B. (plaintiff) as a stand for the sale of cattle and hay, according to the usage of Smithfield market." And also gave evidence of a custom for the owners of houses in Smithfield, to let their frontage to salesmasters at a rent; and of the commission of the trespass complained of. On the other hand, the defendant gave evidence of no such usage being in existence in Smithfield, which was a public market; and some evidence of no title in the lessor of the plaintiff to demise the frontage. And the judge directed the jury, that if they believed that on a market day, the plaintiff had taken possession of the locus in quo, and was in actual possession of the said frontage demised to him; and while so in possession, the defendant entered thereon against the will of the plaintiff, they should find for the plaintiff. Held, that the said direction was correct, and that it was not competent for the plaintiff, on the pleadings as framed, to raise any question beyond that of possession of the premises by the plaintiff, and the commission of the act of trespass while he was in that possession. Dubitante, Doherty, C. J.; and dissentiente, Torrens, J., the latter of whom held that the judge ought to have distinguished between a right to exclusive possession, which would have enabled the plaintiff to have maintained the action, and a mere right over the surface of the soil, which would have been only a right of easement; and to have submitted to the jury, that if they believed there was a right to exclusive possession, they should find for the plaintiff; but that if he had but a right to a mere easement, the action was not maintainable, and they should find for the defendant. Burris v. Coffey, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 298, C. P.

"If an action of trespass quare clausum frangit is brought, and the plaintiff show a possession, and the defence intended to be set up is, that at some remote period the ground in question was conferred on the public by the owner in fee, for a market, the defendant is not at liberty to give evidence to sustain such a defence on the plea of the general issue; the question ought to be raised on the pleadings, as I have said, by a special plea that the locus in quo was a public market, and that being such, the defendant was justified in entering thereon, and exposing his cattle on it for sale." Id. [Per Jackson, J.]

An exclusive possession in the plaintiff is necessary to be proved in a possessory action, and no case has been cited to show, nor is there any that I am aware of, establishing that where a party has a mere right over the surface of the soil, without a right to make use of the soil itself, or of its produce natural, or otherwise, for his own purposes, that an action of trespass can be maintained. Id. [Per Torrens, J.]

But there is no case that I can discover, nor has any been cited in the argument, in which a mere right of enjoyment over or on the surface of the soil, without any right to appropriate it to usufructuary purposes, or to derive usufructuary enjoyment from it, has been held to give such an exclusive possession as to enable the party to bring trespass. Id. [Per Torrens, J.]

A city attachment having issued against A., and having been placed in the hands of the city marshal to execute, he seizes the goods of B. The execution creditor—not being present at the seizure, and not having given the marshal any indemnity—is not liable in an action of trespass de bonis asportatis at the suit of B. Smith v. Holbrooks, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 155, Q. B.

Where an ejectment had been brought for non-payment of rent, and the demise laid in May, and a consent for judgment given, with stay of execution until the November following, when the habere was executed, though the landlord had entered in the August previous, and sold the crop sold by the tenant. Held that the landlord could not be made liable in an action of trespass de bonis asportatis for selling the crop. Nugent v. Phillips, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 17, Q. B. [See Baldwin v. Irvine, 1 Ir. Jur. 215, Ex.]

Held, also, that where a landlord recovers in ejectment, his title has reference to the day of the demise, and the tenant is a trespasser from that period. Id. [Perrin, J., dissentiens.]

The declaration stated that the defendant while driving a carriage, drove with force and violence against another carriage, on which the plaintiff was sitting, and forced it with a great shock, over a raised part of the road, and caused it to sway and incline to over-turn; and thereby with force and violence caused the plaintiff to be greatly terrified, and to be put in great peril and apprehension of the said carriage overturning; and from reasonable apprehension of the said carriage overturning, then and there to fall towards to, and upon the ground; and in so falling, one of the legs of the plaintiff, without his will, then and there struck against one of the wheels of the lastmentioned carriage, by means whereof the said leg was fractured. Held, to be a count in trespass vi et armis, and not in case. Spear v. Chapman, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 461, Ex. Ch.; S. C. Id. 278, Ex.

Pleading.—In an action of trespass qu. cl. fr. Pleas—first the general issue—second, as to ejecting, expelling, &c., actio non, because he was lawfully possessed of the said premises, and the plaintiff having entered thereon, and unlawfully taken possession of the said premises, and without the license of the defendant, he expelled her therefrom. Held, that this plea was bad upon demurrer; because it did not shew a better title than plaintiff had; and because it purported to be a justification; yet it did not show title to warrant a justification. Tucker v. Kirwan, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 376, Q. B.

In trespass qu. cl. fr., where there are several counts, stating distinct trespasses, in different closes and at different times, it is sufficient, even on special demurrer, to justify in one plea the several trespasses—such plea appearing on the face of it to treat the trespasses, times, and closes, as several and distinct. Kirwan v. Joy, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 500, Q. B.

Trespass for an assault and battery, by riding a certain horse against the plaintiff. Plea, that the defendant was riding in a careful manner along the public highway; and whilst so riding, the plaintiff negligently, carelessly, and improperly walked along and across the middle of the highway, and thereby came in contact with the said horse, and was thereby knocked and thrown down, and bruised and injured &c., as in the declaration mentioned, without any default on the part of the defendant; and that the said hurt was occasioned by the negligent, careless and improper conduct of the plaintiff, and not by the default of the defendant; and that if the plaintiff had exercised due care, the same would not have happened. Held bad on special demurrer as amounting to the general issue; and also that it was bad as purporting to be in confession and avoidance, and yet did not admit the trespass, or state any circumstances to justify it. Ball v. Mathews, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 316, Q. B.

Trespass—Plea, that after the committing of the trespass, and before the exhibiting of the bill, it was agreed between plaintiff and defendant, that the latter should do and perform certain work, which was then agreed upon, and furnish materials for the same, for the plaintiff, in satisfaction and discharge of the trespass. Averment—That in pursuance of the agreement, the defendant did and performed the work, and found and provided materials for the same for the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff accepted and received such work and materials in full satisfaction and discharge of the trespass. Demurrer, upon the grounds that neither the nature of the agreement, nor particulars of the work performed, had been stated with sufficient certainty. Held, that the plea was good; first, because the statement of the agreement was immaterial, and could not have been traversed by the plaintiff; and secondly, that a statement of the particulars of the work would have been objectionable, as falling within the rule prohibiting the introduction into pleading of matters of evidence. Craig v. Byrne, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 500, Ex.

Evidence.—In an action of trespass in a several fishery, a person relying on the 19th section of the 5 & 6 Vic. c. 106, as giving him title to erect a stake weir, must prove the previous written consent of the landlord to such erection. A letter of the landlord, without any date, authorising such erection, and no evidence offered aliunde, of such letter having been written before the erection of the weir, was held not to be admissible evidence for that purpose. Lord Templemore v. Allen, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 199, Q. B.

In an action of trespass, the plaintiff claimed a several fishery in a navigable river, and in proof thereof, gave in evidence certain patents and ancient documents, showing that certain weirs and gurgites within those limits, had been granted to the party under whom the plaintiff claimed; and the judge at the trial, refused to tell the jury that this passed a continuous fishery within the limits claimed; but left it to them to say, whether the right to that several fishery was in the plaintiff; and whether the place where the defendants fished was within the limits claimed. Held, that this did not amount to a misdirection. Gabbett v. Clancy, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 299, Q. B.

Quære, did the word gurgites pass a several fishery within the boundaries. Ib.

The plaintiff in proof of his title, proved the execution of a lease to him of the locus in quo by a corporation; which lease, to make it valid, required the consent of certain parties thereto, and recited that such consent had been obtained. Held, that such was sufficient proof of its validity, without proof of such consent, which the jury might presume, evidence to the contrary not having been given, and the onus probandi lying on the party who asserted the invalidity of the instrument. Ib.

A fiat for a lease of the fishery, granted by Queen Elizabeth, with proof of payment of rent under the lease, Held to be sufficient evidence to presume a seisin in the crown, without proof of enrolment of this lease. The want of enrolment is an objection to the validity of the lease, not to its admissibility as evidence. Ib.

Held that an inquisition taken in 1614, was sufficient evidence, as a matter of reputation of the existence of a certain place, without proof of the commission on which it was grounded. Ib.

In an action of trespass on the case, the plaintiff declared that he was possessed of a certain messuage, by reason whereof he ought to have benefit of turbary in a certain common; and in proof of that right, relied on a lease demising to him certain lands, together with benefit of turbary in a bog convenient to the demised premises in common with the other tenants of the lessor. Held, that there was no variance between the right claimed in the declaration, and that which passed by the lease. Matcalf v. Rorke, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 137, Q. B.

Quære, does a grant amount to a grant of common appendant or appurtenant. Ib.

Costs, 2 G. 1, c. 11 ss. 14 & 15.]—When, on the trial of an action for trespass, at which the defendant did not appear, some evidence was given that the defendant asserted title to the premises at the time of the trespass, and the plaintiff took a verdict for nominal damages. The judge refused to certify under the 2 G. 1, c. 11, ss. 14 & 15. McDonnell v. McDonnell, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 182, C. P.

This is not a question for the court, but for the judge ad nisi prius. Ib.

The 2 G. 1, c. 11, s. 15, comprises but two species of action—assault and battery, and trespass qu. cl. fr. In an action of trespass, brought by plaintiff against the defendant, for driving a coach against one upon which the plaintiff was riding, by reason of which he was thrown to the ground, and broke his leg; the jury having found for the plaintiff with 6d. damage, and 6d. costs; and the judge having refused to certify that the trespass was voluntary and malicious. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the full costs of the suit. Spear v. Chapman, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 461, Ex. Ch. S. C. Ib., 278, Ex.

II. TRESPASS FOR MESNE RATES.

In an action of trespass for mesne profits, in which the general issue only is pleaded, the judgment in ejectment is conclusive evidence of the plaintiff's title, whether that judgment has been obtained on verdict, or by default. Armstrong v. Nolan, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 96, Ex.

In trespass for mesne profits, when there was a plea of the general issue, two pleas of liberum tenementum; and a plea of no property in the plaintiff, the court will order the latter to be taken off the file, on the ground that it is an unnecessary plea. Jack v. Swift, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 7, Q. B.

Semble—The plea of no property, concluding to the country, to a declaration in trespass for mesne profits, is a bad plea. Ib.

Where a defendant in ejectment, pending the proceedings, entered into an agreement subsequent to the service of ejectment, with the agent of the lessor of the plaintiff, to give a consent for judgment, with a stay of execution, and that he should have the crops. Held, in an action of trespass for mesne rates, that this agreement did not preclude the plaintiff from recovering nominal damages for the trespass, antecedent to the date of the agreement. Baldwin v. Irvine, 1 Ir. Jur. 215, Ex.

Evidence.—Where an action of trespass for mesne rates is brought against a party, who let judgment in ejectment go by default, an attested or examined copy of the affidavit of the service of the ejectment, is sufficient evidence of the fact of such service, in the action for mesne profits. Armstrong v. Norton, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 96, Ex.; and see cc., Earl of Listowell v. Greene, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 65, Ex.

TROVER.

A vessel belonging to a number of part owners, was forcibly taken by the minority out of the possession of the majority, and sent by the former upon foreign voyages, on one of which it was ultimately lost. Held, that trover could not be maintained. One tenant in common of a chattel, cannot maintain trover for it against his co-tenant while the right of recaption remains; but when that right has been put an end to by the act of the co-tenant, an action of trover lies. Knight v. Coates, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 18, Ex.

Damages.—If an agreement be made concerning goods, and in fraud of that agreement the goods be taken possession of, it is a conversion, and the value of the property being the amount to be recovered, where the property converted was bills of exchange, the jury were directed to include in the damages the interest then due. McKeever v. McKain, Bl. D. & O. 80, N. P. [Per Brady, C.B.]

In an action of trover for a paid bill of exchange, the owner is entitled to substantial damages. Dunne v. Thorpe, Bl. D. & O. 128, N.P. [Per Pigot, C.B.]

Aider by Verdict.—The case of Sweetapple v. Jesse, (2 N. & M. 36; S. C. 5 B. & Ad. 31), shows the unanimous opinion of the twelve judges in England to have been, that the court will presume only such circumstances as it was essentially necessary for the plaintiff to have proved, to support his declaration; that after verdict we cannot presume that anything not in the declaration, or necessarily to be inferred therefrom, was proved at the trial. Barry v. Cambie, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 57, Ex. Ch.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY—See PRACTICE. (JUDGMENT.) STAMP.

Entering Judgment.—The court allowed judgment to be entered upon an old bond and warrant, which had been executed to the obligee, as a security against a judgment entered on another bond, in which he was a surety for the obligor, that it might be assigned as counter security to the purchaser of certain lands of the obligee. Chambers v. Bateson, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 365, C. P.

Where the warrant of attorney was joint, the court would not allow the obligee to enter judgment against the surviving obligor, though the obligor who had died was a minor when he executed the bond and warrant. Anonymous, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 86, C. P.

Upon a motion to enter up judgment against one of three obligors in a bond, it appeared that the bond was in terms joint and several, and the warrant was to confess a "judgment or judgments, &c.," on "a declaration or declarations;" but in other respects purported to be joint. Held, that from the terms of the warrant, it might be inferred that the parties had several judgments in their contemplation, as well as a joint judgment; and leave was given to enter up a separate judgment. Wallace v. Russell, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 15, Q. B.

Judgment cannot be entered upon a joint bond and warrant, against the survivor of two obligors; but the party will be left to his action on the bond. Coleman v. Cox, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 16, Q. B.

A motion on behalf of the wife to enter up judgment in the names of the trustees of a marriage settlement, upon a bond and warrant of the husband's, passed for the amount of the wife's property; and it appeared that the trustees refused to enter judgment; that one of them had issued an attachment against the obligor's goods, and that the sum secured on the bond would be lost; but the trustees had not received specific notice of this motion. The application was refused. Campion v. Campion, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 13, Q. B.

The Court of Exchequer will allow judgment to be entered on a Kerry bond, at the suit of the executor of the obligee. Adams v. Houston, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 241, Ex.

Judgment will not be entered on a bond and warrant more than twenty years old, on a general allegation of interest having been paid within that time. The affidavit should state by whom interest was paid. Creed v. Creed, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 61, C.P.

Judgment was not entered on a bond against the surviving obligor, the bond being lost, and the terms of the warrant being only to enter up "one or more judgments on a declaration to be filed." Harris v. Young, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 377, C. P.

Semle.—That a warrant of attorney for a judgment in debt for money had and received, does not authorise the entering of judgment in debt upon a bond. Otway v. Thynne, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 540, Ex.

The court will not allow judgment to be entered on a warrant of attorney reciting a bond collateral therewith, where in fact, no bond had been executed. Connor v. Connor, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 315, Ex.

The court on the application of the cestui que trust, permitted judgment to be entered on a bond and warrant of attorney, executed to the obligee as a trustee, no payment having been made on foot thereof to the latter. Tyrrell v. Magill, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 98, C. P.

The court refused to enter a judgment against the survivor of two obligors, in a joint and several bond, when the warrant was to enter up "a judgment on one or more declaration or declarations, to be filed against us." Mages v. Magill, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 186, C. P.

The court will not allow judgment to be entered up, without the production and filing of the warrant of attorney, as required by the 39th general rule, though it was sworn in an uncontradicted affidavit, to have been executed, and to be in the possession of a third party, from whom it could not be obtained. McEwen v. Earl of Charleville, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 144, C. P.

A bond and warrant having been executed by a father and son, on the marriage of the latter, to secure to the wife a sum exceeding the amount of her fortune, in the event of the bankruptcy or insolvency of the obligors, or either of them; and the son having committed what was contended to be an act of bankruptcy, the court granted an absolute order to enter judgment against the father alone, notwithstanding that the bond and warrant had been executed nineteen years since, on the suggestion by counsel of an apprehension that the available property of the father might be conveyed away before a conditional order could be made absolute. Kennedy v. Davis, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 113, C. P.

Separate judgments cannot be entered on a joint and several bond, where the warrant authorises only one declaration to be filed. Anonymous, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 12, Q. B.

Judgment cannot be entered against two surviving obligors, on a joint bond executed by three, with warrant authorising an appearance "for us, to confess one or more judgments, on one or more declarations to be filed against us." Stanfield v. Wilson, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 100, Ex.

A warrant of attorney had been executed by an insolvent, under the provisions of the 1 & 2 G. 4, cap. 59, s. 28, to authorise the entering up a judgment against him. This court allowed judgment to be entered on that warrant, under an order of the Insolvent Court, though more than twenty years had elapsed. Campbell v. Regan, 8 Ir. L. Rep. 191, Q. B.

Judgment was entered, against the defendant, on a bond by virtue of a warrant of attorney, which bond and warrant were executed by the defendant to the plaintiffs, whilst the former was in custody on mesne process at the suit of the latter, and without the presence of an attorney. The defendant, having been subsequently arrested on foot of the judgment, took the benefit of the Insolvent Acts, and returned the judgment in his schedule. Held, that by returning the judgment in his schedule, the defendant waived their irregularity. Dobson v. McDavid, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 236, Ex.

3 & 4 Vic. c. 105.]—A memorandum of satisfaction under the 18th section of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105, ordered to be entered on a warrant of attorney filed pursuant to the 12th section of the same statute. Dower v. Dumphy, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 128, Ex.

Such an order may be made by a single judge or by the court itself. Ib.

P. and J. M. executed a bond to the plaintiff in the penal sum of £600, with warrant of attorney to confess judgment, the plaintiff writing to them the following letter: "Gentlemen, you have this day executed to me your bond, with warrant of attorney, for confessing judgment, in the penal sum of £600, now, I hereby declare that such bond, and any judgment to be entered thereupon, has been passed to me as a collateral security only for any overdue bills which I may hereafter discount for you, and for no other object." Separate judgments were entered on this bond within twenty-one days of its execution, but the warrant was not filed, nor was the letter to the defendants written upon the same paper as the warrant. The defendants having become bankrupts, Held, that such judgment was good against their assignees, and came within the saving clause of the 13th section of the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 105. Conlan v. McAnaspie, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 295, Ex.

Semle, that the above letter amounted to a defeazance within the 14th section of the statute. Ib.

Semle, that the provisions of the 14th section apply to warrants of attorney collateral with bonds. Ib.

Practice.]—A warrant of attorney, on which judgment had been entered, was allowed to be taken off the file for the purpose of entering judgment thereon in England upon the terms of vacating the judgment in this country. Wall v. Lighburne, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 177, Ex.

WARRANTY—See ASSURANCE.

When a horse was purchased, and after a month's trial returned to the vendor as unsound, (the horse being warranted,) but is not received by him. Held not sufficient to rescind the contract. Cripps v. Smith, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 277, Q. B.

The declaration stated that in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, had then and there bought a horse of him, he then and there promised that the horse was sound. Held good on special demurrer, for that the sale and warranty were contemporaneous, and the statement in the declaration was not an averment of a sale being had before the promise was made. Smythe v. Morrissey, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 213, Q. B.

WEIGH-MASTER.

In 1847, the mayor and aldermen of the city of Limerick "nominated and appointed under hand and seal Alderman John Vereker, and the Hon. C. S. Vereker to be joint weigh masters of said city." John Vereker being then mayor of the city, and the Hon. C. S. Vereker an infant; it was admitted that the former took the oath required by the statute, and filled the office until his death in 1840, and that the tolls were in the corporation of the city. Held, that under the 4 Anne, c. 14, the appointment was in the mayor, and that the office of mayor and weigh-master were not incompatible. Honan v. Vereker, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 64, Ex.

Held, that under the third section of the above statute, requiring that "there shall be appointed in every city one honest and discreet person who shall be weigh-master," an appointment of an infant or of two persons to the office is invalid, and that therefore the title of the Hon. C. S. V. determined on the death of J. V. in 1840. Ib.

Quere, would a quo warranto information, at the relation of the plaintiff, have been maintainable for the office in question under the statutes 19 Geo. 2, c. 12, and 38 Geo. 3, c. 2. Ib.

WILL.

Construction.—The testator devised all his properties to his daughter for her life, "and in case she died without issue," then to his three nieces, daughters of his sister, "and in case any of them should die, the said properties to revert to the survivors or survivor of them, and in case the three should die" then to any other child his said sister should have, and then bequeathed the above properties to the issue of his daughter, "and in case she has more than one child to go share and share among them, and in case all her issue should die the said properties to revert as above between his nieces, Held, that the nieces took under this will as tenants in common and not as joint-tenants. Scully v. O'Brian, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 287, Q. B.

R. assignee of a lease for three lives devised the lands to trustees for his wife for life, remainders over for the whole of his interest. Held, that the wife was assignee for her life of the testator's entire interest. Maunsell v. Russell, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 205, Ex.

The testator after devising an annuity to his wife charged on part of his real estate, devised a portion of that estate together with the other parts of his real estate to W. T. and his heirs, "but if W. T. shall die in the lifetime of my wife or afterwards without issue or heirs male lawfully begotten, living at his death, or if living who shall happen to die before they attain twenty-one; then I devise my estate and interest thereon to P. T. and his heirs, and further after my wife's death I devise to the said P. T. and his heirs my fee-simple estate in A. and my free-hold property in B., but if P. T. shall die without heirs male lawfully begotten in the lifetime of W. T., then I devise such my estates so devised to P. T., to W. T. and his heirs, and if W. T. shall die without such heirs as herein already mentioned, then after the death of the survivors of them I devise my said estates to my sisters S. and A. F. and their heirs. Held, that W. T. and P. T. in the original devises to them, took estates in fee or quasi fee subject to an executory devise over. Held W. T. having died in the lifetime of P. T. without leaving issue male, P. T. took in the estates devised to W. T. an estate in fee or quasi in fee subject to an executory devise over. Held, that S. T. having survived A. T. who died in the lifetime of P. T. unmarried and without issue, the said S. T. took in all the premises devised, an estate in fee or quasi fee by way of executory devise. Tisdall v. Tisdall, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 41, Q. B.

The testators being seized in fee of certain freehold premises, devised same to trustees their heirs, &c., "upon trust to receive and take the rents, &c., thereof, and pay and apply the same unto my dear Marianne for her own sole and separate use, notwithstanding any future husband she may marry, and that her receipt only to my trustees shall be good and effectual discharges from time to time for the same and from and immediately after the decease of my said dear wife, in trust for such person or persons, and in such manner and form as my dear wife shall by any deed or will duly executed and attested, give, direct and appoint the same, and I give, devise and bequeath unto my said dear wife all and singular my goods, chattels, moneys, debts, to me owing, moneys in the funds and effects and property of what nature or kind soever, the same be for her own sole and absolute use for ever," and he appointed his wife sole executrix. Held, that under the clause of the will which terminates with the words "direct and appoint the same," the testator's wife took in the freehold premises thereby devised to her an estate for her life only, with a power of appointment by any deed or will duly executed and attested, supposing such estate to be legal and not equitable. Held also, that under the clause of the said will commencing with the words "and I give devise and bequeath unto my said dear wife," she took an estate in fee-simple in said freehold premises contingent upon her not executing the power of appointment given to her by said will, and supposing such estate to be legal and not equitable. Bowyer v. Blair, 2 Ir. L. Rep. 149, Q. B.

The testator having two sons Robert and Marcus devised as follows "I leave and bequeath to my said son Robert during the term of his natural life, all my estate right title and interest of and to the lands of C., &c., and in case my son Robert shall marry with the consent of his mother (if living,) then I devise the same to any issue he may happen to have by his wife, in such manner as he shall by deed or will direct, limit, or appoint; and for want of such appointment to go equally among them share and share alike, but in case my son Robert shall die without issue then and in that case it is my will that the said lands of C. &c., shall go to my son Marcus his heirs and assigns for ever." Held, that Robert took an estate tail with a vested remainder in fee to Marcus. Martin v. McCausland, 4 Ir. L. Rep. 840, C. P.

Held, that an estate in remainder, after an estate tail in possession, was bound by a judgment, though the same never came into possession of the consumer. Ib.

A testator having several children, bequeathed to his daughter, M. G., £1000, to be paid by instalments of £100 per annum, out of the farms and lands of B. and F., held by lease for three lives; which lands of B. and F., testator willed and bequeathed unto his son E. F., subject to the payment of the above £1000, as before recited, to his daughter M. G. After devising and bequeathing the residue of his real and personal estate to and among his other children, the testator concluded his will with the following clause: "I will, that in case of any of my children not having lawful issue at the time of his or her death, that anything I will to them, should go, share and share alike, among my sons and daughters." Held, that E. G. took an absolute estate quasi in fee, with an executory devise over to his brothers and sisters, in the event of his dying without issue, living at the time of his death. Geary v. Synan, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 509, Ex.

E. G. died without issue. Held, that the limitation over to the testator's sons and daughters extended to all of them, giving them, in the contingency provided for, the absolute interest in the lands of B. and F., and was not restricted to such of them only as were living at the death of E. G. Ib.

Devise, In case my wife should be now, or at the time of my death, pregnant, I leave and bequeath my said estate to the said daughter, and my daughters M. and A., share and share alike, subject, &c.; and my will is, that if any of my said daughters, or all of them, should die without issue male, then, and in that case I bequeath all my said estate to my brother A. N. for life." The will concluded thus—"And in case all or any of my daughters should leave male issue, my will is, that such issue should inherit my said estate according to priority of birth—the eldest son of my eldest daughter to succeed first; the issue male of my eldest daughter to be preferred to the issue of the younger—and failing male issue from any of my daughters, then to my brother A. aforesaid." No child having been afterwards born—Held, that the daughter M. and A. took an estate in tail male, as tenants in common, with cross-remainders by implication; and that, by the last clause of the will, there was not an intention sufficiently indicated that the issue male should take as purchasers. Nixon v. Blake, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 325, Q. B.

Semble, if the issue of the daughters took by purchase, an ultimate remainder in tail would vest in each daughter expectant on the determination of the estates tail to the first and other sons. Ib.

A., by will of September, 1802, devised the lands of K., C. and P. to trustees, to the use of his son H., for life, remainder to the trustees to preserve contingent remainders; remainder from the death of H., to other trustees, for a term of 500 years, to raise portions for the younger children of H., and subject thereto; remainder to the first and other sons of H. in tail male; remainder to M. for life; remainder to the first and other sons of H., in tail male; remainder to the testator's daughters in fee. The will contained a jointuring and leasing power to each devisee, when in the enjoyment of the lands; and a power was given to each, except H., to charge £2000 for younger children. The testator, subsequently to the execution of this will, married a second wife, and upon that marriage vested the lands of K. and P. in trustees, to secure her jointure; and by a codicil executed after this marriage, he revoked any former bequest or devise he had made to H., and then devised the lands of K. and P. to H. for life, subject to the jointure settled on testator's wife; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders to the first and other sons of H., in tail; remainder to M. in fee; and he directed that this and every other codicil, should be taken and annexed to, and form part of his will. Held, that the term of five hundred years, created by the will of 1802, was not a subsisting term. Daly v. Daly, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 303, Q. B. [Perrin, J., dissentiente.]

A. seized of the reversion in fee, devised it to B, his nephew, "in as full a manner as he could convey it" to be enjoyed by his heir and his heirs male for ever. Held that B. took an estate in tail male. Roche v. O'Brien, 1 Ir. Jur. 156, Ex. Ch.

ADMINISTRATION.

A will in which no executor was named, and by the Court of Prerogative administration to the deceased, as in case of actual intestacy, was granted to one, and by the same court that administration was afterwards revoked, and administration cum testamento annexo granted to another. Held, that the first administration was voidable only, and not void. Secondly, that the mesne acts of the first administrator, if done in due course of administration, were valid. And, thirdly, that it lies upon the party impeaching those acts to show that they were not so done. Bevan v. Lloyd, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 228, C. P.

Quære, as to the distinction between revocation upon citation and revocation upon appeal. Ib.

Letters of administration to a deceased person were, as in case of actual intestacy, granted to A. The defendant made a bond fide payment to A., the administrator, on account of a debt due to the deceased, subsequently, a will made by the deceased, and in which no executor was named, having been produced, the letters of administration to A. were upon citation revoked, and letters of administration cum testamento annexo were granted to B. Held, in an action by B. against the defendant, that the payment on account to A., the first administrator, was valid, and that B., the second administrator, could recover the balance only. Maguire v. Denham, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 240, Q. B.

ARREST.

Privileged Persons.—The privilege of an officer of the Queen's Bench from arrest is co-extensive with that of an attorney, and where the admittance to his house was obtained, and his arrest effected under the pretence of his being wanted by A., his assistant in the office, the court will not presume the defendant supposed he was wanted on office business. Magrath v. Cooper, Bl. D. & O. 141, Q. B.

Where a defendant in execution paid the debt and costs, and the plaintiff refused to discharge him except on the condition of his paying the sheriff's fees. Held, in an action for maliciously detaining the creditor in prison, that the condition was regular, the defendant being liable to the payment of the poundage of the sheriff. Dunne v. Thorpe, Bl. D. & O. 128, N. P. [Per Pigot, C. B.] [See Cowper v. Gould, 2 Jon. 475, Ex.]

ATTORNEY—See SOLICITOR.

COSTS.

Laches—43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 3.]—A defendant had been arrested, and lodged in court a sum of money, in lieu of special bail, and judgment had been marked on a verdict found for an amount less than the sum claimed by the plaintiff, and the costs had been taxed and certified. Held that an application by the defendant, under the 43 G. 3, c. 46, s. 3, that he should be allowed the costs of the trial, was too late. Solomon v. Pitt, 9 Ir. L. Rep. 172, Q. B.

Taxation.—Upon a motion in which two counsels were engaged and costs given generally, the taxing-officer allowed fees and briefs for one only, the court refused to review the taxation. Bacon v. Greer, Bl. D. & O. 188, Q. B.

The court has no jurisdiction to review a taxation by the Master under the 52nd section of the Lands Consolidation Acts, (8 Vic. c. 18.) Tennant v. Borough of Belfast, Bl. D. & O. 191, Q. B.

The court will not upon taxation allow as against the unsuccessful party more than the usual jury allowance, though such allowance was consented to by the parties. Molloy v. Brown, Bl. D. & O. 231, Q. B.

In a qui tam action the court will restrain the officer from taxing the costs of the defendant upon judgment as in case of non-suit. Semple v. Gray, Bl. D. & O. 232.

The court will refer it to their officer to review his taxation of fees allowed to a sheriff, on process to compel appearance by a corporation, but refused to refer it to him to review, on the ground that he only allowed three shillings to a surveyor and engineer employed by plaintiff to make a plan, and for which he was paid £6 6s. and £3 3s. for his attendance as a witness. Power v. Great Southern and W. R. Co., Bl. D. & O. 236, Ex.

The expenses of a witness to prove a deed will not be allowed when the proof can be made by a person whose duty it is to be present at the time. Cockburne v. Molloy, Bl. D. & O. 287, Ex.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Felony—23 & 24 Geo. 3 c. 20, s. 2.]—Unlawfully and feloniously to carry away with intent to prevent the flour from being taken to the place of shipment is a felony within the 23 & 24 Geo. 3 c. 20 s. 2, notwithstanding the parties who committed the offence may have had another object also in view in committing the offence. Moloney v. Power, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 538, Q. B.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Composition bills.—In 1844 M. being indebted to the plaintiff in £46 13s. 5d., gave him in payment a bill for the amount drawn by one S. on the defendant, and accepted by him for the accommodation of M. When this became due, M. paid £10 on account, and gave a fresh bill for £30; and in April, 1845, being then indebted to the plaintiff in this latter bill then overdue, and in £6 13s. 5d., the balance of the former, he entered into an agreement, whereby the plaintiff, and others of his creditors, agreed to accept a compromise of 10s. in the pound, payable by instalments, and secured by the joint notes of M. and the defendant; but afterwards, to induce the plaintiff to sign the agreement, M. gave him as security for his entire demand, two acceptances of the defendant's, for £18 and £19 17s. 1d., respectively; whereupon he signed the agreement. When the first of these bills became due, M. paid £10 on account of it, and subsequently the balance of that bill being unpaid, and the second bill over-due, gave, in payment of the entire balance and interest thereon, two fresh acceptances of the defendant (who was an accommodation acceptor throughout), one for £13 13s., the other for £14 14s. Assumpsit against the acceptor upon this latter bill. Held, that the action could not be maintained, the bill being only a fresh security given to the plaintiff on foot of a transaction which was originally contrary to public policy. Rooney v. Armstrong, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 291, Ex.

MAGISTRATE.

The court will not grant an order upon magistrates to take informations against a party charged with an offence, unless it appear that the informations of the parties applying were tendered to the magistrates in writing, and the informations so tendered, must be brought before the Court where the application is made. Ex parte Hughes, 1 Ir. L. Rep. 292, Q. B.

PRACTICE.

Appearance.—Where an appearance is entered, but no notice of it served under the 108rd General Rule, the plaintiff cannot enter a parliamentary appearance, but may proceed upon that already entered. Price v. Flattery, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 499, Q. B.

Setting aside proceedings.—The affidavit of a defendant seeking to set aside proceedings, on the ground of non-service of the process, must contain a positive denial of his having had notice of the writ, and must also state circumstances from which the court may be satisfied that the process server has been either guilty of perjury, or been mistaken. Lewis v. Henry, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 218, Ex.

Setting aside process.—Service of a writ will not be set aside for want of a date. Lacky v. Dunning, 5 Ir. L. Rep. 593, Q. B.

Where three separate writs had issued against three defendants, and three appearances had been entered, it is no ground of irregularity to join the defendants in one declaration. Walker v. Clarke and others, 10 Ir. L. Rep. 201, Q. B.

Rule for non-pros.—If proceedings instituted in a superior court, be removed to an inferior jurisdiction, at the instance of the plaintiff, and with the defendant's implied consent, the defendant cannot afterwards enter a rule for non-pros, in the court above. Taylor v. Cruise, 1 Ir. Jur. 263, C. P.

Notice of trial.—Where there has been four clear days notice of countermand of trial, the defendant will not be entitled to any costs incurred. Irwin v. Meenaghan, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 285, C. P.

New trial.—An application to set aside a verdict, and for a new trial, on the grounds of surprise, and the discovery of new evidence, must be founded on affidavit. Hall v. Thorpe, 1 Ir. Jur. 238, Q. B.

Judgment.—The court will not order satisfaction to be entered on record of a judgment, on a warrant of attorney of one of the trustees, the other disclaiming having ever accepted the trust, and being out of the jurisdiction and refusing to act. Irwin v. Irwin, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 278, C. P.

Error, assignment of.—Where, on a writ of error, brought on a judgment in ejectment, which had been commenced in the county of D., the error assigned was, that before and at the time of the tests of the venire, and thence until and at the time of the trial, the lands in question were situated in the county of L., and not in the county of D., without stating that at the time of the ejectment brought the premises were in the county of D. Held, that this assignment of error was insufficient. Heywood v. Reynolds, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 409, Q. B.

REVENUE.

Certiorari—Judgment.—A party is too late in taking objections to a notice of appeal after having submitted to the jurisdiction of the court, and appearing on the notice.—Where a judgment amounts to an acquittal, and part thereof is erroneous, such part may be rejected as surplusage, and it will not vitiate the judgment. Reg. v. Cassidy, 6 Ir. L. Rep. 436.

STOCK.

The court will not substitute service of a conditional order to impound stock, under the provisions of 3 & 4 Vic., c. 105, ss. 23, 24, on the executors of a will, in whose name the stock was standing, in the dividends of which the judgment debtor (who was out of the jurisdiction) had a life interest, where it did not appear that the said executors had ever paid any of the said dividends to the debtor since his interest therein had accrued. Gunnens v. Armit, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 165, C. P.

Quare, is service on the attorney, who transacts the law, business of the judgment debtor, who is out of the jurisdiction, good service. It.
